2. Where an undertaking was filed in the suit to release the property from the lien, the complainant may take a personal decree only against the defendant, and may bring an action at law against the sureties on the undertaking.

[No. 87.]

Argued Nov. 26 and Dec. 1, 1879. Decided Jan. 5, 1880.

APPEAL from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. Geo. F. Appleby and W. E. Edmonston, for appellant.

Messrs. Enoch Totten and S. R. Bond, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

The controversy in this case is as to the validity of a mechanics' lien claimed by the appellant upon certain houses and lots in the City of Washington. The defendant, Gilbert, in August, 1871, was the owner of the lots, and proposed to erect a row of brick buildings thereon, and agreed with the appellant that the latter should find the materials and build the houses (six in number) for the aggregate price of $32,000, to be paid by installments as the work progressed. Phillips, the appellant, commenced the houses and proceeded in their construction until the amount accruing to him was upwards of $12,000; when, the payments being behind, and certain incumbrances on the property not being lifted, as Gilbert had agreed they should be, he, Phillips, on the 23d of May, 1872, filed a mechanics' lien, pursuant to the Act of Congress then in force. This Act, passed February 2, 1859, 11 Stat. at L., 376, declared that any person who should, by virtue of a contract with the owner of any building, perform labor or furnish materials for the construction or repair thereof, should, upon filing the proper notice, have a lien upon the building and the lot upon which it was situated. The notice of lien was required to be filed in the office of the clerk of the district court at any time after the commencement of the building, and within three months after its completion; and the clerk was required to record it. The Act declared that such liens should have precedence over all other liens or incumbrances which attached upon the premises, subsequently to the time of giving the notice. For enforcing the lien, the Act provided a summary action at law and an execution against the premises, with a provision, in the 11th section, that the defendant might file a written undertaking, with surety to be approved by the court, to the effect that he would pay the judgment that might be recovered, and costs, and thereby release the property from the lien. By a subsequent Act, passed in February, 1867, 14 Stat. at L., 403, it was declared that the proceeding to enforce any lien should be by bill or petition in equity, and that the decree, besides subjecting the thing upon which the lien had attached to the satisfaction of the plaintiff's demand against the defendant, should adjudge that the plaintiff recover his demand against the defendant, and have execution as at law.

The bill was filed under this Act on the 11th of June, 1873, and set forth the original contract, the performance of the work to the amount (as alleged) of $16,000, of which $5,000 was claimed to be unpaid, the filing and recording of the lien; and the further facts that Gilbert had executed certain deeds of trust on the property to secure certain loans specified in the bill, and that on the 16th day of December, 1872, he had conveyed the entire property to the defendants, Boughton and Moore; and that on the 1st of February, 1873, Boughton and Moore executed six deeds of trust, one on each house and lot, to trustees, to secure six certain notes payable to the defendant, the Connecticut General Life Insurance Company; and prayed an account and a sale of the property, payment and general relief. The defendants were Gilbert, Boughton and Moore, the Connecticut Insurance Company, and the trustees in the several deeds of trust.

On the 25th of June, 1873, the defendants filed an undertaking entered into by Gilbert, Boughton, Moore, J. G. Bigelow and one W. J. Murtagh; Bigelow being, as it appears, the agent of the Connecticut Insurance Company in effecting the loan for which the six last deeds of trust mentioned in the bill were given as security. The substance of this undertaking was, that the undertakers would pay any judgment that might be rendered (including costs) upon or on account of the claim for lien made by the complainant. No further notice of this undertaking seems to have been taken in the proceedings.

Boughton and Moore demurred to the bill, mainly on the ground that the claim for lien was void because made in gross upon six separate lots, without specifically setting forth the amount claimed upon each.

Gilbert filed an answer averring that the complainant had been fully paid for all the materials and work furnished by him; and the Connecticut Insurance Company filed a separate answer, setting up their loan upon the property, the amount of which they stated to be $36,000; and alleging that, when they made this loan, Phillips, the complainant, executed and delivered to them a release of the lots from the effect and operation of his lien; and that upon the faith of this release they made the loan to Boughton and Moore; and they insisted that the complainant was estopped from proceeding on his claim for lien. They further stated that the release, together with the abstract of title with which it was placed, had been lost or mislaid; and they annexed to their answer a paper, which they averred to be a substantial copy of said release. This answer was verified by the affidavit of Bigelow. The alleged copy of release was dated January 10, 1873, and purported to be directed to the clerk of the circuit court, requesting him to release the property in question from the mechanics' lien filed by Phillips on the 23d day of May, 1872. Thereupon Gilbert filed an amendment to his answer, alleging that he was informed and believed that such a release had been made by the complainant.

Replications being duly filed, the parties went into proofs:

On the 30th of March, 1874, an issue was directed to be tried by a jury, to ascertain whether Gilbert was indebted to Phillips for work and materials in the construction of the buildings in question; and if indebted, how much, after deducting all payments and set-offs. Upon this issue the jury, on the 14th of June, 1875, found that Gilbert was indebted to Phillips for the cause aforesaid, after deductions, in the sum of $4,020.

Besides the question of indebtedness, the principal contest upon the proofs was, whether Phillips had executed a release as set up in the answer of the Insurance Company, so as to estop him from claiming any lien upon the premises. That he did execute some paper of the kind was admitted by himself when examined as a witness; but his allegation is that he had bid off the property at a trustee's sale in November, 1872, and that the paper executed by him was given to Bigelow, the Company's agent, for the purpose of raising a loan to himself; but that another arrangement was made whereby he gave up his bid and never received a deed for the property, and abandoned his application for the proposed loan; and that Gilbert induced Boughton and Moore to purchase the property, and the loan was made by the Insurance Company to Boughton and Moore; and he, Phillips, was induced to go on with the building of the houses for them on the same terms upon which he had engaged to do it for Gilbert, but upon the distinct understanding that the amount due him, and for which he held his lien, should be paid out of the moneys received from the Insurance Company; that he never intended to give up his lien unless he had got the loan himself, or was paid the amount due him.

Without going into an examination of the testimony on this subject, it is sufficient to say that we have come to the conclusion that the facts were substantially as contended by Phillips, and that the agent of the Insurance Company knew perfectly well that Phillips never intended to give up his lien after his negotiation for a loan fell through. We are, therefore, of opinion that he was not estopped by the paper referred to, which seems to have unaccountably disappeared, and the contents and date of which are not clearly proved.

We are satisfied, therefore, that when this suit was commenced, the complainant's lien was good against the property for the amount found by the jury to be due to him, unless it was void for the reason stated in the demurrer of Boughton and Moore, namely: its being claimed on the whole row of buildings, and not on the buildings separately. We think, however, there is nothing in this objection. The contract was one, and related to the row as an entirety and not to the particular buildings separately. The whole row was a building, within the meaning of the law, from having been united by the parties in one contract, as one general piece of work.

We are clear, therefore, that a decree ought to be entered in favor of the complainant against Gilbert, personally, for the amount found to be due to him, with interest from the date of the verdict.

The effect of the undertaking filed in the suit was, to release the property from the lien and to oblige the complainant to have recourse for security of payment to the parties who entered into said undertaking. It would facilitate the ends of justice if a decree could be made at once against the undertakers, as is done against stipulators in admiralty proceedings. But we find no precedent for such a course upon a bond or undertaking given by way of indemnity in proceedings at common law or in chancery, unless it be expressly so stipulated in the instrument, or unless the parties enter into a recognizance, which is matter of record.

See 11 OTTO.

Our conclusion, therefore, is, that the decree of the Supreme Court of the district must be reversed and the cause remanded, with instructions to enter a personal decree in favor of the complainant against the defendant Gilbert, for the amount of $4,020, with interest and costs; and that execution issue thereon; and further, to decree that the lien claimed by the complainant was a valid lien at the commencement of this suit; but that, by reason of the undertaking filed in the cause, the buildings and lots mentioned in the pleadings became released and discharged from the lien; and that the complainant have leave to proceed at once upon said undertaking in an action of law to be brought for that purpose; also, that the complainant have a decree for the costs against the defendants, Gilbert, Boughton and Moore, and the Connecticut General Life Insurance Company of Hartford.

The decree is reversed, accordingly.

G. L. KIMBALL, Admr. of ROBERT W. WISHART, Deceased.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 726-728.)

Action against Internal Revenue Collector—credits in—when entitled to.

1. In a suit against a Collector of Internal Revenue, on his bond, for taxes charged to him under section 3218, R. S., he is entitled to a credit for all uncollected taxes transferred by him to his successor in office, if he proves that due diligence was used by him for their collection.

2. The certificate of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is a condition precedent to a credit by the First Comptroller of the Treasury before suit, but not to a defense upon the facts if a suit is brought.

3. The presentation to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, by a collector, of a claim for credit in his account, and its rejection, will entitle the collector to prove his claim in a suit against him by the United States, to collect what is due from him on his account.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Arkansas.

This action was brought in the court below by the United States, upon the bond of Robert W. Wishart, for moneys alleged to have been received by Wishart as Collector of Internal Revenue.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion. Mr. Edwin B. Smith, Asst. Atty-Gen., for plaintiff in error.

No counsel appeared for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

In a suit against a Collector of Internal Revenue on his bond for a balance of taxes charged to him under the provisions of sec. 3218, R. S., he is entitled to a credit for all uncollected taxes transferred by him to his successor in office, if he proves that due diligence was used by him for their collection. The certificate of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is a condition precedent to a credit by the First Comptroller of the Treasury, before suit, but not to a defense upon the facts if a suit is brought.

The presentation to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue by a collector of a claim for credit in his account, and its rejection by him, is such a presentation of the claim "to the accounting officers of the Treasury for their examination," and disallowance by them, as will permit the collector, under sec. 951, R. S., to make proof of his claim in a suit brought against him by the United States to collect what is due from him on his account.

Judgment affirmed.

Uncertain claim.

Uncertainty of location and vagueness of description of a Spanish claim are sufficient grounds for its rejection.

Argued Dec. 9, 10, 1879. Decided Jan. 5, 1880.

APPEALS from the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Missouri.

The cases are stated by the court.

Messrs. R. H. Bradford, Jas. L. Bradford, W. Drummond, A. D. Anderson and William R. Walker, for Clamorgan et al.
Mr. S. F. Phillips, Solicitor-Gen., for United States.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal by the United States from a decree of the District Court for the Eastern District of Missouri.

The decree was, that appellees recover of the United States certificates under the 6th section of the Act of Congress of June 22, 1860, for 94,186 acres of land, to be located on any of the public lands of the United States subject to private entry, in lieu of the original concession by the Spanish authorities to Jacques Clamorgan, their ancestor, all of the land embraced in that concession having been disposed of by the United States. The Statute of 1860, 12 Stat. at L., 85, having expired by its own terms, was revived by the Act of June 10, 1872 and, under this, appellees brought their suit against the United States in May, 1873. The statute in question was the subject of very full consideration by this court at its last Term, the result of which is reported in the case of Scully v. United States [ante, 164], and as we see no reason to modify the construction then given to it, we might, but for the very large amount involved in the present suit, decide it by a simple reference to that case as the foundation of our judgment.

The Act of 1860 was the latest, as it was intended to be the end, of a series of statutes for the adjustment of claims to land the title to which passed by the Louisiana purchase to the United States, but to portions of which private claims existed arising under the Governments of Spain and France, during the period of their proprietorship. These claims were in all stages of progress and all conditions of perfection and imperfection, from the merest permissive license to occupy, to the perfected grant identified by surveys and well defined boundaries.

Immediately upon taking possession of the country, Congress began to legislate on the subject of these claims, and from that day to the Act of 1872, the statute-books abound with laws designed to enable the claimants to establish their rights.

Several commissions were organized before whom they could appear, and as these commissions would expire, by the terms of the law or by the time limited for prosecuting the claims, they were renewed or others substituted in their place. In most cases, these commissions were only authorized to hear testimony and report it to Congress, with an opinion in favor of or against the claim. In other instances, the courts were empowered to hear and decide, and summary modes of procedure were authorized. In all this matter, Congress, whether acting directly upon the cases brought before it or by statutes conferring authority on other tribunals, has acted with a sincere desire to do justice to those who, by the transfer of this large domain, were remitted to our Government for recognition of their rights. The treatment of these claimants has been governed by a patience in hearing and rehearing, by extension of time and repetition of opportunity to establish their claims and a careful regard for every equitable consideration favorable to claimants, which merits the name of generosity rather than strict justice; and it was in this spirit that, after all jurisdiction to hear and confirm these claims had ceased to exist in any other tribunal than Congress, that body passed the Act of 1860, and renewed it for a short period in 1872.

But over half a century had passed since Congress had first created a tribunal to hear them. The system of congressional surveys had been extended over the territory in which the lands were supposed to be located, and the legal title had passed by government sales and patents to innocent purchasers, who held, therefore, with that title the superior equity. In its liberality, however, towards these dilatory or unfortunate claimants, that Act provided that, whenever a claim was established under it, to lands so sold by the United States, the successful claimant might have other lands of the same amount to be selected by him from any public lands liable to private sale. In many cases, indeed in far the greater number of cases, these lands were vastly superior in value to those to which the claim had originally attached.

It may well be supposed, however, that while Congress was thus anxious to be both generous and just to this class of claimants, it would, in view of the period which had elapsed during which they might have established their claims and the opportunities which had been given them to do so, impose such limitations on the exercise of the right here granted as would protect the Government against false and fraudulent claims, supported by forged documents and perjured evidence, easily procured and difficult of detection and refutation, by reason of the great lapse of time and the death of those who could tell most of the transaction. We, accordingly, find that, with regard to the large body of these claims, Congress required that, after the evidence had been sifted through the registers and receivers, and reviewed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the final confirmation of the claim should remain with that body. As we said, however, in Scull v. United States, a much more limited and well defined class of claims might, at the option of the claimants, be prosecuted in the District Courts of the United States, whose territorial jurisdiction included the locus in quo of the controversy. Over a suit thus brought, Congress retained no further control, and the judgment of the district court, subject to an appeal to this court, was made conclusive. The claimants in the present case have invoked this alternative, and if their case does not come within the class of which that court has jurisdiction, as defined by Congress, they must fail on this appeal.

There was excluded from confirmation, under this Act, either by the courts or by the favorable report of the officers of the Land Department, any claim which had been theretofore presented for confirmation before any Board of Commissioners, or other public officers acting under authority of Congress, and rejected as being fraudulent, or procured or maintained by fraudulent or improper means, or which had already been twice rejected on the merits by previous Boards.

But aside from this exclusion, the description of the class of cases in which the district court has jurisdiction to decree confirmation is found in the 11th section of the Act, and it is copied and construed in the opinion in Scull's Case, at page 418 of 98 U. S. [ante, 165].

We again epitomize that construction:

1. The documents, surveys, possession or other acts on which claimant relies, must have been completed during the period of the actual possession of the Government, prior to that of the United States, under which the claim is asserted.

2. The claimant, or those under whom he holds, must have been out of possession for twenty years or more before the suit is commenced.

3. The claim must be sustained: under a complete grant or concession from such Government, or order of survey duly executed; or by other mode of investiture of original title in the claimants, by separation thereof from the mass of the public domain, either by actual survey or definition of fixed, natural or ascertainable boundaries, or initial points, courses and distances, by competent authority, prior to the cession of such lands to the United States.

We also said in that case that the action under that statute is substantially an action of ejectment in which the United States consents to be a defendant and sued as if in possession and the bar of the Statute of Limitations removed.

In the case before us, neither the claimants nor any of their predecessors in interest were ever in possession of the land, nor was any survey of it made under the former Government, nor has any survey yet been made for the purpose of locating the grant. There has never been any separation of it from the public domain nor any attempt to separate it.

Is there any such definition of fixed, natural, ascertainable boundaries, with courses and distances, in the supposed concession as will identify the land so as to make this separation?

As we have already said, no attempt has been made to make an actual survey which would establish an answer to this question. A sufficient reason for this may be found in the following extract from the decree itself:

"And the parties to the above suits having by stipulation and agreement of record referred to the court six plans or maps representing different modes of locating said concession, * * * and the quantities of land represented by said plans having now been determined and reported to the court by a sworn expert, * * * it is ordered and decreed that the plan marked 'I' truly represents the lands conceded to Jacques Clamorgan."

The quantity of land embraced in the largest of these plans is estimated by this expert at 1,810,240 acres, and in the one adopted by the court, at 94,136 acres; the former being twenty times as much as the latter. The expert testifies that the estimate is as accurate as can be made in the absence of an actual survey in the field. And yet the claimants who appeal to this court, in order to get the largest of these amounts, did not even attempt to make an actual survey of the concession, which, if they are correct, embraces a highly civilized and thickly settled population, with no other difficulty in making such survey than what is found in the descriptive language of the grant. It is reasonable to suppose that that difficulty was known to be insurmountable, and this is confirmed by the irreconcilable differences of the conjectural plats, on which the government is to be calculated out of land scrip worth over $2,000,000. That the selection of one of these plats, almost at hazard, is to be made the foundation of the judgment of the court is directly opposed to the construction we have given to the section of the Act under which the court exercises this jurisdiction.

But if we examine the description afforded by this supposed concession for ourselves, we must arrive at the same conclusion. The only description is that found in Clamorgan's petition asking Lieut-Gov. Trudeau for the concession, and is as follows: "A tract of land on the western side of the Mississippi, some leagues above the mouth of the Missouri, bounded on the one side by the little river called La Charette, or Dardenne, and on the other by the little river called Au Cuivre, one on the south, the other on the north of the boundaries to those two sides; also 60 arpents of land in front, on the banks of the Mississippi, immediately adjoining the mouth of the first above named river, La Charette, in descending the current of the Mississippi; and again 60 arpents in front, also, on the banks of the Mississippi, adjoining immediately to the upper side of the mouth of the second above named river, Au Cuivre, in ascending the current of the Mississippi; the depth of the three different above described tracts of land to be extended by two lines starting from the banks of the Mississippi, one from the most southern and the other from the most northern point of the front of the above demanded tracts, which two lines shall be run parallel on each side, in a westerly direction, until they reach the top of the high hills in the rear; and from there the said two lines to be continued and prolonged in the same westerly direction until they reach a point at the distance of 200 arpents from the foot of said hills, and then those two extreme points shall be connected together by a straight line which shall be so run as to form the fourth side of the said three tracts here above demanded; the said lines encompassing in their extent all the waters of the above mentioned rivers, La Charette alias Dardenne, and Au Cuivre, in order that hereafter the petitioner may erect saw and grist mills thereon, also place there a number of cattle, have slaughter-houses, and send salt meat to the capital." The Charette and the Au Cuivre Rivers, and the point where each enters the Mississippi, are known or ascertainable. So, also, it is clear there could be ascertained the points 60 arpents above the mouth of the one, and as many below the other. But the point mentioned as the top of the high hills in the rear, in a westerly direction, is not known and cannot be ascertained from any evidence in this record.

It is also clear from the plats presented to us that any two lines drawn west or westerly from points on the Mississippi River, 60 arpents north and south of the mouths of the Charette and Au Cuivre, parallel to each other, would cross one or both of those rivers, and leave a large part of the land lying between them out of the survey. Nor is any attempt made to identify the high hills or two hundred arpents from the foot of said hills, where the line shall be drawn which is to close the survey by connecting the two lines first mentioned.

In short, without elaborating this matter as we did in Scull's Case, it is apparent that when Clamorgan petitioned for his land and undertook to describe what he asked for, he had no knowledge of the ascending course of the two streams he mentioned, nor of the hills, if there were any, west of the Mississippi, nor of anything else probably but the bottom lands adjoining that river.

If the survey which the Spanish manner of granting public lands required, and which the order of Lieut-Gov. Trudeau required in this case, had been made, these mistakes would have been corrected, and the final concession from Governor Carondelet, who alone could make such a grant, would, either in that document or by reference to the executed survey, have given a sufficient description. In Scull's Case there was an attempt to supply the want of an actual survey by what the royal surveyor called "a figurative plan," and on this Governor Carondelet issued the final grant.

But in the present case there was neither an actual survey, nor a figurative plan, nor a final concession. And, as we have already shown, no such description was in the petition of the original claimant as will enable any one to identify the land or make a definitive location of it.

That we do not attach more importance to this want of a sufficient description of land granted than Congress intended may be seen by a reference to the third class of section 3 of the Act, in which Congress directs the land-officers "To include all claims which, in their opinion, ought to be rejected, whether from defect of proof, suspicion of fraud based on probable ground, uncertainty of location, vagueness of description, or any other cause sufficient in their opinion to justify such rejection." Obviously, even before this Board, which was only to report to Congress, uncertainty of location and vagueness of description were held to be sufficient grounds for their rejection of the claim. Much more is it a good ground in an action in court, under the limitations of the Act which we have considered as binding the court.

Two other serious exceptions are taken to claimants' title to recover.

It is said that there was no completed grant made by the Spanish Government; because Governor Carondelet, who alone could make such a grant, has not done so.

And certainly it is open to grave doubt whether the extract from a letter of Carondelet to Trudeau, in which, among other things, he expresses his approval of the motives of Trudeau in making the order of survey in favor of Clamorgan, can be construed into an official act, which amounts to a grant, at a time when no survey had been made, nor any reason given for not making it.

So, also, the petition of the present claimants in the district court in this suit shows that this claim was before different tribunals under the several Acts on that subject, and was reported against in both instances, and that this was long ago.

Counsel for Government insist with much force of argument that the claim was thus "twice rejected on its merits," within the meaning of the statute under which we are now proceeding. But we do not think it necessary to examine either of these points critically, because we are satisfied that, on the first ground we have discussed, the case comes within that of Scull, and is not so well supported as that was in the matter on which it was decided.

The judgment of the District Court is, therefore, reversed and the case remanded, with directions to dismiss the petition on the merits.

This renders unnecessary the consideration of the appeal of the claimants from the same decree.

Review of order—removal of causes.

1. This court has power to review an order of the Circuit Court remanding a cause to the State Court, from which it had been removed.

2. Where a plaintiff is a citizen of the same State as the defendant in the State Court, the suit is not removable, under the rule settled in Removal Cases, ante, 593.

[No. 42.]

Submitted Nov. 4, 1879. Decided Jan. 12, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois. The case is stated by the court.

Mr. M. W. Fuller, for appellant.

Messrs. W. C. Goudy, James F. Bonfield, Elliott Anthony and F. Adams, for appellees:

This is not an attempt on the part of Ayers to remove a part of the case, but the case is wholly removed as to the plaintiff, and all the defendants, and he bases the right to removal wholly upon the Act of 1875. Under this Act it is held that it is necessary that the state citizenship of each individual plaintiff shall be different from the state citizenship of each individual defendant, and that where one or more of the defendants are of the same State as the plaintiff, and one of the defendants of another and different State, the latter cannot have the cause removed.

Petterson v. Chapman, 13 Blatchf., 395.

Even under the Law of 1866, in an action very much like the one at bar, the Supreme Court holds that a single foreign defendant cannot have the cause removed.

Gardner v. Brown, 21 Wall., 36 [88 U. S., XXII., 527].

The crucial test seems to be: can the case be determined without the presence of the other co-defendants? If not, then it is not removable.

See, also, Knapp v. R. R. Co., 20 Wall., 117 (87 U. S., XXII., 328); Case of the Sewing-Machine Companies, 18 Wall., 553 (85 U. S., XXI., 914); Carraher v. Brown, 13 Bush (Ky.), 681.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 27th of December, 1873, David A. Gage and Eliza M., his wife, citizens of Illinois, conveyed to George Taylor, also a citizen of Illinois, a large quantity of real estate in Cook County, Illinois, in trust to secure the City of Chicago, an Illinois municipal Corporation, against loss by reason of the indebtedness of Gage as Treasurer of the City. The trustee was authorized to take possession of and manage the property, collect the income, pay taxes, etc., and, under the direction and with the concurrence of the Comptroller of the City, sell and convey the property as soon as it could be done to the interest of all concerned, paying the proceeds into the treasury of the City in liquidation, pro tanto, of whatever sum should be found due from Gage, as late Treasurer, to the City. If, when the debt was paid, any of the property remained unsold, it was to be reconveyed to Gage. Should the debt not be paid in eight months, the Comptroller was authorized to order a peremptory sale, on such terms as to him seemed best. The amount of the debt to the City was not stated in this deed of trust.

On the 20th of October, 1874, the City of Chicago filed a bill in equity in the Superior Court of Cook County against Gage and his wife and Taylor to enforce this trust. In the bill it was alleged that the debt of Gage to the City amounted to something more than $500,000; that more than eight months had elapsed since the execution and delivery of the deed of trust; and that the Comptroller of the City had directed Taylor, the trustee, to make a peremptory sale of the property, or so much thereof as was necessary, for cash, but that he had refused to do so. The prayer of the bill was that the amount due from Gage to the City might be determined, and that Taylor might be directed to sell the property to pay the debt.

On the 17th of November, 1874, Gage and his wife answered, admitting the execution of the trust-deed, but denying "That there was any indebtedness due from said David A. Gage to the said City, which it was his duty to pay over to his successor," and denying "that said Gage neglected, failed, or refused so to do." To this answer a replication was filed December 22 and December 30, Taylor answered, admitting all the allegations of the bill except as to the amount due the City, and declaring his willingness to proceed with the execution of the trust as soon as the amount of the debt was ascertained. April 2, Gage moved the court for a continuance of the cause on his affidavit showing the absence of a material witness, by whom he expected to prove his defense against the account as made out by the City.

On the 5th of April, 1875, while this motion for a continuance remained undisposed of, William T. Ayers, a citizen of Alabama, executor of the will of Charles P. Gage, also at his death a citizen of Alabama, obtained a judgment in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois against David A. Gage for $3,065.92, and on the 8th of the same month filed a petition in the State Court setting forth that he, as a judgment creditor of David A. Gage, claimed a lien on the property included in the trust-deed, and asking that he might be made a party defendant to the suit pending in that court, with leave to answer. The prayer of this petition was granted, and at once Ayers filed an answer setting up his judgment and averring that the trust-deed was void for want of consideration; and further, that even if found to be valid, there was but a small amount of the debt it was intended to secure still unpaid, and that there was enough of the trust property to pay his judgment after the claim of the City was satisfied. On the same day he filed a cross-bill, which was in the nature of a creditors' bill, to subject the trust property to pay his judgment. In this bill he alleged that there was nothing due from Gage to the City, and set forth with much particularity the defenses which Gage had against the claim made by the City. As soon as these pleadings were filed, he presented his petition, accompanied by a sufficient bond, for the removal of the suit to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois, alleging for cause that he was a citizen of the State of Alabama, and all the other parties were citizens of Illinois; "That, in the said original bill there is a controversy which is wholly between the said complainants and your petitioner, and which can be fully determined as between them;" and that, as to the cross bill, "the controversy therein is wholly between citizens of different States." The State Court ordered the cause transferred, and on the first of May Ayers filed a transcript of the record in the Circuit Court, and had the suit docketed there. Afterwards the parties appeared; and on motion of the City the cause was remanded to the State Court. From that order Ayers appealed to this court. After the appeal was docketed the City moved to dismiss because the order remanding the cause was not one from which an appeal is allowed, and because the order was not on the merits of the cause, nor a final order, judgment, or decree from which an appeal lies. This motion was submitted with the case on its merits.

There is no doubt of our jurisdiction. Section 5 of the Act of 1875, 18 Stat., 472, is as follows:

"That if, in any suit commenced in a Circuit Court, or removed from a State Court to a Circuit Court of the United States, it shall appear to the satisfaction of said circuit court, at any time after such suit has been brought or removed thereto, that such suit does not really and substantially involve a dispute or controversy properly within the jurisdiction of said Circuit Court, or that the parties to said suit have been improperly or collusively made or joined, either as plaintiffs or defendants, for the purpose of creating a case, cognizable or removable under this Act; the said Circuit Court shall proceed no further therein, but shall dismiss the suit or remand it to the court from which it was removed, as justice may require, and shall make such order as to costs as shall be just; but the order of said Circuit Court dismissing or remanding said cause to the State Court shall be reviewable by the Supreme Court on writ of error or appeal, as the case may be."

The order appealed from in this case comes directly within the last clause of this section. It follows that the motion to dismiss must be overruled.

The original bill and cross-bill constitute one suit. Ayres v. Carver, 17 How., 591 [58 U. S., XV., 179]; Ex parte R. R. Co., 95 U. S., 221 [XXIV., 355]. A cross-bill, too, must grow out of the original suit. It cannot bring in new and distinct matters. It is "A proceeding to procure a complete determination of a matter already in litigation." 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1549, and n. 2.

Ayers was permitted to make himself a party because he claimed to have acquired a lien on the trust property pending the suit. He was allowed to take part in a controversy then existing between Gage and the City. He has no dispute with Gage; neither has he any separately with the City. The most that can be said is that he and Gage have a controversy with the City as to its lien on the property, and that Gage, who is on the same side of that controversy with him, is a citizen of the same State with the City. Such being the case, the suit was not removable under the rule settled in Removal Cases [ante, 593].

The order of the Circuit Court remanding the cause is affirmed.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of New Jersey.

This was an action brought in the court below, by the plaintiff in error against the defendant in error, to recover damages occasioned by an injury to his wife, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant, while she was a passenger upon the defendant's road. The damages alleged in the declaration were that the plaintiff had been subjected to large expense for medicine and medical aid, etc., and had been deprived of the labor and services of his said wife.

Among other defenses the defendant set up that of former recovery.

Pollard and his wife had previously brought an action in the same court against the same defendant to recover damages occasioned by the same injury, and had recovered a judgment which had been paid.

The damages alleged in the declaration in this last mentioned action were that "The said Sarah H. Pollard has suffered great pain, both of body and mind, and during all of said time has been unable to perform her accustomed work and duties, and unable to move from place to place without suffering great pain, and the said injuries by her so sustained as aforesaid, are of a permanent character," etc.

The plaintiff demurred to the plea of the defendant setting up the defense of former recovery, and the court below overruled this demurrer and entered final judgment in favor of the defendant.

See, R. R. Co. v. Pollard, 22 Wall., 341 (89 U. S., XXII., 877).

Messrs. Albert A. Abbott and John S. Abbott, for plaintiff in error:

The damages claimed by the present plaintiff were not claimed in the former action, and they were not and could not have been recovered therein.

The Statute of New Jersey, Nixon's Dig., 4th ed., p. 735, affords no exception to this point. It relates to actions ex delicto only. In this connection see Brockbank v. R. R. Co., 7 Hurl. & N., 834.

A former recovery is binding only upon parties or their privies who have a mutual or successive relationship to the same right or thing.

The former recovery concludes the parties only in the character and as to the right in which they sue or are sued.

The present plaintiff was not a party to the former action in his own right, but in the right of his wife; and he was joined as a party to that action only because of that relationship.

The plaintiffs in the former action had no joint right to recover for the damages which the present plaintiff alone sustained.

Bond on appeal—motion to dismiss or affirm.

1. The condition of a bond on appeal, that the appellants "Shall duly prosecute their said appeal with effect and, moreover, pay the amount of costs and damages rendered and to be rendered in case the decree shall be affirmed in the Supreme Court," covers fully all the requirements of the statute.

2. In such case, the appellee cannot couple with a motion to dismiss, a motion, under Rule 6, to affirm, on the ground that the appeal was taken for delay only.

MOTIONS to vacate supersedeas and dismiss appeal from the Circuit Court for the Northern District of Illinois.

The statements appear in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. L. Proudfoot and Geo. Herbert, for appellee:

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

These motions are founded on an alleged defect in the form of the condition of the bond. By section 1000 R. S., the security to be taken on a writ of error or an appeal, where the writ or the appeal is a supersedeas and stays execution, must be "That the plaintiff in error or the appellant shall prosecute his writ or appeal to effect and, if he fail to make his plea good, shall answer all damages and costs." The condition of the bond in this case is, that the appellants "Shall duly prosecute their said appeal with effect and, moreover, pay the amount of costs and damages rendered and to be rendered in case the decree shall be affirmed in said Supreme Court."

The object of the statutory requirement undoubtedly is, to secure to the opposite party his damages and costs, in case the judgment or decree shall not be reversed, and that, we think, is the legal effect of this bond. If, on the final disposition of a writ of error or appeal, the judgment or decree brought under review is not substantially reversed, it is affirmed and the writ of error or appeal has not been prosecuted with effect. In our opinion the language of the bond covers fully all the requirements of the statute. The motions to dismiss the appeal and vacate the supersedeas are, therefore, overruled.

The appellee has coupled with her motion to dismiss, a motion, under Rule 6, to affirm, because it is manifest that the appeal was taken for delay only. Clearly this is not a case for the application of that rule.

Copyright—book-keeping—art of—blank books—Selden's ledger.

1. The exclusive property in a system of book-keeping cannot be claimed, under the law of copyright, by means of a book in which that system is explained.

2. The copyright of a book on book-keeping cannot secure the exclusive right to make, sell and use account books prepared upon the plan set forth in such book.

3. The description of an art in a book, although entitled to the benefit of copyright, lays no foundation for an exclusive claim to the art itself.

4. Blank account-books are not the subject of copyright.

5. The mere copyright of Selden's "Condensed Ledger, or Book-keeping Simplified," did not confer upon him the exclusive right to make and use account-books, ruled and arranged as designated by him and described and illustrated in said book.

Argued Dec. 2, 3, 1879. Decided Jan. 19, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Ohio.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Alphonso Taft, E. F. Noyes and H.

P. Lloyd, for appellant:

Complainant has contributed to the useful arts "a system of ruling books in which accounts are kept." That is all.

This is not the subject of copyright. It is a contribution to useful mechanical art, not to literature. It conveys no thought, gives no information, expresses no idea. It is a mechanical process of ruling, which any stationer's clerk could perform with simple pen and ruler.

This was evidently the idea of the inventor, for he applied to the Patent Office for letters patent to cover his system of ruling lines.

This point is practically conceded by the learned counsel for appellee in the oral argument. He describes the state of the art when Selden invented his rulings. This refers only to patent-rights. He also says that "The Selden system is an artificial system for the art of book-keeping." These are his exact words. They do not refer to authorship, but solely to invention.

Our claim that Selden's ruled lines are not the subject of a copyright, is supported by the entire tenor of the decision of this court in the case of Perris v. Hexamer, decided at the October Term, 1878 (ante, 308).

It is further supported by the reasoning of the learned Judge in the opinion rendered in the Trade-Mark Cases, at the present Term (ante, 550).

It is fully confirmed by the opinion of Vice-Chancellor Malins, in the case of Page v. Wisden, 20 Law Times (N S.), 435, where a form of ruled lines quite similar to Selden's was distinctly held not to be a subject of copyright.

Messrs. C. W. Moulton and M. I. Southard, for appellee:

What is the proper subject of a copyright under the statute?

R. S., sec. 4952.

"The literary property intended to be protected by the Act is not to be determined by the size, form or shape in which it makes its appearance, but by the subject-matter of the work."

Drone, Copyr., 142.

What subject-matter may be copyrighted is not to be ascertained by reference to lexicographers; but by the scope and object of the Legislature. The statute is somewhat general in its provisions, and the specific subjects comprehended within them, must be left to judicial interpretation. Drone, Copyr., 143.

The meaning of the terms employed, as that of "book," "chart," etc., are comprehensive and embrace many subjects not included in the popular sense and acceptance. They have a legal meaning entirely different. A "song," a "diagram," a "map," a "sheet of music," etc., have been adjudged to fall within the definition of "book."

This interpretation was given under the old English Statute of 8 Anne, which is similar to the Statute of the United States in this respect.

Drone, Copyr., 140, et seq.; Bach v. Longman, Cowp., 623; Hime v. Dale, 2 Camp., 27, note.

And the same liberal construction has been adopted by the text writers and courts in the United States.

2 Kent, Com., 311; Clayton v. Stone, 2 Paine, 382; Seoville v. Toland, 6 West. L. J., 84; Drury v. Ewing, 1 Bond, 540.

The essential tests are:

(1) Is the subject-matter original?
(2) Is it a material contribution to useful knowledge?

Drone, Copyr., 181.

Such we conceive to be the distinguishing features of what may be the subject-matter of copyright under the statute; and the copyright of appellee, we submit, falls clearly within the scope of the law, in so far as it is a contribution to useful knowledge. It embraces one of the most necessary features of every day business life, and serves a purpose of usefulness that needs no demonstration.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

Charles Selden, the testator of the complainant in this case, in the year 1859 took the requisite steps for obtaining the copyright of a book, entitled "Selden's Condensed Ledger, or Book-keeping Simplified," the object of which was to exhibit and explain a peculiar system of book-keeping. In 1860 and 1861, he took the copyright of several other books, containing additions to and improvements upon the said system. The bill of complaint was filed against the defendant, Baker, for an alleged infringement of these copyrights. The latter, in his answer, denied that Selden was the author or designer of the books and denied the infringement charged, and contends on the argument that the matter alleged to be infringed is not a lawful subject of copyright.

The parties went into proofs, and the various books of the complainant, as well as those sold and used by the defendant, were exhibited before the examiner, and witnesses were examined on both sides.

The book or series of books, of which the complainant claims the copyright, consists of an introductory essay explaining the system of book-keeping referred to, to which are annexed certain forms or blanks, consisting of ruled lines and headings, illustrating the system and showing how it is to be used and carried out in practice. This system effects the same results as book-keeping by double entry; but, by a peculiar arrangement of columns and headings, presents the entire operation, of a day, a week or a month, on a single page or on two pages facing each other, in an account-book. The defendant uses a similar plan so far as results are concerned; but makes a different arrangement of the columns, and uses different headings. If the complainant's testator had the exclusive right to the use of the system explained in his book, it would be difficult to contend that the defendant does not infringe it, notwithstanding the difference in his form of arrangement; but if it be assumed that the system is open to public use, it seems to be equally difficult to contend that the books made and sold by the defendant are a violation of the copyright of the complainant's book considered merely as a book explanatory of the system. Where the truths of a science or the methods of an art are the common property of the whole world, any author has the right to express the one, or explain and use the other, in his own way. As an author, Selden explained the system in a particular way. It may be conceded that Baker makes and uses account books arranged on substantially the same system; but the proof fails to show that he has violated the copyright of Selden's book, regarding the latter merely as an explanatory work; or that he has infringed Selden's right in any way, unless the latter became entitled to an exclusive right in the system.

The evidence of the complainant is principally directed to the object of showing that Baker uses the same system as that which is explained and illustrated in Selden's books. It becomes important, therefore, to determine whether, in obtaining the copyright of his books, he secured the exclusive right to the use of the system or method of book-keeping which the said books are intended to illustrate and explain. It is contended that he has secured such exclusive right, because no one can use the system without using substantially the same ruled lines and headings which he has appended to his books in illustration of it. In other words; it is contended that the ruled lines and headings, given to illustrate the system, are a part of the book and, as such, are secured by the copyright; and that no one can make or use similar ruled lines and headings, or ruled lines and headings made and arranged on substantially the same system, without violating the copyright. And this is really the question to be decided in this case. Stated in another form, the question is whether the exclusive property in a system of book-keeping can be claimed, under the law of copyright, by means of a book in which that system is explained. The complainant's bill and the case made under it, are based on the hypothesis that it can be.

It cannot be pretended and, indeed, it is not seriously urged, that the ruled lines of the complainant's account-book can be claimed under any special class of objects, other than books, named in the law of copyright existing in 1859. The law then in force was that of 1831, 4 Stat. at L., 436, and specified only books, maps, charts, musical compositions, prints and engravings. An account-book, consisting of ruled lines and blank columns, cannot be called by any of these names, unless by that of a book.

There is no doubt that a work on the subject of book-keeping, though only explanatory of well known systems, may be the subject of a copyright; but, then, it is claimed only as a book. Such a book may be explanatory either of old systems, or of an entirely new system; and, considered as a book, as the work of an author conveying information on the subject of book-keeping and containing detailed explanations of the art, it may be a very valuable acquisition to the practical knowledge of the community. But there is a clear distinction between the book, as such, and the art which it is intended to illustrate. The mere statement of the proposition is so evident that it requires hardly any argument to support it. The same distinction may be predicated of every other art as well as that of book-keeping. A treatise on the composition and use of medicines, be they old or new; on the construction and use of ploughs or watches or churns; or on the mixture and application of colors for painting or dyeing; or on the mode of drawing lines to produce the effect of perspective, would be the subject of copyright; but no one would contend that the copyright of the treatise would give the exclusive right to the art or manufacture described therein. The copyright of the book, if not pirated from other works, would be valid without regard to the novelty or want of novelty of its subject-matter. The novelty of the art or thing described or explained has nothing to do with the validity of the copyright. To give to the author of the book an exclusive property in the art described therein, when no examination of its novelty has ever been officially made, would be a surprise and a fraud upon the public. That is the province of letters patent, not of copyright. The claim to an invention or discovery of an art or manufacture must be subjected to the examination of the Patent Office before an exclusive right therein can be obtained; and it can only be secured by a patent from the government.

The difference between the two things, letters patent and copyright, may be illustrated by reference to the subjects just enumerated. Take the case of medicines. Certain mixtures are found to be of great value in the healing art.

If the discoverer writes and publishes a book on the subject (as regular physicians generally do), he gains no exclusive right to the manufacture and sale of the medicine; he gives that to the public. If he desires to acquire such exclusive right, he must obtain a patent for the mixture as a new art, manufacture or composition of matter. He may copyright his book, if he pleases; but that only secures to him the exclusive right of printing and publishing his book. So of all other inventions or discoveries.

The copyright of a book on perspective, no matter how many drawings and illustrations it may contain, gives no exclusive right to the modes of drawing described, though they may never have been known or used before. By publishing the book, without getting a patent for the art, the latter is given to the public. The fact that the art described in the book by illustrations of lines and figures which are reproduced in practice in the application of the art, makes no difference. Those illustrations are the mere language employed by the author to convey his ideas more clearly. Had he used words of description instead of diagrams, which merely stand in the place of words, there could not be the slightest doubt that others, applying the art to practical use, might lawfully draw the lines and diagrams which were in the author's mind, and which he thus described by words in his book.

The copyright of a work on mathematical science cannot give to the author an exclusive right to the methods of operation which he propounds, or to the diagrams which he employs to explain them, so as to prevent an engineer from using them whenever occasion requires. The very object of publishing a book on science or the useful arts is to communicate to the world the useful knowledge which it contains. But this object would be frustrated if the knowledge could not be used without incurring the guilt of piracy of the book. And where the art it teaches cannot be used without employing the methods and diagrams used to illustrate the book, or such as are similar to them, such methods and diagrams are to be considered as necessary incidents to the art, and given therewith to the public; not given for the purpose of publication in other works explanatory of the art, but for the purpose of practical application.

Of course, these observations are not intended to apply to ornamental designs, or pictorial illustrations addressed to the taste. Of these it may be said that their form is their essence, and their object the production of pleasure in their contemplation. This is their final end. They are as much the product of genius and the result of composition as are the lines of the poet or the historian's periods. On the other hand, the teachings of science and the rules and methods of useful art have their final end in application and use; and this application and use are what the public derive from the publication of a book which teaches them. But as embodied and taught in a literary composition or book, their essence consists only in their statement. This alone is what is secured by the copyright. The use by another of the same methods of statement, whether in words or illustrations, in a book published for teaching the art, would, undoubtedly, be an infringement of the copyright.

Recurring to the case before us, we observe that Charles Selden, by his books, explained and described a peculiar system of book-keeping, and illustrated his method by means of ruled lines and blank columns, with proper headings on a page, or on successive pages. Now, whilst no one has a right to print or publish his book, or any material part thereof, as a book intended to convey instruction in the art, any person may practice and use the art itself which he has described and illustrated therein. The use of the art is a totally different thing from a publication of the book explaining it. The copyright of a book on book-keeping cannot secure the exclusive right to make, sell and use account books prepared upon the plan set forth in such book. Whether the art might or might not have been patented, is a question which is not before us. It was not patented, and is open and free to the use of the public. And, of course, in using the art, the ruled lines and headings of accounts must necessarily be used as incident to it.

The plausibility of the claim put forward by the complainant in this case arises from a confusion of ideas produced by the peculiar nature of the art described in the books which have been made the subject of copyright. In describing the art, the illustrations and diagrams employed happen to correspond more closely than usual with the actual work performed by the operator who uses the art. Those illustrations and diagrams consist of ruled lines and headings of accounts; and it is similar ruled lines and headings of accounts which in the application of the art, the book-keeper makes with his pen, or the stationer with his press; whilst in most other cases the diagrams and illustrations can only be represented in concrete forms of wood, metal, stone, or some other physical embodiment. But the principle is the same in all. The description of the art in a book, though entitled to the benefit of copyright, lays no foundation for an exclusive claim to the art itself. The object of the one is explanation; the object of the other is use. The former may be secured by copyright. The latter can only be secured, if it can be secured at all, by letters patent.

The remarks of Mr. Justice Thompson in the circuit court in Clayton v. Stone, 2 Paine, 392, in which copyright was claimed in a daily price-current, are apposite and instructive. He says: "In determining the true construction to be given to the Act of Congress, it is proper to look at the Constitution of the United States, to aid us in ascertaining the nature of the property intended to be protected. 'Congress shall have power to promote the progress of science and useful arts, by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their writings and discoveries.' The Act in question was passed in execution of the power here given, and the object, therefore, was the promotion of science: and it would, certainly, be a pretty extraordinary view of the sciences to consider a daily or weekly publication of the state of the market as falling within any class of them. They are of a more fixed, permanent and durable character. The term 'science' cannot, with any propriety, be applied to a work of so fluctuating and fugitive a form as that of a newspaper or price-current, the subject-matter of which is daily changing, and is of mere temporary use. Although great praise may be due to the plaintiffs for their industry and enterprise in publishing this paper, yet the law does not contemplate their being rewarded in this way; it must seek patronage and protection from its utility to the public, and not as a work of science. The title of the Act of Congress is, 'for the encouragement of learning,' and was not intended for the encouragement of mere industry, unconnected with learning and the sciences. * * * We are, accordingly, of opinion that the paper in question is not a book the copyright to which can be secured under the Act of Congress."

The case of Cobbett v. Woodward, L. R., 14 Eq., 407, was a claim to copyright in a catalogue of furniture which the publisher had on sale in his establishment, illustrated with many drawings of furniture and decorations. The defendants, being dealers in the same business, published a similar book, and copied many of the plaintiff's drawings, though it was shown that they had for sale the articles represented thereby. The court held that these drawings were not subjects of copyright. Lord Romilly, M. R., said: "This is a mere advertisement for the sale of particular articles which anyone might imitate, and anyone might advertise for sale. If a man, not being a vendor of any of the articles in question, were to publish a work for the purpose of informing the public of what was the most convenient species of articles for household furniture, or the most graceful species of decorations for articles of home furniture, what they ought to cost, and where they might be bought, and were to illustrate his work with designs of each article he described, such a work as this could not be pirated with impunity, and the attempt to do so would be stopped by the injunction of the Court of Chancery; yet if it were done with no such object, but solely for the purpose of advertising particular articles for sale, and promoting the private trade of the publisher by the sale of articles which any other person might sell as well as the first advertiser, and if, in fact, it contained little more than an illustrated inventory of the contents of a warehouse, I know of no law which, while it would not prevent the second advertiser from selling the same articles, would prevent him from using the same advertisement; provided he did not in such advertisement by any device suggest that he was selling the works and designs of the first advertiser."

Another case, that of Page v. Wisden, 20 L. T. (N. S.), 435, which came before Vice-Chancellor Malins in 1869, has some resemblance to the present. There a copyright was claimed in a cricket scoring-sheet, and the Vice-Chancellor held that it was not a fit subject for copyright, partly because it was not new, but also because "To say that a particular mode of ruling a book constituted an object for a copyright is absurd."

These cases, if not precisely in point, come near to the matter in hand and, in our view, corroborate the general proposition which we have laid down.

The case Drury v. Ewing, before Judge Leavitt in the Ohio Circuit, reported in 1 Bond, 540, which is much relied on by the complainant was one where a copyright was claimed in a chart of patterns for cutting dresses and basques for ladies, and coats, jackets, etc., for boys. It is obvious that such designs could only be printed and published for information, and not for use in themselves. Their practical use could only be exemplified in cloth on the tailor's board and under his shears; in other words, by the application of a mechanical operation to the cutting of cloth in certain patterns and forms. Surely the exclusive right to this practical use was not reserved to the publisher by his copyright of the chart. Without undertaking to say whether we should or should not concur in the decision in that case, we think it cannot control the present.

The conclusion to which we have come is, that blank account-books are not the subject of copyright; and that the mere copyright of Selden's book did not confer upon him the exclusive right to make and use account-books, ruled and arranged as designated by him and described and illustrated in said book.

The decree of the Circuit Court must be reversed and the cause remanded, with instructions to dismiss the complainant's bill.

JOHN Z. GOODRICH, LATE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 278-285.)

Duty Act—similar goods—designation.

1. Under the Tariff Acts of 1861 and 1862, duties, at the rate of thirty per cent ad valorem, and two cents per square yard, were chargeable on goods known in trade as poil de chèvres, reps, plaids, lusters or Saxony dress-goods.

2. The statute does not contemplate that goods classed under the words "of similar description" shall be in all respects the same. The phrase "of similar description," is not a commercial term.

3. Commercial designation of an article among traders and importers, where such designation is clearly established, fixes its character for the purpose of the tariff laws.

Argued Dec. 22, 1879. Decided Jan. 19, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts.

This was an action brought in the court below, by the plaintiffs in error, against Goodrich, the defendant in error, to recover an alleged excess of duties collected by the defendant as Collector of the Port of Boston, upon certain goods imported by the plaintiffs.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Judgment having been rendered for the defendant, the plaintiffs sued out this writ of error.

Mr. Chas. Levi Woodbury, for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. Edwin B. Smith, Asst. Atty-Gen., for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

That the goods imported by the plaintiffs were subject to a duty of thirty per cent under the Act of March 2, 1861, 12 Stat. at L., 192, is not denied. They belonged to the class described in that Act as "Manufactures, not otherwise provided for, composed of mixed materials, in part of cotton, silk, wool or worsted, or flax." The controversy between the parties now is over the question what was added to that duty by the Act of July 14, 1862, 12 Stat. at L., 553.

By the 3d item of section 13 of the Act of 1861 a duty of twenty-five per cent ad valorem was imposed upon "All delaines, cashmere delaines, muslin delaines, barege delaines, composed wholly or in part of wool, gray or uncolored, and on all other gray or uncolored goods of similar description;" "on bunting and on all stained, colored or printed, and on all other manufactures of wool, or of which wool shall be a component material, not otherwise provided for, a duty of thirty per cent ad valorem."

By section 22 of the same Act a duty of thirty per cent was levied in the mixed material clause quoted above. A subsequent Act, passed on the 5th of August, 1861, 12 Stat. at L., 292, amended the 3d item of section 13 of the Act of March 2, 1861, by striking from it the word "wool" wherever it occurred, and inserting the word "worsted" in lieu thereof.

Thus stood the law when the Act of 1862 was enacted. It was an Act to increase the duties leviable under the Act of 1861. The 9th section enacted that in addition to the duties theretofore imposed there should be levied, collected and paid "On all delaines, cashmere delaines, muslin delaines, barege delaines, composed wholly or in part of worsted, wool, mohair or goat's hair, and on all goods of similar description, not exceeding in value forty cents per square yard, two cents per square yard.

On bunting, worsted yarns, and on all other manufactures of worsted, or of which worsted shall be a component material, not otherwise provided for, five per cent ad valorem."

A subsequent section of the Act imposed an additional duty of five per cent ad valorem also on "Manufactures not otherwise provided for, composed of mixed materials, in part of cotton, silk, wool or worsted, hemp, jute or flax."

An examination of these provisions will reveal very plainly that the classification of the articles made subject to an increased duty is not the same as it was in the Act of 1861. The first clause of the 3d item of section 13 of the Act of 1861, as amended in August, embraced only delaines composed wholly or in part of worsted and goods of similar description, woven in the gray or uncolored. The Act of 1862 grouped with them delaines made wholly or in part of wool, mohair or goat's hair, and also delaines composed wholly or in part of worsted and goods of similar description, not in the gray or uncolored. It was, therefore, much more comprehensive than the former Act. So the 2d clause of the 3d item of the 13th section of the Act of 1861 differs much from the corresponding clause of the Act of 1862.

Similar changes of classification appear when the mixed material clauses of the two Acts are compared. The changes were evidently not without a purpose.

Such were the statutory provisions when the plaintiffs' importations were made. The Collector exacted duties at the rate of thirty per cent ad valorem, and two cents per square yard, claiming that the goods were goods of similar description to the delaines mentioned in the 9th section of the Act of 1862, and did not exceed in value forty cents per square yard. On the other hand, the plaintiffs claimed that the goods having been classed under the Act of 1861, among manufactures of mixed materials, not otherwise provided for, and subjected to a duty of thirty per cent, continued in that class under the Act of 1862, and were, therefore, chargeable only with a duty of 35 per cent. Accordingly, having paid the duty exacted by the Collector, under protest, they have brought this suit to recover the difference between 35 per cent ad valorem, and 30 per cent and two cents per square yard.

It appeared in evidence that the goods were known in trade and were bought and sold as as poil de chèvres, reps, plaids, lustres, Saxony dress-goods. They were always woven in colors, the yarns being dyed or colored before weaving. They never existed in the gray or uncolored condition. But they were made, as delaines are made, with a cotton warp and a worsted weft, the difference between them and delaines (as stated in the plaintiff's protest) being that delaines are a fabric of all wool, or cotton warp and worsted weft, and made of yarns not dyed, the cloth being printed or dyed in the piece. It further appeared that as early as 1857 both the all-wool delaines and those with cotton warp and wool or worsted filling were known in trade by names changed from time to time, to suit the fancy of importers and purchasers. It also appeared that in several other particulars the goods of the plaintiffs differed from delaines. To these differences it is unnecessary now to refer in detail.

Now, conceding, as we may, that the plaintiffs' goods came under the mixed material clause of the Act of 1861, being excluded from the delaine clause, that embraced only goods woven in the gray, it is not perceived how that can throw any light upon the proper construction of the Act of 1862, which obviously intended a different classification. Undoubtedly, Acts of Congress in pari materia are to be construed with reference to each other. And it may be admitted that when, in a later Act, Congress uses expressions that had a recognized meaning in a former Act relating to the same subject, they intend to use them in the same sense in which they were first used, that is, with their recognized meaning. But this rule has no bearing upon a case like the present. This is not a question respecting the meaning of terms. We cannot see, therefore, that the circuit court erred in refusing to affirm the plaintiffs' first four points, and in declining to rule under what clause of the Act of 1861 the imported goods fell. After all, the question for that court was the construction of the Act of 1862, and the construction given was, we think, correct. It could not have been different if the court had undertaken to construe with it the clauses of the Act of 1861. As we have said, the changes of classification and of phraseology made in the Act of 1862 show an intention to take out of the mixed material clause of the former Act (which was limited to manufactures not otherwise provided for) some descriptions of goods which the Act placed there, and by transferring them to another class, subject them to the additional duty prescribed for that class. If not so, what was the necessity for a reclassification? Why change the language? It would have been sufficient to declare what additional duty should be paid by each class as formerly arranged. The Act of 1861, therefore, could furnish no aid to the construction of the Act of 1862, and reference to it was unimportant, except for the purpose of discovering the percentage of duties it imposed.

The fifth point was properly refused. The words "of similar description" in the delaine clause of the Act of 1862 cannot be affirmed to have referred only to such goods as have the greater number of characteristics in common with delaines. Some common characteristics are of much more importance than others in determining resemblances.

The sixth point propounded was as follows: "Revenue laws designate and class substances according to the general usage and known denominations of trade. The words 'all goods of similar description' in the Tariff Act of 1862 refer to a similarity for revenue purposes with goods previously enumerated, and this is determined by what was then known and classed among merchants as similar goods; and if being woven in the gray or natural color of the worsted and other materials of which they are composed is found to have been an important and pervading characteristic, commonly distinguishing goods known among merchants as of similar description with delaines, then the goods on which the duties in this case were assessed were not of similar description with delaines, unless the jury find they were so woven in the gray or natural color, and unless these goods possessed all the pervading characteristics which in 1862 were commonly understood among merchants as distinguishing goods, known in commerce as of a similar description with delaines, from all other goods, the plaintiffs are entitled to a verdict." This point the court declined to affirm, and we think rightly, for several reasons.

There was no evidence, so far as it appears, to justify its presentation. The record exhibits nothing tending to show what was commonly understood among merchants as distinguishing goods, known in commerce as of a similar description with delaines, from all other goods. Nor was there any evidence that there were any goods known by merchants, or in commerce, as goods of a similar description with delaines; much less was it in proof that being woven in the gray was regarded by merchants as determining that goods so woven were not of similar description with delaines. In regard to all these matters, the record is silent. Composed, as the goods were, of the same materials as delaines, having a similar general appearance and intended for the same uses, they might well have been of similar description with colored delaines, though there were differences in the process of manufacture.

The statute does not contemplate that goods classed under the words "of similar description" shall be in all respects the same. If it did, these words would be unnecessary. They were intended to embrace goods like, but not identical with delaines.

The court charged the jury, in answer to a prayer of the defendant, that the similarity referred to in the expression "'goods of similar description,' in the Act of 1862, is a similarity in respect to the product, and its adaptation to uses, and to its uses, and not merely to the process by which it was produced, and that if a class of goods were not in 1862 commercially known as delaines, it does not follow that they were not goods of similar description, within the meaning of the statute." And again; "These words are to be taken and understood in their popular and received import, as generally understood in the community at large at the time of the passage of the Act." Other similar instruction was given, and the court called attention to all the alleged dissimilarities urged by the plaintiffs, including the fact that delaines are woven in the gray, and that the plaintiffs' goods were not, and summed up as follows:

"If you find that the product or result is an article for ladies' dresses made with a cotton warp and worsted filling, the question for your determination is, whether the two kinds of goods are substantially the same and alike. The process of manufacture, the worsted in the goods of the plaintiffs being dyed previous to weaving, is an element to be considered by the jury in coming to their conclusion, but not alone and distinct from all others which may have been established. It is for the jury to determine, from all the evidence in the case, whether, by the colored filling made and woven in the way and manner described with a cotton warp, the product is or not an article substantially similar and like the delaine fabrics; whether or not, while varying more or less in some particulars from delaines, the goods were or not substantially the same or substantially different from them. If substantially the same article, then the duties were properly assessed; but if they were substantially different, and the plaintiffs' goods were not of a similar description to the delaine fabrics, then they were not subject to the additional duty."

Notwithstanding the strenuous objections urged against such a submission to the jury, we think it was correct. At least it was quite as favorable to the plaintiffs as they had a right to demand. Reliance is placed upon the rule, which we admit to be established, that the commercial designation of an article among traders and importers, where such designation is clearly established, fixes its character for the purpose of the tariff laws. But the present is not a case of commercial designation of articles. The phrase "of similar description" is not a commercial term, and if it were, there is no evidence in the record to show what it is understood to mean among merchants and importers. In Mail-lard v. Lawrence, 16 How., 251, we have an instructive case bearing upon this subject. There the question was whether shawls came under one schedule of the Act of 1846, 9 Stat. at L., 42, imposing a duty of 25 per cent under another charged with a 30 per cent duty. In schedule C was included "Clothing ready-made and wearing apparel of every description, of whatever material composed, made up or manufactured," and it subjected them to 30 per cent duty. Schedule D described "Manufactures of silk, or of which silk shall be a component material, not otherwise provided for, manufactures of worsted, or of which worsted shall be a component material, not otherwise provided for," and imposed a 25 per cent duty. The circuit court had been requested to instruct the jury that if they should find that at the date of the Act the shawls in question were commercially known as manufactures of worsted, or of which worsted was a component material, and that they were not known in trade as clothing ready-made, or as wearing apparel, they were subject only to a duty of 25 per cent. This instruction was refused, and this court held correctly; holding that, while it was true that where words of art, or phrases, are novel or obscure, as in terms of art, it was proper to explain them by reference to the art or science to which they were appropriate, the rule was not so when the words or phrases are familiar to all classes, grades and occupations; and that the popular or received import of words furnishes the general rule for the interpretation of public laws as well as of private transactions. The court added, that if it could be conceded that, in the opinion of mercantile men, shawls were not considered wearing apparel, it would still remain to be proved that this opinion was sustained by the judgment of the community generally, or that the Legislature designed a departure from the natural and popular acceptance of language. The case was rested on the basis that "wearing apparel" was not a technical term. Much less is the phrase, goods "of a similar description."

Upon the whole, therefore, we think there was no error in the charge of the Judges in the court below, and, therefore, the judgment is affirmed.

Removal of causes—Act of 1875.

1. Suits cannot be removed from the State Courts on account of prejudice or local influence, unless the party opposed to him who petitions for the removal, is a citizen of the State in which the suit is brought.

2. Under the Act of March 3, 1875, in suits pending when the Act was passed, the petition must be filed at the first term of the court thereafter at which the cause could be tried.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. George P. Strong, for appellant, referred to Girardy v. Moore, 5 Cent. L. J., 78; Comrs. v. R. R. Co., 5 Cent. L. J., 102.

Mr. L. Danford, for appellees.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a suit begun on the 6th of March, 1868, in a state court, by a part of the heirs at law of Jacob E. Grove, to set aside his will. The defendants were the executors of the will, the legatees or devisees, and some of the heirs. The case was tried four times in the state court, and the venue was changed twice. At three of the trials the jury disagreed. At the other a verdict was given for the plaintiffs, which the court set aside. The last trial commenced April 14, 1875, at the January adjourned Term of the court, and resulted in a disagreement of the jury. At the next Term, beginning on the third Monday in May, the cause was continued.

On the 21st of September, 1875, the American Bible Society, one of the defendants in the suit, a New York Corporation, and a legatee under the will, filed its petition for the removal of the cause to the Circuit Court of the United States. The ground of removal is thus stated in the petition:

"That said John A. Grove and others, plaintiffs as aforesaid, are residents and citizens of the State of Ohio, and other States other than the State of New York; that none of said plaintiffs reside in or are citizens of the State of New York; that said controversy is wholly between citizens of different States, and can be fully determined as between them; that petitioner is actually interested in said controversy, being the only party whose interests plaintiffs profess to desire to affect in said controversy; that the amount involved in said controversy exceeds $5,000. Petitioner further states that it has reason to believe and does believe, that from prejudice and local influence it will not be able to obtain justice in said Circuit Court of Macon County aforesaid." Accompanying the petition was the necessary bond, and an affidavit of the attorney of the petitioner, stating his belief of the facts set forth, and that from local influence and prejudice the petitioner would not be able to obtain justice in the state court. It nowhere appears from the petition or the record that the plaintiffs or either of them were citizens of Missouri.

A copy of the record in the suit was duly filed in the Circuit Court of the United States, and the cause docketed there. At the first Term the plaintiffs appeared and moved that the cause be set down for hearing; but the court adjourned without disposing of the motion. On the 6th of March, 1876, and during the vacation, the plaintiffs filed in the office of the clerk another motion to remand the cause, on the grounds, among others: 1, that the petition for removal was not filed before or at the term in which the cause could be first tried; and, 2, that it did not appear that the plaintiffs, or either of them, were citizens of Missouri. At the next Term this motion was granted. To reverse that order this appeal has been brought.

We think the decision below was right. The courts of the United States are not required to take any suit until in some form their jurisdiction is made to appear of record. This rule applies to suits coming to them by removal as well as to those in which they issue the original process.

Suits cannot be removed from the state courts on account of "prejudice or local influence," unless the party opposed to him who petitions for the removal is a citizen of the State in which the suit is brought. The express provision of the statute is, that "When a suit is between a citizen of the State in which it is brought and a citizen of another State, it may be so removed, on the petition of the latter." Rev. Stat., sec. 639, subsec. 3. The Act of March 3, 1875, 18 Stat. at L. 470, has not changed this provision of the Revised Statutes. Removals for this cause still depend on that section, which is a reproduction of the Act of 1867, 14 Stat. at L. 558. As the plaintiffs are not shown to have been citizens of Missouri, it is clear that the defendants were not entitled to take the case to the Courts of the United States on this ground.

To effect a removal under the Act of March 3, 1875, the petition must be filed in the State court "Before or at the term at which said cause could be first tried and before the trial thereof." Sec. 3. This has been held to mean, in respect to suits pending when the Act was passed, that the petition must be filed at the first term of the court thereafter at which the cause could be tried. Removal Cases [ante, 593]. The Act took effect from the time of its approval, March 3. The case was actually tried once in the state court, on the 14th of April following. The jury disagreeing, it was continued at that Term and also at the May Term. The petition for removal was not filed until September afterwards. Clearly this was too late.

It is unnecessary to consider any of the other objections to the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court which have been raised.

Judgment affirmed.

Submitted Dec. 19, 1879. Decided Jan. 26, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Arkansas.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. A. H. Garland, for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. A. & L. H. Pike, A. N. Sutton, W. H. Sutton, W. A. Cook and Dodge & Johnson, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant in error recovered a judgment, against plaintiffs in error, of $12,000, based on a quantum meruit, for work and labor and services rendered to their intestate in his lifetime; to reverse which this writ of error is brought.

The errors assigned relate solely to prayers for instruction to the jury, refused by the court, and exceptions to the charge of the Judge. The bill of exceptions shows a paper signed by defendants' counsel, in which the court is asked to affirm a series "of propositions of law as governing the case," seven in number. They were presented as a whole and refused as a whole, and excepted to in the same manner.

Under the well settled rule of this court, if any one of these propositions was rightfully rejected there was no error in the action of the court, because it was not the duty of the court to do anything more than pass upon the prayer as an entirety. Beaver v. Taylor, 93 U. S., 54 [XXIII., 798]; Transportation Line v. Hope, 95 U. S., 301 [XXIV., 478]. We shall presently see why there is no error in the rejection of this prayer.

The charge of the court in full is embodied in the record, and to this the defendants took two exceptions. They are thus stated:

"And the defendants excepted at the time said charge was given by the court to the following parts and thereof, to wit: to so much of said charge as states the law to be that if Colonel Worthington, the owner of the plaintiff as a slave, took the plaintiff to Oberlin, in the State of Ohio, and there placed her in school to be educated, the Constitution and laws of Ohio immediately dissolved the relation of master and slave previously existing between Colonel Worthington and the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff thereby became a free woman, and could never thereafter lawfully be claimed or held by Colonel Worthington as his slave in virtue of his previous ownership of her; and that the subsequent return of the plaintiff, from the State of Ohio to the residence of the intestate in this State, did not affect her liberty or rights as a free woman which she had acquired by the voluntary action of the intestate and by the operation of the Constitution and laws of the State of Ohio.

And defendants, also, at the time excepted to the following clause of said instructions, to wit: 'And in considering the question of what would be reasonable and just compensation to the plaintiff for her services, you are at liberty to take into consideration any evidence tending to establish the special agreement heretofore referred to; and if you find [by] such special agreement a contract was made, that is, that the intestate, for the purpose of inducing the plaintiff to remain with him and render the services alleged to have been rendered, agreed to convey or devise to the plaintiff, in payment for such services, specified portions or parcels of his estate; and that the plaintiff did remain with the intestate and perform the required services until the death of the intestate; then, as throwing light on the transactions between the parties and as tending to show the value the parties themselves placed upon the services of the plaintiff, you are at liberty to take into consideration the value, as disclosed by the evidence, of such specific parcels of real estate which you may find the intestate agreed to convey or devise to plaintiff for such services, and considering the special contract (if you find it proven) for this purpose only, it rests with you, under your oaths and judgments, considering all the facts and circumstances in the case disclosed by the evidence, to say what would be a fair, reasonable and just compensation to the plaintiff for her services; but in no event can you allow the plaintiff a greater sum than the value of the specific property which plaintiff claims was to be conveyed or devised to her therefor.'"

There is in no part of this bill of exceptions any statement of the evidence. There is no statement that any evidence was offered, or that any was objected to. With the exception of a reference to it in the charge of the court, there is nothing to show what was proved, or what any of the evidence tended to prove. The prayers for instruction, therefore, may have been hypothetical and wholly unwarranted by any testimony before the jury.

The exceptions to the charge of the court, just recited, are in the same condition. The principal one of them, and the point on which the argument of plaintiff in error is chiefly founded, is, that the court erred in telling the jury that "If Col. Worthington, the owner of the plaintiff as a slave, took her to Oberlin, in the State of Ohio, and placed her in school to be educated, the Constitution and laws of Ohio immediately dissolved the relation of master and slave previously existing between Col. Worthington and the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff thereby became a free woman," * * * and her subsequent return to the residence of Worthington in Arkansas did not affect her rights to freedom.

The plaintiff nowhere states in her petition that she was ever the slave of Worthington, though she alleges that she was his natural daughter.

As none of the evidence given or offered on the trial is set out in the bill of exceptions, we cannot presume against the verdict that plaintiff ever was the slave of Worthington.

The counsel for defendant in error raises this objection, and the very learned counsel for plaintiffs in error, who did not try the case below, admits this objection to be fatal to his effort to reverse the judgment, unless we can hold, from language used by the Judge in his charge to the jury, that the fact was proved.

It is certainly true that the Judge does say, in that part of his charge which relates to that subject, that the former slavery was a conceded fact in the case. His language, in addressing the jury, while discussing the propositions of defendants' counsel, is as follows:

"Among the conceded facts in the case are these: that the mother of the plaintiff was a slave and the property of Col. Worthington at the date of plaintiff's birth, and that the plaintiff is the natural daughter of Col. Worthington. The mother of the plaintiff having been a slave at the date of plaintiff's birth, it results that she was born a slave, and at her birth was the property of Col. Worthington, her natural father."

But we do not look to the charge of the Judge for the state of the evidence on which that very charge is to be held right or wrong. The Judge cannot be permitted to cure the error of his law propositions by assuming as facts what may not have been proved. This very part of the charge is excepted to by plaintiffs in error on the ground that its law was erroneous. If the verdict had been for defendants below, the plaintiff there might have excepted, because the facts thus stated were not conceded. As we understand the principles on which judgments here are reviewed by writ of error, that error must appear by some ruling on the pleadings, or on a state of facts presented to this court. Those facts, apart from the pleadings, can only be shown here by a special verdict, an agreed statement duly signed and submitted to the court below, or by bill of exceptions. When in the latter, complaint is made of the instructions of the court given or refused, it must be accompanied by a distinct statement of testimony given or offered which raises the question to which the instructions apply.

This is not to be sought for, however, in the comments of the court to the jury on the testimony.

The proof of facts which make the charge erroneous must be distinctly stated as proved, or that evidence was given tending to prove them.

And it is not sufficient to show that the Judge assumed this in his charge to the jury; it must be certified to this court distinctly under his hand.

It would be very dangerous to permit verdicts, fairly rendered, to be reversed in this court on the recitation of facts supposed to be proved, found only in a long comment of the judge on the testimony.

This would be to usurp the function of the jury, and the verdict might be set aside in this court because the court below understood the evidence in one way, and the jury in another; or, as in the present case, because the Judge was of opinion that a fact was proved which the jury refused to believe.

When, therefore, the question is on the soundness of the judge's law as given to the jury, he must, on his due responsibility, certify to the appellate court, and not to the jury, the evidence on which he pronounced the law.

We are not furnished by counsel with any case precisely in point. Probably no bill of exceptions was ever certified to an appellate court before, which contained nothing but the charge and the objections made to it.

We have a strong analogy, however, in certain cases decided by this court under the Act of 1865, sections 649 and 700 of the Revised Statutes. Under that Act the court, sitting by consent of parties to try a case without a jury, could make a special finding of facts, in the nature of a special verdict, on which the court could review the judgment rendered. It has been frequently urged in this court to permit an opinion of the court below, when it states the facts on which it was based to stand for such special finding. But this court has uniformly refused to assent to this, though the opinion was in the record and sufficiently full as to the facts, and many such cases have been affirmed here for want of the formal finding of the special facts by the court though they might have been collected from the opinion. The case of the Ins. Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S., 117 [XXIV., 395] is one of these. Ins. Co. v. Tweed, 7 Wall., 51 [74 U. S., XIX., 66], is also in point.

The defect in the bill of exceptions, here pointed out, affects in like manner the other exception to the charge of the court and the refusal to grant the instructions asked. Because, therefore, the record discloses no error which this court can notice, the judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

1. Leased premises cultivated by the husband in his own name and for his own benefit are not plantations of the wife, although the title is in her, within the meaning of the section of the Mississippi Statute, which enacts that all contracts made by the husband and wife, or by either of them, may be enforced and satisfaction had out of her separate estate.

2. The provision that makes the husband the agent of the wife to purchase plantation supplies for her plantation, applies only to those plantations which are cultivated for the wife's account and benefit.

3. Supplies procured for the use of his employés are not plantation supplies for account or benefit of the wife, the contract for which can be enforced against her separate property.

4. Nor does the statute oblige the wife to pay for property purchased on credit; the rule being that such an obligation cannot be enforced.

5. A married woman cannot, by her own act, enlarge her capacity to convey or bind her separate estate.

6. In order to work an estoppel, the parties to a deed must be sui juris competent to make it effectual as a contract. Hence, a married woman is not estopped by her covenants.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Mississippi.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. W. B. Pittman, Alex'r Porter Morse and A. B. Pittman, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. William L. Nugent and J. R. Chalmers, for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Married women, as the Code of the State provides, may rent their lands or make any contract for the use of the same, and may loan their money and take securities for its payment, and employ it in trade or business; and the express enactment is, that all contracts made by the husband and wife, or by either of them, to obtain supplies for the plantation of the wife, may be enforced and satisfaction secured out of her separate estate. Provision is also made that when a married woman engages in trade or business as a feme sole she shall be bound by her contracts made in the course of such trade or business, in the same manner as if she was unmarried. Code, Miss., 1871, sec. 1780.

Sufficient appears, to show that the first named defendant is a married woman, and that the other defendant is her husband; that they executed three promissory notes, each for the sum of $2,000, payable to their own order, and that they indorsed the same in blank; and that the plaintiffs are the lawful holders of the several notes. Payment being refused, the plaintiffs instituted the present suit, and pray judgment for the amount against the separate property of the first named defendant.

Process having been served, the defendants appeared and pleaded three pleas in answer to the declaration: (1) That they never promised in manner and form as alleged. (2) That they had fully paid and satisfied the notes before the suit was instituted. (3) That the first named defendant, when the notes were made and indorsed, was a married woman, and that the same were made and indorsed by her as the surety and accommodation indorser of her husband, for the purpose of enabling him to obtain money to carry on a plantation cultivated by him and not by his wife; and that the notes were not made and indorsed in payment of money and supplies furnished to the wife to enable her to cultivate a plantation belonging to her as her separate property, in accordance with a contract made to that effect with the plaintiffs; and that the notes and indorsements as to the first named defendant are without legal consideration, and that she is not liable to pay the same.

Prepayment was denied by the plaintiff, and it in its replication to the third plea of the defendants avers that the notes described in the declaration were not made and indorsed by the wife as an accommodation surety for the husband, as alleged in the third plea. Instead of that, it alleges that the notes were made and indorsed by her in payment of necessary plantation supplies to enable her to cultivate her separate plantation; that the same were furnished and delivered to her by certain commission merchants; and that the notes were given for the payment of such plantation and family supplies and necessities for family use, as a married woman is allowed by law to purchase on credit and to bind her separate estate therefor.

Leave to amend the declaration and replications was subsequently granted to the plaintiffs, and it appears that amended counts were filed in pursuance of the authority granted; but it is not necessary to reproduce the new pleadings, as they do not vary the material issues between the parties. Continuance followed, when the parties entered into a stipulation to waive a jury, and that the matters of fact, as well as of law, should be tried by the court. Hearing was had, and the findings of the circuit court are as follows: (1) That the husband was discharged, before the commencement of the suit, from all liability upon the notes, as alleged in his plea. (2) That the first named defendant was a married woman at the time she executed the notes, and the wife of the other defendant, as averred in defense. (3) That the notes were executed not to secure any existing indebtedness, but as a security for such advances in money and supplies as the parties to whom the notes were delivered might thereafter make upon the order of the husband, for plantation purposes. (4) That the parties to whom the notes were delivered did thereafter make large advances to the husband, in money and supplies, that remain unpaid, of which an amount as large in value as the aggregate of the three notes was forwarded to the parties and used in the cultivation of two plantations owned by the wife and her two children by a former marriage; that the husband was cultivating those two plantations during the year in question, on his own account and in his own name, under a verbal contract of lease made by him with his wife for a stipulated money rent. (5) No proof was exhibited that the parties to whom the notes were delivered or the plaintiffs knew whether the wife was or was not interested in such plantation enterprise; but the court finds that they did know of her interest in the property of the plantations, and that the whole of the account was kept in the name of one of the plantations; and that it contained many items for supplies furnished for another plantation in the cultivation of which the husband was interested, and other items having no relation to plantation matters. (6) That a deed of trust of one of the plantations was executed by the husband and wife contemporaneously with the making of the notes to secure the payment of the same, in which it is recited that it is made to secure the indebtedness of the wife. Based on these findings, the circuit court rendered judgment for the defendants; and the plaintiffs excepted, and sued out the present writ of error. All the facts are found by the court, and the only error assigned is that the court misapplied the law to the facts.

Marriage, by the rules of the common law, gave the husband a freehold tenure in the estates of inheritance in land of the wife, and the right to the rents and profits during their joint lives. During coverture the husband must sue in his own name for any injury to the profits of the land; but for an injury to the inheritance it was required that the wife must join in the action. 2 Kent, Com., 12th ed., 131.

Money, goods and personal chattels in possession vested absolutely in the husband, and became his property as completely as property purchased with his own money; and such property never went back to the wife unless given to her by the husband in his lifetime or by his will, and in case of his death it vested in his executors. Choses in action did not vest absolutely in the husband, but he acquired the power to sue for and recover or release or assign the same, and when recovered and reduced to possession, and not otherwise, the money, in most cases, became absolutely his own.

Husband and wife during coverture were regarded as one person at common law, in most respects; from which it followed, as a general rule, that the wife could neither sue nor be sued without joining her husband. Great changes in the rules of the common law in that regard were made, even before the Colonies separated from the parent country. Deeds of indenture in transferring the real property of the wife, with the consent of the husband, were substituted in the place of fine and recovery; and when it became settled that the wife might hold a separate estate, many other exceptions to the rule that she could neither sue nor be sued without joining the husband, were sanctioned by judicial authority.

Exceptions, almost without number, have been admitted by the courts, and many more have been added to the catalogue by legislation, until in some jurisdictions it is difficult to say that there is anything left of the ancient rule. Questions of the kind in the State of Mississippi depend almost entirely upon statute regulations and the decisions of the state courts in construing those provisions.

Contracts made by the wife at the period mentioned in the declaration, or by the husband with her consent, for family supplies or necessities, including wearing apparel of herself and of her children, or for their education, or for buildings on her land or premises and the materials therefor, or for work and labor done for the use, benefit or improvement of her separate estate, were by statute declared to be binding on her, and that satisfaction might be had for the same out of her separate property. Code 1857, sec. 25, p. 336.

Supplies for the comfort, convenience and maintenance of the family and the education of her children must be contracted for by the wife, and, if not purchased directly by her but by the husband, they imposed no liability on her separate property, unless the husband had her consent to act. Unlike that, the rule is that supplies for her plantation, or for the repairs or improvement of her separate estate, or for work, labor and services in cultivating the same, the contracts may be made by husband and wife, or either of them. Clopton v. Matheny, 48 Miss., 286, 295.

Orders for supplies to her plantation, if filled, bind the separate property of the wife, whether bought by herself or her husband with or without her consent; the rule being in that State that the husband is for that purpose the agent of the wife in invitum, and that he is made so by legislative enactment. Code 1871, sec. 1780; Code 1857, 336. Her separate estate is bound for such supplies, even when purchased by the husband without her direction. Cook v. Ligon, 54 Miss., 368, 373.

Nothing, say the court in that case, will discharge her estate save an express contract that it shall be released, or something equivalent to it. Neither the acceptance of the note of the husband nor the recovery of the judgment on such note will have that effect. Plantation supplies may include money advanced for the purpose of purchasing the same: farming utensils, working stock or other things necessary for the cultivation of a farm or plantation, which latter designation must depend upon the usage and custom of agricultural pursuits. Herman v. Perkins, 52 Miss., 813.

Express statutory provision exists in the State, that married women may rent their lands or make any contract for the use thereof, and may loan money in their own name, take securities therefor and employ it in trade or business; and it is equally clear that she may rent her separate estate to her husband as well as to strangers. Robinson v. Powell, Sup. Ct. Miss., not reported.

Beyond doubt, the two plantations belonged to the wife and her two children by a former marriage, but it is equally certain that the husband cultivated the same, during the year in question, on his own account and in his own name, under a verbal contract of lease made by him with his wife for a stipulated money rent. Supplies for the plantation of the wife, whether purchased by her or by the husband, bind her separate estate; and if she had cultivated these two plantations during the year referred to, the plaintiff would be correct, but the finding of the circuit court shows conclusively that she did not cultivate either of those plantations during that year. Her authority to lease the premises is not denied, and the finding of the court establishes the fact that she did not cultivate either plantation during the period when these supplies were furnished.

Nor is the contract in this case one made by the husband with the consent of the wife, which may also be satisfied out of her separate property. Nothing of the kind is pretended; and if it were, it could not be supported for a moment as the findings of the court do not contain anything to give such a proposition the least countenance whatever.

Suppose the plantations were leased to the husband and were cultivated by him that season in his own name and for his own benefit; still it is suggested by the plaintiffs that neither the party to whom the notes were delivered nor themselves had any knowledge of the lease, or that the husband purchased the supplies without the consent of the wife or authority of law. Even if that be conceded, it will not benefit the plaintiffs, as it only shows that they acted imprudently and without due caution, the settled decision of the courts of the State being that the provision that makes the husband the agent of the wife to purchase plantation supplies for her plantation applies only to those plantations which are cultivated for the wife's account and benefit, and not to those she has leased and which are in the possession and under the control of the tenant. Grubbs v. Collins, 54 Miss., 485, 489.

Enough appears in the findings of the court to show that the plantations were in the exclusive control of the husband, and that the supplies were procured for the use of his employees, and that they were not plantation supplies for account or benefit of the wife. Neither the words of the statute nor the decisions of the state courts permit such a contract to be enforced against the separate property of the married woman. In order that the contract may bind the separate property of the wife, she must be the beneficiary of the cultivation, and the supplies must, in fact, have been purchased for her account and benefit. Her plantation, says Simrall, Ch. J., is the predicate of her power to make the contract and, he adds, that a false representation that she has such property will not estop her from averring that the fact is otherwise.

Nor does the statute oblige her to pay for property purchased on credit, the rule being that such an obligation cannot be enforced. Contracts made in the purchase of supplies for the cultivation of her own plantation, where the cultivation is on her own account and for her own benefit, may be enforced against her separate property. Previously, says the Chief Justice, the word was used by the law-maker to include all those things required and used by the planter in the production and preparation of the crops for consumption and sale.

If it be said that the family must be supported, and that the term ought to embrace food and raiment for them, the answer to the suggestion is furnished by a subsequent part of the same section, which provides that supplies, necessities and conveniences for the family are not necessarily chargeable on the wife's property. She is not liable for such expenses; unless she bargains to be, or unless the husband, with her consent, buys them on her account. Wright v. Walton, not reported [56 Miss., 1]. Verbal contracts of lease, not exceeding the term of one year, are valid by the laws of the State. Code 1871, sec. 2892.

Much discussion of the question of estoppel is unnecessary, as it is clear that a married woman cannot, by her own act, enlarge her capacity to convey or bind her separate estate. Palmer v. Cross, 1 Smed. & M. (Miss.), 48.

Facts recited in an instrument may be controverted by the other party in an action not founded on the same instrument, but wholly collateral to it. Recitals of the kind may be evidence for the party instituting the suit, but they are not conclusive. Carpenter v. Buller, 8 Mees. & W., 209, 213; Herman, Estop., sec. 238; Lowell v. Daniels, 2 Gray, 161, 169; Champlain v. Valentine, 19 Barb., 485, 488.

In order to work an estoppel, the parties to a deed must be sui juris competent to make it effectual as a contract. Hence, a married woman is not estopped by her covenants. Plainly, the wife was not competent to purchase supplies for the plantation of the husband and, therefore, cannot be estopped by these recitals. Bigelow, Estop., 276; Jackson v. Vanderheyden, 17 Johns., 167.

Viewed in the light of these suggestions, it is clear that there is no error in the record. Tyler, Inf. & Cov., 726.

Estoppel—ratification of officer's act—effect of.

1. Where a company borrowed money, and its note was given for it by its actuary, and the fund was honestly applied in payment of pressing liabilities of the company, and the trustees individually were advised of the transaction and made no objection, the validity of the note cannot be effectually denied by the company.

2. Where such actuary made the exchange of securities and was held out to the world as competent to do what he did, and it was done in conformity to the established usage of the company in all such cases, the company cannot deny that he had the powers he habitually exercised, and thus assumed to have.

3. Where the transaction was made known to the trustees individually, and they never objected, it was a binding ratification. The company was concluded, and the commissioners after its insolvency are in no better position.

APPEALS from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

The appellants filed in the court below two bills in equity, to compel the defendants to deliver up certain promissory notes.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Enoch Totten, for appellants:

First. The Freedman's Savings and Trust Company was a corporation organized for a specific purpose, and the statute provided that the securities could be transferred only by the affirmative voice of seven members of the Board of Trustees. A transfer of securities made in any other manner is void.

Head v. Ins. Co., 2 Cranch, 127; Perrine v. Canal Co., 9 How., 172; U. S. v. Bk., 21 How., 364 (62 U. S., XVI., 133).

Second. The funds and securities of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company constituted a trust fund, and persons dealing with them did so at their peril, and, if in possession of any of them, may be called to account as if they were trustees.

Perry, Trusts, secs. 217, 223 and 224.

Third. The fact that the defendant paid value for the notes, does not alter the case, because the rule is, that in cases where a man buys trust property, with notice of the trust, he shall be charged with the trust, in respect to the property

Perry, Trusts, sec. 217; Oliver v. Piatt, 3 How., 401; 2 Story, Eq. Jur., secs. 395, 1257, 1258.

Mr. S. T. Wallis, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

Several of the documents referred to by the witnesses in this case (143) have been lost or destroyed, and there is some uncertainty and conflict in the testimony with respect to them and the transactions to which they relate. The discrepancies are not material, and the substantial facts appear with sufficient clearness to enable us satisfactorily to dispose of the controversy. A statement, somewhat condensed, will be sufficient for the purposes of this opinion.

In 1873, the Corporation represented by the appellants found itself seriously embarrassed for the want of means to meet its current daily liabilities. In November or December of that year, the Company borrowed from the appellee Lanahan the sum of $10,000, for which it gave its note, payable at sixty or ninety days—probably bearing a high rate of interest—and secured by $20,000 of the improvement bonds of the District of Columbia at their par value. The note was executed by the actuary of the Company. The loan was negotiated by the appellee, Juan Boyle, who acted as the agent of the Company, by virtue of a written document under the hand of its president and its corporate seal. The money was applied in payment of depositors. The Institution was suffering from the financial revulsion initiated and precipitated by the failure of Jay Cooke & Co., and which swept over the entire country. It was deemed better to make loans at the interest paid, whatever it was, than to sell securities at the rates which then ruled in the markets.

About the first of May, 1874, it was agreed between Lanahan and Boyle that the former should lend the latter $21,000, including the note of the Company for $10,000, and that Boyle should procure the Company to transfer to Lanahan a note of Anna Boyle and others to the Company for $8,000, secured by deed of trust to Eaton and Stickney, and the note of Juan Boyle to the Company for $2,500, secured by another deed of trust to the same parties. Other collaterals, with which the Company had nothing to do, were also to be delivered by Boyle to Lanahan. Boyle thereupon delivered the note for $10,000 to the Company, and the Company transferred and delivered to Lanahan the two notes of $8,000 and of $2,500. Both these notes were then overdue. This terminated Lanahan's dealings with the Company, and these are the notes involved in this controversy. The bill, without imputing fraud, avers that Lanahan is not entitled to hold them, and prays that he may be decreed to deliver them to the complainants.

At the same time that Boyle delivered to the Company its note for $10,000, he made a full and final settlement with it of all the liabilities of himself and of Juan Boyle & Co. He was found indebted to the Company, after deducting the note of $10,000, in the sum of $28,522.38. Boyle thereupon gave the note of Juan Boyle & Co. for $28,000, and secured it by certain collaterals, and paid the balance in cash. Subsequently the collaterals proved to be worthless, Boyle & Co. became insolvent, and the debt is hopelessly lost to the Company. It was considered safe by the actuary at the time of the transaction. Eaton, one of the trustees in the deeds of trust, died, and by proper proceedings the respondent, Cull, was substituted for him and Stickney. The 3d section of the Act of Congress, 18 Stat. at L., 510, chartering the Institution is as follows:

"The business of the Corporation shall be managed and directed by the Board of Trustees; who shall elect from their number a president and two vice-presidents, and may appoint such other officers as they may see fit; nine of the trustees, of whom the president or one of the vice-presidents shall be one, shall form a quorum for the transaction of business at any regular or adjourned meeting of the Board of Trustees; and the affirmative vote of at least seven members of the Board shall be requisite in making any order for or authorizing the investment of any moneys, or the sale or transfer of any stock or securities belonging to the Corporation, or the appointment of any officer receiving any salary therefrom."

On the 18th of September, 1873, the Board of Trustees authorized and empowered the officers of the Company to assign and transfer any of the registered stock of the United States standing in its name.

On the 13th of December in that year, the same Board directed the finance committee to authorize those officers to negotiate the securities of the Company in such manner as to relieve the bank from its embarrassment.

There was no formal order touching either of the transactions of Lanahan with the Company, but they were communicated, as were all others, daily, to the individual members of the Board. There is no proof that any objection was ever made. Several of the trustees expressed an earnest desire that the Company should escape from the embarrassments by which it was surrounded, and be able to avoid bankruptcy. The threatened catastrophe proved inevitable. On the 29th of June, 1874, it closed its doors, and a few days later went into liquidation. In the transactions with Lanahan, in making the loan and giving the note in one case, and in transferring and handing over the two notes in the other, the actuary was governed by the settled usage of the Bank in all such cases.

It is a striking fact that there is nothing in the record which casts the slightest shadow of bad faith upon either of the respondents, or upon the president or actuary of the Company. It does not appear that a dollar of its means went fraudulently into the pockets of either of those parties.

The case naturally divides itself into two parts, each of which requires separate consideration:

(1) As to the loan of $10,000, and the note given to the lender.

(2) The transfer of the two Boyle notes.

The question presented as to the first point is easy of solution. The money was fairly borrowed. The note was given for it, and the fund was honestly applied in payment of pressing liabilities of the Company. The trustees, individually, were advised of the transaction and made no objection. It would be a perversion of the plainest principles of reason and justice to permit the validity of such a security to be effectually denied. It cannot be done. De Groff v. Linen Thread Co., 21 N. Y., 124; Parish v. Wheeler, 22 N. Y., 494; Bradley v. Ballard, 55 Ill., 413; Steamboat Co. v. McCutchen, 13 Pa., 13.

Courts do not look at such transactions with the microscopic eyes of a special demurrer.

The second point hardly admits of more doubt than the first one.

The Company took up its note given to Lanahan, and gave him in place of it the two notes of the Boyles, amounting together to $10,500. When this was done, Juan Boyle paid the Company $522.38. This was more than the difference in amount between the note first named and the other two. Certainly the Company could sustain no possible injury from this exchange. It paid a debt overdue, and took up its note by parting with two of its securities. With the residue of the settlement between Boyle and the Company, Lanahan had nothing to do. He was neither a party nor privy. As to him it was res inter alios acta. It cannot in anywise affect his rights, and may properly be laid out of view.

If the two notes which he received can be wrested from him, the Company will have had the full benefit of the loan, and have got back its note without paying anything, while he will have lost the entire amount. This is a suit in equity. It would be a singular equity that could work out such a result.

But further; the actuary who made the exchange of securities was held out to the world as competent to do what he did. It was done in conformity to the established usage of the Company in all such cases. Under such circumstances, the Institution cannot be permitted to deny that he had all such powers as he habitually exercised, and thus assumed to have. Merch. Bk. v. State Bk., 10 Wall., 604 [77 U. S., XIX., 1008].

The transaction, like all others, was made known to the trustees individually, and they never objected. This intelligent acquiescence was a binding ratification. Kelsey v. Bk., 69 Pa., 426; Hilliard v. Goad, 34 N. H., 230; Christian University v. Jordan, 29 Mo., 68; Sherman v. Fitch, 98 Mass., 59.

The arrangement was first challenged after the Company became bankrupt and went into the hands of the appellants.

The Company was concluded, and the appellants can be in no better position. They, like assignees in bankruptcy, can have no rights, legal or equitable, but those of the insolvent party whom they represent. Gibson v. Warden, 14 Wall., 244 [81 U. S., XX., 797].

The appellants are not entitled to any relief.

Other legal views which are applicable lead to the same conclusion, but it is unnecessary to pursue the subject further.

This opinion disposes also of case No. 152. The two cases are the same, mutatis mutandis.

The decrees of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia are affirmed.

Decree in equity, when not a bar—power to sell—arbitration.

1. A decree in an action to remove a cloud upon a title, which was dismissed on the ground that the case was not one in which a court of equity could give relief, is not res judicata, so as to constitute a bar to a subsequent action of ejectment for the same land between the same parties.

2. A power to sell and exchange or to dispose of, includes the power to make partition of lands, according to the decisions of Mississippi, which this court adopts in this case.

3. The objection that the trustee did not give his personal attention to the partition of the property, but, by agreement, submitted it to the arbitrament of disinterested persons, is not sufficient to invalidate the transaction.

Submitted Jan. 6, 1880. Decided Jan. 26, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Mississippi.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. G. Gordon Adam and W. G. Phelps, for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. William L. Nugent, for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action of ejectment for certain lands in Sharkie County, Mississippi, brought by Alonzo J. Phelps and Mary B. Phelps, his wife, the plaintiffs in error, against the defendants in error, of whom George C. Harris and Helen S. Harris, his wife, were admitted to defend as landlords, the other defendants being their tenants in possession of the property in dispute. The principal question in the case is, whether Henry W. Vick, father of the plaintiff, Mary B. Phelps, and trustee under a deed made by his wife, Sarah, in 1850, and also trustee under the will of his brother, Grey Vick, made in 1849, had authority under those instruments to make partition of the lands given and devised therein to and for the use of his children. If he had such authority, and exercised it in a proper manner, the plaintiffs have no title, and the judgment must be affirmed. If he had not such authority, or did not exercise it effectually, the plaintiffs are entitled to recover either all the land in controversy or an undivided part thereof, and the judgment must be reversed. The facts of the case are set out in a special finding of the court below.

By the deed of Sarah Vick, referred to, in which her husband joined, she conveyed certain lands of which she was seised, to a trustee, to be held upon trust for her own separate use for life, with remainder to her children in fee; subject to certain powers of sale and exchange, and with the following proviso:

"Provided further, that said trustee is to permit the said Henry W. Vick, as agent for said trustee, and as agent and trustee for said Sarah Vick, during her life, and as agent and trustee for her children after her death, to superintend, possess, manage and control said property for the benefit of all concerned. Said Henry W. Vick is to have power to sell and exchange said property after the death of said Sarah Vick, and to apply the proceeds to the payment of the debt due to the trustees of the Bank of the United States; if such debt is paid, the proceeds of the sale to be re-invested; and be subject to the trusts of this deed."

The deed closes with this paragraph:

"My intention is that said Henry W. Vick shall be regarded, for the purposes of this deed, not merely as an agent, but also a co-trustee, and I desire he may be required to give no security for the performance of his duties; and the said Jonathan Pearce [the trustee] is not, in any manner, to be responsible for the acts and conduct of said Henry W. Vick."

Sarah Vick died in 1850, leaving four children by her said husband, viz.: Mary B. Vick (now said Mary B. Phelps), Henry G. Vick (under whom the defendants claim), Ann P. Vick and George R. C. Vick, all under age and unmarried.

By the will of Grey Jenkins Vick, referred to, the said Grey devised certain lands and other property to the grandchildren of his father and mother, among whom were the said children of Henry W. and Sarah Vick, and constituted the said Henry W. Vick trustee for his said children, giving him full power to dispose of all or any portion of said property which might fall to said children, and invest the proceeds in such manner as he might think proper for their benefit. After the said Grey's death, the said Henry W., as trustee of his said children, became seised in severalty by partition with the other devisees, of the proportion of lands devised to his said children, upon the trusts of the will.

In December, 1856, Henry G. Vick, the eldest of said four children of Henry W. and Sarah Vick, became of age, and soon after demanded from his father an account of his trust, and that his portion of the property held under said deed and will should be set off to him in severalty, and threatened to file a bill in equity for that purpose. They finally agreed to leave the matter to their attorneys, who decided that Henry G. Vick, having become of age, had the right to demand a division of the property, and to have his share set off to him; and the said attorneys signed a written instrument proposing the mode in which such division should be made, to wit: through the intervention of disinterested persons to be chosen by the parties. This plan was adopted; and Henry W. Vick and his son entered into a written agreement to that effect, designating the persons for making the partition, and binding themselves to stand to and abide by their decision. The arbitrators made an award by which the lands in controversy in this suit were allotted to said Henry G. Vick; an indenture was made between him and his father to carry the partition into effect; and he remained in possession of the lands set off to him until his death in May, 1859. It is this partition which is called in question by the plaintiffs.

Henry G. Vick died without issue, having first made a will by which he devised the lands in controversy, which were set off to him as aforesaid, to Miss Helen S. Johnston, now said Helen S. Harris, the defendant, who, after his death, went into possession thereof, and has ever since continued in possession.

The contention of the plaintiffs is, that Henry W. Vick had no authority, either under his wife's deed or under the will of Grey J. Vick, to make partition of the lands; that the partition made with Henry G. Vick was void; that he acquired no separate estate thereby, and had no power to devise the lands specifically; and that the plaintiff, Mary B. Phelps, as sole surviving child of Henry W. and Sarah Vick (the others having died without issue), is entitled to recover the property.

In pursuit of the supposed rights of Mary B. Phelps, the plaintiffs, in February, 1871, exhibited a bill in the Chancery Court of Washington County, in which the lands in controversy were then situated, against the defendants, George C. Harris and Helen, his wife, to remove the cloud from the supposed title of said Mary, raised by said partition and the will of Henry G. Vick. The defendants relied on the validity of said partition and will, and the question was fully contested. In November, 1873, a decree was made dismissing the bill. An appeal was taken, and the Supreme Court of Mississippi affirmed the decree. The plaintiffs then brought this action of ejectment; and one of the questions in the cause is, whether the decree in the chancery suit did not render the controversy res judicata. The plaintiffs contended that it did not, and that the only effect of the decree was, to decide that a bill to remove the cloud from the title would not lie, leaving the parties to all their legal rights in an action at law.

"And the court here now finds as a fact, from an inspection of the record in the said chancery cause, that the question as to the validity of the partition of the lands aforesaid, made by the said Henry W. Vick and the said Henry G. Vick under the deed of the said Sarah Vick and the will of said Grey J. Vick, and the power of said Henry W. Vick to make such partition, as well as the validity of the devise made by the said Henry W. Vick to the said Helen S. Harris, was directly raised by the bill in said cause and litigated between the parties; and that the said Supreme Court adjudged and decided that the said partition and devise were both valid and effectual, and that the said Henry W. Vick had full power and authority to make the said partition with the said Henry G. Vick. Which decision so made by said court was done to determine the jurisdiction of the court in said cause, and that said Supreme Court decided that the said chancery court had no jurisdiction thereof, and that if the said complainants therein have any right to the lands described therein, and which are the same for which this action of ejectment is brought, it is a legal title which must be enforced in an action at law."

The decree of the Chancery Court of Washington County, which was affirmed by the Supreme Court, was in the following words: "The court being of opinion that the complainants are not entitled to the relief prayed for in their bill, or to any relief in the premises from this court, it is, therefore, ordered, adjudged and decreed that the said complainants' bill of complaint be and the same is dismissed, and that complainants pay the costs, etc."

The bill was filed under a Statute of Mississippi, which declared as follows: "When any person, not the rightful owner of any real estate in this State, shall have any deed or other evidence of title thereto, or which may cause doubt or suspicion in the title of the real owner, such real owner may file a bill in the chancery court of the county in which the real estate is situated, to have such deed or other evidence of title canceled, and such cloud, doubt or suspicion removed from said title, whether such real owner be in possession, or be threatened to be disturbed in his possession or not, etc." R. S. Miss., 1871, sec. 975, p. 191.

It is probable that the only effect of this statute was to enable owners of land not in possession to file a bill for the removal of clouds upon their title; since the ordinary jurisdiction of a court of chancery is sufficient to enable owners in possession to file such a bill. The questions: what constitutes such a cloud upon the title, and what character of title the complainant himself must have, in order to authorize a court of equity to assume jurisdiction of the case, are to be decided upon principles which have long been established in those courts. Prominent amongst these are: first, that the title or right of the complainant must be clear; and, second, that the pretended title or right which is alleged to be a cloud upon it, must not only be clearly invalid or inequitable, but must be such as may, either at the present or at a future time, embarrass the real owner in controverting it. For it is held that, where the complainant himself has no title, or a doubtful title, he cannot have this relief. "Those only," said Mr. Justice Grier, "who have a clear legal and equitable title to land connected with possession, have any right to claim the interference of a court of equity to give them peace or dissipate a cloud on the title." Orton v. Smith, 18 How., 263 [59 U. S., XV., 393]; and see, Ward v. Chamberlain, 3 Black, 430, 444 [67 U. S., XVII., 319, 326]; West v. Schnebly, 54 Ill., 523; Huntington v. Allen, 44 Miss., 654; Stark v. Starrs, 6 Wall., 402 [73 U. S. XVIII., 925]. And as to the de-defendant's title, if its validity is merely doubtful, it is more than a cloud, and he is entitled to have it tried by an action at law; and if it is invalid on its face, so that it can never be successfully maintained, it does not amount to a cloud, but may always be repelled by an action at law. Overing v. Foote, 43 N. Y., 290; Meloy v. Dougherty, 16 Wis., 269. Justice Story says: "Where the illegality of the agreement, deed or other instrument appears upon the face of it, so that its nullity can admit of no doubt, the same reason for the interference of courts of equity, to direct it to be canceled or delivered up, would not seem to apply; for, in such a case, there can be no danger that the lapse of time may deprive the party of his full means of defense; nor can it, in a just sense, be said that such a paper can throw a cloud over his right or title, or diminish its security; nor is it capable of being used as a means of vexatious litigation, or serious injury." 2 Eq. Jur., sec. 700, a.

The Supreme Court of Mississippi, in their opinion in the case between the present parties, which is reported in 51 Miss., 789, say: "This jurisdiction of equity cannot properly be invoked to adjudicate upon the conflicting titles of parties to real estate. That would be to draw into a court of equity from the courts of law, the trial of ejectments. He who comes into a court of equity to get rid of a legal title, which is allowed to cast a shadow on his own title, must show clearly the validity of his own title, and the invalidity of his opponent's. Banks v. Evans, 10 Sm. & M., 35; Huntington v. Allen, 44 Miss., 662. Nor will equity set aside the legal title on a doubtful state of case. The complainant, to enable him to maintain such a suit, must be the real owner of the land, either in law or equity. Had the defendant, Mrs. Harris, derived her title to the property in controversy even from a doubtful exercise of power, that of itself would be sufficient to preclude the complainants from a resort to equity, upon the well settled principles above laid down. The proper forum to try titles to land is a court of law, and this jurisdiction cannot be withdrawn at pleasure, and transferred to a court of equity under the pretense of removing clouds from title." Phelps v. Harris, 51 Miss., 789, 793. The court further concludes that this limited jurisdiction does not draw to it the right to take jurisdiction of the whole controversy in relation to the title to the land, right of possession, rents, etc., and thus usurp the jurisdiction belonging to the courts of law.

It is true that the court, in the former part of its opinion, discussed the question of the validity of the partition made by H. W. Vick and his son, and held that the partition was good, and that the title of Henry G. Vick to the lands in controversy was perfect; and as a consequence, that the defendant's title was also perfect. But this discussion was entered into for the purpose of showing that the title of the defendant was not so devoid of validity as to constitute a mere cloud on the title; and, consequently, that the case was not one in which a court of equity could give relief.

We think, therefore, that the court below was right in determining that the decree in the equity case did not render the main controversy res judicata, but only decided that the bill would not lie; in other words, that it was not a proper case for a court of equity to determine the rights of the parties.

This brings us to the merits of the controversy, involving the question whether the partition made between Henry W. Vick and his son, Henry G. Vick, was valid. The plaintiffs contend that neither the deed of Sarah Vick, nor the will of Grey J. Vick, gave to Henry W. Vick the power to make partition. The substance of those instruments, so far as relates to the question under consideration, has been recited. By the deed of Sarah Vick, the trustee therein named was directed to permit her husband, Henry W. Vick, as his agent, and as agent and trustee for herself and her children, "To superintend, possess, manage and control said property for the benefit of all concerned."

And it is added: "Said Henry W. Vick is to have power to sell and exchange said property after the death of said Sarah Vick, and to apply the proceeds to the payment of the debt due to the trustees of the Bank of the United States; if such debt is paid, the proceeds of the sale to be re-invested and be subject to the trusts of this deed." The codicil to the will of Grey J. Vick, made Henry W. Vick a trustee for his, H. W. Vick's, children, and gave him full power to dispose of all or any portion of the property devised by said will, which might fall to said Henry's children, and to invest the proceeds in such manner as he might think proper for their benefit. These were the express powers granted. Henry G. Vick, one of the children, came of age and demanded his portion separate from the rest. No question is made about his right to have such division made. Had Henry W. Vick no power to co-operate with him in making such a division? That is the question. In the one case power is given to sell and exchange, superintend, possess, manage and control for the benefit of all concerned; in the other, full power to dispose of all or any portion, and invest the proceeds in any manner he might think proper for the children's benefit.

The question whether a naked power to sell or exchange implies a power to make partition is discussed by Sir Edward Sugden in his work on Powers. He says: "It is clear that a power to make partition of an estate will not authorize a sale or exchange of it; but it has frequently been a question amongst conveyancers, whether the usual power of sale and exchange does not authorize a partition, and several partitions have been made by force of such powers under the direction of men of eminence. This point underwent considerable discussion on the title, which afterwards led to the case of Abell v. Heathcote, 4 Bro. Ch., 278; S. C., 2 Ves., Jr., 98. Mr. Fearne thought the power did authorize a partition, on the ground that a partition was in effect an exchange." Sugden adds, that the Lords Commissioners, Eyre, Ashurst and Wilson, before whom the case was first heard, all thought that the power was to receive a liberal construction, as its object was to meliorate the estate. Eyre thought that, upon the word sell, the trustees should have a power of making partition, because it was in effect to take quite a new estate. Ashurst and Wilson thought, that whatever power might be derived from the word sell, the other words of the power, convey for an equivalent (which were also used), were sufficient. But they made no decision. Upon the cause coming before Lord Rosslyn, he determined that the power was well executed, and founded his opinion upon its being in effect an exchange, as the consequences and effects of a partition and exchange, as to the interests of the parties, are precisely the same. Sir Edward then notices the decision of Lord Eldon in the case of McQueen v. Farquhar, 11 Ves., 467, that a power to sell simply, does not authorize a partition. He then adds: "Until the question shall receive further decision, it can scarcely be considered clear that a power to exchange will authorize a partition," but he proceeds to show that the decision in Abell v. Heathcote must have been based on the power to exchange, and not on any additional words. After referring to the case of Atty-Gen. v. Hamilton, 1 Madd., 214, which was not decisive of the point, Sugden closes his discussion by saying: "But as Lord Rosslyn has observed, this objection may be obviated where there is a power of sale. The undivided part of the estate may be sold, the trustees may receive the money and then lay it out in the purchase of the divided part, and although the sale is merely fictitious in order to effect the partition, it should seem that the transaction cannot be impeached." 2 Sugd. Powers, 479-482, 7th ed., 1845.

We have quoted more largely from Sugden's work because of his great authority on questions of real estate and equity. It will be seen that he regards it as doubtful whether the power to make partition is included in the power to sell and exchange; but that partition may be effected indirectly under the power to sell, by actually selling the undivided interest, and purchasing a separate interest with the proceeds. The last edition of Sugden on Powers, published in 1861, has no change in the text on this subject.

In the case of Doe v. Spencer, 2 Exch., 752, decided in 1848, Baron Rolfe, afterwards Lord Cranworth, speaking for the court, held, in accordance with Mr. Preston's note to Sheppard's Touchstone, p. 292, that two tenants in common might effect a partition by the exchange of a moiety in one part for a moiety in the other part; and thence concluded that a power of exchange given to trustees would be sufficient to enable them to effect a partition with their cotenant in this way; although it was supposed that between more than two parties it could not be done. Vice-Chancellor Kindersly, in a subsequent case, reviewing this decision of the Court of Exchequer, well remarked, that if this can be done between two tenants in common, there seems to be no good reason why it may not be done between three or more.

The plaintiffs place great reliance on the case of Brassey v. Chalmers, 16 Beav., 223, in which the Master of the Rolls held that a power to sell and dispose did not give the power to make partition; at least, he refused to compel a purchaser to accept a conveyance, where such a partition had been made. The case, however, was appealed, and the Lords Justices, without deciding the point, suggested the filing of a bill for partition, upon which the partition made might be confirmed, if found beneficial. This course was adopted, and resulted in a confirmation of the partition, and a decree confirming the title. Brassey v. Chalmers, 4 De G. M. & G., 528; S. C., 31 Eng. L. & E., 115. So that this case left the point still undetermined. This was in 1853, and no notice of the case is taken in the last edition of Sugden on Powers, published in 1861.

A review of the cases and text books on this subject was made by Vice-Chancellor Kindersly in 1856 in the case of Bradshaw v. Fane, 2 Jur. (N. S.), 247, and the conclusion to which he came, was, that it was still doubtful whether a power to sell and exchange would, or would not, authorize a partition. The same thing is stated in Lewin on Trusts and Trustees, 3d ed., p. 417.

In a recent case, however, In re Frith, L. R., 3 Ch. Div., 618, decided in 1876 by Sir George Jessel, Master of the Rolls, it was distinctly adjudged, after a masterly review of all the previous authorities, that a power to sell and exchange does include the power to make partition. In delivering his judgment, the Master of the Rolls concludes as follows: "This is the state of the authorities. Lord St. Leonards says that it wants another decision to make it quite clear. I am willing to give the decision (supposing the doubt is not taken away by the decision of the Court of Exchequer followed by the Vice-Chancellor, Kindersly) that the passage in the Touchstone (declaring that joint-tenants, tenants in common, and coparceners cannot exchange the lands they do so hold, one with another, before they make partition) is not good law, and that you can have such an exchange, and if you can have such an exchange, why could not the power authorize the exchange of an undivided moiety in Whiteacre for another undivided moiety in Blackacre? I decide that it does. We have conflicting opinions between what the judges said in Doe v. Spencer and what the Vice-Chancellor intimated his opinion to be. It is not necessary for me to decide that question. I must say, if I had to decide it, I should be inclined to follow the opinion of the Vice-Chancellor instead of the Court of Exchequer, for if it can be done as between two, I do not see why it could not be done as between more than two, but I have not to decide that question now."

It would seem, therefore, to be finally settled in England, that a power to sell and exchange does include the power to make partition, and that all doubt on the subject has been removed; and we have not been referred to any decisions in this country which lead to a contrary result. This disposes of the case so far as the power under the deed of Sarah Vick is concerned.

The power given to the trustee by the codicil to the will of Grey J. Vick is not quite so clear. The testator constituted H. W. Vick a trustee for his children, and gave him full power to dispose of all or any portion of the property devised in the will that might fall to them, and invest the proceeds in such manner as he might think proper for their benefit. The expression "to dispose of" is very broad, and signifies more than "to sell." Selling is but one mode of disposing of property. It is argued, however, that the subsequent direction to invest the proceeds indicates that a sale was meant. But this does not necessarily follow. Proceeds are not necessarily money. This is also a word of great generality. Taking the words in their ordinary sense, a general power to dispose of land or real estate and to take in return therefor such proceeds as one thinks best, will include the power of disposing of them in exchange for other lands. It would be a disposal of the lands parted with; and the lands received would be the proceeds. It is to be considered that the words used are contained in a will, to which the rules of construction applicable to ordinary speech are to be applied, except where technical terms are employed. In a well considered book on the construction of wills, the rule of interpretation is laid down thus: (1) "In construing a will, the words and expressions used are to be taken in their ordinary, proper and grammatical sense; unless upon applying them to the facts of the case, an ambiguity or difficulty of construction, in the opinion of the court, arises; in which case the primary meaning of the words may be modified, extended or abridged, and words and expressions supplied or rejected, in accordance with the presumed intention, so far as to remove or avoid the difficulty or ambiguity in question, but no farther." (2) "As a corollary to, or a part of, the last proposition, technical words and expressions must be taken in their technical sense, unless a clear intention can be collected to use them in another sense, and that other can be ascertained." Hawkins, Construction of Wills, pp. 2, 4.

Now, whilst it may be true that when the words "disposed of" are used in connection with the word "sell," in the phrase "to sell and dispose of," they may often be construed to mean a disposal by sale; it does not necessarily follow that when power is given generally and without qualification by associated words, to dispose of property, leaving the mode of disposition to the discretion of the agent, that the power should not extend to a disposal by barter or exchange, as well as to a disposal by sale. The word is nomen generalissimum, and standing by itself, without qualification, has no technical signification. Taking the whole clause in the codicil together, it is equivalent to an authority to dispose of the property as the trustee should deem most for the interest of his children; and this would include the power to barter or exchange as well as the power to sell.

In the case of Frith, already cited, the terms of the power were "to sell, dispose of, convey and assign the tenements, or any part thereof, by way of absolute sale for such a price in money, or by way of exchange for such equivalent in lands, as to the trustees should seem reasonable." The Master of the Rolls, in analyzing this phraseology, said: "Of course the word 'sell,' refers to 'sale,' and the word 'exchange' refers to 'dispose of' and, therefore, it comes to this, whether a trust including a power to dispose of by way of exchange for an equivalent in other lands, authorizes trustees to dispose of the undivided moiety, which they are empowered to dispose of, for another undivided moiety." This quotation shows that the words "disposed of" are properly applied to an exchange.

If this construction of the language of the will is correct, the conclusion arrived at in relation to the power given by the deed of Sarah Vick is applicable to that given by the will; for, since it imports a power to exchange, it likewise imports a power to make partition.

See 11 OTTO.

But without assuming to lay down as a general rule the interpretation which we have suggested, in view of the clearly expressed opinion of the Supreme Court of Mississippi on the precise point, we feel justified in adopting it in this case. In disposing of the equity case on appeal, that court fully considered the power of the trustee, Henry W. Vick, both under the deed and under the will, and came to the unanimous conclusion that he had full power and authority to make the partition in question. As to the power under the will the court had no doubt, and as to that given by the deed they relied on the authority of Abell v. Heathcote and the opinions of Sugden and Mr. Fearne. And although this conclusion was not embraced in the decree so as to become res judicata, yet it was the ground on which the decree was rested. The precise question before the court was, whether the power exercised by the trustee was or was not clearly in excess of powers given by the instruments under which he assumed to act. The court looked into these instruments and said, without hesitation: "The trustee acted entirely within the scope of his powers and, therefore, it is not clear that he acted in excess of those powers, but the contrary." Whilst the point adjudicated was the conclusion that he had not clearly exceeded his powers, the reason for that conclusion, namely: the decided opinion that he had acted within the scope of his powers, was fairly within the inquiry presented for determination. The opinion is not absolutely binding, it is true, but it is entitled to great weight on the question as to the actual law of Mississippi, and can hardly be called an extra-judicial opinion.

The objection, that the trustee did not give his personal attention to the division of the property, but, by agreement with his son, submitted it to the arbitration of disinterested persons, we do not regard as sufficient to invalidate the transaction. It was confirmed and carried into effect by his executing the requisite indenture for that purpose. Had the matter been carried into the courts, a commission would have been appointed to make the partition, in whose appointment the trustee would have had less to say than he had in the selection of the persons mutually chosen by himself and his son. And it seems to us that the intervention of disinterested persons for appraising the property and making the allotment was judicious and proper. It is the course most commonly pursued by those who desire to make a division of property. It is laid down as a rule that "Trustees may justify their administration of the trust fund by the instrumentality of others, where there exists a moral necessity for it;" and this is said to arise "from the usage of mankind. If the trustee acts as prudently for the trust as he would have done for himself, and according to the usage of business; as, if a trustee appoint rents to be paid to a banker at that time in credit, but who afterwards breaks, the trustee is not answerable; so in the employment of stewards and agents." Lewin, Tr., 3d ed., p. 293. Again; "The trustee cannot without responsibility delegate the general trust for sale; but there seems to be no objection to the employment of agents by him, where such a course is conformable to the common usage of business, and the trustee acts as prudently for the cestui que trust as he would have done for himself." Lewin, Tr., 3d ed., p. 422.

But this is rather a question affecting the responsibility of the trustee than the validity of his acts. The trustee in this case had power to make partition. He did make partition, and carried it out by executing the proper conveyance between himself and his co-tenant. The partition is valid, although the trustee may be responsible for the manner in which it was affected by him.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

COLORADO CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

ASHER A. WHITE, Admr. of SIMON WHITE, Deceased.

Division of opinion.

If the Judges of the Circuit Court are divided in opinion as to any question of law which is material to the determination of a cause presented to them, the jurisdiction of this court may be invoked to settle the differences; but in such cases, if it appears upon the record that no such disagreement actually existed, this court will not consider the question, even though it may be certified in form.

Submitted Jan. 12, 1880. Decided Feb. 2, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Colorado.

The case is sufficiently stated by the court.

Mr. H. M. Teller, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. John Q. Charles, for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error brought by the Corporation, defendant below, to reverse a judgment against it for less than $5,000. The record shows that after a verdict in favor of the plaintiff below, the defendant moved for a new trial; and on that motion the question arose, whether, "under the facts and circumstances shown in evidence," a certain instruction of the court to the jury "was or was not erroneous." The record then proceeds as follows: "On which question the opinions of the Judges were opposed, and final judgment entered on a verdict for the plaintiff. Whereupon, on motion of the defendant, by its counsel, that the point on which the disagreement so happened may, during the term, be stated under the direction of the Judges, and certified under the seal of the court to the Supreme Court to be finally decided, it is ordered that the foregoing statement of the pleadings and the facts, which is made under the direction of the Judges, be certified according to the request of the defendant, by its counsel, and the law in that case made and provided." The certificate thus ordered is signed by the Circuit Judge and the District Judge. As the law now stands, if the Judges in the Circuit Court disagree, a judgment must be entered in accordance with the opinion of the presiding judge, who, in this case, was the Circuit Judge. R. S., sec. 650. If he had been of the opinion that the instruction was wrong, the order, necessarily, would have been in favor of granting a new trial. Because the new trial was not granted, therefore, we must conclude that he thought the instruction right. To bring about a disagreement under these circumstances, the District Judge must have held that the instruction was wrong; but, instead of that, we find his opinion in the record, apparently delivered in disposing of the motion for a new trial, in which he maintains with much force the correctness of the instruction.

In view of these facts, as the amount in dispute is less than our jurisdiction requires, we must decline to take cognizance of the case. If the Judges below are not able to agree upon the decision of any question of law which is material to the determination of a cause presented to them, our jurisdiction may be invoked to settle the differences; but in such cases, if it appears upon an examination of the whole record that no such disagreement actually existed, we ought not to consider the question, even though it may be certified in form.

Writ dismissed.

UNITED STATES, Appt.,

v.

HANCE LAWSON.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 164-169.)

Fees of collector—voluntary payment.

1. A Collector of Customs is entitled, in addition to his salary, to certain fees collected by him.

2. Where such collector, upon the peremptory order of the Commissioner of Customs, paid such fees into the U. S. Treasury, the payment was not voluntary so as to prevent his recovering them, as wrongfully exacted. He was liable to a penalty if he refused.

Submitted Jan. 22, 1880. Decided Feb. 2, 1880.

APPEAL from the Court of Claims.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. S. F. Phillips, Solicitor-Gen., for appellant.

Mr. John Scott, Jr., for appellee.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Compensation to Collectors of the Customs, from the organization of the Government to the present time, has been chiefly derived from certain enumerated fees, commissions and allowances, to which is added a prescribed sum, called "salary," much less than a reasonable compensation for the service required by the officer. 1 Stat. at L., 64, 316, 627, 704.

Sufficient appears, to show that by these several Acts certain enumerated fees and commissions were made payable to the Collectors of the Customs, and that they were also entitled to certain proportions of fines, penalties and forfeitures. By the same Acts they were required to keep accurate accounts of all fees and official emoluments by them received, and of all expenses for rent, fuel, stationery, and clerk hire, and to report the same annually to the Comptroller of the Treasury, but they were allowed to retain to their own use the whole amount of the emoluments collected from those sources, without any limitation. Maximum rate of compensation was subsequently prescribed, which was $5,000, and it was made applicable to all collectors without any discrimination. 2 Stat. at L., 172.

It was provided by that Act that whenever the annual emoluments of any collector, after deducting the expenses incident to the office, amounted to more than $5,000, the surplus should be accounted for and paid into the Treasury. Districts for the collection of the customs were, at a later period, divided into two classes usually denominated the enumerated and the non-enumerated ports, and the maximum rate of compensation to collectors was diminished. 3 Stat. at L., 695.

Under that Act the maximum for the enumerated ports was $4,000 and for the non-enumerated ports $3,000, and the provision in respect to both classes was that the excess, after deducting the expenses incident to the office, should be paid into the Treasury as public money.

For a considerable period of time these regulations were satisfactory, but when the policy was changed, the free list much enlarged and the rates of duty reduced, experience showed that the emoluments of collectors from those sources were not sufficient to give them a reasonable compensation. Temporary expedients were resorted to for several years by the passage of an annual Compensation Act, as will be seen by reference to the Acts of Congress during that period. U. S. v. Walker, 22 How., 299-308 [63 U. S., XVI., 382, 384]; U. S. v. Macdonald, 5 Wall., 647, 655 [72 U. S., XVIII., 512, 515].

Importers, under various antecedent Acts of Congress, were allowed to place certain goods in the public stores under bond, at their own risk, without the payment of the duties, until the goods were withdrawn. Public stores were accordingly rented, and as the business increased, the rent and storage received by the collector of the merchants making deposits in the stores exceeded the amount paid to the owners of the same, and there was no law requiring the collector to account for the excess. Congress interposed and regulated the subject. 5 Stat. at L., 432; R. S., sec. 2647.

By that enactment collectors are required to include in their quarterly accounts all sums received for rent and storage in the public stores beyond the rents which are paid to the owner, and if the excess in any one year exceeds $2,000, it is made their duty to pay such excess into the Treasury as part and parcel of the public money. U. S. v. Macdonald, 2 Cliff., 270, 282.

Two thousand dollars of the amount, under the Act of Congress then in force, might be retained by the collector in addition to the amount received from other lawful sources of emolument, provided the latter did not exceed the maximum rate allowed to the office. Receipts from the other sources of emolument were to be accounted for as before; but the effect of the new provision was to add $2,000 to the compensation of a collector, if his office earned that amount from rent and storage. Custom dues of every kind received by a collector are now required to be credited in his quarterly accounts, no matter from what source of emolument the money is derived; and the provision is, that whenever the emoluments of any collector, other than one of the enumerated ports, "Shall exceed $3,000, the excess shall in every such case be paid into the Treasury for the use of the United States; but the provision does not extend to fines, penalties or forfeitures, or the distribution thereof." R. S., 2691.

Apply the rule prescribed in that provision to the case before the court, and it is clear that the Collector, if the compensation he received from other sources of emolument, after deducting the incidental expenses of his office, amounted to $3,000, would not have a right to retain any portion of the excess received for rent and storage beyond what he paid to the owners of the stores rented. His right in such a case, provided the aggregate of his receipts from the other sources of emolument, after deducting the incidental expenses of his office, was insufficient to give him the maximum compensation allowed, would be to retain enough from the amount derived from that source to make up the deficit.

Judgment was rendered in favor of the petitioner, and the United States appealed to this court. No formal assignment of errors is filed, but the proposition submitted in argument is, that the petitioner voluntarily paid the amount claimed into the Treasury, and that he cannot now maintain any action to recover it back.

Nothing appears in this case, to warrant the conclusion that the petitioner ever collected anything for rent and storage, or that any such matters are in controversy in this case, as will hereafter more fully appear.

Special findings were made by the court to the effect following: that the petitioner held the office in question from April 19, 1867, to April 1, 1875, and that he received from the United States during that period a salary at the rate of $1,200 per annum; that, on the 18th of July subsequent to his appointment the Commissioner wrote him, acknowledging the letter of the petitioner of a prior date, and stated that the $1,200 salary given him by the Act creating his district constituted his entire compensation, and that he was required to account for all fees.

Directions could hardly be more peremptory; and the Court of Claims finds that, in consequence of that letter, the petitioner accounted for and paid into the Treasury all moneys collected by him as duties on imports and tonnage, except what was expended for office rent, fuel and expenses, and for the services of his deputy and clerks.

During his term of office he collected as fees $9,066.43, of which he paid out $623.48 for office rent, fuel and expenses, and $2,492.29 for the services of his deputy and clerks, for which sums he was allowed credit in his accounts.

None of these matters can be controverted; and the fifth finding of the court below shows the balance of the sum collected as fees, to wit: the sum of $5,950.66, was by him, without protest, paid into the Treasury of the United States. All of the facts are stated in the findings of the court; and they also find that the petitioner, under the Acts of Congress, collected tonnage taxes to the amount of $11,839.23, and that he paid the same to the Government.

It appears that the district in which the petitioner is Collector was formed out of a part of a district created by the original Collection Act, and that it was continued as such until the passage of the Act abolishing it, and that the Act creating the new district provided that the collector of the same shall receive an annual salary of $1,200. 1 Stat. at L., 33; 14 Stat. at L., 410.

Much discussion of the proposition that the petitioner would have been entitled to all he demands if he had seasonably claimed it or made the payment, when it was officially required, under protest, is certainly not required, as it is not denied in argument; but if it were required to give the authority for the conceded right, the effort would not be attended with much difficulty. Express provision was made by the 2d section of the Compensation Act, that collectors might demand and receive the fees therein prescribed. They were also given a salary of $250, and were required to keep an accurate account of all fees and official emoluments and all expenditures for rent, fuel, stationery and clerk hire, and to transmit the same under oath to the Comptroller of the Treasury. 1 Stat. at L., 706-708. Corresponding provision is now contained in the Revised Statutes which is applicable to the case under consideration. R. S., sec. 2654.

Percentages for the collection of duties of import and tonnage were also allowed by the original Act, and are contained in the Revised Statutes. Sec. 2659. Three per cent is allowed to the Collector of this port, and he is also entitled to a salary of $200 by the original Act, which for certain purposes may still be regarded as in force. Accounts are still required to be rendered by the officer under oath. Secs. 2639, 2641.

Instances may, perhaps, be cited where it would be reasonable to conclude that Congress intended to make the salary of the collector his entire compensation, by using appropriate words to manifest such intention; but it is clear to a demonstration that the general rule is the other way, as appears from all the Compensation Acts passed since the Treasury Department was organized. Salary, in all the Acts, is one of the allowances, but it will be found in every such Act that fees, commissions, other allowances, or percentages are also included in the list. Proof of that proposition is found in the Revised Statutes as well as in the Acts of Congress which were the subject of revision. If more be needed to confirm the proposition, it will be found in the decisions of this court, to which reference has already been made. It is not even suggested that the Acts of Congress allowing fees, percentages and commissions are repealed and, if not, it may well be that such allowances were intended, as heretofore, to supplement the small salaries prescribed in cases like the present.

Suppose that is so; still it is contended by the United States that the payments were voluntarily made, and that the money cannot be recovered back. Confessedly, the order was official and peremptory, and under such circumstances it may well be inferred that the party felt that, if he refused to obey, the refusal would cost him his commission. Had he refused to comply with the order or entered a protest, his act might have been regarded as contumacious, and have proved as injurious in its consequences to the incumbent of the office as if he had declined to discharge the ordinary duties of the Collector. Viewed in the light of the attending circumstances, and especially of the fact that the order came from the Commissioner of the Customs, to whom he was immediately responsible, we cannot hold that the payments were voluntary, within the meaning of the judicial rule which, in consequence of the payment, denies to the party making the same the right to recover it back.

Beyond all question, the money was wrongfully exacted, and it is equally certain that in equity and good conscience it ought to be returned, or so much of it as is not barred by the Statute of Limitations. It was demanded of him by his official superior, and the Act of Congress exposed him to a penalty if he refused to comply. 14 Stat. at L., 187; R. S., sec. 3619.

Comment upon the plea of limitations is unnecessary, as the charges barred by the Statute were excluded from the judgment.

Governed by these views, we hold, as the court below held, that the petitioner is entitled to recover the fees paid into the Treasury after May 22, 1869, as stated in the opinion of the court, less $2.30 of tax paid on his salary, making, as properly adjusted in the opinion of the court below, the sum of $5,605.38, for which the judgment was rendered.

Judgment affirmed.

Voluntary payment.

Where a Collector of Customs pays into the U. S. Treasury, upon the peremptory order of the Commissioner of Customs, moneys, to which he is entitled as part of his official compensation, and was subject to a penalty for refusal to comply with such order, the payments cannot be regarded as voluntary so as to preclude him from maintaining an action to recover them.

Submitted Jan. 8, 1880. Decided Feb. 2, 1880.

APPPEAL from the Court of Claims.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. S. F. Phillips, Solicitor-Gen., for appellant.

Mr. J. W. Douglass, for appellee.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Goods imported at the period mentioned in the declaration might be stored, under the Warehouse Acts, in the public stores legally established at the port of which the petitioner is Collector.

Due indemnity to the United States was given by the railroad company, at whose request the public stores in this case were established, against loss arising from decay, waste or damage to the goods there deposited.

Moneys, to a large amount, as specified in the declaration, were paid to the petitioner, as such Collector, to re-imburse the Treasury for the salaries of inspectors having charge of the goods deposited in such stores. Pursuant to the Act of Congress, the Collector rendered, under oath, a quarter yearly account to the Treasury, of the sums of money collected for rent and storage, beyond the rent paid for the stores to their owners. 5 Stat. at L., 432; R. S., sec. 2647.

Statutory requirement also exists elsewhere, that all moneys received by collectors for the custody of goods in bonded warehouses shall be accounted for as storage, under the 5th section of the prior Act. 14 Stat. at L., 188. Such requirement is enforced by a penalty as follows: that every officer or agent who neglects or refuses to comply with the same "Shall be subject to be removed from office, and to forfeit to the United States any share or part of the moneys withheld to which he might otherwise be entitled." R. S., sec. 3619. Yearly payments of the same, as the petitioner alleges, were made by him through mistake, and that he made application to the commissioner for leave to correct his account; but the commissioner refused the request and declined in advance to repay the petitioner any part of the said moneys. What the petitioner alleges in that regard is, that a part of the money derived from that source, not exceeding $2,000 in any one year, belonged to him, under the Act requiring accounts as to rent and storage.

Annual payments on that account were made by the petitioner, as he alleges, for the period of eight years during which he held the office, amounting in all to the sum of $14,535.23. Maximum compensation of his office is $4,500, as follows: salary, fees and commissions not exceeding $2,500. R. S., sec. 2675. Nor exceeding $2,000 in any one year from rent and storage. R. S., sec. 2647.

Out of the annual receipts for rent and storage the plaintiff claims an amount not exceeding $2,000 in any one year, to which he adds the entire receipts from all other sources of emolument, and from the aggregate of these receipts he deducts the amount of his yearly compensation, and by that mode of computation his claim is as stated in the declaration.

Two pleas were filed in behalf of the United States: (1) They deny each and every allegation of the petition. (2) They allege that the petition was not filed within six years after the claim first accrued.

Charges barred by the Statute of Limitations were rejected, and the court below rendered judgment in favor of the petitioner for the balance, amounting to the sum of $11,954.73, as appears by the transcript.

Special findings of fact were duly filed in the record, as required by the rules of the court, to the effect following: that the petitioner was Collector of the port from March 5, 1870, to January 25, 1878, and the Act of Congress shows that the maximum of his compensation was as stated in his petition; that two freight depots are located at that port, and that from the time the petitioner became Collector, to June 15, 1877, the apartments of the depots were constantly and exclusively used for the storage of goods in bond, seized goods and goods unclaimed.

Compliance with the treasury regulations in establishing such depots is also shown by the findings of the court, and that two inspectors were constantly kept there in charge of goods stored in those depots during that period, and that the amount of their salaries was annually re-imbursed to the United States through the Collector by the railroad companies at whose request the depots were established, as shown by the statement exhibited in the fifth finding of the court. All these amounts were duly entered in the quarterly accounts of the petitioner, and were paid to the Treasurer of the United States in compliance with official instructions.

Peremptory instructions were given to the officer, that all moneys of every description, not received by warrant on the Treasury, must be actually deposited, as they would be charged in the Collector's account. His compensation, as received, was derived wholly from the other statutory sources of emolument, the findings of the court showing that he was not paid anything out of the yearly amounts collected from rent and storage. Due credit was given for the annual amounts he received from the other sources of emolument during the six years, within the Statute of Limitations, as exhibited in the seventh finding of the court; and the same finding also contains a statement showing the additional amounts required for each of those years to bring up the compensation of the Collector to the maximum rate.

Argument, to show that the aggregate received from all sources of emolument, including the receipts from rent and storage, is sufficient to justify the claim of the petitioner, is certainly unnecessary, as it is clear to a demonstration that the computations of the court below are correct. Plainly, it follows from those computations that the Collector is entitled to that rate of compensation, unless it be denied that the receipts from rent and storage, as explained in the opinion just read in the case of U. S. v. Lawson [ante, 860], are not properly included in that aggregate.

Sums received for rent and storage, not exceeding $2,000 in any one year, if duly included in the quarterly accounts of collectors, are as much due to such officers of the non-enumerated ports as to the incumbents of the larger offices, and their right to the same rests on the same foundation. Actual necessity has always existed, since the Treasury Department was established, for more storehouses for the deposit and safe-keeping of imported merchandise than the United States owned, and it cannot be doubted that all such as have been placed under the statutory control of collectors and have been used for that purpose according to law are, during the period they are so controlled, used and occupied, public storehouses, within the meaning of the Act of Congress requiring collectors to include receipts from that source in their quarterly accounts, and allowing them to retain out of the same a sum not exceeding $2,000 in any one year. U. S. v. Macdonald, 5 Wall., 647, 659 [72 U. S., XVIII., 512, 517]; S. C., 2 Cliff., 270, 282.

None of these matters are controverted by the Solicitor-General; but he insists that the payments were voluntary, and that the accounts having been settled cannot be opened, even if it appears that the demand and payments were both made under a mistake of law. Responsive to the first suggestion, the same answer may be given to it as that given by the court to a similar suggestion in the preceding case.

You will also bear in mind, said the commissioner, that all moneys of every description, not received by warrant on the Treasury, must be actually deposited. Had he added: if you fail to comply, the law will be enforced, his meaning could not be misunderstood, as the Act of Congress provides that the gross amount of all moneys received from whatever source for the use of the United States, with an exception immaterial in this case, shall be paid by the officer or agent receiving the same into the Treasury at as early a day as practicable, without any abatement, etc. R. S., sec. 3617.

Penalties are prescribed for a non-compliance with that requirement, as follows: every officer or agent who neglects or refuses to comply with that provision shall be subject to be removed from office and to forfeit any part or share of the moneys withheld, to which he might otherwise be entitled. 14 Stat. at L., 187; R. S., sec. 3619.

Viewed in the light of these penal provisions, the payments in question, made under the peremptory order of the commissioner, cannot be regarded as voluntary in the sense that the party making them is thereby precluded from maintaining an action to recover back so much of the money paid as he was entitled to retain. Call it mistake of law or mistake of fact, the principles of equity forbid the United States to withhold the same from the rightful owner.

Judgment affirmed.

Liability of stockholders—proportionate liability—joint action.

1. The individual liability of stockholders in a corporation is always a creature of statute.

2. Where the language of the charter is that the stockholders are "Liable and held bound for any sum not exceeding twice the amount of their shares," the provision is, in legal effect, for a proportionate liability by all stockholders.

3. Under such charter, the suit to enforce the liability should be in the nature of a suit in equity, by or for all creditors, and it cannot be at law by one creditor for himself alone against two of many individual stockholders.

Argued Jan. 16, 1880. Decided Feb. 2, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of North Carolina.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. Harvey Terry, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Joseph J. Davis and W. N. H. Smith, for defendants in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

By section IV. of the charter of the Merchants' Bank of South Carolina, at Cheraw, it was provided that, in case of the failure of the bank, "Each stockholder, copartnership or body politic having a share or shares in the said bank at the time of such failure, or who shall have been interested therein at any time within twelve months previous to such failure, shall be liable and held bound individually for any sum not exceeding twice the amount of his, her or their share or shares." It is alleged in the complaint that the bank failed March 1, 1865. The general assets have since been collected and applied to the payment of debts, under the provisions of an Act of the Legislature of South Carolina, passed March 13, 1869, placing the bank in liquidation. Debts to the amount of several hundred thousand dollars are still unpaid. The capital stock was $400,000, divided into shares of $100 each. Of these shares the defendant, Benjamin F. Little, owned, at the time of the failure, one hundred and ten, and John P. Little one hundred and fifty-eight. On the 21st of August, 1875, Terry, the plaintiff, commenced an action at law in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of North Carolina, against the defendants jointly, to recover from them, on account of their individual liability as stockholders, the amount due him from the bank for $5,440 of its bills which he held. The defendants demurred to the complaint, and among others assigned for cause, in substance: 1, that the individual liability of the stockholders as created and defined by this charter could not be enforced in an action at law by one creditor for his sole use, to the exclusion of others; and 2, that, even if it could, the defendants cannot be joined in one such action because their liability is not joint but several. The circuit court sustained the demurrer and gave judgment for the defendants. This writ of error has been brought to reverse that judgment.

The individual liability of stockholders in a corporation is always a creature of statute. It does not exist at common law. The first thing to be determined in all such cases is, therefore, what liability has been created. There will always be difficulty in attempting to reconcile cases of this class in which the general question of remedy has arisen, unless special attention is given to the precise language of the statute under consideration. The remedy must always be such as is appropriate to the liability to be enforced. The statute which creates the liability may declare the purposes of its creation and provide directly or indirectly a remedy for its enforcement. If the object is to provide a fund out of which all creditors are to be paid, share and share alike, it needs no argument to show that one creditor should not be permitted to appropriate to himself, without regard to the rights of others, that which is to make up the fund.

The language of this charter is peculiar. The stockholders are not made directly liable to the creditors. They are not in terms obliged to pay the debts, but are "Liable and held bound * * * for any sum not exceeding twice the amount of * * * their * * * shares." This, as we think, means that on the failure of the bank, each stockholder shall pay such sum, not exceeding twice the amount of his shares, as shall be his just proportion of any fund that may be required to discharge the outstanding obligations. The provision is, in legal effect, for a proportionate liability by all stockholders. Undoubtedly, the object was to furnish additional security to creditors, and to have the payments when made applied to the liquidation of debts. So, too, it is clear that the obligation is one that may be enforced by the creditors; but as it is to or for all creditors, it must be enforced by or for all. The form of the action, therefore, should be one adapted to the protection of all. A suit at law by one creditor to recover for himself alone, is entirely inconsistent with any idea of distribution. As the liability of the stockholder is not to any individual creditor, but for contribution to a fund, out of which all creditors are to be paid alike, the appropriate remedy is by suit to enforce the contribution, and not by one creditor alone to appropriate to his own use that which belongs to others equally with himself. We think this case comes clearly within the rule laid down in Pollard v. Bailey, 20 Wall., 520 [87 U. S., XXII., 376], to which we adhere.

The second ground of demurrer is equally fatal. The liability of the stockholders is several and not joint. Each stockholder is bound for his own share and no more. No judgment can be rendered against him for what another should pay. It follows that in an action at law each stockholder must be separately sued. In equity it is different, for there the decree can be molded to suit the exigencies of the case; and each stockholder can be held liable and proceeded against for what he is bound to pay, and no more. Undoubtedly, under the provisions of some charters, suits at law may be maintained by one creditor against one or more of the stockholders. The form and extent of a statutory liability of this kind depend upon the particular phraseology of the statute which creates the liability. All we decide is that, under this charter, the suit to enforce the liability should be in the nature of a suit in equity, by or for all creditors, and that it cannot be, at law, by one creditor for himself alone, against two stockholders who are not jointly liable on account of the shares standing in their respective names.

Judgment affirmed.

Re-issued patent.

It is a fatal objection to the validity of re-issued letters patent, that the Commissioner, in the re-issue, allowed the patentee a claim for an invention different from that described in the surrendered letters, and which he had disclaimed.

Submitted Jan. 8, 1880. Decided Feb. 2, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Kentucky.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. M. D. Leggett, for appellants.

Mr. John E. Hatch, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a bill in equity filed by the appellants against the appellees for an injunction to restrain the latter from infringing certain letters patent.

patent for an improvement in plows, and for an account of profits and an assessment of damages. The letters patent claimed by complainants and set forth in their bill, were originally granted to one Matthew G. Slemmons on the 9th day of October, 1860, surrendered and re-issued on the 22d day of June, 1869, extended for seven years from the 9th day of October, 1874, and again surrendered and re-issued on the 10th day of November, 1874. One of the defenses made by the defendants was, that the last re-issue embraced certain claims for alleged inventions, which had been expressly disclaimed by the patentee as a condition of getting the patent extended, and which are the specific claims which the defendants are charged with infringing. The fact on which the defense is based seems to be well founded. In the original patent, granted in 1860, the only thing claimed was, "The arrangement of the two curved shoulder beams, A, A, a clevis, B, transverse bar, D, m, slotted adjustable handles, E, E, b, and notched and mortised shovels, C, C, e, in the manner and for the purpose described." The specification commences by saying, "My invention consists in the particular arrangement of the several parts in the manner and for the purpose hereinafter described." Of course, this was a claim for a combination of a number of particulars, and was a very narrow patent, for no one would infringe it who did not use all the parts in the combination as described. It is not pretended that the defendants have done so.

But in 1869 the patentee surrendered this patent and obtained a re-issue, embracing six different claims, which were as follows:

"1. The two converging beams A A, each one of which has a shovel standard, A, formed by bending its rear end, substantially as described.

2. The converging beams A A, connected together and constructed with curved shovel standards A' A' upon them, substantially as described.

3. The union of the front ends of plow-beams, which have their rear ends bent to form shovel standards, by means of a clevis or device by which the team is hitched to the implement, substantially as described.

4. The converging plow-beams A A, having shovel standards A' A' formed on them, in combination with handles F F and handle supporting braces E E, substantially as described.

5. In combination with the foregoing, the manner, substantially as described, of adjusting the handles F F, and securing them to the beams at any desired angle.

6. Constructing of one piece of metal a plow-beam, A, and a curved shovel standard A', with a shoulder d formed on the latter, substantially as described."

The defendants allege that most of these claims were for devices that had long been in public use, and that the patentee never attempted to vindicate his title to them by instituting any suits against those who had used them; and evidence on the subject was introduced which it would be necessary for us to examine, if the case depended on this issue. But early in 1874 the patentee, on behalf of the present plaintiffs and appellees [appellants] who had purchased the patent, applied for an extension for another seven years. This was opposed by those who were interested in the subject matter, and the acting Commissioner of Patents refused to grant the extension unless the patentee would abandon all the claims in the re-issued patent of 1869, except the fifth. Thereupon a disclaimer was filed accordingly, and the patent was extended for the fifth claim only, which the defendants have not infringed. This disclaimer was filed on the 5th of October, 1874; and the extension was granted on the 9th of the same month. On the same day another re-issue was applied for, including substantially the claims which had been rejected and disclaimed. The examiner refused to pass the application; but it was persisted in and, finally, on the 10th of November, 1874, the re-issue was granted on which the present suit was brought. This re-issue contains the following claims:

“1. Two diverging beams, A A, that have their rear ends bent to form shovel standards, the said beams being fastened rigidly together, substantially as described, at and springing from the point of attachment for the draft.

2. Two diverging beams, A A, that have their rear ends bent to form shovel standards, and their front ends fastened rigidly together and merged into a device, substantially as described, whereby the plow may be attached to the draft.

3. The combination, substantially as described, with the two plow-beams A A, of the handles F F, and adjustable handle supporting braces E E.”

It is obvious, on inspection, that the first and second of these claims are for substantially the same inventions which were disclaimed before the extension, and are for different inventions from that which was included in and secured by the letters patent as extended. The court below deemed this, amongst other things, a fatal objection to the validity of the re-issued patent. We agree with the circuit court. We think it was a manifest error of the Commissioner, in the re-issue, to allow to the patentee a claim for an invention different from that which was described in the surrendered patent, and which he had thus expressly disclaimed. The pretense that an “error had arisen by inadvertence, accident or mistake,” within the meaning of the patent law, was too bald for consideration. The very question of the validity of these claims had just been considered and decided with the acquiescence of the patentee and the express disclaimer on his part. If, in any case where an applicant for letters patent, in order to obtain the issue thereof, disclaims a particular invention, or acquiesces in the rejection of a claim thereto, a re-issue containing such claim is valid, which we greatly doubt, it certainly cannot be sustained in this case. The allowance of claims once formally abandoned by the applicant, in order to get his patent through, is the occasion of immense frauds against the public. It not unfrequently happens that, after an application has been carefully examined and compared with previous inventions, and after the claims which such an examination renders admissible have been settled with the acquiescence of the applicant, he, or his assignee, when the investigation is forgotten and perhaps new officers have been appointed, comes back to the Patent Office and, under the pretense of inadvertence and mistake in the first specification, gets inserted in the re issued patent all that had been previously rejected. In this manner, without an appeal, he gets the first decision of the office reversed, steals a march on the public, and on those who before opposed his pretensions (if, indeed, the latter have not been silenced by purchase), and procures a valuable monopoly to which he has not the slightest title. We have more than once expressed our disapprobation of this practice. As before remarked, we consider it extremely doubtful whether a re-issued patent can be sustained in any case where it contains claims that have once been formally disclaimed by the patentee, or rejected with his acquiescence, and he has consented to such rejection in order to obtain his patent. Under such circumstances, the rejection of the claim can, in no just sense, be regarded as a matter of inadvertence or mistake. Even though it was such, the applicant should seem to be estopped from setting it up on an application for a re-issue.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Mr. Justice Harlan did not sit in this case.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois.

The cases are stated by the court.

Messrs. A. M. Pence and Julius Rosenthal, for appellants in No. 972, Albion Cate in No. 1042.

Messrs. J. S. Polk and L. H. Bisbee, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

These are suits in equity. Our attention will first be given to the first named case. The bill was filed by the appellee, Hoyt Sherman, as assignee in bankruptcy of Benjamin F. Allen, to reach certain securities therein described, which were transferred to the appellants by the bankrupt to secure the payment of two promissory notes of T. A. Andrews & Co., a firm consisting of T. A. Andrews and the bankrupt. One of the notes was for $15,000, and was held by the International Bank. The other was for $5,000, and was held by the appellant, Hickling. On the 23d of February, 1875, a creditor's petition was filed in the district court praying that Allen should be declared a bankrupt. On the 9th of March, Allen appeared before the District Judge. The hearing was postponed until the 16th of that month. Allen was given until that time to answer, and leave was given to the creditors to amend their petition, by adding new causes of bankruptcy or otherwise. Nothing further material was done in the case until the 16th of April following, when Allen filed his answer denying that the aggregate of the claims of the petitioning creditors amounted to one third of the debts provable against him. Ten days was thereupon allowed for other creditors to unite with the petitioners, and the leave before given to amend the petition was continued. On the 22d of April following, Receiver Burley was permitted to unite with the petitioning creditors by signing the petition, which he did, and the petitioning creditors, including Burley, thereupon amended their petition. The amount of the debts of the bankrupt then represented was sufficient. The amendment set forth an act of bankruptcy by Allen in not paying his commercial paper within six months next preceding the time of filing the petition. An order of adjudication was duly entered, and on the 12th of July, 1875, an assignment was made to Hoyt Sherman, as assignee. The assignment included all the property and effects of every kind in which Allen, the bankrupt, "Was interested or entitled to have on the 23d day of February, A. D. 1875."

The continuity of the proceeding from the outset was unbroken. The original petition was amended by inserting an act of bankruptcy which occurred before the petition was filed, as before stated, but the original petition was in nowise either dismissed or abandoned. There is no pretense for alleging either.

The assignment related back to the commencement of the proceeding, which was by filing the petition on the 23d of February, 1875, and the title of the assignee to all the property and effects of the bankrupt became vested as of that date. R. S., 980, sec. 5,044.

This bill was filed on the 7th of July, 1877. It was amended twice, but the amendments were chiefly verbal. Their effect was only to give greater precision to the charges already made. The framework of the bill remained the same. No new cause of action was introduced. The changes were not such as could have any effect with respect to the statutory limitation as to suits by or against assignees in bankruptcy. The limitation in such a case is two years. R. S., sec. 5057. The time begins to run when the assignee is appointed. Bump, Bankruptcy, 558. The appellee having been appointed assignee on the 12th of July, 1875, and the bill having been filed on the 7th of July, 1877, it escaped the bar of the limitation prescribed by five days. The statute, therefore, does not affect the case, and may be laid out of view. No further remarks as to this aspect of the proceeding will be necessary.

The assets involved in this controversy were transferred to the appellants on or about the 20th of March, 1875. The bill proceeds upon See 11 Otto.

the assumption, and charges that the title vested in the assignee for all the purposes of this case on the 23d of February, 1875, and that hence, when the transfer was made by the bankrupt, he had no title and no control over the property. This is denied by the appellants. They insist that as the act of bankruptcy upon which the adjudication was founded was introduced into the petition by an amendment made on the 22d of April following, the title of the assignee cannot be held to have vested at an earlier time, and that Allen, therefore, had the title when he made the transfer.

The court below held according to the theory of the bill.

The statute is clear and imperative. Its constitutional validity is not questioned. It contains no qualification. We cannot interpolate what is claimed. Such a function is beyond the sphere of our power and duty. It is our business to execute the law as we find it, and not to make or modify it. In the disposition of property among creditors, equality is equity. It was the genius and purpose of the statute to secure this result, as far as possible, from the moment its aid was invoked, whether by debtor or creditor. The power of amendment is incidental to all judicial administration. Its exercise is vital to the ends of justice. Tilton v. Cofield, 93 U. S., 163 [XXIII., 858]. The filing of the petition was a caveat to all the world. It was in effect an attachment and injunction. Thereafter all the property rights of the debtor were ipso facto in abeyance until the final adjudication. If that were in his favor they revived and were again in full force. If it were against him, they were extinguished as to him and vested in the assignee for the purposes of the trust with which he was charged. The bankrupt became, as it were, for many purposes, civilitur mortuus. Those who dealt with his property in the interval between the filing of the petition and the final adjudication, did so at their peril. They could limit neither the power of the court nor the effect of the final exercise of its jurisdiction. With the intermediate steps they had nothing to do. The time of the filing of the petition and the final result alone concerned them. In this case the title of the assignee is, in all respects, just what it would have been if the bankrupt had done nothing, and there had been no interposition by the appellants. Otherwise the efficacy of the Act depended not upon its own language and meaning, but was only what others outside of the proceeding might choose to permit it to be. This would be a solecism, and largely defeat the purpose of the statute and the policy of Congress in enacting it. We concur entirely in the opinion of the circuit court upon the subject.

The bankrupt was under arrest upon civil process when the transaction complained of by the bill occurred, and the appellants knew of the filing of the petition against him, and of his utter insolvency when they received the assets.

Our opinion in this case disposes also of No. 1042. The record shows that the rights of Withrow were settled and provided for by a decree in another litigation to which he and the assignee were parties. The cross-bills were properly dismissed.

The decrees of the Circuit Court are affirmed.

Submission of cause—observance of rules.

1. Where a cause is submitted and Rule 21, which provides that "When a statute of a State is cited, it shall be printed at length," either in or with the brief, is disregarded by both parties, the submission will be set aside and the cause restored to its place on the docket.

2. This court still insists on a strict observance by counsel, of all rules intended to facilitate its examination of causes, especially those submitted.

Submitted Jan. 6, 1880. Decided Feb. 2, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Nebraska.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. E. Estabrook and Geo. P. Uhl,
for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Willard P. Hall and B. R. Vineyard, for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This cause was submitted on the 6th of January under the 20th Rule. Its decision depends on a careful consideration of several statutes of Nebraska. Rule 21 provides (par. 4, subdivision 3) that "When a statute of a State is cited, so much thereof as may be deemed necessary to the decision of the case shall be printed at length," either in or with the brief. That rule has been entirely disregarded by both parties in this case. For this reason the submission is set aside and the cause restored to its place on the docket.

We must insist on a strict observance by counsel of all rules intended to facilitate our examination of causes, especially those submitted. Although, in general, the statutes of the States are to be found in the Congressional Library, we do not have them at our rooms where, necessarily, cases are investigated. A little trouble on the part of counsel in obeying this particular rule, will expedite materially our labors. We take this opportunity of calling special attention to this subject.

Executors' settlement—final settlement.

1. An executor, by charging himself with a note as part of the assets of the estate and settling his accounts on that basis, shows that he supposed the debt valid in the hands of the testator.

2. Final settlements of administrators and executors, when adjudicated, have the force and effect of judgments as between the parties thereto, but as to no one else.

Submitted Jan. 8, 1880. Decided Feb. 2, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Kansas.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Alfred Ennis and Hentig & Sperry, for appellants:

Final settlements of executors and administrators have the force and effect of a judgment.

The above mentioned settlement was a judgment in favor of each of the distributees against the executor, George P. Wright, and when the said executor died, the only thing for the administratrix de bonis non to do, was, to see that the money was properly distributed pursuant to the order of the court; and if the money was not forthcoming, the distributees had their remedy upon the bond of the executor, George P. Wright, or his estate. She cannot go back of the final settlement of the 23d day of April, 1875. All prior to that time, had been fully administered.

See, Brown v. Brown, 53 Barb., p. 217; Campbell v. Thatcher, 54 Barb., 382; State v. Stevenson, 12 Mo., 182; Picot v. Biddle, 35 Mo., 29, 41, 43; Williams v. Petticrew, 62 Mo., 461; Tate v. Norton, 94 U. S., 746, 751 (XXIV., 222, 224); Musick v. J. Beebe, 17 Kan., 47; Sheetz v. Kirtley, 62 Mo., 417; Singleton v. Garrett, 23 Miss., 196; Lambeth v. Elder, 44 Miss., 81.

This last case is directly in point, and all of the above authorities show that a final settlement has the force and effect of a judgment. Let us apply it to this case.

The complainant introduces no proof. The appellants introduce, in support of their answer, the final settlement of the executor and his inventory, showing that he had the mortgage, and that, in his final settlements, he permits judgments to go against him for the whole amount of the inventory, less credits therein allowed; and included in that judgment is the mortgage now in suit. If the distributees have a judgment against George P. Wright for their money, what right have they to pursue the appellants and seek to take their lands from them? None whatever.

Messrs. C. M. Foster and G. C. Clemens, for appellee:

The record in question does not show on its face that this note has been paid. It is, at most, a far-fetched inference. There was no decree of the court on the subject.

If it be contended that this is an admission, on the part of the executor of the estate, that the debt has been paid, the answer is that the executor at that time is not the complainant in this case, and that the admissions of one do not bind the other.

Pease v. Phelps, 10 Conn., 62.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought to foreclose a mortgage made by Daniel M. Adams and wife to Julius C. Wright to secure a note for $5,000. Wright, the mortgagee, died in 1874, leaving a will, by which he appointed George B. Wright his executor. The will was admitted to probate, and the executor qualified. In the inventory of the estate this mortgage was included as part of the assets. In April, 1875, the executor made application to the court for a final settlement. In his accounts he charged himself with the full amount of the inventory and, after the allowance of the proper credits, a balance was found in his hands which was ordered to be distributed in a specified manner, according to the terms of the will, but a balance of $6,840.25, one share, was left in his hands with directions "To invest for Charles Wright, or pay the money pursuant to the will." The executor died in 1877, and afterwards the complainant below was appointed administratrix de bonis non, with the will annexed, of the estate of Julius C. Wright. On the 26th of October, 1877, she commenced this suit, to which the mortgagors, Adams and wife, and the appellants, with others, were made defendants. Adams and wife did not answer, but as to them the bill was taken as confessed. The appellants answered, setting forth that they were the owners of the mortgaged property, and then, by way of defense to the mortgage: 1, that they were informed and believed that the note and mortgage sued on were not the property of the estate of Julius C. Wright, but that the same were the property of Adams, the mortgagor, and were executed by him for the purpose of cheating and defrauding his creditors, and especially the appellants; and, 2, that the note sued on had been paid to George P. Wright, executor, "As appears by the inventory and his final settlement, copies of which are hereto attached, marked exhibits A and B."

No proof was put in on either side. The first defense, therefore, was clearly not sustained. Adams, the mortgagor, by not answering the bill, admitted the validity of the note, and the executor of the mortgagee, by charging himself with the note as part of the assets and settling his accounts on that basis, showed that he supposed the debt a valid one in the hands of the testator.

As to the second defense, it is claimed that the probate records attached as exhibits to the answer, showing the inventory and distribution, are conclusive evidence that the debt has been paid. Undoubtedly, final settlements of administrators and executors, when adjudicated, have the force and effect of judgments as between the parties to such settlements; but neither Adams nor these appellants were parties to this settlement, which concluded the executor and distributees, but no one else. Nothing is more common than for an executor or an administrator to charge himself with debts due the estate before they are collected, and thus expedite a final settlement. It would be dangerous to hold that, as between the executor or administrator and the debtor, such a settlement was conclusive evidence of the actual payment of the debt and the discharge of the debtor. The question presented by the answer is not whether the estate now owns the note and mortgage, if still unpaid, but whether it has been paid.

Decree affirmed.

v.
UNITED STATES.

(See S. C., "Dauterive v. United States," 11 Otto, 700-707.)

Spanish claims to land—uncertain boundaries.

Claims, to land lying within the States of Florida, Louisiana or Missouri, by virtue of any grant or other evidence of title bearing date prior to the cession of the Territory out of which those States were formed, which contain no boundaries nor any means to determine either the location or the extent of the supposed grant, and which were not legally surveyed before such cession, cannot be sustained.

Submitted Jan. 8, 1880. Decided Feb. 2, 1880.

APPEAL from the District Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana.

The case is stated by the court. See, also, 15 How., 14.

Mr. Edward Janin and Albert Janin, for appellants.

Mr. S. F. Phillips, Solicitor-Gen., for appellee.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Claimants to land lying within the States of Florida, Louisiana or Missouri, by virtue of any grant, concession, order of survey, permission to settle, or other written evidence of title bearing date prior to the cession of the territory out of which those States were formed, may make application to certain commissioners for the confirmation of their title, or they may, at their option, proceed by petition in the district court within whose jurisdiction the lands are situated. 12 Stat. at L., 85.

Either party aggrieved by the decree in the case may appeal directly to the Supreme Court as of right, neither affidavit or security being required of the claimant, other than for costs. Pursuant to that authority the appellants presented their petition to the District Court of the District for Louisiana, asking for the confirmation of their title to the same, except as to such parts thereof as have been granted by the United States or confirmed to other parties, as to which they pray that they may be adjudged to be entitled to indemnity in certificates of location to the same extent of land.

Sufficient appears, to show that the same claim was presented to the same district court twenty years earlier, and that on appeal to the Supreme Court the claim was rejected. U. S. v. D'Auterieve, 15 How., 14. Full report is there given of the origin, nature and extent of the claim, and in view of that fact it is not deemed necessary to reproduce the allegations of the petition in this opinion, as the whole substance of the same is given in the opinion of the court in that case.

Due appearance was entered in behalf of the United States in this case, and the district attorney filed an answer to the petition, setting up several defenses, as follows: (1) That no such grants or mesne conveyances as those under which the petitioners claim were ever made. (2) That if any such grants were ever made as alleged, which is denied, that the lands were never separated by metes and bounds or actual survey from the mass of the public domain, and are, therefore, null and void by reason of uncertainty of location and vagueness of description, both as to the boundaries of the grants and to their extent.

Tracts of land of great extent were granted by royal charter to a certain association called the Western Company, and the claim of the appellants is that that company made concession of the tract in question to the grantor of their ancestor, the tract at the date of the concession being four leagues front on the right bank of the Mississippi River and extending back to the River Atchafalaya, a distance of ten or twelve miles. Neither the the royal charter granting the land to the Western Company nor the concession to the grantor of their ancestor is given in evidence. Nothing of the kind is pretended, but the appellants allege that the letters patent, bearing date in 1717, were issued in the name of the Sovereign of France, by which the said company was created, and that by the 5th article of the same, all the lands, coasts, ports, havens and islands of the Province of Louisiana were given and granted to the said company, with power to give, sell and grant the same to others, and that the company during that year or early in the next year conveyed the tract antecedently described to the grantor of their ancestor.

Their theory is that the concession was made by the French authorities before the Province was ceded to Spain. History shows that France subsequently, by a secret Treaty, transferred the Province to Spain in pursuance of the stipulations between the contracting parties. When the first Governor under the Spanish rule visited the Province he reduced the tract to a front of twenty arpents, to which no objections appear to have been made by the claimant; but the successor of that magistrate, three years later, when he assumed the functions of Governor of the Province, enlarged the front to forty-four arpents, which, perhaps, was done at the request of the claimant. Galvez was the third Governor of the Province after the cession to Spain, and he, in the exercise of his powers, took away from the heirs of the alleged purchaser the whole front to the depth of forty arpents from the Mississippi River, leaving them nothing except what is called, in legal phrase, the back lands.

Throughout these several changes in the alleged title of the ancestor of the appellants and his immediate heirs, all parties appear to have acquiesced without any complaint. Nor do the appellants now claim any of the front land on the River Mississippi, neither the four leagues nor the forty or forty-four arpents. Instead of that, their claim is to the back lands, the side lines commencing at a point forty arpents from the Mississippi River and extending back to the River Atchafalaya. Even as reduced the claim is a large one, amounting to perhaps 500,000 acres, but it is not more than one fifteenth part of the original claim, as appears by the documents exhibited in the transcript.

3. Besides denying the authenticity of the concession, the answer also denies in the most explicit terms that the tract, as described in the evidence, ever extended back to Atchafalaya River.

4. Support to that proposition is derived in the answer by referring to the regulations adopted two years before the second Governor under Spanish rule enlarged the front to forty-four arpents, which provide that all grants fronting upon rivers shall be limited to a depth of forty arpents. White, Recopilacion, p. 299, art. 1.

5. That the case is in all respects the same as that previously decided by this court. U. S. v. D'Auterieve, 15 How., 14, 23.

No record of the concession, say the court in that case, has been produced, and after a thorough examination of the archives, both at New Orleans and in the appropriate offices for the deposit of such records, none can be found. Mention was then made of the proof exhibited in the case, which, it seems, consisted only of certain historical sketches given to the public, of the first settlement of the Province under the direction of the Western Company, together with some documentary evidence relating to the plantation of the alleged original donee through his agents, such as powers of attorney and some intermediate transfers of the titles in the charge of the agency. These are given in detail, but the court remarks that, unfortunately, neither the historical sketches nor the documentary evidence furnish any information as to the extent of the concession or its boundaries. Speaking to the same point, the court say that the tract claimed as derived from the original donee is without boundaries or location, and the court proceeds to remark that the only description that has been referred to, or which the court has been able to find, after a pretty thorough search, even in historical records, is that it was a concession of a large tract upon the right bank of the Mississippi River, opposite Manchac, a point some twenty leagues above New Orleans. We have no evidence of the extent of the concession on the river or the depth back, say the court, or of any landmarks designating the tract, by which it can be regarded as severed from the public domain.

Governor Unzaga, who succeeded the first Spanish officer of that rank, ordered a survey of the tract, and it appears it was made by the public surveyor and that it was returned and approved in the same year. Special attention to that fact was called in the argument of the prior case, and it was urged that it furnished evidence of an incipient step to establish an incomplete title under our Treaty of Cession, and the court entered into a full examination of the proposition and the evidence to support it, which consisted chiefly of the field notes of the survey.

Reference is made to the claim in some of the intermediate conveyances as a plantation or concession by the name of the first agent of the company, or by the name of the "Bayou Goula Village," the name of a place on the river where the Tribe of Indians of that name made their headquarters. Satisfactory evidence is exhibited that the public surveyor surveyed the front to the depth of forty arpents, but it must be remembered that the front of the tract on the river to the depth of forty arpents was given up, and that it was subsequently assigned by the Governor to other emigrants, and no part of it is now claimed by the appellants.

Back concessions, it seems, were seldom made, and in no instance of which there appears to be any authentic account, except to the proprietor of the front and, where made, uniformly had a depth of forty arpents, reckoning from the rear line of the first concession, but the same form of title appears to have been required in the one case as in the other, and in no case could a fee simple estate be acquired from the Government without the severance of a definite tract from the mass of the public lands under the operation of a complete grant. 4 Ops. Attys-Gen., 683.

Such a severance might be made by the grant itself, if it contained specific boundaries, or was well defined by courses and distances, or other authentic and definite description of the tract. It is not pretended that either boundaries or courses and distances, or any other authentic or definite description of the tract, was given in the supposed concession. Where such evidence of the location and description of the tract is wanting in the concessions, they may and often have been supplied by what is called a judicial survey, nor is it doubted that an official survey under the order of the Governor might have a like effect.

Beyond doubt, such a survey was made of the front on the river; but this court decided, in the case already referred to, that there is not the slightest pretense that the tract as surveyed under that order of the Governor extended back further than the usual depth of forty arpents from the river. No support to the theory of appellants, that it extended back to the River Atchafalaya, is exhibited in the record. Nor do the field notes or the proces verbal of the surveyor who made the field notes and the survey give the proposition the least countenance.

Under our Treaty of Cession, the United States acquired in sovereignty all the lands in the Province which had not before been granted by one or the other of the two prior sovereigns and severed as private property from the royal domain. It was incumbent, therefore, upon the appellants to show that the land in question had been so granted by the antecedent authorities, else the United States are entitled to recover it. U. S. v. King, 7 How., 833, 849.

Subsequent concessions were made by the Spanish authorities within this claim, which, as well as the action of the authorities in resuming the possession of the larger portion of it, show conclusively that no such right as is now claimed by the appellants was recognized by those authorities.

Since the cession of the Province, the right of such a claimant is the same as it would have been if the jurisdiction had not been transferred; from which it follows that rejected claims, which had no validity at the date of the Treaty, impose no obligation upon the United States as the successor of the foreign Sovereign.

Cases of the kind have frequently been before the court, in which the Act of Congress authorizing such litigations has been construed and the rights which it confers defined. We adopt the construction given to the Act in the last reported case upon the subject, as follows: (1) That the claimant or those under whom he holds must have been out of possession for twenty years or more. (2) That the land must be claimed by a complete grant or concession or order of survey or other mode of investiture of title in the original claimant by separation of the tract from the mass of the public domain, either by actual survey or defined, fixed, natural boundaries or initial points and courses and distances by the competent authority, prior to the Treaty of Cession. (3) That those conditions do not apply where the title was created and perfected during the period of the actual possession of the Government under which the claim is asserted. Titles in fee simple which were complete when the jurisdiction of the Province was transferred to the United States needed no confirmation, as they are fully protected by the Treaty of Cession. U. S. v. Percheman, 7 Pet., 51, 88; U. S. v. Wiggins, 14 Pet., 334, 349. (4) That the title must be complete under the former Sovereign; that is, the land must have been identified by an actual survey with metes and bounds, or the description in the grant must be such that judgment can be rendered with precision by such metes and bounds, natural or otherwise; that nothing must be left to doubt or discretion in its location; and if there was no actual survey previously made which a surveyor can follow, there must be such a description of natural objects for boundaries that he can do the same thing de novo; or, in other words, the separation of the tract from the public domain must not be a mere conjectural separation, but complete, without any element of discretion or uncertainty. Seull v. U. S. [ante, 164, 165]; Smith v. U. S., 10 Pet., 326, 334.

Apply those rules to the case before the court, and it is clear that the decree of the court below must be affirmed. Even if it be conceded that the concession is proved, it is clear that it has no boundaries, nor does it contain any means to determine either the location or the extent of the supposed grant.

Grants of the kind which do not contain any description by which the land can be located, and are not connected with a survey, do not create private property under the Treaty of Cession. Where the concession contains no lines or boundaries whereby any definite and specific parcel of land was severed from the public domain, the claim of the donee cannot be sustained, it having been repeatedly decided by this court that if the description is vague and indefinite, as in the case before the court, and there is no official survey to give it a certain location, it will create no right of private property which can be maintained in a court of justice. U. S. v. King, 3 How., 773, 787.

Legal survey will often be sufficient to establish the locality of the tract, and may have the effect to establish its extent; but if the claimant shows no survey under the former Sovereign, it lies on him to establish the boundaries of his concession and to identify his land with such certainty as to show what particular tract was segregated from the public domain, and if he fails to do it, then he has no judicial remedy, and if he seeks confirmation he must go to Congress. U. S. v. Boisdore, 11 How., 63, 96; Le-compte v. U. S., 11 How., 115, 127; U. S. v. Forbes, 15 Pet., 173, 184.

Attempt is not made to show that the supposed concession contained any definite boundaries or any other means of establishing its locality or of defining its extent, nor is it pretended that the tract as now claimed by the appellants was ever surveyed by the public surveyor, antecedent to the Treaty of Cession to the United States. Conclusive proof to the contrary is exhibited in the opinion of this court delivered by Mr. Justice Nelson, which conclusion is fully sustained by the field notes of the survey of the front, and by the proces verbal and the figurative plan exhibited in the transcript.

Mandamus to inferior court.

This court has power by mandamus, to enforce prompt compliance with its mandates, but it will not, in that summary mode, revise the action of inferior courts, as to any matters about which they must or may exercise judicial discretion.

Argued Jan. 12, 13, 1880. Decided Feb. 2, 1880.

APPPLICATION for mandamus. The case is stated by the court.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the following opinion:

This is an application, by petition, for a writ of mandamus to the Judges of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Colorado, commanding them to proceed and give final decree, in accordance with the opinion and mandate of this court, in the suit of the Cañon City and San Juan Railroad Company against the Denver and Rio Grande Railway Company. The history of this litigation is set forth in R. Co. v. Alling [ante, 438], et seq., to which reference is here made. The present application is supported by an exemplified copy of the proceedings had in the circuit court at its May Term, 1879, after the filing therein of the opinion and mandate of this court.

The main contention of the Denver and Rio Grand Railway Company was, that the court below had failed and refused to comply with the mandate of this court; that, upon filing the mandate, that Company became entitled, absolutely and beyond the discretion of the circuit court, to withhold a decree restoring it, at once and unconditionally, to the possession of the Grand Cañon of the Arkansas River; dissolving the injunction granted against it in that suit; adjudging that it had the prior right to occupy and use that cañon for the purpose of constructing its railroad therein; and requiring the Cañon City and San Juan Railway Company, its officers, agents, servants and employés, to refrain from interfering with or obstructing the Denver and Rio Grande Company in such occupancy and use of the cañon, or in the construction of its railroad in and through the same.

It is essential to a proper understanding of the present application, to recall some of the leading facts in this litigation. The controversy between these two companies arose out of their respective claims to occupy and use the Grand or Big Cañon of the Arkansas River for railroad purposes. The circuit court, upon the original hearing, held the prior right and location to be with the Cañon City Company, with liberty, however, to the Denver Company to exhibit its bill in any court of competent jurisdiction to compel the former company to so locate and construct its road as to permit the convenient and proper location by the Denver Company of its road, or, if two roads could not be conveniently constructed and operated in the cañon, to occupy the track and roadway of the Cañon City Company. While the causes were under submission in this court at its last Term, it was represented that, after the rendition of the decree in favor of the Cañon City Company, the parties and corporations concerned had entered into binding agreements, whereby the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company, in its own right, and in connection with the Pueblo and Arkansas Valley Railroad Company (the successor of the Cañon City Company), had become and was equitably the owner of all the property, rights and interests of the Denver Company, and entitled to the control of its affairs, business and suits of every kind. Upon that ground, the Pueblo Company moved that the submission be set aside and the appeals dismissed, while the Atchison Company moved that it have permission to intervene in this court and, by its solicitor, consent to such dismissal!

These motions were denied, for the reasons given in the former opinion. It was there said, that if the directors of the Denver Company, in prosecuting the appeals to final judgment, violated any trust committed to their hands, or any agreement which was binding upon the Corporation and the minority stockholders, remedy might be sought "In some court of original jurisdiction, into which, upon proper pleadings, all persons interested may be summoned." The court also said: "If, since those decrees were entered, the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company, or the Pueblo and Arkansas Valley Railroad have, by valid contracts, acquired a controlling interest in the property, rights and affairs of the Denver Company, that interest can be asserted by appropriate proceedings, and will not be affected by anything we may determine upon the issues presented by these appeals."

Upon the merits of the cases it was held:

That the intention of Congress by the Act of 1872 was to grant to the Denver Company a present beneficial easement in the particular way over which its designated routes lay, capable, however, of enjoyment only when the way granted was actually located, and, in good faith, appropriated for the purposes contemplated by the Company's charter and the Act of Congress;

That, when such location and appropriation were made, the title, which was previously imperfect, acquired precision and, by relation, took effect as of the date of the grant;

That the Denver Company, by its occupancy of the Grand Cañon on 19th April, 1878, for the purpose of constructing its road through that defile, came then, if not before, into the enjoyment of the present beneficial easement conferred by the Act of Congress of June 8, 1872, 17 Stat. at L., 339, and was entitled to have secured against all intruders whatever, the privileges or advantages which belonged to that position;

NOTE.—The Supreme Court will not review the discretionary action of the court below. See note to Barrow v. Hill, 54 U. S. (13 How.), 54.

That such right was, however, subject to the provisions of the Act of March, 3, 1875, whereby it was declared, in the interest of the public, that any other railroad company, duly organized, might use and occupy the cañon for the purposes of its road, in common with the road first located.

The opinion concluded as follows:

"It results, from what we have said, that the court below erred in enjoining the Denver Company from proceeding with the construction of its road in the Grand Cañon. The decree, as entered, can only be sustained upon the assumption that the Cañon City Company had, by prior occupancy, acquired a right superior to any which the Denver and Rio Grande Railway Company had to use the cañon for the purpose of constructing its road. But that assumption, we have seen, is not sustained by the evidence, and is inconsistent with the rights given by the Acts of Congress to the Denver Company. The Denver Company should have been allowed to proceed with the construction of its road unobstructed by the other company. Where the Grand Cañon is broad enough to enable both companies to proceed without interference with each other in the construction of their respective roads, they should be allowed to do so. But in the narrow portions of the defile, where this course is impracticable, the court, by proper orders, should recognize the prior right of the Denver and Rio Grande Railway Company to construct its road. Further, if in any portion of the Grand Cañon it is impracticable or impossible to lay down more than one road-bed and track, the court, while recognizing the prior right of the Denver Company to construct and operate that tract for its own business, should, by proper orders, and upon such terms as may be just and equitable, establish and secure the right of the Cañon City Company, conferred by the Act of March 3, 1875, 18 Stat. at L., 482, to use the same road-bed and track, after completion, in common with the Denver Company.

The decrees in these causes are, therefore, reversed, with directions to set aside the order granting an injunction against the Denver and Rio Grande Railway Company, and also the order dissolving the injunction granted in its favor, and dismissing its bill. By proper orders, entered in each suit, the court below will recognize the prior right of that Company to occupy and use the Grand Cañon for the purpose of constructing its road therein, and will enjoin the Cañon City and San Juan Railway Company, its officers, agents, servants and employés, from interfering with or obstructing that Company in such occupancy, use and construction. It may be that, during the pendency of these causes in the court below, or since the rendition of the decrees appealed from, the Cañon City and San Juan Railway Company has, under the authority of the circuit court, constructed its road-bed and track in the Grand Cañon, or in some portion thereof. In that event, the cost thus incurred in those portions of the cañon which admit of only one road-bed and track for railroad purposes, may be ascertained and provided for in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as the equities of the parties may require.

The court will make such further orders as may be necessary to give effect to this opinion."

It appears from the transcript of the proceedings had in the court below, after the return of the causes, that the Pueblo and Arkansas Valley Railroad Company was permitted, against the objection of the Denver Company, to file supplemental bills, showing that it was the successor of the Cañon City Company and setting out in detail, among other things, the same facts substantially that were relied upon in this court in support of the motions made at the last Term to set aside the submission and dismiss the appeals. The prayer of the first supplemental bill was that those facts might be considered and that, upon the hearing, the original decrees might be permitted to stand without modification or change.

An order was entered in the Circuit Court, on the 14th July, 1879, in which, after reciting the mandate of this court, and the reversal of the original decree of July, 1878, it was declared that the said decree theretofore given and allowed "be vacated and set aside," with costs to the Denver Company to the date of the filing of the mandate.

It was also adjudged that the right of the Denver Company "To first locate and construct its railway upon the way mentioned and described in the bill of complaint herein, as against the Cañon City and San Juan Railway Company and the Pueblo and Arkansas Valley Railroad Company, and as of the date of the commencement of this suit, and the date of said decree, is recognized and established."

The decree proceeds:

"Forasmuch, however, as it is alleged by the said plaintiff (the Cañon City and San Juan Railway Company), in certain supplemental bills by it filed herein, that since the said decree the said defendant (the Denver and Rio Grande Railway Company) hath granted, sold or otherwise yielded to the said plaintiff its right of way in the premises; and forasmuch as it is also alleged by the said plaintiff that since the said decree the said plaintiff hath built wholly or in part upon the said way, and upon the line heretofore located by the said defendant, a railway of such gauge and structure as the said defendant hath proposed to build, for which, as to the whole or some part thereof, the said defendant ought in equity and good conscience to pay the reasonable value, and because the value of said railway is at present unknown to the court, no further decree touching the ultimate right of the parties can be given or allowed until the court shall be better advised in the matters aforesaid.

And it is considered by the court that the relations of the parties of and concerning the line of railway heretofore constructed, or now in process of construction as aforesaid, ought not to suffer any change pending such inquiry touching the facts upon which the further and final judgment and decree of the court will be given, therefore, let each of the parties be enjoined and restrained from doing any act or thing towards building and completing the said line of railway until the further order of the court. Nor shall either of the said parties interfere with the present possession of the other in the said line of railway, but each shall remain in the possession of that part which it now holds until the further order of the court. And of this order, the parties shall take notice without writ or further service. But if either of the said parties shall desire to construct another line of railway on the same right of way, without interfering with the grade or road-bed constructed by the said plaintiff or the Cañon City and San Juan Railway Company, it shall be at liberty to do so."

The order then provided for the appointment of three engineers, one to be nominated by each of the parties and one to be selected by the court, who were required to ascertain and report to the court to what extent, in the construction of two roads from Cañon City to the 20th mile post, must the two companies occupy the same track; whether the Grand Cañon of the Arkansas was broad enough to enable both companies to proceed without interference with each other in their respective roads, or, if one be already constructed, then whether such constructed line will interfere with or render impracticable the construction of a second line; whether, in the narrow portions of the cañon, there is any place where such a course was impracticable, and if so, whether any road-bed or railroad has been constructed in such place or places, and the cost and reasonable value of same; whether, if two roads shall be built on the Arkansas River from Cañon City to the 20th mile post, to what extent should they be located on opposite sides of the river, and the relative cost thereof; what has been done by the Cañon City Company or the Pueblo and Arkansas Valley Railroad Company towards constructing a railroad from Cañon City to the 20th mile post, and what is its value and its location, with reference to the Arkansas, its defiles and cañons; and what part of the line so constructed is on the public domain; what part on lands owned by individuals or corporations, and what is the value of each part separately.

Upon a subsequent day of the same Term the Denver Company, by petition, suggested that the decree rendered was not full and complete, and that the court had not awarded all the relief to which it was entitled under the opinion and mandate of this court. The circuit court, however, held that further and final decree should be deferred until the matters set forth in the decree of July 14, 1879, were determined.

Thus stood the case, in its essential features, when the petition for mandamus was filed in this court. Subsequently, the attention of the court was called to the final decree rendered in the circuit court in January, 1880.

After a careful consideration of all that has been said in support of the present application, we are of opinion that a mandamus should be denied. Our former opinion discloses the fact that many matters growing out of this litigation were necessarily left undisposed of, and were remitted to the circuit court for such determination as the rights and equities of the parties required under the circumstances existing at the time its action was invoked. We took care to say that nothing determined upon the issues presented upon the original appeals would affect the question as to whether the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company, or the Pueblo and Arkansas Valley Railroad Company, had, by valid contract, subsequent to the decree of July, 1878, become the owner of the property, or entitled to the control of the rights, affairs and suits of the Denver Company. That question, in distinct terms, was left open for subsequent adjudication, in a court of original jurisdiction, upon proper pleadings and by appropriate proceedings. We expressly limited our decision to a determination of the rights of the parties as they existed when the decrees of July, 1878, were rendered, and as manifested in the records then before us. Whether, therefore, the supplemental bills, filed upon the return of the causes, raised, in proper form, the question as to the right of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company, or the Pueblo and Arkansas Valley Railroad Company, under the alleged contracts made with the Denver Company subsequent to the decrees of July, 1878, to control the pending suits so far as they affected the interests of the latter Company; whether the Denver Company, in consequence of said alleged contracts, had lost or waived the right, improperly denied to it by the decree of July, 1878, of occupying the Grand Cañon for the purpose of constructing its road; were matters about which the circuit court was at liberty, and was bound to exercise its judicial discretion.

It is contended that the circuit court plainly disobeyed our mandate when declining to make such orders as would place the Denver Company, upon the filing of the mandate, in the actual occupancy or possession of the Grand Cañon, without reference to or without awaiting the determination of the claim which the Cañon City Company, or its successor, had on account of money expended in the construction of its road in the Grand Cañon, or in that portion of it which admitted of but one road-bed or track. It is true that we said, referring necessarily to the rights of parties as they existed at the date of the decree of July, 1878, that the circuit court erred in enjoining the Denver Company from constructing its road in the Grand Cañon; and that that Company should have been allowed to proceed without obstruction from or interference by the latter Company. We, therefore, directed, among other things, that the order granting the injunction should be set aside, and that, by proper orders, the prior right of the Denver Company to occupy and use the cañon be recognized. These directions were substantially complied with. The prior right of the Denver Company to locate and construct its railway in the cañon was expressly recognized and established by the order of July 14, 1879. It is true that the injunction was not, in terms, dissolved, but the final decree of July, 1878, upon which its efficacy depended, was expressly vacated and set aside. The injunction, necessarily fell with the decree. The foundation upon which it rested was destroyed when the decree was annulled. Had our directions gone no further than to dissolve the injunction against, and to recognize the prior right of, the Denver Company, the present application would rest upon stronger grounds than it does. We could not, however, ignore the fact that, possibly, during the pendency of these causes in the court below, or subsequent to the decree of July, 1878, the Cañon City Company, or its successor, had, under the authority or sanction of the court, expended money in the construction of its road-bed and track in some portions of the Grand Cañon. "In that event," we said, "the cost thus incurred in those portions of the cañon which admit of only one road-bed and track for railroad purposes may be ascertained and provided for in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as the equities of the parties may require." We gave no direction as to the mode in which such cost should be ascertained, or as to the terms and conditions to be imposed in any provision made for it. Those matters were left for the determination of the court below, according to the principles of equity.

It was undoubtedly competent for that court, in the exercise of its judicial discretion, to have put the Denver Company, upon the filing of the mandate, into immediate possession of the Grand Cañon, including the road-bed and track which the Cañon City Company had constructed in the narrow portions of that defile. But the propriety of orders to that effect would have depended upon the equities of the parties as they existed at the time the action of the court, in that direction, was sought. It was not in violation of our mandate that the circuit court, after setting aside and vacating the decree of July, 1878, and recognizing the prior right of the Denver Company, should suspend further action as to the ultimate rights of the parties until the matters set out in the supplemental bill, and recited in the decree of July 14, 1879, were inquired into.

We recognize, in its fullest extent, the power of this court, by mandamus, to enforce prompt compliance with its mandates; but it is not consistent with the principles and usages of law that we should, in that summary mode, revise the action of inferior courts, as to any matters about which they must or may exercise judicial discretion. "The writ has never been extended so far, nor ever used to control the discretion and judgment of an inferior court of record acting within the scope of its judicial authority." Ex parte Taylor, 14 How., 3; Ex parte Many, 14 How., 24; U. S. v. Lawrence, 3 Dall., 42; Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 8 Pet., 291; Ex parte Hoyt, 13 Pet., 279; Ex parte Whitney, 13 Pet., 404; Ex parte Newman, 14 Wall., 152 [81 U. S., XX., 877.] The remedy for any errors committed by the circuit court, either in the decree of July 14, 1879, or in the final decree of January, 1880, is by appeal to this court. We, therefore, forbear, at this time, any expression of opinion as to the existence or non-existence of errors in those decrees to the prejudice of either party. We decide nothing more upon the present application, than that this is not a case which, in our judgment, calls for interposition by a writ of mandamus.

One of the reasons assigned in oral argument why the application for mandamus should be favorably considered is, that, by the Act of Congress of March 3, 1877, 19 Stat. at L., 405, amending the Act of June 2, 1872, 17 Stat. at L., 339, the time within which the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad Company must complete its road as far south as Santa Fé, will expire on June 2, 1882; in default whereof, it will forfeit, as to the unfinished portion of the road, the rights and privileges granted by the Act of See 11 OTTO.

1872. The time limited, it is urged will expire before an appeal from the final decree of January 2, 1880, can be reached upon the docket of this court in the usual course of its business.

We recognize the force of this suggestion, and feel it to be our duty, under the circumstances, to afford the parties an opportunity to secure an early and final determination of their respective rights in the premises. To that end, upon an appeal being perfected and upon the filing in this court of a transcript of the record, we will hear a motion to advance this cause for consideration at the present Term.

Mandamus denied.

Mr. Justice Field:

I dissent from the order of the court denying the mandamus prayed. When the circuit court dissolved the injunction restraining the Denver Company from taking possession of the Grand Cañon, there was only a seeming compliance with our mandate, for soon afterwards the court restored the injunction, thus practically defeating our judgment. But as the court has decided to advance the hearing of the appeal from the final decree entered in the court below, on application of the appellants, I will refrain from further comment until that appeal is heard.

Mr. Justice Swayne and Mr. Justice Bradley also dissented from the order refusing the mandamus.

Submitted Jan. 13, 1880. Decided Feb. 2, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana.

Feb. 2, 1855, Elam Bowman executed a mortgage to Stephen Duncan, on 3,400 acres of land in the Parish of Tensas, Louisiana. His wife intervened in the act and made the usual renunciations of her rights in favor of Duncan. This mortgage was inscribed on the next day, and re-inscribed Sep. 13, 1865.

January 10, 1861, Bowman executed another mortgage on 1,920 acres, a part of the same land, to William M. Shaw, tutor of William Gegan, in which his wife did not join. This mortgage was inscribed on the same day.

Dec. 26, 1865, Duncan brought suit in the State District Court for the Parish of Tensas, and obtained judgment May 19, 1866. May 18, 1866, Mrs. Bowman obtained a judgment against her husband for $13,278.42, and interest, with a legal and tacit mortgage on all his property, to take effect for $9,325 from the years 1840 and 1845, and for $3,953.42 from Jan. 1, 1852. The property was advertised to be sold under each of these judgments, Apr. 3, 1869. On that day Gegan, who had obtained his majority, instituted suit in the same court, making Duncan and Mrs. Bowman parties defendant. He alleged that Mrs. Bowman's judgment was fraudulent and collusive, and that his mortgage was superior in rank to that of Duncan, by reason of Duncan's failure to re-inscribe his mortgage within ten years from the time of its first inscription. The issues thus arising were tried together, and judgment rendered thereon in the District Court, Nov. 3, 1869. Appeal was taken from this judgment, by all the parties, to the Supreme Court of the State, where the judgment of the District Court was reversed and a new judgment rendered by the Supreme Court, settling the relative rights of the parties and the priority of the several mortgage liens. Judgment of the Supreme Court was filed in the district court, June 4, 1870. The opinion of the Supreme Court of the State contained the following:

"Mrs. Bowman holds the first mortgage for $9,325 on all the property of her husband and for the whole of her judgment, $13,278.42, with interest as allowed on the 1,480 acres not subject to Gegan's mortgage. Gegan has the second mortgage on the 1,920 acres described in his act, and Duncan comes last, as his mortgage takes effect only from the day of its re-inscription. It follows that if the 1,420 acres will pay Mrs. Bowman's mortgage she will take none of the proceeds of the land mortgaged to Gegan. But if not, she can claim no part of the $3,953.42 until Gegan is paid. And if there is any surplus after paying the said two sums to Mrs. Bowman and that due Gegan, it will go to Duncan. As the record shows that the land was not sold at the date of the appeal, the cause must be remanded for distribution."

July 12, 1870, Gegan and Mrs. Bowman took out executions, the former seizing the part subject to his mortgage, and the latter the entire property. Sep. 3, 1870, the sheriff sold the property to Mrs. Rebecca M. Smyth. The entire proceeds of the sale were insufficient to satisfy Mrs. Bowman's claim.

Apr. 26, 1876, Duncan filed his petition for the removal of the suit to the United States Circuit Court. The transcript was filed in that court and after exceptions to the jurisdiction had been overruled, Duncan filed a bill making the present appellees defendants and seeking to have the judgment of Mrs. Bowman set aside, and his own mortgage declared superior to that of Gegan. The defendants answered, and after various proceedings the circuit court rendered a decree to the effect that the rank of the several mortgages had been finally determined by the Supreme Court of the State, and that it appeared that the sum arising from the sales of the real estate had been distributed and applied in the manner required by said judgment. Duncan's bill was therefore dismissed, and from this decree of dismissal he appealed.

Messrs. Robert Mott and Thomas J. Semmes, for appellant.

Messrs. Henry B. Kelly and Henry L. Lazarus, for appellees.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This decree is affirmed.

The transfer of the suit from the State Court to the Circuit Court did not vacate what had been done in the State Court previous to the removal. The Circuit Court, when a transfer is effected, takes the case in the condition it was when the State Court was deprived of its jurisdiction. The Circuit Court has no more power over what was done before the removal than the State Court would have had if the suit had remained there. It takes the case up where the State Court left it off.

Before the suit of Gegan v. Bowman was removed to the Circuit Court, the rank of the appellant's mortgage had been finally settled by the judgment of the Supreme Court of the State on appeal. That was no longer an open question between the parties to that litigation. All the court from which the removal was afterwards made could do was to distribute the proceeds of the sale of the property in accordance with the directions of the Supreme Court. It had no power whatever to change the order of priorities as settled by the appellate court.

The question of the right to make the transfer is not before us. Duncan, who caused the removal to be made, is the only party who complains of the decree below, and he cannot object here to what has been done below by his own procurement. We confess it is not easy to see how a party could swear to his belief, that from prejudice or local influence he could not obtain justice in the State Court, when all that court had to do was to divide the proceeds of a sale by paying them out in a certain way, and as to which there was apparently no possible chance of dispute. But still it was so sworn, and the Circuit Court took jurisdiction against the motion of the opposite party. Of that no complaint is now made by the appellees.

It follows, then, that, whether the proceedings which were afterwards had in the Circuit Court at the instance of the appellant were part of the original suit removed from the State Court, or a new and distinct suit begun in the Circuit Court by the appellant himself after the removal, the judgment of the Supreme Court of the State on the appeal in the original suit, concludes him as to his rights thus litigated and disposed of. As it is apparent that the questions presented by the new pleadings in the Circuit Court are in all respects the same as those settled by the Supreme Court of the State, it follows that the Circuit Court was right in holding that the appellant was concluded by that decree.

Affirmed.

Submitted Jan. 13, 1880. Decided Mar. 1, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. Samuel W. Packard, for appellant.

Messrs. Sleeper & Whiton, for appellee.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

This case, as made by the bill, answers, replications and proofs, is as follows: on the 24th day of September, 1874, the First National Bank of Wyandotte, Kansas, made its promissory note at Chicago, Illinois, in these words: “$5,000.”

CHICAGO, Illinois, Sept. 24th, 1874.

Four months after date we promise to pay to Cook County National Bank, of Chicago, or order, five thousand dollars, with interest at the rate of — per cent per annum after due, value received, all payable at Cook County National Bank.

(Signed)

B. JUDD,

Cashier 1st Nat'l Bank, Wyandotte, Ka's.
$6,000 Wyandotte Co. and City bonds as collateral.”

The note was made and delivered to the Cook County Bank, in pursuance of an arrangement between that bank and Judd, the cashier of the Wyandotte Bank, by which it was agreed the latter should execute a four months' note for $5,000, with security, and have the same discounted by the Cook County Bank, and the proceeds placed to the credit of the Wyandotte Bank, but not to be drawn against so as to reduce the credit for such proceeds below $4,000, such note to remain with the Cook County Bank, and to be surrendered to the maker on the renewal or close of the account. It was distinctly understood between the officers of the two Banks, when the note was given, that it should be held by the Cook County Bank as a memorandum, and not be negotiated or separated from the Wyandotte city and county bonds for $6,000 accompanying it, which were delivered contemporaneously with it as collaterals. Accordingly, the sum of $4,000, part of the proceeds of the discount, was suffered to remain on deposit, to the credit of the Wyandotte Bank, until the Cook County Bank failed, became insolvent and passed into the hands of a receiver. At the time of such failure and the appointment of a receiver there was also an additional credit of $868 due from the Cook County Bank to the Wyandotte Bank. When, therefore, the note matured there was due from the payee to the maker of the note, the sum of $4,868. But before its maturity, to wit: on the 7th day of October, 1874, the Cook County Bank, in violation of its agreement above mentioned, passed the note to the New York State Loan and Trust Company, by which it was discounted, without any knowledge of any defense which the Wyandotte Bank had against it, or any knowledge of the origin of the note and of the agreement between the two Banks, other than what the face of the note revealed.

See 11 OTTO.

U. S., Book 25.

The note was protested when it fell due, and it is now held by the receiver of the Trust Company, and the collaterals, the municipal bonds, are held still by the Cook County Bank.

This bill has been filed to compel its surrender and the surrender of the Wyandotte city and county bonds on the payment of $132, the difference between $5,000 and $4,868, the sum standing to the credit of the Wyandotte Bank against the payee, the claimant offering to pay that sum.

In view of these facts, fairly deducible from the evidence, it is manifest that, as between the complainant and the Cook County Bank, there is a perfect defense against the note to the extent of $4,868, the sum standing to the credit of the Wyandotte Bank due from the payee. On the payment of $132 the maker of the note has a clear equity to have it surrendered, together with the municipal bonds held as collaterals.

But it is claimed that the Trust Company having received the note before its maturity, and having discounted it in the usual course of business without any knowledge of any equities or defense against it, is entitled to hold it free from any defense which the maker could set up against the payee; that is, against the Cook County Bank.

A large portion of the argument before us has been expended upon the questions whether, inasmuch as the note was given by the cashier of the Wyandotte Bank at Chicago, and was made payable at a future day, it was not void under the general banking law. We pass those questions as unnecessary to be considered. If it be conceded the note was valid at its inception, it is certainly true the maker had a good defense against while it was in the hands of the payee, and we do not perceive that the manner in which the Trust Company or its receiver obtained it puts them or either of them in any better position than the payee occupied.

The note was not indorsed to the Trust Company, and it was not, therefore, taken in the usual course of business by that mode of transfer in which negotiable paper is usually transferred. Had it been indorsed by the Cook County Bank, it may be that the Trust Company would hold it, unaffected by any equities between the maker and the payee. But instead of an indorsement, the President of the Cook County Bank merely guarantied its payment, and handed it over with this guaranty to the Trust Company. The note was not even assigned. There was written upon it only the following:

“For value received, we hereby guarantee the payment of the within note at maturity or at any time thereafter, with interest at ten per cent per annum until paid, and agree to pay all costs and expenses paid or incurred in collecting the same.

(Signed)

B. F. ALLEN,

Pres't.”

In no commercial sense is this an indorsement, and probably it was not intended as such. Mr. Allen had agreed that the note should not be negotiated and for this reason, perhaps, it was not indorsed. That a guaranty is not a negotiation of a bill or note as understood by the law merchant, is certain. Snevily v. Elkel, 1 Watts & S., 203; Lamourieux v. Hewitt, 5 Wend., 307;

Miller v. Gaston, 2 Hill, 188. In this case, the guaranty written on the note was filled up. It expressed fully the contract between the Cook County Bank and the Trust Company. Being express, it can raise no implication of any other contract. Expressum facit cessare tacitum. The contract cannot, therefore, be converted into an indorsement or an assignment. And if it could be treated as an assignment of the note, it would not cut off the defenses of the maker. Such an effect results only from a transfer according to the law merchant; that is, from an indorsement. An assignee stands in the place of his assignor, and takes simply an assignor's rights; but an indorsement creates a new and collateral contract. 2 Pars. Notes and B., 46 et seq., n.

At best, therefore, the defendants below can claim no more or greater rights than those of the Cook County Bank, and the complainants are entitled to a return of the note and of the collaterals on payment of the sum of $132.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

TOWNSHIP OF EMPIRE, Plff. in Err.,

v.

SMEDLEY DARLINGTON.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 87-92.)

Power of township to issue bonds—additional subscription—inconclusive decree.

1. The Township of Empire, in Illinois, by subscribing to the stock of and issuing its bonds to the Danville, etc., Railroad Company for $50,000, did not exhaust its power under the charter of that company, but was authorized to subscribe an additional amount of $25,000 to the stock of the Indianapolis, etc., Railway Company, formed by the consolidation of the first named and another company, and issue its bonds therefor, under the Illinois Statute of Feb. 28, 1854.

2. The power of the Township of Empire to make an additional subscription, beyond the original of $50,000, was a right and privilege of the railroad company which, under the general law of the State, passed to the consolidated company.

3. A decree in an Illinois court perpetually enjoining taxation to pay such bonds, and declaring them void, did not conclude any bondholders proceeded against as "unknown owners and holders," who were not served with process and did not appear, nor bondholders residing in other States who were proceeded against only by constructive service.

Submitted Jan. 15, 1880. Decided Mar. 1, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Illinois.

This was an action of assumpsit brought in the court below by Darlington (originally two actions; afterwards consolidated in that court), upon certain bonds and coupons. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff, and the defendant sued out this writ of error.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. L. Weldon, for the plaintiff in error:

By the consolidation of the Danville, Urbana, Bloomington and Pekin Railroad Company with the Indianapolis, Crawfordsville and Danville Railroad Company, a new corporation was created, by the name of "The Indianapolis, Bloomington and Western Railroad Company" and the original companies were dissolved.

R. R. Co. v. Ga., 98 U. S., 359 (ante, 185); McMahan v. Morrison, 16 Ind., 172; Lauman v. R. R. Co., 30 Pa., 42.

There was no power vested in the electors, the corporate authority of the Township of Empire, under the charter of the Danville, Urbana, Bloomington and Pekin Railroad Company, to hold an election and vote to subscribe to the capital stock of the Indianapolis, Bloomington and Western Railroad Company, and issue its bonds in payment therefor to that Company, the original company having been dissolved.

Burroughs, Tax., 413; Nugent v. Supervisors, 19 Wall., 241 (86 U. S., XXII., 83); see, East Lincoln v. Davenport, 94 U. S., 801 (XXIV., 322); Big Grove v. Wells, 65 Ill., 263.

It is a rule of universal application, that where the power to make the contract for the corporation never existed on the part of the officers of the township, negotiable securities issued by them are invalid in the hands of all persons.

Middleport v. Ins. Co., 82 Ill., 562; School Directors v. Fogleman, 76 Ill., 189; Bissell v. Kankakee, 64 Ill., 249; South Ottawa v. Perkins, 94 U. S., 260 (XXIV., 154), McClure v. Oxford, 94 U. S., 432 (XXIV., 129); Marsh v. Fulton Co., 10 Wall., 683 (77 U. S., XIX., 1042); School Directors v. Sippy, 54 Ill., 287.

The Missouri cases can have no application to this case, for the reason that the Statute of that State is wholly different from the Statute of Illinois, and the rule of decision in the courts of that State is different from the rule in Illinois.

Mr. S. M. Cullom, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

Under the provisions of an Act of the Legislature of Illinois, approved February 28, 1867, and in conformity to the result of a popular election duly called, and held on the 3d June, 1867, the Township of Empire, in that State, made a subscription of $50,000 to the capital stock of the Danville, Urbana, Bloomington and Pekin Railroad Company, a corporation created under the laws of Illinois. That company was given, by its charter, power to locate, construct and complete a railroad from Pekin, through, or as near as practicable to, certain designated towns, to the eastern boundary of the State.

In payment of the subscription, bonds of the Township, of like amount, were issued and delivered to the company.

On the 20th day of August, 1869, that company consolidated with the Indianapolis, Crawfordsville and Danville Railroad company, an Indiana corporation, the consolidated company assuming the name of the Indianapolis, Bloomington and Western Railway Company. The consolidated railroad formed a continuous line of road from Indianapolis, Indiana, to Pekin, Illinois.

On the 12th of October, 1869, an election was held in the Township of Empire for the purpose of ascertaining the sense of its people upon the proposition to subscribe, upon certain conditions, the sum of $25,000, as additional stock in aid of the construction and completion of the Indianapolis, Bloomington and Western Railroad. The election resulted in favor of the subscription, which being made, bonds to that amount were issued in the name of the Township and delivered to the company.

The bonds were in the customary form, dated March 20, 1870, and signed by the township supervisor and clerk. Each one contained a recital that it was issued "Under and by virtue of a law of the State of Illinois, entitled 'An Act to Amend the Articles of Association of the Danville, Urbana, Bloomington and Pekin Railroad Company, and to Extend the Powers of and to Confer a Charter upon the Same,' approved February 28, 1867, and in accordance with the vote of the electors of said Township, at the special election held October 12, 1869, in accordance with said Act. And the faith of the Township of Empire is hereby pledged for the payment of the said principal sum and interest as aforesaid."

The present action involves the validity of the bonds and the coupons thereto attached of the $25,000 issue, some of which are held by the defendant in error.

Their validity is assailed upon several grounds, each of which will be briefly examined:

First. It is contended that the election held on the 8d June, 1867, under the charter of the Danville, Urbana, Bloomington and Pekin Railroad Company, whereby the subscription of $50,000 was made and bonds issued in payment thereof, exhausted the power of the Township under that charter, and that any additional subscription was without authority of law.

This position is clearly untenable. The 12th section of the charter of the railroad company furnishes a conclusive answer to this proposition. That section declares that "To further aid in the construction of said road by said company, any incorporated town or townships in counties acting under the township organization law, along the route of said road, may subscribe to the capital stock of said company in any sum, not exceeding $250,000." That the plaintiff in error belongs to the class of townships described in that section, is not disputed. Its right, consequently, to make subscriptions, from time to time, until they reached the prescribed limit, seems to be too clear to require argument in its support. The charter contains no word, clause or section indicating that the authority of the Township to make subscriptions ceased after the first subscription. The Legislature fixed a limit beyond which the Township could not go in its subscriptions to the company in question, but left it free—the people consenting by popular vote—to make subscriptions in such sums and at such times as it deemed necessary or proper, within the aggregate amount named in the section which has been quoted.

Second. The next proposition urged upon our attention is, that by the consolidation to which we have referred a new corporation was created by the name of the Indianapolis, Bloomington and Western Railway Company, and the original companies dissolved; that there was no power vested in the electors, the corporate authority of the Township of Empire, under the charter of the Danville, Urbana, Bloomington and Pekin Railroad Company, to hold an election, to subscribe stock and issue bonds to that new company. This proposition is equally untenable with the first.

By a general statute of Illinois, in 1854, and in force as well at the date of the charter of the Danville, Urbana, Bloomington and Pekin Railroad Company, as when it was consolidated with the Indianapolis, Crawfordsville and Danville Railroad Company, express authority was conferred upon all railroad companies then organized or thereafter to be organized, which then had or might thereafter have their termini fixed by law, whenever their road or roads intersected by continuous lines, to "Consolidate their property and stock with each other, and to consolidate with companies out of this (that) State, whenever their lines connect with the lines of such companies out of this (that) State." That statute further provided that the consolidated company, by the name agreed upon, should be a body corporate and politic, and "Shall have all the powers, franchises, and immunities which the said respective companies shall have by virtue of their respective charters, before such consolidation passed, within the State of Illinois." Ill. R. S. Gross, 3d ed., pp. 537, 538.

It thus appears that whatever powers, franchises, and immunities were enjoyed by the Danville, Urbana, Bloomington and Pekin Railroad Company, under its charter, passed, upon the consolidation, to the consolidated company. The power of the Township of Empire to make as we have held it could, an additional subscription, beyond the original of $50,000, was in its essence, a right and privilege of the railroad company which, under the general law of the State, passed to the consolidated company. Scotland Co. v. Thomas, 94 U. S., 682 [XXIV., 219]; Henry Co. v. Nicolay, 95 U. S., 619 [XXIV., 394].

It was evidently so understood by the parties concerned; for while the bonds very properly refer to the Act of February 28, 1867 (which is the charter of the Danville, Urbana, Bloomington and Pekin Railroad Company), as the statute which specifically authorized their issue, the petition of citizens asking an election, and the notice of the election of October 12, 1869, distinctly show that the additional subscription of $25,000 to be voted on was for additional stock in aid of the construction and completion, not of the Danville, Urbana, Bloomington and Pekin Railroad, but "of the Indianapolis, Bloomington and Western Railroad." If the popular vote had been, in terms, in favor of a subscription to the capital stock of the Danville, Urbana, Bloomington and Pekin Railroad Company, and the subscription had been made in that form, there would be some reason to contend that the subscription would have been a nullity, since no such company then had a distinct separate existence. But when, as here, the vote was taken and the subscription made with direct reference to the construction and completion of the original line by the consolidated company, which had previously succeeded to all the powers, franchises and immunities of the Danville, Urbana, Bloomington and Pekin Railroad Company, there would seem to be no ground whatever to question the validity of the bonds issued and delivered to the company in payment of the subscription.

Third. It is scarcely necessary to say that the decree in the Circuit Court of McLean County, Illinois, rendered in 1878, perpetually enjoining the assessment and collection of taxes for the purpose of paying the bonds and coupons in question, and declaring said bonds and coupons to be void, did not conclude the rights of the defendant in error. The bondholders were proceeded against by constructive service, as "unknown owners and holders." The defendant in error was not served with process, nor did he appear. If the decree was binding upon the citizens and courts of Illinois, as to which we express no opinion, it was ineffectual as to bondholders residing in other States, who were proceeded against only by constructive service. Brooklyn v. Ins. Co., 99 U. S., 362 [ante, 416].

Judgment affirmed.

TOWN OF ROBERTS, Plff. in Err.,

v.

MATTHEWS BOLLES ET AL.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 119-129.)

Negotiability of municipal bonds—bona fide purchaser—state decision.

1. In Illinois, municipal bonds payable to bearer are negotiable, by delivery only, and an action may be maintained thereon in the name of the holder thereof.

2. In that State, municipal bonds issued in pursuance of a popular election, defectively called and held, are not invalid in the hands of a bona fide purchaser.

3. This court does not feel bound, in any case in which a point is first raised in the Courts of the United States and has been decided in a circuit court, to reverse that decision contrary to its own convictions, in order to conform to a state decision made in the meantime.

Submitted Jan. 15, 1880. Decided Mar. 1, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois.

This action was brought in the court below, by the defendants in error against the plaintiff in error, upon certain bonds and coupons.

The facts are stated by the court.

Messrs. A. J. Bell and John W. Ross, for plaintiff in error:

1. By the statutes of Illinois, as uniformly construed by the Supreme Court of that State, the bonds described in declaration of plaintiffs below could not be transferred so as to invest the legal title in the bearer, except such bonds be indorsed in writing by the Hamilton, Lacon and Eastern Railroad Company.

Hilborn v. Artus, 3 Scam., 344; Roosa v. Crist, 17 Ill., 452.

2. The court below, in deciding that the title to said bonds was in the plaintiffs, enforced the Statute of Illinois making notes, bills, bonds, etc., assignable; and, by the uniform rule invariably held by this court, the courts of the United States, in enforcing state statutes, must adopt the clear construction of those statutes made by the highest tribunal of the State enacting the statute. This is not a question as to whether, by the general commercial law of the country, negotiable bonds are transferable by mere delivery, but whether the Statute of Illinois on that subject makes them so transferable, as those bonds are issued or pretended to be issued under and by virtue of the laws of that State. The court below should have adopted the ruling of the State Court, and held that plaintiffs were not the legal holders of said bonds.

Nesmith v. Sheldon, 7 How. 812; U. S. v. Morrison, 4 Pet., 124; Green v. Neal, 6 Pet., 291; Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet., 1; Harpending v. Dutch Church, 16 Pet., 494; Adams v. Nashville, 95 U. S., 21 (XXIV., 370); Elmwood v. Marcy, 92 U. S., 289 (XXIII., 710); Leffingwell v. Warren, 2 Black, 599 (67 U. S., XVII., 261).

3. The election mentioned in the bonds declared on was a nullity because called without authority by the Town Clerk, the application to him to call the same having been signed by only twelve legal voters and tax payers instead of twenty-four, as required by the law, and only ten days' notice having been given by the clerk, when the law required twenty days.

Private Laws, Ill., 1867, Vol. 1, 366, sec. 1; also, of 1869, Vol. 3, 361, sec. 1; People v. Cline, 63 Ill., 394; R. R. Co. v. Coyer, 79 Ill., 373; Marshall Co. v. Cook, 38 Ill., 44; Harding v. R. R. Co., 65 Ill., 90, and cases therein cited on p. 92.

4. As to innocent holders:

I concede that it is the settled doctrine of this court, as first announced in Knox Co. v. Aspinwall, 21 How., 539 (62 U. S., XVI., 208), and as stated in Coloma v. Eaves, 92 U. S., 484 (XXIII., 579), and restated in many other cases, "That, where legislative authority has been given to a municipality or its officers, to subscribe for the stock of a railroad company, and to issue municipal bonds in payment, but only on some precedent condition, such as a popular vote favoring the subscription, and where it may be gathered from the legislative enactment that the officers of the municipality were invested with the power to decide whether the condition precedent has been complied with, their recital that it has been, made in the bonds issued by them, and held by a bona fide purchaser, is conclusive of the fact and binding on the municipality, for the recital is itself a decision of the fact by the appointed tribunal." But this rule of estoppel, as above cited, depends upon the fact that the statute can be construed so as to constitute the officer, designated to issue the bonds, the tribunal to decide the fact as to whether the precedent conditions were complied with or not. The statute in this case, as construed and decided by the Supreme Court of Illinois, does not constitute the supervisor or the town clerk, either separately or associately, such tribunal; therefore, the sound rule of this court, above set forth, does not apply in this case.

Williams v. Town of Roberts, 88 Ill., 12; Marshall Co. v. Cook (supra); Schuyler Co. v. People, 25 Ill., 181; Clark v. Hancock Co. 27 Ill., 305.

NOTE.—Negotiability of railroad bonds. See note to White v. Vt. & Mass. R. R. Co., 62 U. S., XVI., 221.

5. When the bonds in this case were issued, it was the well settled law of the State of Illinois, that when the Legislature of the State authorized a municipality to subscribe stock to a railroad company and issue bonds in payment thereof, the law must be pursued in all its material requirements, else the bonds, when issued, will be void, in whosoever hands they may be found.

Schuyler Co. v. People (supra); Clark v. Hancock Co. (supra); Marshall Co. v. Cook (supra).

The construction which prevails in the state courts at the time municipal bonds are issued, upon questions touching their validity, enters into and forms a part of them, as the settled law of those contracts; and the municipality issuing the bonds and the purchaser of the same are each bound by such construction.

Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall., 175 (68 U. S., XVII., 520); Olcott v. Supervisors, 16 Wall., 678 (83 U. S., XXI., 382); Havemeyer v. Iowa Co., 3 Wall., 294 (70 U. S., XVIII., 38); Mitchell v. Burlington, 4 Wall., 270 (71 U. S., XVIII., 350); Christy v. Pridgeon, 4 Wall., 196 (71 U. S., XVIII., 322); 1 Dill. Mun. Corp., 2d ed., sec. 416 b; King v. Wilson, 1 Dill., 555, 1871; Bk. v. Iola, 2 Dill., 353, 1873.

Mr. Geo. O. Ide for defendants in error:

The municipal bonds offered in evidence were payable to bearer and negotiable by delivery and, consequently, were properly admitted in evidence without any written indorsement of the nominal payee, the railroad company.

In contemplation of law, commercial paper drawn payable to a specified individual or bearer, is solely payable to the person who is or may become the bearer. There is no difference in this respect between paper payable to bearer alone, and that payable to a particular person or bearer. Both pass by delivery and no indorsement is necessary.

Bk. v. Wister, 2 Pet., 319, 326; Bonnafee v. Williams, 3 How., 577; Bradford v. Jenks, 2 McLean, 180; Bullard v. Bell, 1 Mas., 243; Dean v. Hall, 17 Wend., 216; Seabury v. Hungerford, 2 Hill, 83; Dole v. Weeks, 4 Mass., 451; Grant v. Vaughan, 3 Burr., 1516, 1524; Story, Prom. N., 51, sec. 36, 7th ed. 3 Kent, Com., 91 (marg., 78); Edw. Bills, 646, 647; Byles, Bills, 228; 2 Abb. U. S. Pr., 19.

The Illinois Statute only requires an assignment of notes when drawn payable to a particular payee. It does not in terms require a note payable to "bearer" to be indorsed. On the contrary, the 8th section of the Statute of Negotiable Instruments expressly provides that the title to such commercial paper shall pass by delivery.

Gross, Stat. of Ill., p. 461, cap. 73, sec. 4; Rev. Stat. of Ills., p. 719, sec. 8.

Prior to the enactment of the 8th section of the present statute, the decisions of the Supreme Court of the State were to the effect that notes payable to bearer were negotiable by delivery, and no indorsement was necessary to enable the holder to sue upon them. Banknotes also, payable to a particular person or bearer, were held to have been negotiable at common law without the aid of any statute, and are not within the operation of the Illinois Statute.

McHenry v. Ridgely, 2 Scam., 310; Br. Co. v. Perry, 11 Ill., 468.

See 11 OTTO.

Municipal bonds are put by the Illinois Supreme Court on the same footing as bank-bills; and thus, like bank-bills, although payable to a railroad company or bearer, are transferable by delivery.

Johnson v. Stark Co., 24 Ill., 93; Mercer Co. v. Hubbard, 45 Ill., 143.

Whether or not the bonds in suit were negotiable, merely, is a question of commercial law, in the solution of which this court is not bound by the opinions of the State Court.

Supervisors v. Schenck, 5 Wall., 784 (72 U. S., XVIII., 559); Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet., 18; Aurora City v. West, 7 Wall., 105 (74 U. S., XIX., 50); Pine Grove v. Talcott, 19 Wall., 666 (86 U. S., XXII., 227).

In this court, the decisions have uniformly treated municipal bonds, payable to a specified railroad company or bearer, as negotiable by delivery merely, so as to vest the legal title in the holder.

Mercer Co. v. Hackett, 1 Wall., 84 (68 U. S., XVII., 548); Woods v. Lawrence Co., 1 Black, 389 (66 U. S., XVII., 122); Moran v. Comrs., 2 Black, 722-731 (67 U. S., XVII., 342-347); Humboldt v. Long, 92 U. S., 643 (XXIII., 753).

The same rule has been applied to Illinois bonds, issued and sold in the same way without indorsement.

Coloma v. Eaves, 92 U. S., 484 (XXIII., 579); Warren Co. v. Marcy, 97 U. S., 96 (XXIV., 977); Randolph Co. v. Post, 93 U. S., 505 (XXIII., 957); Nugent v. Supervisors, 19 Wall., 244, 253 (86 U. S., XXII., 83, 90); Kenicott v. Supervisors, 16 Wall., 459 (83 U. S., XXI., 319).

There was no error in sustaining the demurrer to the third and fourth pleas. The plaintiffs below were bona fide purchasers of the bonds before due, for value paid, and without notice of the alleged defenses. They were protected by the recitals of compliance with the law, contained in the bonds. They were also vendees of previous bona fide purchasers, as to whom no notice is alleged.

Coloma v. Eaves (supra); Warren Co. v. Marcy, (supra); Marcy v. Oswego, 92 U. S., 638 (XXIII., 748); Kenicott v. Supervisors (supra); Supervisors v. Schenck (supra); Grand Chute v. Winegar, 15 Wall., 356, 373 (82 U. S., XXI., 170, 174); St. Joseph Township v. Rogers, 16 Wall., 644, 662, 665 (83 U. S., XXI., 328, 337, 338); San Antonio v. Mehaffy, 96 U. S., 314 (XXIV., 817); Comrs. v. Bolles, 94 U. S., 108 (XXIV., 47).

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

This case involves the validity of certain township bonds, bearing date April 7, 1871, issued in the name of the Town of Roberts, in the County of Marshall, Ill., and made payable to the Hamilton, Lacon and Eastern Railroad Company, or bearer, on the 7th of April, 1874, with interest from date, payable annually, on the presentation and surrender of the interest coupons as they matured.

Each bond, signed by the supervisor of the Town, attested by its clerk, and certified upon its face to have been duly recorded in the township registry of bonds, as directed by law, recites that it "is one of a series, amounting in the aggregate to $30,000, and consisting of thirty bonds, numbered from 1 to 30, inclusive, each of which is for $1,000, and all of which are of even date herewith, and are issued in accordance with the laws of the State of Illinois, in payment of a subscription made by said Town of Roberts for three hundred shares of the capital stock of the Hamilton, Lacon and Eastern Railroad Company, which said subscription was made by said Town by virtue of a vote of a majority of the voters of said Town in favor thereof, at a special election had for such purpose in said Town on the 25th day of March, 1869, in pursuance of the provisions of the laws of the State of Illinois, and of the several Acts of the General Assembly of the State of Illinois incorporating said company."

It is found as a fact in the case that, in January, 1872, defendants in error purchased in good faith, the bonds in the market, without notice of any defense thereto, and paying therefor at the rate of 93½ cents on the dollar.

The first plea alleges that the payee named in the bonds, the railroad company, had never indorsed them, or any of them, in writing, and that by the law of Illinois in force when they were made, as well as when they were sold by the company, without such indorsement, they were not transferable so as to vest the title thereto, and the right to sue thereon in the name of the holder.

A demurrer to that plea was sustained and, as we think, properly so. It is true that the Supreme Court of Illinois, in Hilborn v. Artus, 3 Scam. (4 Ill.) 344, held that under a statute of that State, then in force, notes payable to a person or bearer could not be transferred, or assigned by delivery only, so as to authorize the holder by delivery to sue in his own name. "There is one way," the court said, "by which he can do so, and that is by virtue of the assignment indorsed on the note itself. The indorsement gives the right to sue in the name of the assignee." That construction of the Illinois Statute was followed in Roosa v. Crist, 17 Ill., 450. But in Bridge Co. v. Perry, 11 Ill., 467, it was decided that bank-notes payable to bearer, or payable to a particular person or bearer, were not embraced by the provisions of the statute, or by the reasons which caused its passage; and that the holder, by delivery merely, could maintain an action thereon, unless it appears that he obtained them mala fide. The statute, it was said, applied "Only to instruments that were not negotiable by the common law or the custom of merchants."

In Johnson v. Stark Co., 24 Ill., 75, the court put municipal bonds and coupons on the footing in this respect, of bank-bills, and thus brought that class of commercial securities within the rule announced in Bridge Co. v. Perry. Its language was: "It seems to be the well settled doctrine that state, county, city and other bonds and public securities of this character are negotiable by delivery only, without indorsement, in the same manner as bank-bills, especially when they are payable to bearer." Subsequently, in Mercer Co. Suprs. v. Hubbard, 45 Ill., 139, which was an action on coupons attached to bonds issued by a county in payment of a railroad subscription, the court said: "More recent decisions place these coupons in the condition of bank-bills payable to bearer, and no one will deny such bills can be given in evidence in a suit by the bearer against the bank issuing them, under the common counts. We see no difference between coupons payable to bearer for a sum certain, and a bank-bill. They alike pass by delivery only." Finally, in Town of Eagle v. Kohn, 84 Ill., 292, it was said: "It is the well settled doctrine that bonds of this character are to be treated as commercial paper; and this court has held coupons attached to them to be negotiable by delivery only, without indorsement."

It is thus seen that by repeated adjudications of that court, prior to the Statute of 1874, municipal bonds payable to bearer were excepted from the rule announced in Hilborn v. Artus and Roosa v. Crist.

But all doubt upon the subject is removed by the 8th section of the Act approved March 18, 1874, revising the laws of Illinois in relation to promissory notes, bonds, due-bills and other instruments of writing, which was in force when this action was commenced. It provides "That any note, bond, bill or other instrument in writing, made payable to bearer, may be transferred by delivery thereof, and an action may be maintained thereon in the name of the holder thereof." R. S. Ill., 719, sec. 8.

This Act, though not in force when defendants in error acquired the bonds in suit, applies, we think, to actions commenced after it took effect.

We are satisfied that this plea, tested alone by the law of Illinois, and without reference to the decisions of this court upon the subject of commercial securities, is insufficient.

The third plea, to which a demurrer was also sustained, proceeds upon the ground that the election of March 25, 1869, was called without competent authority, and conferred no power upon the supervisor and town clerk, or either of them, to subscribe to the stock or issue the bonds in question, and that the latter were, consequently, void.

Of the facts set out in the plea, it is alleged that the defendants in error had "constructive notice," prior to their purchase of the bonds, to wit: on the day they bear date.

The questions of law presented under this plea arise out of certain facts which it is necessary to state somewhat in detail.

By an Act of the Legislature of Illinois, approved March 5, 1869, it is provided that any incorporated town or township of any county through or near which the Hamilton, Lacon and Eastern Railroad Company may be located, or is about to be located, might, by a vote of the people thereof, subscribe to the corporate stock of the company any sum not to exceed $100,000 each; such vote to be ascertained by an election held in the manner prescribed by and in conformity with the provisions of an Act, approved March 6, 1867, authorizing certain designated counties and townships, cities, incorporated towns and corporations in said counties, to subscribe to the capital stock of any railroad then or which might thereafter be incorporated in the State of Illinois. The Act of March 5, 1869, made it the duty of the clerk of each township, subscribing stock under its authority, to keep, in duplicate, a complete register of the bonds issued, showing their numbers, amount, date, and rate of interest, and deliver one copy of the same to the county clerk of his county.

Under the Act of March 6, 1867, to which reference is made by the Act of March 5, 1869, elections, to take the sense of the people upon subscriptions to the capital stock of a railroad company, could be called and held, upon the application of twenty legal voters and tax payers of the county, township, city or incorporated town in whose behalf it was proposed to make the subscription, such application specifying the amount and the conditions of the proposed subscription. The notice of such election was required to be posted, in the case of a township, by the clerk thereof, in three of the most public places of such township. If a majority of such voters voting at said township election favored the subscription, then it was made the duty of the supervisors thereof to make the subscription; and when the subscription was accepted or received, to cause the bonds to be issued in compliance with the popular vote. Private Laws Ill., 1867, Vol. I., p. 866.

The 5th section of the Act of March 6, 1867, provides that "No mistake in the giving of the notice, or in the canvass or return of votes, or in the issuing of the bonds, shall in any way invalidate the said bonds so issued: Provided, That there is a majority of the voters at such election in favor of such subscription."

A few weeks after the election of March 25, 1869, to wit: on 17th April, 1869, the Legislature of Illinois passed an Act which, in its 2d section, declares that subscriptions of stock made by certain townships, including that made by the Town of Roberts of $30,000 to the capital stock of the Hamilton, Lacon and Eastern Railroad Company (quoting from the Act), "Be each legalized, and are hereby made valid and binding, according to the terms thereof; and the several supervisors of said townships shall issue, in due form, the bonds of their respective townships for the amount of stock subscribed for, according to the terms and conditions of said subscription, and shall deliver said bonds to said railroad company." Pri. L. Ill., 1869, Vol. III., p. 302.

With these facts before us, we come to the examination of several propositions which have been pressed with much force upon our attention.

It is contended that the election mentioned in the bonds declared on was a nullity, because called upon an application signed by only twelve, instead of twenty, legal voters and tax payers, and because only ten days' notice thereof was given, when the law required twenty; that the law is imperative in these respects, and that the failure to comply with its requirements rendered the bonds void, even in the hands of innocent holders for value; that such was the settled law of Illinois, as declared by the Supreme Court of that State prior both to the election of March 25, 1869, and to the issuing of the bonds; and, finally, that such prior judicial declarations are to be regarded as part of the local statutes, binding upon this court, according to its own decisions.

Undoubtedly, there are several decisions by the Supreme Court of Illinois of the character indicated by counsel; but unless we are greatly in fault in our examination, no one of them relates to a municipal subscription, or to an issue of bonds, under a statute containing a provision similar to section 5 of the Act of March 6, 1867, under which the election in question was held. That Act rests the validity of bonds, issued under its authority, upon the essential fact that the majority of voters at the election voted, as in this case, in favor of the subscription. In that event, it expressly declares that the bonds shall not in any way become invalidated by reason of mistake in the giving of the notice, or in the canvass or return of votes, or the issuing of the bonds. These words are without effect, if the municipality issuing the bonds can avoid their payment because its agents or constituted authorities committed mistakes such as are specified in the statute. If the town clerk gave a notice of ten instead of twenty days, based upon an application of twelve instead of twenty legal voters and tax payers, was not this a mistake "in the giving of the notice" and "in the issuing of the bonds?" The purchaser of the bonds, if chargeable with notice of these facts, was, in terms, assured by the statute that no such mistakes as those facts indicated would invalidate the bonds, if the majority of the voters at the election had approved the subscription. He had the right to rely upon these legislative assurances, unless the 5th section of the Act of March 6, 1867, was in violation of the Constitution of the State. We do not, however, feel justified in declaring that provision of the Act to be in conflict with that instrument. We are referred to no decision of the State Court which so decides. On the contrary, that court, in Burr v. Carbonale, 76 Ill., 455, which was a case of municipal bonds, said: "These bonds having been issued in the exercise of a power constitutionally conferred, must be binding on the municipality, although some irregularities in the form of notice of the election, want of the precise words on the ballots, and others of like character, may have occurred."

It is true that, according to the settled construction of the Constitution of Illinois in force in 1869, the Legislature could not require or compel the corporate authorities of a county, city or town, against or without its consent, to subscribe to the stock of a railroad company. But it could authorize such corporate authorities to make subscriptions with or without referring the question to the people immediately interested.

In Keithsburg v. Frick, 34 Ill., 405, the Supreme Court of Illinois, speaking by the late Chief Justice Breese, held that it was by no means a necessary element in municipal subscriptions to the stock of railroad corporations that there should be a vote of the inhabitants of the town or city authorizing them; "That it was competent for the Legislature to bestow the power directly on the corporation without any other intermediary." The authority of that case, upon some points therein determined, has, perhaps, been shaken by later decisions in the same court. But in Marshall v. Silliman, 61 Ill., 218, the court, while holding that the Legislature could not clothe the supervisor and town clerk, without the consent of the people, with discretionary power of taxation or of creating a debt—they not being the corporate authorities of the township in the sense of the Constitution—yet approved Keithsburg v. Frick so far as it ruled that those who were the corporate authorities of a town, within the meaning of a State Constitution, might be empowered by the Legislature to subscribe to the stock of a railroad corporation, and issue bonds therefor,

Certainly the Legislature could prescribe the mode of ascertaining the sense of the voters, who alone, it is claimed, were the corporate authorities of the town, within the meaning of the State Constitution. And as it might, in the Act of March 6, 1867, have allowed the election to be called upon the application of a less number of voters and tax payers than twenty, and to be held after a notice of ten days, rather than twenty, we do not see any ground to question its right, consistently with the State Constitution, to declare, in advance, that if the majority of voters at the election favor the subscription, the bonds issued in payment thereof should not be invalidated by mistakes of the kind specified in the 5th section of that Act. The mistakes here complained of were not such as necessarily affected the substance or essence of the election and, consequently, it cannot be said that the subscription was made or the bonds issued without the consent of the corporate authorities or the legal voters of the township. The application for the special election and the notice therefor were not so radically defective as to justify us in saying, as matter of law, that a debt for a railroad subscription was thrust upon the legal voters and tax payers of the township without their having a reasonable opportunity to vote upon the question of subscription. It is not a case where bonds have been issued by the supervisor and town clerk, without any previous election whatever to authorize them so to do. It is a case of bonds issued in pursuance of a popular election, defectively called and held, and as to which the Legislature declared that the bonds should not be invalidated by mistakes in giving the notice and, in issuing them, if there was "A majority of votes at such election in favor of such subscription."

In this respect the case in hand is different from Elmwood v. Marcy, 92 U. S., 289 [XXIII., 710]. In the latter case, when the notice for the election was given, there was no provision in the charter of the town or in any statute of the State authorizing the subscription. Its power to subscribe had then been exhausted; nor was any notice there given under or with special reference to the subsequent Act allowing additional subscriptions. Nothing here determined conflicts with the decision in Elmwood v. Marcy.

Independently, therefore, of the curative Act of April 17, 1869, we are of opinion that the bonds sued on are not invalid by reason of the departure from the provisions of the Act of March 6, 1867, in the matter of the application for and notice of the election of March 25, 1869.

But a further contention of the plaintiff in error is that the Supreme Court of Illinois, in Williams v. Town of Roberts, 88 Ill., 1, decided in June, 1878, nearly four years after the commencement of this action, and three years after the entry of the judgment in this case, held not only that the curative Act of April 17, 1869, was in violation of the Constitution of the State, but that the election of March 25, 1869, was a nullity, conferring no power upon the supervisor of the town to make the subscription and issue the bonds.

In reference to the alleged conflict of the last named Act with the Constitution of Illinois, we give no opinion. The views we have expressed as to the validity of the bonds, under the Act of March 6, 1867, particularly its 5th section, render it unnecessary to consider or determine the constitutional validity of the curative Act of 1869. It is, however, claimed that we are obliged to accept the decision in Williams v. Town of Roberts, as conclusive against the validity of these particular bonds. We cannot give our assent to this proposition, for the reason, if there were no other, that that decision does not touch the precise point upon which we sustain their validity, despite the defective application and notice for the election of March 25, 1869. No reference is made, in that case, to the 5th section of the Act of March 6, 1867, upon which we have commented. The Supreme Court of Illinois, in the case alluded to, undoubtedly held that the defects in the application and notice rendered that election a nullity, and that, because of such defects, the subscription was made and the bonds issued without authority of law. But we are not informed as to the effect which, in the opinion of that court, is to be given to the 5th section of the Act of March 6, 1867. If the court had gone further, and decided that section to be unconstitutional; or that the defective application and notice for the election were not mere mistakes within the meaning of that section; or that the bonds declared on were null and void, notwithstanding the legislative declaration that they should not be invalidated because of any mistake in giving the notice, in issuing the bonds, or in the canvass or return of votes, then its decision would have been an authority in point, covering the precise question before us. If we should be mistaken in this, it does not follow that we should except that decision as conclusive of this case. That would depend upon our approval or disapproval of the decision upon its merits. In Pease v. Peck, 18 How., 599 [59 U. S., XV., 520], we said that this court would not feel bound, "In any case in which a point is first raised in the Courts of the United States, and has been decided in a circuit court, to reverse that decision contrary to our own convictions, in order to conform to a state decision made in the meantime. Such decisions have not the character of established precedent declarative of the settled law of the State." Morgan v. Curtienius, 20 How., 1 [61 U. S., XV., 823].

For these reasons we are of opinion that the demurrer to the third plea was properly sustained.

The facts set out in the fourth plea clearly do not constitute a defense to the action. We could not hold otherwise without overturning the settled doctrines of this court in reference to municipal bonds issued in payment of subscriptions to the capital stock of railroad corporations. Our remarks in Brooklyn v. Ins. Co. [ante, 416] are applicable to this case, and support the action of the court in sustaining a demurrer to the fourth plea.

Other considerations might be suggested in support of the judgment, but what we have said is sufficient to dispose of the case.

Judgment affirmed.

v.

CHARLES A. DANA.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 205-215.)

Action against stockholders—liability of.

1. A creditor of an insolvent corporation may proceed against one or more delinquent stockholders, to recover the amount of his debt, without an account being taken of other indebtedness, and without bringing in all the stockholders for contribution.

2. Although, by the terms of the subscriptions, stockholders were to pay for the shares set opposite their names respectively, "as called for by the said company," a court of equity may enforce payment of such stock subscriptions, although there have been no calls for them by the company.

Submitted Jan. 13, 1880. Decided Mar. 1, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Illinois.

This was a bill in equity, filed in the court below by Dana against the Chicago Republican Club, a corporation organized under the laws of Illinois (and against which he had a judgment on which execution had been returned unsatisfied) by Hatch and Williams, the appellants, and others. The bill was in the nature of a creditors' bill, and was for the benefit of the complainant, and such other creditors as might come in, etc. It sought to establish the liability of the stockholders of the corporation on unpaid subscriptions.

Judgment was rendered against Hatch and Williams, from which they appealed.

The case is further stated by the court.

Mr. D. T. Littler, for appellants:

A late elementary authority, Thompson, Liability of Stockholders, section 353, thus asserts the rule in equity in cases of creditors' suits in this class of cases:

Moreover, the bill must be filed against all the shareholders, unless some valid excuse is shown for not bringing them in. This must necessarily be so, otherwise the main object of asserting the jurisdiction of equity: equalizing the burdens of shareholders and preventing the multiplicity of suits, would be defeated. Under such a bill an account of the debts and assets of the corporation will be taken, of the amount of capital not paid in, and of the amount due from each shareholder. A receiver appointed in a creditor's suit against a corporation cannot maintain a bill in equity against a single shareholder, to collect what is unpaid on his subscription. The cases supporting the rule are:

Wood v. Dummer, 3 Mas., 312; Hadley v. Russell, 40 N. H., 109; Erickson v. Nesmith, 46 N. H., 371; Mann v. Pentz, 3 N. Y., 415; Pierce v. Construction Co., 38 Wis., 253; *Adler v. Brick Mfg. The unpaid subscriptions for stock in an insolvent corporation constitute a trust fund for the benefit of all creditors of the corporation alike or pro rata, and it is not permissible for one creditor to absorb the same to the exclusion of others.

Messrs. E. B. McCagg and A. L. Knapp, for appellee:

1. Dana's judgment against the Chicago Republican Company, and its insolvency and withdrawal from business, entitled him to call upon a court of equity to enforce, for his benefit, the collection from delinquent stockholders in the corporation, of the amount of their unpaid stock subscriptions.

Ogilvie v. Ins. Co. (supra); Bartlett v. Drew, 57 N. Y., 587.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

That the complainant recovered a judgment against the Chicago Republican Company for the sum of $6,419.17, on the 12th day of April, 1871, which remains unreversed and unsatisfied, and that an execution was issued thereon and returned wholly unsatisfied, no property having been found upon which a levy could be made, are well established facts. It is also established that the respondents, Hatch and Williams, who are now appellants, were subscribers to the capital stock of the company at its inception, each to the extent of $10,000, of which they have paid only thirty per cent. As there is no claim or evidence that they have parted with their stock, each remains in debt to the company in the sum of $7,000, and the object of the present bill is to subject that indebtedness to the payment of the complainant's judgment. Upon these facts the circuit court decreed that the complainant should recover from the defendants the sum of $9,378.72, the amount due upon his judgment against the company at the date of the decree, but that of the said sum no more than $7,000, with interest from the date of the decree, should be collected from either of the aforesaid defendants, that sum being the amount due from each of them to the company.

It is from this decree, the two defendants, Hatch and Williams, have appealed, and two principal assignments of error are now urged against it. They relate less to the merits of the complainant's claim, that is, to his equity to be paid the amount of his judgment out of the unpaid stock subscriptions due to the company, than they do to the mode and regularity of his proceeding.

This bill is an ordinary creditor's bill, the sole object of which is to obtain payment of the complainant's judgment. It is true it is brought on behalf of the complainant and all other creditors of the corporation who might choose to come in and seek relief by it, contributing to the expense of the suit. But no other creditors came in; and it does not appear that there is any other creditor, unless it be one of the stockholders, who was made a defendant, and who filed a cross-bill which he afterwards dismissed. All the stockholders were not made defendants.

That unpaid stock subscriptions are to be regarded as a fund, which the corporation holds for the payment of its debts, is an undeniable proposition. But the appellants insist that a creditor of an insolvent corporation is not at liberty to proceed against one or more delinquent subscribers to recover the amount of his debt, without an account being taken of other indebtedness, and without bringing in all the stockholders for contribution. They insist also, that, by the terms of the subscriptions for stock made by these appellants, they were to pay for the shares set opposite their names respectively, "as called for by the said company;" that the company made no calls for more than thirty per cent; that, therefore, this company could not recover the seventy per cent unpaid without making a previous call; and that a court of equity will not enforce the contract differently from what was contemplated in the subscription.

These positions, we think, are not supported by the authorities, certainly not by the more modern ones; nor are they in harmony with sound reason, when considered with reference to the facts of this case. The liability of a subscriber for the capital stock of a company is several, and not joint. By his subscription, each becomes a several debtor to the company, as much so as if he had given his promissory note for the amount of his subscription. At law, certainly, his subscription may be enforced against him without joinder of other subscribers; and in equity his liability does not cease to be several. A creditor's bill merely subrogates the creditor to the place of the debtor, and garnishes the debt due to the indebted corporation. It does not change the character of the debt attached or garnished. It may be that if the object of the bill is to wind up the affairs of this corporation, all the shareholders, at least so far as they can be ascertained, should be made parties, that complete justice may be done by equalizing the burdens, and in order to prevent a multiplicity of suits. But this is no such case. The most that can be said is, that the presence of all the stockholders might be convenient, not that it is necessary. When the only object of a bill is to obtain payment of a judgment against a corporation out of its credits or intangible property, that is, out of its unpaid stock, there is not the same reason for requiring all the stockholders to be made defendants. In such a case no stockholder can be compelled to pay more than he owes.

In Ogilvie v. Ins. Co., 22 How., 380 [63 U. S., XVI., 349], the question was considered. That was a case in which several judgment creditors of a corporation had brought a creditor's bill against it and thirty-six subscribers to its capital stock. The bill alleged that the complainants had recovered judgments against the company, upon which executions had been issued and returned "no property;" that the other defendants had severally subscribed for its stock; and that the subscriptions remained unpaid, payment not having been enforced by the company. The prayer of the bill was that these other defendants might be decreed to pay their subscriptions, and that the judgments might be satisfied out of the sum paid. It was objected, as here, that the bill was defective for want of proper parties; but the court held the objection untenable. In delivering the opinion of the court, Grier, J., said: "The creditors of the corporation are seeking satisfaction out of the assets of the company to which the defendants are debtors. If the debts attached are sufficient to pay their demands, the creditors need look no further. They are not bound to settle up all the affairs of this corporation, and the equities between its various stockholders, corporators, or debtors. If A is bound to pay his debt to the corporation in order to satisfy its creditors, he cannot defend himself by pleading that these complainants might have got their satisfaction out of B as well. It is true, if it be necessary to a complete satisfaction of the complainants that the corporation be treated as an insolvent, the court may appoint a receiver, with authority to collect and receive all the debts due to the company, and administer all its assets. In that way, all the other stockholders or debtors may be made to contribute." The court, therefore, directed a decree against the respondents severally for such amounts as appeared to be due and unpaid by each of them for their shares of the capital stock.

This case is directly in point, and it does not stand alone. In Barlett v. Drew, 57 N. Y., 587, it was ruled that when the property of a corporation had been divided amongst its stockholders before all its debts had been paid, a judgment creditor, after the return of an execution unsatisfied, might maintain an action, in the nature of a creditor's bill, against a stockholder to reach whatsoever was so received by him, and that he was not required to make all the stockholders parties to the action; that he had nothing to do with the equities between the stockholders, unless he chose to intervene to settle them. This is much beyond what the complainant needs in this case. It is enforcing against stockholders in severalty what the corporation could not enforce, without any regard to the equities of one against the others.

So in Pierce v. Construction Co., 38 Wis., 253, which was a proceeding analogous to a creditor's bill, and brought to enforce payment to a judgment creditor of the company of unpaid subscriptions to its capital stock, it was ruled the complaint was not bad because all the stockholders were not made defendants. This, it is true, was a proceeding under a statute, but it was a statute enacting substantially this equity rule.

In Marsh v. Burroughs, 1 Woods, 468, a bill of certain creditors who had recovered judgments against a bank, to recover from some stockholders who had not paid in full their subscriptions, non-joinder of parties was set up in defense. Mr. Justice Bradley said: "A judgment creditor, who has exhausted his legal remedy, may pursue in a court of equity any equitable interest, trust or demand of his debtor, in whosoever hands it may be. And if the party thus reached has a remedy over against other parties for contribution or indemnity, it will be no defense to the primary suit against him that they are not parties. If a creditor were to be stayed until all such parties could be made to contribute their proportionate share of the liability, he might never get his money."

The case of Wood v. Dummer, 3 Mas., 308, upon which the appellants largely rely, was not an attempt to reach unpaid stock subscriptions. It was sought to follow the property of a corporation paid over to its shareholders before its debts were paid. But even in that case the bill was sustained, though all the shareholders were not made defendants. Those not sued appear to have been treated only as convenient, not as necessary parties.

The cases of Pollard v. Bailey, 20 Wall., 520 [87 U. S., XXII., 376], and Terry v. Tubman, 92 U. S., 156 [XXIII., 537], are not in conflict with Ogilvie v. Ins. Co. They arose under statutory provisions imposing upon the stockholders of banks a liability for the debts of the corporation, "in proportion to their stock held therein." It was this liability beyond the stock subscription which was sought to be enforced, and as it was only a proportional liability, its extent could be ascertained only when the obligation of the other shareholders was taken into consideration. Hence it was ruled that the proper mode of proceeding was by bill in equity in which an account of the debts and stock could be taken and a pro rata distribution could be made. Not a hint was given that Ogilvie v. Ins. Co. was intended to be questioned or qualified. Indeed, the cases of Pollard v. Bailey and Terry v. Tubman have little analogy to it, or to the case we have now before us. They were both suits at law. The debt due by these appellants to the corporation of which they are members is a fixed and definite one, and it is neither more nor less because other debts may be due to the company from other stockholders.

We hold, therefore, that the complainant was under no obligation to make all the stockholders of the bank defendants in his bill. It was not his duty to marshal the assets of the bank, or to adjust the equities between the corporations. In all that he had no interest. The appellants may have had such an interest and, if so, it was quite in their power to secure its protection. They might have moved for a receiver, or they might have filed a cross-bill, obtained a discovery of the other stockholders, brought them in, and enforced contribution from all who had not paid their stock subscriptions. Their equitable right to contribution is not yet lost.

That the appellants are not protected by the fact, if such was the fact, that their subscriptions for stock were payable "as called for by the company," we think is clear. Assuming that such a clause in the subscription meant more than an agreement to pay on demand, and that it contemplated a formal call upon all subscribers to the stock of the company, the subscriptions were still in the nature of a fund for the payment of the company's debts, and it was the duty of the company to make the calls whenever the funds were needed for such payment. If they were not made, the officers of the company violated their trust, held both for the stockholders and the company. And it would seem to be singular if the stockholders could protect themselves from paying what they owe by setting up the default of their own agents. But in this case the company went out of business before the complainant obtained his judgment, and it does not appear that since that time it has had any officers who could make the calls. Before that time its president was dead. However this may be, it is well settled that a court of equity may enforce payment of stock subscriptions, though there have been no calls for them by the company. In Henry v. R. R. Co., 17 Ohio, 187, a suit brought by a judgment creditor of a corporation to enforce payment by its stockholders of their unpaid subscriptions, for which calls had not been made, it was held that when a company ceases to keep up its organization, and abandons all action under the charter, a proceeding at the instance of the creditor becomes indispensable. It was further said: "When a company, becoming insolvent, as in this case, abandons all action under its charter, the original mode of making calls upon the stockholders cannot be pursued. The debt, therefore, from that time must be treated as due without further demand." This means, of course, as between the debtor and the creditor of the corporation. After all, a company call is but a step in the process of collection, and a court of equity may pursue its own mode of collection, so that no injustice is done to the debtor.

In the English courts a mandamus is sometimes awarded to compel the directors to make the necessary calls. Queen v. Victoria Park Co., 1 Ad. & El. (N. S.), 544; Queen v. Ledgard, 1 Ad. & El. (N. S.), 614; King v. Dock Co., 4 B. & Ad., 360. But this remedy can avail only when there are directors. The remedy in equity is more complete, and it is well recognized. Ward v. Mfg. Co., 16 Conn., 593. In such cases it is nowhere held, so far as we know, that a formal call must be made before a bill can be filed. Indeed, the filing of the bill is equivalent to a call. Before it is filed, the court has no jurisdiction of the matter. In bankruptcy, an assessment or a call may be made, for the assignee of a bankrupt corporation succeeds to its rights and becomes the legal owner. Not so in equity.

In R. R. Co. v. McDaniel, 56 Ga., 191, a creditor's bill very like the present was filed. It was objected by the stockholders, who were defendants, that it was for the directors of the company and not for the court to call in the stock subscriptions, and that their contract only obligated them to obey a call emanating from the company; but it was ruled that "Principle and sound reason accord with authority that equity will grant relief in all such cases."

In view of these considerations, we think none of the assignments of error are sustained.

The decree of the Circuit Court is, therefore, affirmed.

AMERICAN AND FOREIGN CHRISTIAN UNION, Appt.,

v.

MATILDA YOUNT ET AL.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 352-362.)

Contract by corporation—powers of, within other States—conveyance for benevolent purpose—estoppel.

*1. While, as a general proposition, a corporation must dwell in the State under whose laws it was created, its existence as an artificial person may be acknowledged and recognized in other States. Its residence in one State creates no insuperable objection to its power of contracting in another.

2. It is a principle as inviolable as it is fundamental and conservative, that the right to hold land and the mode of acquiring title to land, must depend altogether upon the local law of the territorial sovereign. But in harmony with the general law of comity obtaining among the States composing the Union, the presumption should be indulged that a corporation of one State, not forbidden by the law of its being, may exercise within any other State the general powers conferred by its own charter, including the acquisition of real estate, unless it is prohibited from so doing either in the direct enactments of the latter State, or by its public policy to be deduced from the general course of legislation or from the settled adjudications of its highest court.

3. We cannot presume that it is now, or was in 1870, against the public policy of Illinois, that one of its citizens should convey real estate there situated to a benevolent or missionary corporation of another State of the Union for the purpose of enabling it to carry out the objects of its creation, since that State permitted its own corporations, organized for like purposes, to take real estate, within its limits by purchase, gift, devise or in any other manner.

4. The children and heirs at law of a citizen of Illinois, who has conveyed to a New York corporation real estate in Illinois, cannot, in an action to set aside the conveyance upon the ground that it was against the public policy of Illinois, raise the question that the grantee corporation has acquired a larger quantity of real estate than its charter allowed. That question does not concern them, if the title has passed by valid conveyance from their ancestor.

5. The cases of Carroll v. East St. Louis, 67 Ills., and Starkweather v. Am. Bible Soc., 72 Ills., examined and distinguished from present case.

Submitted Dec. 17, 1879. Decided Mar. 1, 1880.

APPPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Illinois.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. W. J. Henry, for appellant:

The corporation is clothed everywhere with the charter and the powers given to it by the statute creating it, where its existence is recognized by state comity.

Bk. v. Earle, 13 Pet., 519; Story, Conf. L., 2d ed., secs. 37, 38; Head v. Prov. Ins. Co., 2 Cranch, 127; Root v. Godard, 3 McLean, 102; Hayden v. Davis, 3 McLean, 276.

The rule firmly established by authority is, that a corporation of one State can take and hold lands in another State by purchase or mortgage, when consistent with its charter, and not prohibited by positive law.

North*, 4 Johns., Ch., 370; Baird v. Bk., 11 Serg. & R., 411; Thompson v. Swoope, 24 Pa., 437; Am. Bible Society v. Marshall, 15 Ohio St., 573; Leazure v. Hillegas, 7 Serg. & R., 313; Fairfax v. Hunter, 7 Cranch, 603; Runyan v. Coster, 14 Pet., 123; Bk. v. Montgomery, 2 Scam., 423; Merrick v. Van Santvoord, 34 N. Y., 214; Bk. v. McKinney, 6 McLean, 11; Henriques v. Dutch West India Co., 2 Ld. Raym., 1533.

The capacity of a foreign corporation to take and hold title to real estate cannot be raised collaterally. Such a question can only be made in behalf of the State in a direct proceeding.

Haugh v. Cook Co. Land Co., 73 Ill., 23; People v. Mauran, 5 Den., 399; Page v. Heineberg, 40 Ver., 81; Brown v. Philipps, 16 Iowa, 210.

In the case of Ramsey v. Ins. Co., 55 Ills., 314, the court uses this language: "It is the settled rule, that a party who has contracted with a corporation de facto, is never permitted to allege any defect in its capacity to contract or sue. All such objections, if valid, are duly available on behalf of the sovereign power of the State.

Where there is a right in the grantee to take and hold land for any purpose, if there is a capacity in the vendor to convey, there is a complete sale as soon as the conveyance is made, and if the corporation in purchasing violates or abuses the power to do so, that does not concern the vendor or his heirs; it is a matter between the State and the corporation.

Even if the Society was unincorporated, so that it would have no legal capacity to take by deed, the grantor and his heirs are estopped by the covenant of warranty from questioning the capacity of the grantee.

Terrett v. Taylor, 9 Cranch, 43; Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet., 1; Big. Estop., 276; Buckingham v. Hanna, 2 Ohio St., 558.

Messrs. E. S. Terry and Wm. Springer, for appellees:

The power of a foreign corporation to hold lands in the State of Illinois has been denied by its highest judicial authorities.

The Supreme Court of Illinois has held that "A corporation created in another State for the sole purpose of buying and selling lands, has no power to purchase and hold the title to lands in this State, as it is against the general policy of our legislation on the subject of domestic corporations, and would tend to create perpetuity; that it is well settled that a corporation created in our State cannot exercise its functions in another State or sovereignty, without permission of the latter, express or implied; that the right to such exercise of its functions depends upon comity, and that such comity is inadmissible when contrary to its policy or prejudicial to its interests."

Carroll v. E. St. Louis, 67 Ill., 568.

The principles above enunciated were afterwards, by the same court, fully recognized and affirmed in Starkweather v. Am. Bible Society, 72 Ill., 55.

The principle thus established has become, in this State, a rule of property, and will be recognized by this court as such.

Beauregard v. New Orleans, 18 How., 497 (59 U. S., XV., 469); Pease v. Peck, 18 How., 595 (59 U. S., XV., 518); Congdon v. Goodman, 2 Black, 574 (67 U. S., XVII., 257); Gardner v. Collins, 2 Pet., 58.

They will follow state rulings though unsettled, taking the last decision as their guide.

Dred Scott v. Sandford, 19 How., 393 (60 U. S., XV., 691); Leffingwell v. Warren, 2 Black, 599 (67 U. S., XVII., 261); Williams v. Kirtland, 13 Wall., 306 (80 U. S., XX., 683); Walker v. State Harbor Comrs., 17 Wall., 650 (84 U. S., XXI., 744); Strader v. Graham, 10 How., 82; Jackson v. Chew, 12 Wheat., 153; Christy v. Pridgeon, 4 Wall., 196 (71 U. S., XVIII., 322).

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit involves the title to certain lots or parcels of land in the State of Illinois, alleged to be of the value of $10,000, and described in See 11 Otto.

a conveyance purporting to have been executed on 19th May, 1870, by Stephen Griffith, a citizen of that State, to the American and Foreign Christian Union, a Corporation created in the year 1861 under the laws of the State of New York providing for the incorporation there of benevolent, charitable, scientific and missionary societies.

The place of business and principal office of the appellant was and is in the City of New York, but there seems to be no inhibition, in its charter, upon the exercise of its functions in other States. The declared object of its incorporation was, "By missions, colportage, the press and other appropriate agencies, to diffuse and promote the principles of religious liberty and a pure evangelical Christianity, both at home and abroad, wherever a corrupt Christianity exists."

The appellees, who are the children and heirs at law of the grantor, pray for a decree declaring the conveyance to be null and void, and requiring the appellant to convey to them the premises in dispute. They broadly claim that, by the settled law of Illinois, a foreign corporation cannot take or hold lands in that State, and that, consequently, no title passed to the appellant from their ancestor. That is the fundamental proposition in the case, and is the only one which counsel for the appellees, in support of the decree below, has deemed it necessary to discuss with any fullness.

By the Statute of New York under which appellant was organized, it was made capable of taking, receiving, purchasing and holding real estate for the purposes of its incorporation, and for no other purpose, to an amount not exceeding the sum of $50,000 in value, and personal estate for like purposes to an amount not exceeding $75,000 in value, the clear annual income of such real and personal estate not, however, to exceed the sum of $10,000. No question is made here as to its right, consistently with its own charter and the laws of New York, to acquire, for the purposes of its creation, real estate within, at least, the quantity designated by its charter.

The appellant, then, having this capacity by its charter, and not being expressly prohibited from exercising its powers beyond the State which created it, we proceed to inquire whether it was forbidden by the laws of Illinois in force in the year 1870 from taking title by conveyance to real property within the limits of that State, for the objects designated in its charter. For, besides the admitted incapacity of a corporation of one State to exercise its powers in another State, except with the assent or permission, expressed or implied, of the latter, it is a principle "As inviolable as it is fundamental and conservative, that the right to hold land, and the mode of acquiring title to land, must depend altogether on the local law of the territorial sovereign." Runyan v. Oster, 14 Pet., 122; Lathrop v. Bk., 8 Dana, 114.

By a general law of Illinois, enacted in 1859, any three or more persons of full age, citizens of the United States, a majority of whom were also required to be citizens of that State, could become a body politic and corporate for benevolent, charitable, educational, literary, musical, scientific, religious or missionary purposes, and in their corporate capacity take, receive, purchase and hold real and personal estate, and for charitable purposes only, sell and convey the same. Laws of Ill., 159, p. 20; Gross, Rev., 124.

Corporations formed under that law were made capable of taking, holding or receiving any property, real estate or personal, by gift, purchase, devise or bequest, or in any other manner. As to real estate purchased by them for their own use, authority was given to sell the same, with any building erected thereon, and invest the proceeds in the purchase of another lot, or in the erection of another building, or both. As to such as was devised or given to them for any specified benevolent purpose, authority was conferred to sell the same and apply the proceeds in aid of that purpose, such real estate, however, not to be held more than five years.

This general statute was in force when the conveyance to appellant was executed. It thus appears that when appellant's rights accrued under that conveyance, the statutes of Illinois expressly provided for the incorporation of societies having objects similar to those of the American and Foreign Christian Union, and with capacity to take, receive and hold real property, by gift, purchase, devise, bequest or in any other manner, for the purposes of their creation. Shortly after the passage of the general Law of 1859, to wit: at its session of 1861, the General Assembly of Illinois created a large number of religious and charitable corporations, with like capacity to take, receive and hold real and personal property; and in the year 1863 it expressly exempted from taxation real and personal property which the American Bible Society, a Corporation of New York, then owned or might thereafter acquire in the State of Illinois not exceeding $50,000 in value; also all Bibles and Testaments in its depositories, and any articles of personal property necessary for the prosecution of its objects. Pri. L. Ill., 1863, p. 26.

The conclusion is not to be avoided that the State, prior to 1870, authorized, if it had not steadily encouraged, the organization of societies for benevolent, charitable, religious and missionary objects, and endowed them with capacity to acquire by purchase, gift or devise real estate for the purposes of their creation. It had not then, nor, so far as we are informed, has it since, passed any statute expressly forbidding corporations of other States, having like objects, from taking, receiving, purchasing or holding real property in that State to the same extent and for the same purposes as were allowed to its own corporations of that class. Nor is our attention called to any statute in force in 1870, or subsequently, which expressly or in terms, forbade foreign corporations from exercising, within the State of Illinois, the functions with which they were endowed by the respective States creating them, or which made the express permission by statute of that State a condition precedent to the recognition within its jurisdiction of the corporations of other States. Although, as a general proposition, a corporation must dwell in the State under whose laws it was created, its existence as an artificial person may be acknowledged and recognized in other States. "Its residence in one State creates no insuperable objection to its power of contracting in another." Runyan v. Coster [supra]. In Covell v. Colorado Springs Co., decided at present Term [ante, 547] we said: "If the policy of the State or Territory does not permit the business of the foreign corporation in its limits, or allow the corporation to acquire or hold real property, it must be expressed in some affirmative way; it cannot be inferred from the fact that its Legislature has made no provision for the formation of similar corporations, or allows corporations to be formed only by general law. Telegraph companies did business in several States before their Legislatures had created or authorized the creation of similar corporations; and numerous corporations existing by special charter in one State are now engaged, without question, in business in States where the creation of corporations by special enactment is forbidden." In harmony with the general law of comity obtaining among the States composing the Union, the presumption should be indulged that a corporation of one State, not forbidden by the law of its being, may exercise within any other State the general powers conferred by its own charter, unless it is prohibited from so doing, either in the direct enactments of the latter State or by its public policy to be deduced from the general course of legislation or from the settled adjudications of its highest court. There was here no such direct legislation during or prior to the year 1870, nor can the existence of such a public policy be inferred from the general course of legislation or judicial decisions in Illinois up to and including that year, in relation to religious, benevolent, charitable or missionary societies created in other States.

But it is contended that the precise question now under consideration has been heretofore decided by the Supreme Court of Illinois adversely to these views in Carroll v. E. St. Louis, 67 Ill., 568, and Starkweather v. Bible Society, 72 Ill., 50, and that this court is obliged to follow the construction of the state law and give effect to the public policy of Illinois, as announced by the highest court of that State. Our obligation to follow, without question, these decisions arises, it is claimed, out of the express provisions of the Act of Congress declaring that the laws of the several States, except when the Constitution, treaties or statutes of the United States otherwise require or provide, are to be regarded as rules of decision in trials at common law in the courts of the United States in cases where they apply. This provision was incorporated in the original Judiciary Act, and has been retained in the statutes of the United States to the present time. Under it we have often declared that the construction given to a state statute by the highest judicial tribunal of such State is to be accepted in the Federal Courts as a part of the statute whenever they are required to determine questions, or ascertain rights arising out of or dependent upon such local statute. But how far the Federal Courts, in the ascertainment and enforcement of property rights, dependent upon the statute law, or the settled public policy of a State, are bound by the decisions of the State Court, rendered after such rights were acquired or became vested, is a different question, and one of the gravest importance. The rule upon this subject has been announced, with some qualifications arising out of the circumstances of the particular cases, heretofore decided in this court. Its extended discussion is not, however, essential in this case, since the decisions of the Supreme Court of Illinois, upon which counsel for appellees rely, do not, in our judgment, necessarily conclude the precise point here involved.

In Carroll v. E. St. Louis [supra], the question before the court was, whether the Connecticut Land Company, a corporation created in another State for the sole purpose of buying and selling lands, had power to purchase and hold title to lands in the State of Illinois. The decision was that it could not, for the reason—and no other is assigned—that if the company were permitted to exercise its functions in Illinois to the full extent authorized by its charter, it could acquire lands without limit as to quantity, and hold them in perpetuity; that such privileges had never been accorded by Illinois to her own domestic corporations, and were inconsistent with her settled public policy against perpetuities, as indicated not by direct express enactment, but with absolute certainty, by the general course of its legislation from the very organization of the State.

Two of the Judges dissented from the opinion, so far as it held invalid a transfer of land by the corporation to a purchaser.

The subsequent case of Starkweather v. Bible Society [supra], involved the title to certain real estate, an undivided interest in which was devised by one Starkweather to the Trustees of the American Bible Society, established in 1816, to have and to hold the same for its use, but not to be entitled to the same, or its income, until his youngest child became of age. The claim of the Bible Society was denied, by the court, upon the following grounds: (1) That by the laws of New York, as declared by the highest court of that State, it had not the capacity to take title to real property in New York by devise. (2) That New York had no power to create a body incapable of taking land in that State by devise, and yet with power to so take lands in a foreign jurisdiction. (3) And by way of argument, that if New York was to so enact, and other States were to so consent, then such bodies might so receive and hold lands; but, said the court, the former had not so enacted, nor had Illinois so consented, since, when the will of Starkweather was probated, September 16, 1867, there was no statute of Illinois which authorized foreign corporations to hold lands by devise in that State. (4) The principles announced in Carroll v. E. St. Louis were regarded as conclusive against the claim of the Bible Society, "As," said the court, "all of the inconveniences and injuries are as likely to ensue in this, and other cases like it, as in that." (5) The devise being illegal and void, the court could not decree a sale of the real estate devised and direct the payment of the proceeds to the society.

We are of opinion that the Starkweather case does not determine the particular question we have been considering. It does not decide that the devise to the Bible Society was void solely because of the absence of some statute expressly and affirmatively authorizing or permitting devises of real estate in Illinois to corporations of other States. The absence of such a statute was referred to, as we suppose, for the purpose of showing that the admitted incapacity of the Bible Society, under the law of its own creation, to take real estate by devise, and its consequent inability in that mode to acquire real estate situated elsewhere could not be removed or be met by anything in the legislation of Illinois, since no statute in force when the will was probated conferred upon foreign corporations the right to acquire real property in that State by devise.

The Starkweather case was held to be concluded by the principles announced in the Carroll case, for the reason, perhaps, that the property devised could, consistently with the will of the testator and the charter of the society, have been held for a period of time beyond that allowed to similar corporations of Illinois holding lands in that State. Upon no other ground are we able to understand how the Starkweather case was concluded by the principles announced in Carroll v. E. St. Louis. Neither decision warrants the conclusion that, at the date of the deed to appellant, a benevolent, religious or missionary corporation of another State, having authority under its own charter to take lands, in limited quantities, for the purposes of its incorporation, was forbidden, by the statutes or the public policy of Illinois, from taking title, for such purposes, to real property in that State under a conveyance from one of its citizens, duly executed and recorded as required by its laws. The conveyance to the appellant can be sustained without in any degree impairing or doing violence to the fundamental principle enunciated in the Carroll case, viz.: that corporations cannot acquire lands in Illinois in large quantities, to be held, or which may be held in perpetuity. It can also be sustained, without violating the main proposition laid down in the Starkweather case, viz.: that a foreign corporation, forbidden by the laws of the State creating it, to acquire lands there, by devise, could not, by that mode, take lands in Illinois, in the absence of a statute of that State assenting thereto. We cannot presume that it is now, or was in 1870, against the public policy of Illinois that one of its citizens should convey real estate there situated to a benevolent or missionary corporation of another State of the Union, for the purpose of enabling it to carry out the objects of its creation, when that State permitted its own corporations, organized for like purposes, to take real estate within its limits, by purchase, gift, devise, or in any other manner.

We have considered these questions with reference to the law of Illinois at the date of Griffith's conveyance. But our conclusions are strengthened by her subsequent legislation. We refer particularly to the general statute passed in 1872, providing for the organization of corporations for pecuniary profit, or for any lawful purpose except banking, insurance, real estate brokerage, the operation of railroads, other than horse and dummy railroads, and the business of loaning money, with authority to own, possess and enjoy so much real and personal estate as shall be necessary for the transaction of their business, and to sell and dispose of the same when not required for the uses of the corporation. All real estate acquired in satisfaction of any liability or indebtedness, and not necessary and suitable for the business of the corporation, was required to be annually offered at public auction, and if not sold within five years, its sale could be enforced by information in the name of the State against the corporation. Section 26 of that general statute expressly recognizes the right of foreign corporations to acquire real estate in Illinois. Its language is: "Foreign corporations and the officers and agents thereof, doing business in this State, shall be subjected to all the liabilities, restrictions and duties that are or may be imposed upon corporations of like character organized under the general laws of this State, and shall have no other or greater powers. And no foreign or domestic corporation established or maintained in any way for the pecuniary profit of its stockholders or members, shall purchase or hold real estate in this State, except as provided for in this Act." Hurd, Ill. Rev., 1879, p. 290.

Distinct provision was made in the same statute for the organization of societies, corporations and associations, not for pecuniary profit, with capacity to take, purchase, hold and dispose of real and personal estate for purposes of their organization. The statute imposes on the corporations last described no restrictions as to the quantity of estate they may take and hold, except that it must be for the purposes of their organization. Churches, congregations or societies formed for religious worship, when incorporated under that statute, in addition to grounds for burying and camp-meeting purposes, were limited to ten acres of ground for houses, buildings or other improvements for the convenience and comfort of such congregations, church or society.

If the settled public policy of Illinois in 1870 forbade a benevolent missionary corporation of another State from taking title to real estate in Illinois for purposes of its organization, a general statute would hardly have been passed in 1872 recognizing the right of foreign corporations organized for pecuniary profit to hold real estate in Illinois, to the same extent and under like powers with domestic corporations of the same class.

2. Appellees, in their pleadings, allege that the lots conveyed by their ancestor to the American and Foreign Christian Union were not required or necessary for the convenience or transaction of its business. These allegations are both insufficient and immaterial; insufficient, because it may be true, and yet the appellant, with the lots in dispute added to its property, may not have had more real estate than its charter permitted; immaterial, because if, as we hold, the appellant could, consistently with its own charter and the law of Illinois, take title to real property in that State for the purposes of its creation, its acquisition of a larger quantity of real estate than its charter allowed, or than its business required, or than was consistent with the law of Illinois, was not a question which the appellees have any right to raise. If the title passed by valid conveyance from their ancestor, it is of no concern to them that the appellant has acquired or is holding more real estate than its charter authorizes.

We forbear the discussion of any other question arising upon the assignments of error. It is apparent from the record and the argument of counsel that the judgment of the court below was based upon the conclusion that the appellant, being a foreign Corporation, was forbidden by the law of Illinois from taking title to the property in controversy. No proof was taken, nor was the case heard upon the issue as to the mental capacity of Griffith to execute the conveyance of 1870, or as to its having been obtained by fraudulent solicitations and representations upon the part of the agents of the appellant Corporation. The parties should have an opportunity to prepare the cause, and have it heard upon those issues.

The decree is reversed, with directions to overrule the demurrer to the cross-bill and the exceptions to the answer, and for such further proceedings as may be consistent with this opinion.

Negotiable bills of lading—state statute—effect of—bona fide purchaser—mistake in verdict.

1. A statute of a State making bills of lading negotiable, means that they may be transferred by indorsement and delivery, so as to give to the indorsee a right to sue on them in his own name.

2. Such statute does not charge the negotiation of them with all the consequences which attend or follow the negotiation of bills and notes.

3. No statute is to be construed as altering the common law, further than its words import.

4. The purchaser of a bill of lading, with reason to believe that his vendor was not the owner of the bill, or that it was held to secure the payment of an outstanding draft, is not a bona fide purchaser, and is not entitled to hold the merchandise covered by the bill against its true owner.

5. Where there was a verbal mistake of the clerk in entering the verdict, but the judgment was entered properly, as the verdict was amendable in the court below, this court will regard the amendment as made.

NOTE.—Negotiability and transfer of bill of lading; effect of transfer.

The bill of lading passes the property when it is indorsed and intended so to operate, in the same manner as a direct delivery of the goods would do if so intended; and it operates no further. Newson v. Thornton, 6 East, 41; Gardner v. Howland, 2 Pick., 599; Mears v. Waples, 3 Houst., 582; Empire Trans. Co. v. Steele, 70 Pa. St., 190; Brower v. Peabody, 13 N. Y., 121; Indiana, etc., Bk. v. Colgate, 4 Daly, 41.

A mere indorsement of a bill of lading, without a delivery thereof, does not transfer the property in the goods. Buffington v. Curtis, 15 Mass., 527; S. C., 8 Am. Dec., 115.

The assignment of a bill of lading bona fide and for value, will vest the legal interest of the consignee in his assignee, although made after arrival of goods. Chandler v. Belden, 18 Johns., 157; S. C., 9 Am. Dec., 193; First Nat. Bk. v. Crocker, 111 Mass., 163.

A bill of lading is transferable by the custom of merchants so as to vest the title of the assignor in the transferee. Consignee may transfer a bill of lading by indorsement. *Salters v. By the custom of merchants, bills of lading are transferable by indorsement and delivery so as to pass the title to the goods as effectually as if the goods were delivered, so long as they are in transit. *Lickbarrow v. IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. William Henry Lee and James E. Gown, for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. Robert N. Wilson and George Junkin, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendants below, now plaintiffs in error, bought the cotton from Miller & Brother by sample, through a cotton broker. No bill of lading or other written evidence of title in their vendors was exhibited to them. Hence, they can have no other or better title than their vendors had.

The inquiry, therefore, is: what title had Miller & Brother as against the Bank, which confessedly was the owner, and which is still the owner, unless it has lost its ownership by the fraudulent act of Kuhn & Brother? The cotton was represented by the bill of lading given to Norvell & Co., at St. Louis, and by them indorsed to the Bank to secure the payment of an accompanying discounted time draft. That indorsement vested in the Bank the title to the cotton, as well as to the contract. While it there continued, and during the transit of the cotton from St. Louis to Philadelphia, the indorsed bill of lading was stolen by one of the firm of Kuhn & Brother, and by them indorsed over to Miller & Brother, for an advance of $8,500. The jury has found, however, that there was no negligence of the Bank or of its agents in parting with possession of the bill of lading, and that Miller & Brother knew facts from which they had reason to believe it was held to secure the payment of an outstanding draft; in other words, that Kuhn & Brother were not the lawful owners of it, and had no right to dispose of it.

An indorsement of a bill of lading without the authority, consent or knowledge of the owner of the goods, transfers no title even to an indorsee in good faith. It is, therefore, to be determined whether Miller & Brother, by taking the bill of lading from Kuhn & Brother, under these circumstances, acquired thereby a good title to the cotton as against the Bank.

In considering this question, it does not appear to us necessary to inquire whether the effect of the bill of lading in the hands of Miller & Brother is to be determined by the law of Missouri, where the bill was given, or by the law of Pennsylvania, where the cotton was delivered. The statutes of both States enact that bills of lading shall be negotiable by indorsement and delivery. The Statute of Pennsylvania declares simply, they "Shall be negotiable and may be transferred by indorsement and delivery;" while that of Missouri enacts that "They shall be negotiable by written indorsement thereon and delivery, in the same manner as bills of exchange and promissory notes." There is no material difference between these provisions. Both statutes prescribe the manner of negotiation; i. e., by indorsement and delivery. Neither undertakes to define the effect of such a transfer.

We must, therefore, look outside of the statutes to learn what they mean by declaring such instruments negotiable. What is negotiability? It is a technical term derived from the usage of merchants and bankers in transferring, primarily, bills of exchange and, afterwards, promissory notes. At common law no contract was assignable, so as to give to an assignee a right to enforce it by suit in his own name. To this rule, bills of exchange and promissory notes, payable to order or bearer, have been admitted exceptions, made such by the adoption of the law merchant. They may be transferred by indorsement and delivery, and such a transfer is called negotiation. It is a mercantile business transaction, and the capability of being thus transferred, so as to give to the indorsee a right to sue on the contract in his own name, is what constitutes negotiability. The for conversion where goods are delivered to consignee without payment of draft. Mar. Bk. v. Wright, 48 N. Y., 1; Heiskell v. Farms, etc., Nat. Bk., 89 Pa. St., 155; S. C., 33 Am. Rep., 745; Stollenwerck v. Thacher, 115 Mass., 224; First Nat. Bk. v. Dearborn, 115 Mass., 219.

An indorsement or written transfer of a bill of lading is not necessary. Delivery, with intent to pass title to the goods, is sufficient. The possession of a bill of lading, whether indorsed or not, is prima facie evidence of title as against any person not showing a better title. Mich. Cent. R. R. Co. v. Phillips, 60 Ill., 190; Tison v. Howard, 57 Ga., 410; Glidden v. Lucas, 7 Cal., 26; Pratt v. Parkman, 24 Pick., 42; Adams v. O'Connor, 100 Mass., 515; S. C., 1 Am. Rep., 137; First Nat. Bk. v. Dearborn, 115 Mass., 219; Fifth Nat. Bk. v. Bayley, 115 Mass., 223; Allen v. Williams, 12 Pick., 297; Low v. De Wolf, 8 Pick., 101; City Bk. v. Rome, etc., R. R. Co., 44 N. Y., 136; Merch. Bk. v. Union R. R. & T. Co., 69 N. Y., 373; Bates v. Stanton, 1 Duer, 85; Indiana Nat. Bk. v. Colgate, 4 Daly, 41; Jeffersonville, etc., R. R. Co. v. Irvin, 46 Ind., 180.

A bill of lading is not at common law technically negotiable, like a bill of exchange. Hale v. Milwaukee Dock Co., 29 Wis., 482; Patison v. Culton, 33 Ind., 240; Howard v. Shepherd, 9 C. B., 297; Thompson v. Downing, 14 Mees. & W., 403; Tison v. Howard, 57 Ga., 410; Dows v. Greene, 24 N. Y., 638; Stollenwerck v. Thacher, 115 Mass., 224.

Where the bill of lading is in triplicate, indorsee of first set obtains title as against subsequent indorsee of the others. The Tigress, Brown & L., 38; Glyn v. East & W. Ind. Docks, 5 L. R. Q. B., 129; Meyerstein v. Barber, 2 L. R. C. P., 38; 4 L. R. Eng. & Ir. App., 317.

term "negotiable" expresses, at least primarily, this mode and effect of a transfer.

In regard to bills and notes, certain other consequences generally, though not always, follow. Such as a liability of the indorser, if demand be duly made of the acceptor or maker, and seasonable notice of his default be given. So if the indorsement be made before the maturity of the bill or note, in due course of business, and be made for value to a bona fide holder, the maker or acceptor cannot set up against the indorsee any defense which might have been set up against the payee, had the bill or note remained in his hands.

So, also, if a note or bill of exchange be indorsed in blank, if payable to order, or if it be payable to bearer and, therefore, negotiable by delivery alone, and then be lost or stolen, a bona fide purchaser for value paid acquires title to it, even as against the true owner. This is an exception from the ordinary rule respecting personal property. But none of these consequences are necessary attendants or constituents of negotiability or negotiation. That may exist without them. A bill or note past due is negotiable, if it be payable to order or bearer, but its indorsement or delivery does not cut off the defenses of the maker or acceptor against it, or create such a contract as results from an indorsement before maturity, and it does not give to the purchaser of a lost or stolen bill the rights of the real owner.

It does not necessarily follow, therefore, that because a statute has made bills of lading negotiable by indorsement and delivery, all these consequences of an indorsement and delivery of bills and notes before maturity ensue or are intended to result from such negotiation.

Bills of exchange and promissory notes are exceptional in their character. They are representatives of money, circulating in the commercial world as evidence of money, "Of which any person in lawful possession may avail himself to pay debts or make purchases or make remittances of money from one country to another, or to remote places in the same country. Hence, as said by Story, J., it has become a general rule of the commercial world to hold bills of exchange as, in some sort, sacred instruments in favor of bona fide holders for a valuable consideration without notice." Without such a holding they could not perform their peculiar functions. It is for this reason it is held that if a bill or note indorsed in blank or payable to bearer, be lost or stolen, and be purchased from the finder or thief, without any knowledge of want of ownership in the vendor, the bona fide purchaser may hold it against the true owner. He may hold it though he took it negligently, and when there were suspicious circumstances attending the transfer. Nothing short of actual or constructive notice that the instrument is not the property of the person who offers to sell it, that is, nothing short of mala fides will defeat his right. The rule is the same as that which protects the bona fide indorser of a bill or note purchased for value from the true owner. The purchaser is not bound to look beyond the instrument. Goodman v. Harvey, 4 Ad. & E., 870; Goodman v. Simonds, 20 How., 343 [61 U. S., XV., 934]; Murray v. Lardner, 2 Wall., 110 [69 U. S., XVII., 857]; Matthews v. Poythress, 4 Ga., 287. The rule was first applied to the case of a lost bank-note, Miller v. Race, 1 Burr., 452, and put upon the ground that the interests of trade, the usual course of business, and the fact that bank-notes pass from hand to hand as coin, require it. It was subsequently held applicable to merchants' drafts, and in Peacock v. Rhodes, 2 Doug., 633, to bills and notes, as coming within the same reason.

The reason can have no application to the case of a lost or stolen bill of lading. The function of that instrument is entirely different from that of a bill or note. It is not a representative of money, used for transmission of money, or for the payment of debts or for purchases. It does not pass from hand to hand as bank-notes or coin. It is a contract for the performance of a certain duty. True, it is a symbol of ownership of the goods covered by it—a representative of those goods. But if the goods themselves be lost or stolen, no sale of them by the finder or thief, though to a bona fide purchaser for value, will divest the ownership of the person who lost them, or from whom they were stolen. Why, then, should the sale of the symbol or mere representative of the goods have such an effect? It may be that the true owner by his negligence or carelessness may have put it in the power of a finder or thief to occupy ostensibly the position of a true owner, and his carelessness may estop him from asserting his right against a purchaser who has been misled to his hurt by that carelessness. But the present is no such case. It is established by the verdict of the jury that the Bank did not lose its possession of the bill of lading negligently. There is no estoppel, therefore, against the Bank's right.

Bills of lading are regarded as so much cotton, grain, iron or other articles of merchandise. The merchandise is very often sold or pledged by the transfer of the bills which cover it. They are, in commerce, a very different thing from bills of exchange and promissory notes, answering a different purpose and performing different functions. It cannot be, therefore, that the statute which made them negotiable by indorsement and delivery, or negotiable in the same manner as bills of exchange and promissory notes are negotiable, intended to change totally their character, put them in all respects on the footing of instruments which are the representatives of money, and charge the negotiation of them with all the consequences which usually attend or follow the negotiation of bills and notes. Some of these consequences would be very strange if not impossible; such as the liability of indorsers, the duty of demand ad diem, notice of non-delivery by the carrier, etc., or the loss of the owner's property by the fraudulent assignment of a thief. If these were intended, surely the statute would have said something more than merely make them negotiable by indorsement. No statute is to be construed as altering the common law, further than its words import. It is not to be construed as making any innovation upon the common law which it does not fairly express. Especially is so great an innovation as would be placing bills of lading on the same footing in all respects with bills of exchange not to be inferred from words that can be fully satisfied without it. The law has most carefully protected the ownership of personal property, other than money, against misappropriation by others than the owner, even when it is out of his possession. This protection would be largely withdrawn if the misappropriation of its symbol or representative could avail to defeat the ownership, even when the person who claims under a misappropriation had reason to believe that the person from whom he took the property had no right to it.

We think, therefore, that the rule asserted in Goodman v. Harvey, Goodman v. Simonds, Murray v. Lardner (supra), and in Phelan v. Moss, 67 Pa., 59, is not applicable to a stolen bill of lading. At least the purchaser of such a bill, with reason to believe that his vendor was not the owner of the bill, or that it was held to secure the payment of an outstanding draft, is not a bona fide purchaser, and he is not entitled to hold the merchandise covered by the bill against its true owner. In the present case there was more than mere negligence on the part of Miller & Brother; more than mere reason for suspicion. There was reason to believe Kuhn & Brother had no right to negotiate the bill. This falls very little, if any, short of knowledge. It may fairly be assumed that one who has reason to believe a fact exists, knows it exists. Certainly, if he be a reasonable being.

This disposes of the principal objections urged against the charge given to the jury. They are not sustained. The other assignments of error are of little importance. We cannot say that there was no evidence in the case to justify a submission to the jury of the question whether Miller & Brother knew any fact or facts from which they had reason to believe that the bill of lading was held to secure payment of an outstanding draft. It does not appear that we have before us all the evidence that was given, but if we have, there is enough to warrant a submission of that question.

The exceptions to the admission of testimony, and to the cross-examination of Andrew H. Miller, are not of sufficient importance, even if they could be sustained, to justify our reversing the judgment. Nor are we convinced that they exhibit any error.

There was, undoubtedly, a mistake in entering the verdict. It was a mistake of the clerk in using a superfluous word. The jury found a general verdict for the plaintiff. But they found the value of the goods "eloined" to have been $7,015.97. The word "eloined" was inadvertently used, and it might have been stricken out. It should have been, and it may be here. The judgment was entered properly. As the verdict was amendable in the court below, we will regard the amendment as made. It would be quite inadmissible to send the case back for another trial because of such a verbal mistake.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Substitution of assignee, as party—discharge from rent—lessees dispossessed by military authority.

1. An assignee in bankruptcy can be substituted in this court as plaintiff in error, where his assignor has received his discharge in bankruptcy.

2. A lessee was discharged from liability to the lessor for rent of property in Memphis during the period when the rents and profits arising therefrom were required by the Federal military authorities, occupying and controlling that city, to be paid directly to them.

3. Lessees, when dispossessed by military authority and deprived of the use and control of the leased property, are discharged from liability to the lessors for rent accruing during the period of such dispossession.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Tennessee.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Luke W. Finlay, W. A. Maury and B. M. Estes, for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. J. B. Heiskell, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

The motion to dismiss this writ of error must be denied.

The original decree in the second Chancery Court of Shelby County, Tennessee, was for $8,821.49, and against S. M. Gates, A. M. Wood and Milton McKnight, partners under the name of Gates, Wood & McKnight. Upon appeal to the Supreme Court of Tennessee, that decree, to the extent of $7,840.25, was affirmed on the 13th day of October, 1875. On the 1st of August, 1876, Gates and Wood, two of the partners, received discharges in bankruptcy, releasing them individually from all provable debts and claims existing against them on 22d of April, 1876, other than debts which, by law, were excepted from the operation of a discharge in bankruptcy. The present writ of error was sued out on 30th October, 1876, all the partners uniting in suing it out. Appellee now moves to dismiss the writ upon the assumption that the assignee in bankruptcy could alone prosecute a writ of error from the final judgment of the state court. Undoubtedly, the assignee in bankruptcy of Gates and Wood had the right to prosecute a writ of error from the decree complained of, so far, at least, as it concerned those whom he represented. If the bankrupts could not themselves, under any circumstances, properly sue out the writ after their discharge, and upon that question we express no opinion, all difficulty in that respect has been removed by the application of the assignee himself for an order here substituting him as plaintiff in error. His application is now granted, and he is allowed to prosecute the writ in behalf of the bankrupts, Gates and Wood. Independent, however, of that application, we are not prepared to say that McKnight, the partner against whom no bankruptcy proceedings were instituted, might not have sued out the writ, using for that purpose, if necessary, the names of all the parties against whom the original decree was rendered. With both the assignee in bankruptcy and McKnight before the court, there is no sound reason why the cause should not proceed to a final determination upon the errors assigned.

Coming, then, to the merits of the case, we find that the plaintiff in error specially claimed a right or immunity in virtue of an authority exercised under the United States. The right or immunity, so claimed, was denied, first in the court in which the suit originated, and subsequently in the Supreme Court of the State of Tennessee.

The facts upon which that claim rests, or out of which it arises, are briefly these:

On the 6th June, 1862, military possession was taken of the City of Memphis by the Union forces then engaged in suppressing armed insurrection against the national authority. During the succeeding month, General Sherman, having been previously assigned by competent military authority to the command of the District of West Tennessee, reached that city with reinforcements, and assumed control of the forces in that locality.

Shortly thereafter he published orders, re-opening trade and communication with the surrounding country, and prescribing rules in conformity with which travel in and out of the city should be conducted. On the 7th of August, 1862, pursuant to orders from General Grant, his superior officer, specific instructions were issued by him to the quartermaster in charge at Memphis, concerning vacant stores and houses in that city, and also as to buildings which were occupied, but the owners of which had "gone South," leaving agents to collect rent for their benefit. With reference to the latter class of buildings his instructions, or rather orders were: "Rent must be paid to the quartermaster. No agent can collect and remit money South without subjecting himself to arrest and trial for aiding and abetting the public enemy."

The object of these regulations was thus distinctly set forth by General Sherman in his letter of instructions: "I understand that General Grant takes the rents and profits of this class of real property, under the rules and laws of war, and not under the Confiscation Act of Congress; therefore, the question of title is not involved; simply the possession, and the rents and profits of houses belonging to our enemies, which are not vacant, we hold in trust for them or the Government, according to the future decision of the proper tribunals." He concluded his letter in these words: "We have nothing to do with confiscation. We only deal with possession and, therefore, the necessity of strict accountability, because the United States assumes the place of trustee, and must account to the rightful owner for his property, rents and profits. In due season, courts will be established to execute the laws, the Confiscation Act included, when we will be relieved of this duty and trust. Until that time, every opportunity should be given to the wavering and disloyal to return to their allegiance to the Constitution of their birth or adoption."

These instructions do not appear in the present transcript, although they constitute a part of the archives of the War Department, and belong to the public history of the late civil war. Some question may be made as to our right to take judicial notice of them in the determination of this case. But, apart from them, the record sufficiently establishes the fact that the military authorities adopted the general policy indicated by General Sherman's letter of instructions, and a rental agent, designated by those authorities, was charged with the duty, among others, of collecting rents of houses which, although occupied, belonged to persons who had "gone South." To that class of property belonged a storehouse, occupied by Gates, Wood & McKnight, under a lease executed at Memphis, in 1859, by R. C. Brinkley, the testator of defendant in error, for a term of five years, and for the stipulated rent of which the lessees had executed their several promissory notes, payable quarterly during the whole period of the lease. Brinkley, upon the approach of the Union forces, left his home in Memphis and went within the lines of the Confederate forces, where he remained until 1864.

Gates, Wood & McKnight were notified by the military rental agent, in the summer of 1862, to pay him the rents going to Brinkley. They refused to recognize that order, or to so pay the rents and, by reason of such refusal, were dispossessed by the military authorities. Those of their subtenants who expressed a willingness to comply with the order were permitted to remain in the occupancy of the premises, paying rent, however, directly to the rental agent of the United States. From the time the lessees were thus dispossessed, until July 11, 1863, the property remained under Federal military control, and all rents arising therefrom were collected by the rental agent, who, in the exercise of his functions, was recognized and sustained by the general commanding the Union forces in that district. During that intermediate period, the lessees were neither in possession of the premises, nor permitted by the military authorities to receive any rents accruing therefrom. Their rent notes, covering the period during which they were thus kept out of possession, remained, however, outstanding, in the hands of the lessor or his agent. They constitute the foundation of the judgment or decree in this suit.

Are the lessees liable to the estate of Brinkley for rent, as stipulated in the lease of 1859, for the period when the storehouse was under control of the Federal military? There is no claim here for rents subsequent to July 11, 1863, since, on that day, possession was delivered or control surrendered to the lessor's son, under an arrangement made by him with the military authorities. After the return of the lessor to Memphis, in 1864, the latter took control of the property, and enjoyed the rents. Upon the solution of the foregoing question this case depends.

The Supreme Court of Tennessee were of opinion that the lessees were not discharged from liability upon their contract with Brinkley, by reason of the action taken by the military authorities touching the rents accruing from the property in question. That court recognized the hardship of the case upon the lessees, but consistently with its views of the law the relief asked for could not be given.

We are unable to give our assent to the conclusion reached by that learned court. It is inconsistent with our decision in Harrison v. Myers, 92 U. S., 111 [XXIII., 606], where we held the lessee discharged from liability to the lessor for rent of certain property in New Orleans during the period when the rents and profits arising therefrom were required by the Federal military authorities, occupying and controlling that city in the year 1862, to be paid directly to them. There is some difference in the facts of the two cases, but in their essential features they are alike. That case, it may be here observed, was determined in this court after the rendition of the present decree by the Supreme Court of Tennessee.

Brinkley, in his answer, claims to have gone within the insurrectionary lines as a private citizen and upon private business. He testified that he "Never had the honor to go or act in any other capacity, then, before, or since." It was, however, shown that in 1861 he became a member of a military Board organized in hostility to the United States. It does not appear when his connection with that body terminated, or when the Board itself ceased operations. But it does appear from his own admissions that he had, prior to the occupation of Memphis by the Union forces, contributed money towards the equipment of military companies organized in that State with the avowed purpose of resisting the authority of the National Government. When he abandoned his home and entered the military lines of the enemy he was, beyond question, in full sympathy and active co operation with those who sought, by armed force, to overthrow the Union. Neither in his answer nor in his deposition does he intimate that he had any sympathy with the United States in its efforts to suppress insurrection. He was, therefore, in the very fullest legal sense, an enemy of the Government during his stay within the military lines of the rebellion, liable to be treated as such both as to his person and property. His remaining there was in plain violation of law and in disregard of duty. In The William Bagaley, 5 Wall., 377 [72 U. S., XVIII., 533], we said that "It was the duty of a citizen when war breaks out, if it be a foreign war and he is abroad, to return without delay; and if it be a civil war, and he is a resident in the rebellious section, he should leave it as soon as practicable, and adhere to the regular established government."

The general commanding the Union forces at Memphis was charged with the duty of suppressing rebellion by all the means which the usages of modern warfare permitted. To that end he represented for the time and, in that locality, the military power of the Nation. He did not assume authority to confiscate Brinkley's rents, nor did he seize them as booty of war; but, by his subordinates, collected and held them subject to such disposition as might be thereafter made of them by the decisions of the proper tribunals. They were seized, flagrante bello, in that portion of the Territory of the United States the inhabitants whereof had been declared to be in insurrection. There was no such "Substantial, complete and permanent military occupation and control" as has been sometimes held to draw after it a full measure of protection to persons and property at the place of military operations. Planters' Bk. v. Union Bk., 16 Wall., 495 [83 U. S., XXI., 478]. No pledge had then been given by the constituted authorities of the government which prevented the commander of the Union forces from doing all that the laws of war authorized, and that, in his judgment, under the circumstances attending his situation, was necessary or conducive to the successful prosecution of the war. He was not bound to risk the possibility of Brinkley's rents being transmitted to him beyond the Union lines. To have permitted the latter to enjoy the benefit of them in any form during his voluntary absence within the military lines of the insurrection might have encouraged him to remain under the protection of the enemy, adding by his presence and means to the enemy's ability to continue the struggle against the government. If, therefore, in the judgment of the commanding general, the security of his own army, or the diminution of the enemy's resources, required that he should prevent those within the Confederate military lines from receiving or using in any way, while there, rents accruing from real estate within the Federal lines, it would be difficult to show that the mode adopted by him to effect that result was not a proper military precaution, entirely consistent with the established rules of war, and having direct connection with the great end sought to be accomplished by the war, to wit: the destruction of armed rebellion, and the complete restoration of the national authority over the insurrectionary district.

The action of the military authorities in seizing the rents arising from the property which Brinkley had leased to Gates, Wood & McKnight not being, then, in violation of law; that which was done being regarded as having been done by the authority of the United States in lawful defense of the national existence against armed insurrection; it results, necessarily, as we think, that the lessees, when dispossessed by military authority and deprived of all future use and control of the leased property, were discharged from liability to the lessors for rent accruing during, at least, the period of such dispossession. They were not discharged from liability for rent which previously accrued. But since the consideration for their promise to pay rent, from time to time, was the possession and use of the leased property during the term and upon the conditions specified in the lease, and since such enjoyment and use were materially interrupted and prevented by the interference of the law, or of lawful public authority, to which both parties were amenable, the lessees, it seems to the court, ought to be protected against liability for the rent stipulated in the contract of 1859, for the period they were thus kept out of possession and enjoyment of the property. The events and contingencies causing that result were not such as the parties anticipated, nor such as we can suppose were in contemplation when the contract was made. Otherwise they would, it must be assumed, have been provided for in the contract.

The conclusion thus reached is abundantly sustained by authority. Indeed, many of the authorities would justify us in holding the action of the military authorities to have worked the dissolution of the entire contract of lease from the moment the lessees were dispossessed.

In Melville v. De Wolf, 4 El. & Bl., 844, the plaintiff sued for wages agreed to be paid to him as a mariner and carpenter on board of a foreign ship going to the Pacific Ocean. In the course of the voyage, complaint was made to a British consul, at a foreign port, of an offense alleged to have been committed by the master of the ship. The consul, in pursuance of a British statute, and having power and jurisdiction so to do, caused the master to be conveyed to England, under restraint, to be there proceeded against in respect of the offense charged; and the consul, having power and jurisdiction so to do, caused the plaintiff to leave the ship, and proceed to England as a witness. The latter did not return to the ship, or render any further services thereon for the defendant. The question in the case was as to the liability of the defendant for wages according to the articles signed, for the period subsequent to the departure of the plaintiff for England under the direction or order of the consul. The Court of Queen's Bench, speaking by Lord Campbell, C. J.; said: "The money paid into court covered the plaintiff's demand for wages during the whole time that he had served on board the ship; and we think that, upon the facts proved, the ship-owners were not liable to pay him wages for a longer period. By authority of the British Legislature he was then separated from the ship at a foreign port and sent to England, without any reasonable possibility of his ever being able to rejoin the ship during the voyage in which he was engaged. No blame is to be imputed to him, and there has been no forfeiture of wages; but he cannot be considered as having earned the wages in dispute. After he was sent home from Montevideo to England, he neither served under the articles actually or constructively; and as from that time the relation of employer and employed could not be renewed within the scope of the original hiring, we think that the contract must then be considered as dissolved by the supreme authority of the State, which is binding on both parties." Again; "Then an act being done by public authority, which rendered any further performance of the contract impossible, we think that the contract was dissolved."

Esposito v. Bowden, 7 El. & Bl., 763, has some bearing upon the question. Bowden, a British subject, contracted to make a voyage to Odessa, a Russian port, and bring from there goods belonging to the other contracting party. Before the voyage was completed, war between England and Russia intervened. Bowden thereupon declined to execute the contract, and was sued for damages for failing to do so. The Court of Queen's Bench said: "As to the mode of operation of war upon contracts of affreightment made before, but which remain unexecuted at the time it is declared, and of which it makes the further execution unlawful and impossible, the authorities establish that the effect is to dissolve the contract, and to so absolve both parties from further performance of it."

The same doctrine was announced in Barker v. Hodgson, 3 Mau. & S., 267, where Lord Ellenborough said: "If, indeed, the performance of this covenant has been rendered unlawful by the government of this country, the contract would have been dissolved on both sides, and this defendant, inasmuch as he has thus been compelled to abandon his contract, would have been excused for the non-performance of it, and not liable in damages."

In his treatise on the law relative to Merchant Ships and Shipping, 11th ed., by Shee, 453, Lord Tenterden says: "If an agreement be made to do an act lawful at the time of such agreement, but afterwards, and before the performance of the act, the performance be rendered unlawful by the government of the country, the agreement is absolutely dissolved."

To the same effect speak Chancellor Kent, 3 Kent, 248, and Mr. Chitty in his treatise on Contracts, 11th Am. ed., 1077. The last named author says: "So the non-performance of a contract will be excused where such non-performance is occasioned by an act done by public authority."

Further citation of authorities would seem to be unnecessary. The reasons assigned in the adjudged cases and by elementary writers, in support of the principles announced in the foregoing authorities, apply to this case and should control its determination. The lessees having been permanently deprived, by competent public authority, of the possession of the leased property, the use of which was the sole consideration for the notes sued on, they were discharged from liability upon the notes, which represented the rents accruing during the period of military occupancy and control.

The decree of the Supreme Court of Tennessee is reversed, with directions to enter or to cause to be entered in the proper court a decree of perpetual injunction in accordance with the principles of this opinion.

Capture in neutral waters—disavowal of.

1. A capture of a vessel in neutral waters is valid as between belligerents. But the neutral sovereign, whose territory has been violated, may interpose and demand reparation, and is entitled to have the captured property restored.

APPEAL from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. B. F. Butler, Frank W. Hackett and Wm. E. Chandler, for appellant.

Messrs. Charles Devens, Atty-Gen., and S. F. Phillips, Solicitor-Gen., for appellee.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

On the night of the 7th of October, 1864, the United States Steamer Wachusett, under the command of Commander Collins, captured the rebel steamer Florida, in the Port of Bahia, in the Empire of Brazil. The Florida had gone there to supply herself with provisions and for the repair of her engine. She was anchored under cover of a Brazilian vessel of war, on the side next to the shore, and Commander Collins was notified that if he attacked her he would be fired upon by a neighboring fort and by the war vessels of the Empire then present. The commander, availing himself of the darkness of the night, approached and fired upon The Florida, received her surrender, attached a hawser to her extending from his vessel and towed her out to sea. He was pursued by a Brazilian war vessel, but escaped with his prize by superior speed. The steamers reached the United States at Hampton Roads. There The Florida was sunk by a collision, and lies where she went down. The American consul at Bahia was on board of The Wachusett at the time of the attack and incited it and participated in the seizure. He returned to the United States with Commander Collins.

The Brazilian Government demanded the return of the vessel and other reparation by the United States. A correspondence ensued between the two Governments, and the matter was amicably adjusted.

The commander libeled The Florida as prize of war. The court below dismissed the case, and he appealed to this court.

The legal principles applicable to the facts disclosed in the record are well settled in the law of nations, and in English and American jurisprudence. Extended remarks upon the subject are, therefore, unnecessary. See, Grotius, De Jure Belli, B. 3, ch. 4, sec. 8; Bynkershoek, 61, ch. 8; Burlamaqui, Vol. II., pt. 4, ch. 5, sec. 19; Vattel, B. 3, ch. 7 sec. 132; Dana, Wheat., sec. 429 and n., 208; The Phoenix, 3 Rob. Adm. Rep., 373; 5 Rob. Adm., 21; The Anne, 3 Wheat., 435; [La Amistad de Rues], 5 Wheat., 385; The Santissima Trinidad, 7 Wheat., 283, 496; The Sir Wm. Peel, 5 Wall., 517 [72 U. S., XVIII., 696]; The Adela, 6 Wall., 266 [73 U. S., XVIII., 821]; 1 Kent, Com., last. ed., pp. 112, 117, 121.

Grotius, speaking of enemies in war, says: "But that we may not kill or hurt them in a neutral country, proceeds not from any privileges attached to their persons, but from the right of the prince in whose dominions they are."

A capture in neutral waters is valid as between belligerents. Neither a belligerent owner nor an individual enemy owner can be heard to complain. But the neutral sovereign whose territory has been violated may interpose and demand reparation, and is entitled to have the captured property restored.

The latter was not done in this case because the captured vessel had been sunk and lost. It was, therefore, impossible.

The libelant was not entitled to a decree in his favor, for several reasons.

The title to captured property always vests primarily in the government of the captors. The rights of individuals, where such rights exist, are the results of local law or regulations. Here, the capture was promptly disavowed by the United States. They, therefore, never had any title.

The case is one in which the judicial is bound to follow the action of the political department of the government, and is concluded by it. Phillips v. Payne, 92 U. S., 130 [XXIII., 649].

These things must necessarily be so; otherwise the anomaly would be possible that, while the government was apologizing and making reparation to avoid a foreign war, the offending officer might, through the action of its courts, fill his pockets with the fruits of the offense out of which the controversy arose. When the capture was disavowed by our government, it became, for all the purposes of this case, as if it had not occurred.

Lastly, the maxim, "Ex turpi causa non oritur actio," applies with full force. No court will lend its aid to a party who founds his claim for redress upon an illegal act.

The Brazilian Government was justified by the law of nations in demanding the return of the captured vessel and proper redress otherwise. It was due to its own character, and to the neutral position it had assumed between the belligerents in the war then in progress, to take prompt and vigorous measures in the case, as was done. The commander was condemned by the law of nations, public policy and the ethics involved in his conduct.

The decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia is affirmed.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. Fred P. Stanton, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Enoch Totten, for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in the court below is the plaintiff in error here.

The first count in the declaration avers that, in consideration of the assistance to be rendered by the plaintiff to the defendants' testator in procuring him to be appointed special counsel of the United States in certain litigated cases known as the "Farragut Prize Cases," and also in consideration of the assistance to be rendered by the plaintiff in managing and carrying on the defense in those cases, which assistance was accordingly rendered, the testator promised the plaintiff to pay him one half of all fees which the testator should receive as such special counsel, and that the testator did receive as such special counsel in those cases, $29,950, of which sum the plaintiff was entitled to be paid one half, etc.

The second count is substantially the same

NOTE.—What contracts are void as against public policy, or as illegal; illegal consideration, when a defense; agreement not to bid; for lobby services; for contingent fees; to prevent competition. See note to Bartie v. Nutt, 29 U. S. (4 Pet.), 184.

with the first, except that it avers the consideration of the contract to have been the assistance to be rendered by the plaintiff in the defense of the cases named, and is silent as to the stipulation that he was to assist in procuring the appointment of the testator as special counsel for the government.

The third is a common count alleging the indebtedness of the testator to the defendant for work and labor, to the amount of $12,975.

It appears by the bill of exceptions that the plaintiff called three witnesses to establish the contract upon which he sought to recover. Lovel testified that "The testator also stated that he had agreed to pay the plaintiff one half of all the fees he should receive in said cases, for his aid in getting the appointment of special counsel and for the assistance which the plaintiff was to render in procuring testimony and giving information for the management of the defense in said cases."

"On cross examination, the witness said he knew, before his said conversation with R. M. Corwine, and before Corwine was employed, that Mr. Meguire, the plaintiff, had the selection of counsel in said cases, the Treasury Department only restricting him to the selection of a man who was familiar with admiralty practice, and Mr. Meguire was to utilize the information he professed to have at that time. The bargain, as witness understood it, was that, in consideration of Meguire's procuring Corwine to be employed as special counsel in those cases, and of assisting him in getting evidence and information, Corwine agreed to pay to the plaintiff (Meguire) one half of the fees which he (Corwine) might receive from the United States for services in said cases.

The plaintiff then called Lewis S. Wells, another witness in his behalf, who, being duly sworn, stated that since the commencement of this suit, he thought, sometime last year, he met the testator (R. M. Corwine, deceased) in the Treasury Department, and had a conversation with him about the plaintiff and the Farragut Cases. Mr. Corwine was very angry, and said that he had agreed to pay Mr. Meguire one half of his fees in the Farragut Cases, and had paid him one half the retainer received in 1869, and $4,000 in July, 1873, and had taken his receipt in full. That he had found out that plaintiff had not been the means of his appointment as special counsel, and he thought he had paid the plaintiff enough."

Wells testified further, that upon two occasions the testator told him the plaintiff was assisting him in the preparation of the defense in the Farragut Cases, and that he had agreed to pay to the plaintiff one half of his fees for the plaintiff's services. This is all that is found in the record touching the terms and consideration of the contract. It was in proof by a late solicitor of the Treasury that the plaintiff strongly urged on him the employment of the testator as special counsel, and that at the instance of the plaintiff he called the attention of the Secretary of the Treasury to the subject, and that the appointment of the testator was thus brought about. The plaintiff had been a clerk in New Orleans, in the office of Colonel Holabird, Chief Quartermaster of the Department of the Gulf, during the war, and had possession of Holabird's papers, from which he derived the facts communicated to the testator for the defense of government in the prize suits in question. It was not controverted that the amount of fees received by the testator was $25,950, and that he paid over to the plaintiff $4,475 before the breach occurred between them. The further sum of $8,500 was claimed by the plaintiff, and this suit was brought to recover it. The learned counsel for plaintiff in error complains in his brief that "In the charge of the court, page 10, the jury were instructed that 'the contract set out in the first count of the declaration was illegal and void, and that the plaintiff could not recover on the second count unless the jury should find that the parties made another and a distinct contract;' and in the first instruction asked by the defendants and given by the court the jury were told that such an arrangement is void, because it is contrary to public policy, and the plaintiff cannot recover in any form of action for any services rendered or labor performed in pursuance thereof." * *

* "There can be no doubt that this charge was fatal to the plaintiff's whole case. The jury were not allowed to infer, as they well might have done from the testimony of more than one of the witnesses, that the testator, after his appointment as special counsel, recognized an implied agreement to pay the plaintiff half of his fees for the services of the latter rendered during the progress of the business."

In our view of the record this is the turning point of the case. The objection taken to the instructions referred to is not so much to them in the abstract as the concrete. The complaint is, that they closed the door against the inference of another contract which the jury might have drawn from the testimony in the case. To this there are several answers. If there were such testimony, it should have been set forth in the record. After a careful examination, we have been unable to find any. The instructions expressly saved the right of the jury to find another and a different contract, and their attention was called to the subject. They found none. The contract objected to by the court as fatally tainted was proved by witnesses called by the plaintiff himself. He neither proved nor attempted to prove any other. It was, then, neither claimed nor intimated that any other had been made. After the views of the court were announced, it was too late for the plaintiff to change his position and claim for the jury the right to wander at large in the field of conjecture and find as a fact what the evidence wholly failed to establish, and which, if found, would have thrown on the court the necessity to set aside the verdict and award a new trial.

A judge has no right to submit a question where the state of the evidence forbids it. Bk. v. Eldred, 9 Wall., 544 [76 U. S., XIX., 763]. On the contrary, where there is an entire absence of testimony, or it is all one way, and its conclusiveness is free from doubt, it is competent for the court to direct the jury to find accordingly. Merch. Bk. v. St. Bk., 10 Wall., 604 [77 U. S., XIX., 1008]. The practice condemned in Bk. v. Eldred is fraught with evil. It tends to create doubts which otherwise might not and ought not to exist, and may confuse the minds of the jury and lead them to wrong conclusions. If the instructions here under consideration are liable to any criticism, it is that they were more favorable to the plaintiff in error than he had a right to claim.

The law touching contracts like the one here in question has been often considered by this court, and is well settled by our adjudications. Marshall v. R. R. Co., 16 How., 314; Tool Co. v. Norris, 2 Wall., 45 [69 U. S., XVII., 868]; Trist v. Child, 21 Wall., 441 [88 U. S., XXII., 623]; Coppell v. Hall, 7 Wall., 542 [74 U. S., XIX., 244]. It cannot be necessary to go over the same ground again. To do so would be a waste of time. The object of this opinion is rather to vindicate the application of our former rulings to this record than to give them new support. They do not need it. Frauds, of the class to which the one here disclosed belongs, are an unmixed evil. Whether forbidden by a statute or condemned by public policy, the result is the same. No legal right can spring from such a source. They are the sappers and miners of the public welfare, and of free government as well. The latter depends for its vitality upon the virtue and good faith of those for whom it exists, and of those by whom it is administered. Corruption is always the forerunner of despotism.

In Trist v. Child [supra], while recognizing the validity of an honest claim for services honestly rendered, this court said: "But where such services are blended and confused with those which are forbidden: the whole is a unit, and indivisible. That which is bad destroys that which is good, and they perish together. * * * Where the taint exists it affects fatally, in all its parts, the entire body of the contract. In all such cases potior conditio defendantis. Where there is turpitude, the law will help neither party." These remarks apply here. The contract is clearly illegal, and this action was brought to enforce it. This conclusion renders it unnecessary to consider the plaintiff's other assignments of error. The case being fundamentally and fatally defective, he could not recover. Conceding all his exceptions, other than those we have considered, to be well taken, the errors committed could have done him no harm, and opposite rulings would have done him no good. In either view, these alleged errors are an immaterial element in the case. Barth v. Clise, 12 Wall., 400 [79 U. S., XX., 393].

The judgment is affirmed.

of taxation at its true cash value, including shares of the national banks, the systematic and intentional valuation of all other moneyed capital by the taxing officers far below its true value, while national bank shares are assessed at their full value, is a violation of the Act of Congress which prescribes the rule by which those shares shall be taxed by state authority.

[No. 827.]

Argued Dec. 4, 5, 1879. Decided Mar. 2, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Ohio.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Grannis & Griswold, for appellant.

Mr. R. P. Ranney, for appellee.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

The Bank, which was plaintiff below, was one of those organized under the Act of Congress of 1864, creating a national banking system, by virtue of which it can sue in the Circuit Courts of the United States. The suit is a bill in equity to enjoin the Treasurer of the County of Cuyahoga, in which the City of Cleveland lies, from collecting a tax alleged to be illegal, and the decree of the Circuit Court is in favor of the complainant. The chief ground of objection to the tax set out in the bill, and that which is mainly relied on in argument here, is, that the Act of the Ohio Legislature of April 12, 1877, entitled "An Act for the Equalization of Bank Shares for Taxation," under which the tax complained of was finally assessed, is in conflict with the Constitution of Ohio on the subject of the uniformity of taxation and, therefore, void.

But there is also a distinct allegation that the tax, as assessed, is in conflict with section 5219 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, because greater than that assessed on other moneyed capital in the hands of individuals, citizens of that State.

It is an appropriate duty, which this court is called upon to perform very often, to protect rights founded on the Constitution, laws and treaties of the United States, when those rights are invaded by state authority. But it is a very different thing for this court to declare that an Act of a State Legislature, passed with the usual forms necessary to its validity, is void because that Legislature has violated the Constitution of the State.

It has long been recognized in this court that the highest court of the State is the one to which such a question properly belongs; and though the courts of the United States, when exercising a concurrent jurisdiction, must decide it for themselves, if it has not previously been considered by the state court, it would be indelicate to make such a decision in advance of the state courts, unless the case imperatively demanded it. We will, therefore, inquire first whether the decree of the Circuit Court can be sustained on the other ground.

The bill states very distinctly that the principle on which the valuation of the shares of the Bank for taxation is made "Destroys the uniformity of the rule fixed by the Constitution, and violates the obligation thereby imposed to treat all property alike, to the end that all property may bear an equal burden of taxation, and is subversive of the Act of Congress allowing such shares to be taxed and intended to protect the owners thereof from greater burdens than were imposed on other moneyed capital at the place where the Bank was located." "The necessary effect," it is added, "of the proceedings had in the assessment and levy of the taxes standing against the shareholders of your orator, and now about to be enforced, has been to deprive such shareholders, both in the matter of valuation and equalization, of all benefit of the Constitution and general laws of the State, by which only uniformity in the burden of taxation upon all descriptions of property could be secured, to take from them the security afforded by the limitation in the Act of Congress and to impose upon them such excessive exactions as to make the franchises granted by said Act comparatively useless." The answer, by way of denial, says that "The taxes mentioned in said complainant's bill, assessed upon the shares of said complainant's banking association, are not taxed at a greater rate than is imposed by the State of Ohio upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of said State resident in the City of Cleveland, where said banking association is established and located."

It is thus very clear that, whether the taxation of which the Bank complained was a tax on its shares greater than on other moneyed capital invested in Cleveland, was a question fairly raised by the pleading.

The argument is advanced here which we have just considered in People v. Weaver [ante, 705], namely: that if the amount of tax assessed on these bank shares is governed by the same percentage on the valuation as that applied to other moneyed capital, the Act of Congress is satisfied, though a principle of valuation is adopted by which inequality and injustice to the owners of Bank shares must necessarily result. We do not propose to go over that argument again. The cases were considered together in conference, because they involved that principle. It is sufficient to say that we are quite satisfied that any system of assessment of taxes which exacts from the owner of the shares of a national bank a larger sum in proportion to their actual value than it does from the owner of other moneyed capital valued in like manner, does tax the shares at a greater rate within the meaning of the Act of Congress.

It is not asserted that any different percentage on the valuation established was applied to these two classes of capital. The bill very clearly shows that the source of the evil was in the unequal valuation.

Taking the answer, with the meaning which the counsel who drew it attaches in argument here to the words, "taxed at a greater rate," it may be said to amount, as a negative pregnant, to an admission that the valuation was unequal, as charged in the bill. Not only so, but it is not denied in argument that while all the personal property in Cleveland, including moneyed capital not invested in banks, was in the assessment valued far below its real worth, say at one half or less, the shares of the banks, after deducting the real estate taxed to the banks separately, were assessed at their full value, or very near it. The only witness who testified on the subject in this case at all was the Auditor of the County of Cuyahoga for the years 1876 and 1877, who had been for many years previously an employé in the auditor's office. He says that, as county auditor, he was a member of the Board of County Equalization, and acted as such in equalizing the valuation of the shares of the various national and other banks during those years; that the valuation placed on the shares of the national banks was higher in proportion than the valuation on other personal property, including banking capital. He says the matter was talked over in the Board and that it was their aim to make it higher, and that the value placed by them on national bank shares was intentionally higher than the assessed value returned by private banks.

It is necessary here to examine into the mode of assessing the tax as provided in the Act of 1877, which related solely to the tax on bank shares. The 1st section required the cashier of every incorporated bank to make report to the county auditor of the names and residences of its shareholders, the par value of each share, and other facts necessary to enable the auditor to ascertain the value of those shares. The 2d section required the auditor to assess those shares at their true value in money, after deducting the real estate, and to transmit the assessment with the report of the auditor to the annual Board of Equalization of the county in which the Bank was located. This Board was composed, in cities of the class to which Cleveland belonged, of the county auditor and six citizens appointed by the city council. By the 3d section of that Act this Board was authorized to hear complaints and equalize the valuation of the shares of such banks or banking associations, as fixed by said county auditor, and with full authority to equalize said shares according to their true value in money. It is to be remembered that the witness whose testimony we have stated was the county auditor who made the first assessment or valuation of these shares, and he was a member of this City Board which had authority to equalize that valuation. And it was of this City Board he was speaking when he said that they had assessed bank shares generally higher than other personal property, including, of course, other moneyed capital; and that they had assessed the shares of the national banks higher than private banks, and that it was their aim to do so. It is also important to observe, in reference to another view of the question presently to be considered, that this discrimination was neither an accident nor a mistake, nor a rule applied only to this Bank, but that it was a principle deliberately adopted to govern their action in the valuation of all the shares of national banks, and applied to them all without exception. It appears, by the testimony of this witness, that there were seven national banks in the City of Cleveland whose shares, as equalized by the City Board for taxation, amounted to $3,236,500, to all of which this rule of valuation, making their taxes much higher than on other moneyed capital, was applied, and that this was done for two years at least, and probably many more.

This Act of 1877, however, provided another Board of Equalization, composed of the Auditor of State, Treasurer of State and Attorney-General, to whom all the assessments of bank shares made by the county and city boards were to be referred, and to whom no other property was referred, for an equalization, which included the whole State. This Board could do no more than increase or diminish the valuation of Banks for each county and city, so as to make them conform to some standard of equality among themselves which that Board might adopt. But the result of their action must be such that it did not increase or diminish the aggregate value of the amount returned by the county auditors of the whole State more than $100,000.

This Board, for the taxes now in contest, increased the valuation of the shares of the plaintiff Bank $250,000 above the sum of $912,000, at which it had been assessed by the County Board, and it increased the valuation of the shares of all the national banks of Cleveland from the sum of $3,236,500 to $4,046,045.

It is thus seen that the auditor and the City Board of Equalization valued these shares higher in proportion to other moneyed capital in Cleveland to an extent which the witness does not state, but which may be supposed to be thirty per cent, as it is shown to be in comparison with real estate; and the State Board added about one fourth to that, so that the tax on the national bank shares, against which relief is sought in this suit, is between fifty and sixty per cent on its real value, greater than on other moneyed capital, and, therefore, to that extent forbidden by the Act of Congress.

For this injustice and this violation of the law there ought to be some remedy. To the specific one of an injunction by a suit in chancery and, indeed, to any remedy by the Bank, many objections are raised; but as all of them have been considered and overruled in the case of Cummings v. Bk. [ante, 903], which was argued at the same time this case was, it is unnecessary to repeat here what is said in that case.

As the complainant has paid so much of the tax as was not in violation of the Act of Congress, we think the decree of the Circuit Court enjoining the collection of the remainder was right, and it is accordingly affirmed.

WILLIAM CUMMINGS, TREASURER OF LUCAS COUNTY, Appt.,
v.

MERCHANTS' NATIONAL BANK OF TOLEDO.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 153-164.)

Ohio law taxing national banks—rule of valuation—unequal assessment—remedy.

*The Constitution of Ohio declares that "Laws shall be passed taxing by a uniform rule all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, or otherwise; and also all the real or personal property, according to its true value in money." And the Legislature has passed laws providing separate State Boards of Equalization for real estate, for railroad capital, and for bank shares, but there is no State Board to equalize personal property, including all other moneyed capital. The equalizing process as to all other personal property and moneyed capital ceases with the County Boards.

*Head note by Mr. Justice MILLER.

Throughout a large part of the State of Ohio, including Lucas County, in which the plaintiff Bank is located, perhaps all over the State, the officers charged with the valuation of property for purposes of taxation adopted a settled rule or system, by which real estate was estimated at one third of its true value, ordinary personal property about the same, and moneyed capital at six tenths of its true value. The State Board of Equalization of bank shares increased the valuation of these shares to their full value. This court holds:

1. That the Act creating the Board for equalizing bank shares is not void as a violation of the Constitution of Ohio, because if the local assessors would discharge their duty by assessing all property at its actual cash value the operation of the equalizing Board would work no inequality of taxation, and a law cannot be held to be unconstitutional which in itself does not conflict with the Constitution, because of the injustice produced by its maladministration.

2. The rule or principle of unequal valuation of different classes of property for taxation, adopted by local Boards of assessment, is in conflict with the Constitution of Ohio and works manifest injustice to the owners of bank shares.

3. When a rule or system of valuation for purposes of taxation is adopted by those whose duty it is to make the assessment, which is intended to operate unequally, in violation of the fundamental principles of the Constitution, and when this principle is applied not solely to one individual, but to a large class of individuals or corporations, equity may properly interfere to restrain the operation of the unconstitutional exercise of power.

4. The appropriate mode of relief in such cases is, upon payment of the amount of the tax which is equal to that assessed on other property, to enjoin the collection of the illegal excess.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellee, being a banking association organized under the National Banking Law of the United States, brought in the Circuit Court for the Northern District of Ohio its bill in equity to enjoin the Treasurer of Lucas County from collecting a tax wrongfully assessed against the shares of its stockholders, payment of which was demanded of the Bank. The feature of the assessment of which appellant complains is, that in the valuation of the shares of the Bank for the purpose of taxation they were estimated at a much larger sum in proportion to their real value than other property, real and personal, in the same city, county and State, and, that this was done under a statute of the State, and by a rule or system deliberately adopted by the assessors for the avowed purpose of discriminating against the shares of all bank stock. Though there is in the argument of counsel an attempt to invoke the aid of the Act of Congress relating to the taxation of the shares of the national banks, we are unable to see, either in the original or supplemental bill, any sufficient allegation on that subject. One clause of the bill asserts that the law of the State, which is the principal subject of complaint, and the tax and assessments under it, are in violation of the Constitution of Ohio and of the Act of Congress; but the vice charged against the assessment is that it is "Three times the proportionate amount which is charged to real property, moneys and credits listed for taxation in said County of Lucas and charged upon said duplicate."

The standard of comparison in the Act of Congress is, "Other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of the State." We do not think we are called on to decide whether a tax which is assailed on the ground of violating that statute is void for that reason until the case, by positive averment, or by necessary implication of such averment, is shown to be within the prohibitory clause.

But the Bank has the same right, under the laws and Constitution of Ohio, to be protected against unjust taxation that any citizen of that State has, and by virtue of its organization under the Act of Congress it can go into the courts of the United States to assert that right; so that if the assessment on its shares was a violation of the constitutional provision of that State concerning uniformity of taxation, the Circuit Court had jurisdiction of that question, concurrent with the State Courts, and we must review its decision.

It is, however, manifest, from the form of the bill in this case and the tenor of the argument in this court, that its object is to have a decision that the State Statute of 1876, which provides specifically for taxation of bank shares, and for nothing else, is void as a violation of the Constitution of that State, as the purpose of the suit against the Treasurer of Cuyahoga County by the Bank at Cleveland [ante, 901] is designed to test the subsequent Statute of 1877, which is a substitute for that of 1876.

The two cases were advanced on our docket out of their order, and heard at the same time by this court, on the ground that they both involved the revenue law of the State. We have expressed in that case the reasons which induced us to avoid deciding that question, if it can be done without prejudice to the rights of the parties involved, and we shall see as we progress in the examination of this case whether it can be done.

But we must dispose of some preliminary questions, the first of which is the supposed incapacity of the Bank to sustain this or any other action for the alleged grievance, because, as the persons taxed are the individual shareholders, the damage, if any, is theirs, and they alone can sue to recover for it or to prevent its collection.

The Statutes of Ohio under which these taxes are assessed require the bank officers to report to the county auditor who makes the original assessment, the names of all its stockholders, their places of residence, and the amount held by each of them, and all the other facts necessary to a fair assessment.

It also authorizes the Bank to pay the tax on the shares of its stockholders and deduct the same from dividends or any funds of the stockholders in its hands or coming afterwards to its possession, and it forbids the Bank to pay any dividends on such stock, or to transfer it or permit it to be transferred on their books, so long as the tax remains unpaid.

In the case of the Bk. v. Com., we held that a Statute of Kentucky, very much like this, which enabled the State to deal directly with the Bank in regard to the tax on its shareholders, was valid and authorized a judgment against the Bank which refused to pay the tax. 9 Wall., 353 [76 U. S. XIX., 701]. It is true, the Statute of Kentucky went further than the Ohio Statute, by declaring that the Bank must pay the tax, while the latter only says it may. But the Ohio Statute, by the remedies it provides, places the Bank in a condition where it must pay the tax or encounter other evils, of a character which creates a right to avoid them by instituting legal proceedings to ascertain the extent of its responsibility before it does the acts demanded by the statute.

It is next suggested that since there is a plain, adequate and complete remedy by paying the money under protest and suing at law to recover it back, there can be no equitable jurisdiction of the case.

The reply to that is, that the Bank is not in a condition where the remedy is adequate. In paying the money it is acting in a fiduciary capacity as the agent of the stockholders; an agency created by the Statute of the State. If it pays an unlawful tax assessed against its stockholders, they may resist the right of the Bank to collect it from them. The Bank, as a corporation, is not liable for the tax, and occupies the position of stakeholder, on whom the cost and trouble of the litigation should not fall. If it pays, it may be subjected to a separate suit by each shareholder. If it refuses, it must either withhold dividends and subject itself to litigation by doing so, or refuse to obey the laws, and subject itself to suit by the State. It holds a trust relation which authorizes a court of equity to see that it is protected in the exercise of the duties appertaining to it. To prevent multiplicity of suits, equity may interfere.

But the Statute of the State expressly declares that suits may be brought to enjoin the illegal levy of taxes and assessments or the collection of them. Section 5848 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio, 1880; Vol. LIII., Laws of Ohio, 178, secs. 1, 2. And though we have repeatedly decided in this court that the statute of a State cannot control the mode of procedure in equity cases in Federal Courts, nor deprive them of their separate equity jurisdiction, we have also held that, where a statute of a State created a new right or provided a new remedy, the Federal Courts will enforce that right either on the common law or equity side of its docket, as the nature of the new right or new remedy requires. Van Norden v. Morton [ante, 453]. Here there can be no doubt that the remedy by injunction against an illegal tax, expressly granted by the Statute, is to be enforced, and can only be ap-properly enforced in the equity side of the court.

The Statute also answers another objection made to the relief sought in this suit, namely: that equity will not enjoin the collection of a tax except under some of the well known heads of equity jurisdiction, among which are not a mere overvaluation, or the illegality of the tax, or in any case where there is an adequate remedy at law. The Statute of Ohio expressly provides for an injunction against the collection of a tax illegally assessed, as well as for an action to recover back such taxes when paid, showing clearly an intention to authorize both remedies in such cases.

Independently of this Statute, however, we are of opinion that when a rule or system of valuation is adopted by those whose duty it is to make the assessment, which is designed to operate unequally and to violate a fundamental principle of the Constitution, and when this rule is applied not solely to one individual, but to a large class of individuals or corporations, that equity may properly interfere to restrain the operation of this unconstitutional exercise of power. That is precisely the case made by this bill, and if supported by the testimony, relief ought to be given.

Article XII., section 2, of the Constitution of the State of Ohio declares that "Laws shall be passed taxing by a uniform rule all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, or otherwise; and also all the real and personal property, according to its true value in money;" and section 3, that "The General Assembly shall provide by law for taxing the notes and bills discounted or purchased, moneys loaned, and all other property, effects or dues of every description—without deduction—of all banks now existing, or hereafter created, and all bankers, so that all property employed in banking shall bear a burden of taxation equal to that imposed on the property of individuals."

In construing this provision of the Constitution the Supreme Court of Ohio has said that "Taxing by a uniform rule requires uniformity not only in the rate of taxation, but also uniformity in the mode of the assessment upon the taxable valuation. Uniformity in taxing implies equality in the burden of taxation, and this equality of burden cannot exist without uniformity in the mode of the assessment, as well as in the rate of taxation. But this is not all. The uniformity must be co-extensive with the territory to which it applies. If a state tax, it must be uniform over all the State; if a county, town or city tax, it must be uniform throughout the extent of the territory to which it is applicable. But the uniformity in the rule required by the Constitution does not stop here. It must be extended to all property subject to taxation, so that all property must be taxed alike, equally, which is taxing by a uniform rule." Bk. v. Hines, 3 Ohio St., 15.

We are not aware that this decision has ever been overruled. It will be seen also that the Constitution requires all property to be taxed "according to its true value in money." It is said that the various statutes for assessing the taxes are all based upon this principle of valuation, and a statute of May, 1868, is cited in the brief as enacting that all property of every description within the State shall be entered for taxation at its true money value. If this principle, so clearly embodied in the Constitution as expounded by the Supreme Court, had been made the rule of action by those who have charge of the administration of the laws for assessing taxes, there could be no place for the complaint of plaintiff in this case.

The State, however, by her legislation, has adopted a system of valuation of property into which we must look for a moment to enable us to appreciate the effect of the evidence as to the actual valuation of which plaintiff complains.

Instead of having all property subject to taxation valued by one commission or authorized body, there are at least four different bodies acting independently of each other in regard to as many different classes of property in the process of final estimate of values for taxation.

The first of these concerns real estate, which is valued once in each decade, that valuation remaining unchanged during the whole ten years, except that what is called the new constructions of each year is added to the original sum. The assessments of real estate by the district assessors in the county, and the ward assessors in the large cities, is first submitted to a County or City Board of Equalization, and this again to a State Board of Equalization, to be elected once in ten years by the electors of each senatorial district. Of this Board the Auditor of State is a member. The functions of this final Board seem to be to increase or decrease the county valuations of real estate returned to them, according as they are found to be above or below the true money value of the property. But in doing this they only act on a county or city valuation as a whole, and not on the particular pieces of property assessed; and they cannot reduce or increase the entire valuation for the State more than twelve and a half per cent of the aggregate.

Personal property (other than bank shares and railroad property) and the new constructions in real estate are assessed annually by district and ward assessors in the counties and cities, and their assessment is returned to a County or City Board of Equalization, and we are not aware that this valuation is subject to any further equalization or submitted to any further correction. This assessment, of course, includes all personal property, money, credits and investments of capital other than those in banks and railroads. In regard to railroads, there is a submission of all of them to a State Board of Equalization, which finally passes upon the assessments of the counties. In reference to banks, which are first assessed by the county auditor, there is also a State Board of Equalization, whose function is limited to equalizing throughout the State the valuation of the shares of incorporated banks.

We thus see that one Board of Equalization has charge of the valuation of the real estate of the whole State once in every ten years, another has charge of the valuation of railroad property every year, and a third has charge of the valuation of shares of incorporated banks every year, and the amount fixed by these State Boards is, in every instance, the final basis of taxing that species of property for State and county purposes.

We are asked to decide that, as to this final

Board of Equalization of bank shares, whose function is to equalize the valuation of those shares, as among themselves, throughout the State, with no power to consider the valuation of real estate which comes before another Board only once in ten years, or other personal property and invested capital which never comes before any State Board, that its operations must necessarily produce inequality in valuation as it regards other property and is, therefore, void, as in conflict with the State constitutional rule of uniformity, and with the 3d section of the same article of the Constitution, declaring "That all property employed in banking shall bear a burden of taxation equal to that imposed on the property of individuals."

But there are two reasons why we cannot so hold: 1. It might be that in every instance the result would be the valuation of bank shares at a lower ratio in proportion to its real value than that of any other property and, therefore, plaintiff would have no ground of complaint. And, secondly, what is more important, if these original valuations and equalizations are based always, as the Constitution requires, on the actual money value of the property assessed, the result, except as it might be affected by honest mistakes of judgment, would necessarily be equality and uniformity, so far as it is attainable. So that, while it may be true that this system of submitting the different kinds of property subject to taxation to different Boards of assessors and equalizers, with no common superior to secure uniformity of the whole, may give opportunity for maladministration of the law and violation of the principle of uniformity of taxation and equality of burden, that is not the necessary result of these laws, or of any one of them; and a law cannot be held unconstitutional because, while its just interpretation is consistent with the Constitution, it is unfaithfully administered by those who are charged with its execution. Their doings may be unlawful, while the statute is valid.

The evidence, we are compelled to say, shows this to be true of the case before us.

It may be summed up in the statement, that the assessors of real property, the assessors of personal property, and the Auditor of Lucas County, in which is the City of Toledo, concurred in establishing a rule of valuation by which real and personal property, except money, was assessed at one third of its actual value, and money or invested capital at six tenths of its value, and that the assessment of the shares of incorporated banks, as returned by the State Board of Equalization for taxation to the Auditor of Lucas County, was fully equal to the selling prices of said shares and to their true value in money. This is shown by the testimony of four or five district assessors, by the Auditor of the County for the year 1876, and for several previous years, who had been long an employé in that office. It is also shown by this witness that at one time the Auditor of Lucas County held a conference with the auditors of the Counties of Fulton, Williams, Defiance, Henry, Paulding, Ottawa, Wood, Sandusky, Seneca and Van Wirt, and that the rule by which property was valued in Lucas was the result of this conference, and was to be applied in all these counties. The district assessors, whose duty it was to make this primary valuation of all personal property (except bank stocks and railroad property), also testify that for the year 1876 they had a meeting, and adopted that rule of valuation as their guide, and so applied it. All this is uncontradicted. Nor is there any question that while the auditor probably returned the bank shares of Toledo at six tenths of their value, or thereabouts, the State Board of Equalization increased it so that, as the cashier of this bank swears, its shares were assessed at their full cash value.

The testimony before us in the case argued with this [ante, 901] shows that the same rule of valuation was adopted in Cuyahoga County with the same effect on the shares of the incorporated banks of Cleveland. It probably pervades the system of assessment for the entire State of Ohio, and may have caused the necessity of Boards of Equalization quite as much as mistakes of judgment or other sources of inequality which these Boards are designed to remedy. But while these separate Boards, acting upon returns of different classes of property, and limited in each case to equalizing the value as between the same class in different counties, have no common or united action among themselves, and no common power to equalize the valuation of the different classes of property in relation to each other, it is obvious that their capacity to produce the uniformity which the Constitution was intended to effect, is very small indeed. They have no power at all to affect the valuation of real estate except once in ten years. They have no power over the valuation of personal property, including all money capital, except bank shares, as it is fixed by the County and City Boards; and these being beyond their control, the effort of the State Board to raise the assessment of the shares of banks to their value in money only increases the glaring inequality arising from the valuation of the County Boards.

It is proper to say, in extenuation of the rule of primary valuation of different species of property developed in this record, that it is not limited to the State of Ohio, or to part of it. The Constitutions and the statutes of nearly all the States have enactments designed to compel uniformity of taxation and assessments at the actual value of all property liable to be taxed. The phrases "salable value," "actual value," "cash value," and others used in the directions to assessing officers, all mean the same thing, and are designed to effect the same purpose. Burr., Tax., p. 227, sec. 99. But it is a matter of common observation that in the valuation of real estate this rule is habitually disregarded.

And while it may be true that there has not been in other States such concerted action over a large district of country by the primary assessors in fixing the precise rates of departure from actual value, as is shown in this case, it is believed that the valuation of real estate for purposes of taxation rarely exceeds half of its current salable value. If we look for the reason for this common consent to substitute a custom for the positive rule of the statute, it will, probably, be found in the difficulty of subjecting personal property, and especially invested capital, to the inspection of the assessor and the grasp of the collector. The effort of the landowner, whose property lies open to view, which can be subjected to the lien of a tax not to be escaped by removal or hiding, to produce something like actual equality of burden by an undervaluation of his land, has led to this result. But, whatever may be its cause, when it is recognized as the source of manifest injustice to a large class of property around which the Constitution of the State has thrown the protection of uniformity of taxation and equality of burden, the rule must be held void, and the injustice produced under it must be remedied so far as the judicial power can give remedy. The complainant having paid to defendant, or into the Circuit Court for his use, the tax which was its true share of the public burden, the decree of the Circuit Court enjoining the collection of the remainder is affirmed.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite, dissenting:

I feel compelled to withhold my assent to this judgment. There can be no doubt that the shares of this Bank were overvalued as compared with other property in the city; but if a State provides, by a valid law, for the valuation of property for taxation, and furnishes appropriate tribunals for the correction of errors before a tax is assessed, if complaint is made, I think it is not within the power of a court of equity to enjoin the collection of the tax simply because of an inequality in valuation; and this as well when the error arises from the adoption by the valuing officers of a wrong rule applicable to many cases, as from a mistake in judgment as to a single case. The valuation, as finally fixed by the proper officers, or equalizing Board, under the law, is, in my opinion, conclusive when there has been no fraud. As it seems to me, this case comes within the operation of this principle.

PEOPLE'S BANK OF BELLEVILLE, Plff.
in Err.,
v.

MANUFACTURERS' NATIONAL BANK OF CHICAGO.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 181-184.)

Power of national bank to guaranty paper—estoppel—ratification.

1. A national bank, on transferring a promissory note, may guaranty it.

2. It is to be presumed that the Vice-President had the power to make such guaranty in the name of the Bank, and the Bank is estopped to deny it.

3. The retention and enjoyment of the proceeds of the transaction by the Bank constituted an acquiescence in such act as effectual as would have been the most formal authorization in advance, or the most formal ratification afterwards.

Submitted Jan. 22, 1880. Decided Mar. 2, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois. The case is stated by the court.

Mr. Charles W. Thomas, for plaintiff in error, cited: R. R. Co. v. Howard, 7 Wall., 392 (74 U. S., XIX., 117); Kelsey v. Bk., 69 Pa. St., 426; Bredin v. Dubarry, 14 Serg. & R., 30; Gordon v. Preston, 1 Watts, 387.

See 11 OTTO.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

This case was submitted to the court without the intervention of a jury. The court found the facts and gave judgment for the defendant. The plaintiff thereupon sued out this writ of error and brought the case here for review. The Act of Congress regulating the procedure adopted seems to have been carefully complied with.

The plaintiff and defendant, in the court below, are respectively the plaintiff and defendant in error here. For convenience, we shall speak of them in this opinion by their former designations.

The facts lie within a narrow compass, and there is no controversy about any of them.

On the 8th of August, 1873, Henry E. Picket made his ten promissory notes of that date, each for $5,000, all payable to his own order, indorsed by him, all bearing interest at the rate of ten per cent, payable semi-annually and all payable one year from date. Eight of these notes are described in the plaintiff's declaration. Picket delivered the notes to the defendant to be negotiated to the plaintiff, pursuant to a prior agreement between him and the defendant, that the latter should so negotiate the notes and apply the proceeds to the cancellation of other indebtedness then due from him to the defendant. On the 8th of August, 1873, M. D. Buchanan, Vice-President, and one of the directors of the defendant, with the knowledge and consent of the president and cashier of the defendant, who were also directors, but without any authority from the Board of Directors, as a Board, or of a majority of them individually, or any notification to the Board of Directors, as a Board, transmitted the notes to the plaintiff with a letter, in which occurs the following language: "In accordance with your telegram I herewith hand you ten notes of $5,000 each," etc., * * * "We debit your account $50,000." * * * "This bank hereby guarantees the payment of the principal sum and interest of said notes." This letter was written below one of defendant's letter-heads, and signed "M. D. Buchanan, Vice-President." The notes were also indorsed, "Henry E. Picket," and below, "M. D. Buchanan, Vice-President Manufacturers' National Bank." The defendant was the plaintiff's correspondent at Chicago, and the plaintiff's account with the defendant was debited with $50,000 on account of the notes. At the same time, Picket's paper in the defendant's hands was canceled to the same amount. All the notes were protested at maturity for non-payment, and due notice was given to the defendant. Nothing has been paid on either of the notes. Besides a special count in the declaration upon the guaranty of each of the eight notes involved in this suit, there was a common count for money had and received.

The case was submitted in this court without an oral argument. The opinion of the learned Judge who decided the case in the circuit court is not in the record, and no brief has been submitted on behalf of the defendant. A few remarks will suffice to give our view of the law touching the rights of the parties.

The national Banking Act, 13 Stat. at L., 99, R. S., 999, sec. 5136, gives to every bank created under it the right "To exercise by its Board of Directors, or duly authorized agents, all such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on the business of banking, by discounting and negotiating promissory notes, drafts, bills of exchange and other evidences of debt, by receiving deposits," etc. Nothing in the Act explains or qualifies the terms italicized. To hand over with an indorsement and guaranty is one of the commonest modes of transferring the securities named. Undoubtedly, a bank might indorse, "waiving demand and notice," and would be bound accordingly. A guaranty is a less onerous and stringent contract than that created by such an indorsement. We see no reason to doubt that, under the circumstances of this case, it was competent for the defendant to give the guaranty here in question. It is to be presumed the Vice-President had rightfully the power he assumed to exercise, and the defendant is estopped to deny it. Where one of two innocent parties must suffer for the wrongful act of a third, he who gave the power to do the wrong must bear the burden of the consequences.

The doctrine of ultra vires has no application in cases like this. Merch. Bk. v. St. Bk., 10 Wall., 604 [77 U. S., XIX., 1008].

All the parties engaged in the transaction and the privies were agents of the defendant. If there were any defect of authority on their part, the retention and enjoyment of the proceeds of the transaction by their principal constituted an acquiescence as effectual as would have been the most formal authorization in advance, or the most formal ratification afterwards. These facts conclude the defendant from resisting the demand of the plaintiff. Whart. Ag., sec. 89; Big. Estop., 423; R. R. Co. v. Howard, 7 Wall., 392 [74 U. S., XIX., 117]; Kelsey v. Bk., 69 Pa., 426; Steamboat Co. v. McCutchen, 15 Pa., 13.

A different result would be a reproach to our jurisprudence.

Whether, if the guaranty were void, the fund received by the defendant as its consideration moving from the plaintiff could be recovered back in this action upon the common count, is a point which we do not find it necessary to consider. See, U. S. v. Bk., 96 U. S., 33 [XXIV., 647].

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed and the case is remanded, with directions to enter a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in error.

v.

CHARLES H. CLIFTON ET AL.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 225-231.)

Marriage settlement—trustees—revocation—husband's interest—good faith.

1. A husband has a right to settle a portion of his property upon his wife, and thus provide against the vicissitudes of fortune, when this can be done without impairing existing claims of creditors.

2. Real or personal property may be given or devised to, or settled upon a married woman, either before or after marriage, for her separate and exclusive use, without the intervention of trustees.

3. The power of revocation and appointment to other uses, reserved to the husband in the deeds, do not impair their validity or their efficiency in transferring the estate to the wife, to be held by her until such revocation or appointment be made.

4. That power is not an interest in the property which can be transferred to another, or sold on execution, or devised by will, or which passes to his assignee in bankruptcy.

5. The presence of his reservation in the deed does not tend to create an imputation upon his good faith and honesty in the transaction.

[No. 695.]

Submitted Dec. 8, 1879. Decided Mar. 2, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Connecticut.

The appellant brought this suit in equity in the court below, attacking the validity of two deeds made by the bankrupt, the appellee, Charles H. Clifton, directly to his wife, the other appellee, and seeking a decree declaring them to be invalid, and that the property purporting to be conveyed thereby had vested in and should be surrendered to the appellant. On the hearing a decree was entered dismissing the bill with costs; and thereupon an appeal was immediately prayed and allowed in open court.

Messrs. B. H. Bristow and James A. Beattie, for appellant:

The deeds here, nominally, convey the property to the separate use of Mrs. Clifton, but they do not in fact, nor are they in the nature of a provision for her; nor did they distinctly separate the property from Clifton's other estate. It remained as much under his dominion after as before the deeds were made. The separate estate of a married woman is that alone of which she has exclusive control, independent of her husband, and the proceeds of which she may dispose of as she pleases.

Petty v. Malier, 14 B. Mon., 247; Harris v. Harbeson, 9 Bush, 402; 2 Perry, Trusts, 2d ed., sec. 651.

The powers here are such as would have enabled Clifton to dispose of the property for his own benefit when he saw fit, and for him to have done so would not have been fraud on the powers.

The legal title to the property remained in Clifton. The deeds being void at law, only an equitable interest, if anything, could pass by them, the legal title remaining with the husband, who, in a proper case would be treated as a trustee for the wife.

1 Bish. Mar. Wom., sec. 717.

Clifton, then, under these deeds, held the legal title to the property, coupled with the power of disposing of it for his own benefit. This seems to be nothing less than absolute ownership.

As these deeds really make provision for Clifton himself, by means of the large powers reserved, they are fraudulent and void, even as to subsequent creditors.

Mr. Martin Bijur and Bijur & Davie, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit to set aside two deeds executed by Charles H. Clifton, to his wife, and to compel a transfer of the property embraced in them to his assignee in bankruptcy. Clifton married in 1870, and was possessed at the time of a large estate. Previously to his marriage he had taken out three policies of insurance on his life, each for $10,000. Soon after his marriage he took out two additional policies on his life, each for the same amount as the previous ones. In October, 1872, by his deed-poll he conveyed to his wife, in consideration of the love and affection he bore her, to hold as her separate estate, free from his control, use and benefit, a small parcel of land in the City of Louisville, in the State of Kentucky; and by the same instrument, upon the like consideration, and to be held for the same separate use of his wife, he assigned to her the five policies of insurance on his life.

The deed contained a clause reserving to himself the power to revoke the grant and assignment, in whole or in part, and to transfer the property to any uses he might appoint, and to such person or persons as he might designate, and to cause such uses to spring or shift as he might declare.

In April, 1873, by another deed-poll, he conveyed to his wife, upon like consideration of love and affection, to hold as her separate estate, free from his control, use or benefit, two other parcels of land; one consisting of a lot in the City of Louisville, Kentucky, and the other his country place in the County of Jefferson, in that State, comprising thirty-eight acres. The instrument contained a reservation of a power of revocation and appointment to other uses similar to that of the first deed, the power of appointment, however, being somewhat fuller, in providing for its execution either by deed or writing, to take effect as a devise under the Statute of Wills in Kentucky.

These deeds were properly acknowledged and recorded in the counties where the real property was situated. At the time of their execution, the grantor was not in any business, and did not intend engaging in any; was worth about $250,000, and owed only a few inconsiderable debts, which were soon afterwards paid. The deeds were made at the urgent solicitation of his wife, who perceived that his habits were those of an indiscreet young man, somewhat inclined to dissipation, and she was naturally desirous of providing against a possible waste of his property.

In 1873, a general financial panic passed over the country; the values of all kinds of property greatly depreciated in the market, and land in the country could scarcely be disposed of at any price. By the shrinkage in values and losses in the subsequent years of 1874 and 1875, by his being surety for others, and by bad management, his estate was wasted, and he became hopelessly insolvent. In December 1875, upon his petition, he was adjudged a bankrupt by the District Court of Kentucky. The complainant was subsequently appointed assignee of his effects, and received an assignment of his property. The proved debts against him amounted to $13,000, and his estate in the hands of the assignee was of little value.

The assignee seeks to set aside the deeds upon various grounds, which, however, may be embraced in the following: 1. That they are void, because made directly to his wife, without the intervention of a trustee, and so passed no interest to her; 2. That, by the reservation to the grantor of a power of revocation and appointment to other uses, they were designed to hinder and defraud his future creditors, whilst he retained the control and enjoyment of the property; and, 3. That the power of revocation and appointment were assets which passed to the assignee in bankruptcy, and can be executed by him for the benefit of creditors.

The questions thus presented, though interesting, are not difficult of solution. The right of a husband to settle a portion of his property upon his wife, and thus provide against the vicissitudes of fortune, when this can be done without impairing existing claims of creditors, is indisputable. Its exercise is upheld by the courts, as tending not only to the future comfort and support of the wife, but also, through her, to the support and education of any children of the marriage. It arises, as said by Chief Justice Marshall in Sexton v. Wheaton, as a consequence of that absolute power which a man possesses over his own property, by which he can make any disposition of it which does not interfere with the existing rights of others. In that case the husband had purchased a house and lot within the District of Columbia, and taken the conveyance in the name of his wife, and afterwards made improvements upon the property. Subsequently he became involved in debt, and his creditors, having obtained a judgment against him, filed a bill to subject this property to its payment, contending that the conveyance to the wife was fraudulent and void as to them, and praying that if the conveyance were upheld the wife might be compelled to account for the value of the improvements. But the court held, after an extended consideration of the authorities, that, as the husband was at the time free from debt, the conveyance was to be deemed a voluntary settlement upon her; and as it was not made with any fraudulent intent, it was valid against subsequent creditors; and that the improvements upon the property stood upon the same footing as the conveyance, it appearing that they had been made before the debts were contracted. 8 Wheat., 229. That case does not differ in principle from the one before us. The husband in this, as in that one, was free from debt when he made the deeds, which were voluntary settlements upon his wife. It cannot make any substantial difference that in the case cited the money of the husband was expended in the purchase of the property, and the conveyance was taken in the name of the wife; and that in the present case the property was owned at the time by the husband, and was transferred directly by him to her. The transaction, in its essential features, would have been the same as now, if the husband had sold his lands and invested the proceeds in other property and taken a conveyance in her name. The circuity of the proceeding would not have altered its character nor affected its validity. In all cases where a husband makes a voluntary settlement of any portion of his property for the benefit of others who stand in such a relation to him as to create an obligation, legal or moral, to provide for them, as in the case of a wife or children or parents, the only question that can properly be asked is: does such a disposition of the property deprive others of any existing claim to it? If it does not, no one can complain if the transfer be made matter of public record, and not be designed as a scheme to defraud future creditors. And it cannot make any difference through what channels the property passes to the party to be benefited, or to his or her trustee, whether it be by direct conveyance from the husband or through the intervention of others. The technical reasons of the common law arising from the unity of husband and wife, which would prevent a direct conveyance of the property from him to her for a valuable consideration, as upon a contract or purchase, have long since ceased to operate in the case of a voluntary transfer of property as a settlement upon her. The intervention of trustees, in order that the property conveyed may be held as her separate estate beyond the control or interference of her husband, though formerly held to be indispensable, is no longer required. This has been established in courts of equity, says Story, for more than a century, so "That whenever real or personal property is given or devised or settled upon a married woman, either before or after marriage, for her separate and exclusive use, without the intervention of trustees, the intention of the parties shall be effectuated in equity, and the wife's interest protected against the marital rights and claims of her husband, and of his creditors also." Eq. Jur., sec. 1380. And he adds to this observation, that "It will make no difference whether the separate estate be derived from her husband himself or a mere stranger; for, as to such separate estate, when obtained in either way, her husband will be treated as a mere trustee, and prohibited from disposing of it to her prejudice." There is nothing in the circumstances attending the execution of the deeds in this case which should prevent the full application of the doctrine stated for the protection of the wife's interest against the claim of the assignee for the benefit of the creditors of the husband. Lloyd v. Fulton, 91 U. S., 485 [XXIII., 365].

The powers of revocation and appointment to other uses reserved to the husband in the deeds in question, do not impair their validity or their efficiency in transferring the estate to the wife, to be held by her until such revocation or appointment be made. Indeed, such reservations are usual in family settlements, and are intended "To meet the ever-varying interests of family connections." Riggs v. Murray, 2 Johns. Ch., 565. So frequent is the necessity of a change in the uses of property thus settled, arising from the altered condition of the family, the addition or death of members, new occupations or positions in life, and a variety of other causes which will readily occur to everyone, that the absence of a power of revocation and of appointment to other uses in a deed of family settlement has often been considered a badge of fraud and, except when made solely to guard against the extravagance and imprudence of the settler, such settlements have, in many instances, been annulled on that ground. Several of them are cited in the very able and learned opinion of the District Judge who presided in the circuit court when this case was there heard. The law in England, by which property can be kept in the same families for many years, has, perhaps, caused greater importance to be given in that country than in this to the insertion in deeds of settlement of a power of revocation and appointment to other uses. Here the absence of the reservation is only a fact to be explained, and is to have more or less weight, according to the circumstances of each case. In the case before us, the husband does not appear to have had his attention drawn to the reservation. He desired to have the property settled upon his wife, and he intrusted the preparation of the deed to his counsel. There was clearly no fraudulent intent on his part; no proof of any such intent was produced or stated to be in existence. The only fraud asserted in argument to exist, is constructive fraud arising from the reservation in question. But its presence in the deed, as is clear from all the authorities, does not tend to create an imputation upon his good faith and honesty in the transaction. Huguenin v. Basely, 14 Ves., 273; Coutts v. Acworth, L. R., 8 Eq., 558; Wollaston v. Tribe, L. R., 9 Eq., 44; Everitt v. Everitt, L. R., 10 Eq., 405; Hall v. Hall, L. R., 14 Eq., 365; Phillips v. Mullings, L. R., 7 Ch. App., 244; Hall v. Hall, 8 Ch. App., 430; Toker v. Toker, 3 De G., J. & S., 487.

As is very justly observed in the opinion of the court below, the insertion of the power of revocation and new appointment, so far from proving that the grantor contemplated a fraud upon his future creditors, tends to show the contrary. Should he revoke the settlements, the property would revert to him and, of course, be liable for his debts; and should he exercise the power of appointment for the benefit of others, the estate appointed would be liable in equity for his debts.

The title to the land and policies passed by the deeds; a power only was reserved. That power is not an interest in the property which can be transferred to another, or sold on execution, or devised by will. The grantor could, indeed, exercise the power either by deed or will, but he could not vest the power in any other person to be thus executed. Nor is the power a chose in action. It did not, therefore, in our judgment, constitute assets of the bankrupt which passed to his assignee.

Decree affirmed.

Possession of public lands—void subsequent patent.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Illinois. The case is sufficiently stated by the court.

Messrs. A. L. Knapp and Clinton L. Conkling, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Chas. P. Wise, for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action of ejectment brought by Simmons, the plaintiff in error, against Wagner, the defendant, to recover the possession of the N. E. fr. 1-4 sec. 19, T. 4, N. R. 9 W. of the third principal meridian, Illinois. Simmons claimed title under a patent from the United States, dated April 25, 1871, granting him the lands as the assignee of one Mecke, who entered them at the Land-Office January 25, 1871. Wagner claimed through a purchase made under the old credit system, April 17, 1816, by one John Lewis, and a paper bearing date July 8, 1829, which purported to be a certificate of full payment of the purchase money in favor of William Russell.

A trial was had to the court without a jury, and resulted in a judgment for the defendant. There was no special finding of facts, but the evidence is set out in full in a bill of exceptions, which concludes as follows: "The court found the issue joined for the defendant on the ground that the premises in controversy, on the issue of the final certificate to William Russell, ceased to be a part of the public domain, and were not thereafter subject to entry by individuals or sale by the United States; and to which finding the plaintiff then and there excepted."

To justify this conclusion, the court must have found as a fact that the final certificate in question was a genuine document, and issued by the proper officer in the regular course of his official duty. This finding is conclusive on us, for we have many times decided that a bill of exceptions cannot be used to bring up the evidence for a review of the findings of fact. The Abbotsford [ante, 168], and the cases there cited. We have to consider, then, upon this branch of the case, only the question whether one in possession under such a certificate, without a patent, can successfully defend against an action of ejectment to recover the possession by the holder of a patent issued upon a subsequent purchase of the land as part of the public domain.

It is well settled that when lands have once been sold by the United States and the purchase money paid, the lands sold are segregated from the public domain and are no longer subject to entry. A subsequent sale and grant of the same lands to another person would be absolutely null and void so long as the first sale continued in force. Wirth v. Branson [ante, 86]; Frisbie v. Whitney, 9 Wall., 187 [76 U. S., XIX., 668]; Lytle v. Arkansas, 9 How., 314. Where the right to a patent has once become vested in a purchaser of public lands, it is equivalent, so far as the government is concerned, to a patent actually issued. The execution and delivery of the patent after the right to it has become complete, are the mere ministerial acts of the officers charged with that duty. Barney v. Dolph, 97 U. S., 652 [XXIV., 1063]; Stark v. Starrs, 6 Wall., 402 [73 U. S., XVII., 925].

This leads us to the inquiry, whether Lewis and his assigns had, under the facts as found, acquired a vested right in the lands when the entry was made by means of which Simmons got his patent. By the statute under which Lewis made his entry in 1816, it was provided that purchases of public lands might be made on credit and that when payment of the purchase money was completed the register of the Land-Office should give, "A certificate of the same to the party and, on producing to the Secretary of the Treasury the same final certificate, the President of the United States is hereby authorized to grant a patent of the lands to the said purchaser, his heirs or assigns." 2 Stat. at L., 76, sec. 7. It follows, then, that if the final certificate in this case was genuine and valid, as, in effect, it has been found to be, Russell, the assignee of Lewis, had the legal right to demand from the President a patent for the lands described. This, certainly, was a complete segregation of the lands in controversy at that date. The sale to Mecke and patent thereon to Simmons, more than thirty years afterwards, were null and void and conveyed no title as against Russell and his assigns. It is of no consequence whether the assignees of Russell could get a patent in their own names or not. After the certificate issued, the lands were no longer in law a part of the public domain, and the authority of the officers of the government to grant them, otherwise than to him or some person holding his rights, was gone. The question is not whether Wagner, if he was out of possession, could recover in ejectment upon the certificate, but whether Simmons can recover as against him. He is in a situation to avail himself of the weakness of the title of his adversary, and need not assert his own. We think it clear, therefore, that the court below was right in giving judgment for defendant on the facts found.

Several exceptions were taken, during the progress of the trial, to rulings on the admissibility of evidence. While errors have been formally assigned on all these exceptions, only a few have been insisted on in the argument. Some have been already disposed of, as the objections were made entirely upon the assumption that nothing short of a superior legal title could defeat the patent which Simmons held. There was some evidence to prove the signatures of the register to the final certificate. That was one of the facts in the case, and the general finding in favor of the validity of the certificate is equivalent to a finding that its due execution had been proved. The question here is, not whether the deeds from Lewis to Russell, without the clerk's certificate as to the official character of the officer before whom the acknowledgment was made, would be sufficient to justify the Register of the Land-Office in issuing his final certificate; but whether, in this action, they were admissible without such certificate to prove the fact that an assignment had been actually made. For aught we know, they were properly certified when presented to the register. Copies from the county records were offered in evidence below, and the records were made in 1816, long before any action was had by the register. It is not claimed that any certificate was necessary to authenticate them for record or to make them admissible as evidence in the cause.

On the whole, we see no error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

v.
PHILADELPHIA.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 528-540.)

License fee of city railroad—taxation—increase of license fee—charter rights.

1. A clause in a charter of a city railroad company, that the company shall pay such license for each car run as is paid by other passenger railway companies in the city, which was $30, is not a contract that the license charged for such cars should never exceed the sum of $30.

2. Taxation is an act of sovereignty to be performed, so far as it conveniently can be, with justice and equality to all.

3. A subsequent Act of the Legislature, which required such companies to pay the annual license of $50 for each car, is not unconstitutional as violating a contract.

4. Where power to alter, revoke or annul any charter of incorporation was vested in the Legislature by the Constitution of the State, before the defendant company was incorporated, the Legislature may increase such license fee.

Argued Jan. 29, 1880. Decided Mar. 2, 1880.

ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Pennsylvania.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. F. Carroll Brewster and David W. Sellers, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Charles E. Morgan, Jr., and William Newton West, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Stipulations in a statute of a State, exempting certain property, rights or franchises from taxation, or engaging that the same shall be taxed only at a certain rate, if made for a valuable consideration received by the State whose Legislature enacted the stipulation, is a contract and, as such, comes within the rules of decision specifying the description of contracts entitled to protection from modification or repeal under the guaranty of the 10th section of the 1st article of the Constitution.

Exemptions of the kind, however, are to be strictly construed, the rule being that the right of taxation exists unless the exemption is expressed in clear and unambiguous terms, and that, in order that it may be effectual, it must appear that the contract was made in consequence of some beneficial equivalent received by the State, it being conceded that if the exemption was granted only as a privilege it may be recalled at the pleasure of the Legislature. Cooley ley, Const. Lim., 4th ed., 342; Cooley, Tax., 146.

Companies were created by the Legislature of the State, more than thirty years ago, for running street cars in the streets of the plaintiff City, whose charters made it necessary that the managers should obtain the consent of the City Councils before they commenced to use and occupy the streets for that purpose. Ordinances were accordingly passed by the city authorities which required companies organized under such statutes to pay for the use of the City a license fee of $30 for each car intended to be run. Subsequent charters of the kind were granted by the Legislature, which did not contain any provision requiring the companies or their agents to procure the consent of the authorities of the City before they could use the public streets for the running of their passenger cars.

These companies denied the validity of the license charge, which gave rise to litigation and to new legislation, by which authority was given to the City Councils to provide by ordinance for the proper regulation of omnibuses or vehicles in the nature thereof, and to that end it was enacted that they might, from time to time, pass ordinances to provide for the issuing of licenses to as many persons as may apply to keep and use omnibuses or vehicles in the nature thereof, and to charge a reasonable annual or other sum therefor, and to provide for the punishment of the owners and drivers of the same for any violation of the provisions of the ordinances to be created by virtue of the authority conferred. Sess. L. Pa., 1850, 469.

Authority was, by that Act, expressly vested in the city authorities to pass ordinances upon the subject therein described, and to charge a reasonable annual license fee for the license or other sum for the same. Pending the period during which that enactment continued to be in operation, the Legislature of the State passed the Act incorporating the defendant Company, with the powers, privileges, duties and obligations expressed in the Act of incorporation. Sess. L. Pa., 1864, 300.

Corporate privileges of the usual character are, by the charter, granted to the Company, and the 10th section provides that whenever their dividends shall exceed six per centum per annum on the par value of the capital stock, the Company shall pay for the use of the City a tax of six per centum on such excess over six per centum on the par value, and that they shall also pay "Such license fee for each car run by the Company as is now paid by other passenger railway companies."

Railway companies running cars on the streets of the City were required to pay at the time the defendant Company was incorporated, for each and every car intended to be run, the annual license fee of $30, as appears by the ordinance then in force and fully set forth in the agreed statement of facts. Annual payments to that amount, it seems, were made by the defendant Company, which may be inferred from the fact that the plaintiff City makes no claim for any deficit during that period.

Coming to the matter in controversy, it appears that the Legislature, on the 11th of April, 1868, passed the Act which is the principal subject of controversy. Section 1 provides that the passenger railway corporations of the City shall pay annually to the City in the month of January, the sum of $50, as required by their charters, for each car intended to run over their roads during the year, and that they shall not be obliged to pay any larger sum; and the same section provides that the City shall have no power to regulate such companies unless so authorized by the laws of the State. Sess. L. Pa., 1868, 849.

Regular payments, as required, were made by the defendant Company until the year 1875, when they refused to pay any greater sum than $30 per year for each car run. Payment of the excess beyond $30 being refused, the authorities of the City instituted the present suit in the common pleas to recover the balance as claimed. Service was made, and the parties having appeared, filed the agreed statement of facts exhibited in the transcript. Hearing was had, and the court of original jurisdiction rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff City for the sum of $4,218.60. Dissatisfied with the judgment, the defendant Company removed the cause into the Supreme Court of the State, where the judgment was affirmed. Still not satisfied, the defendant Company removed the cause into this court, and assigns for error the following causes: (1) That the Act of the Legislature, defining the duties and liabilities of railway companies, is in conflict with that provision of the Constitution which prohibits a State from passing any law impairing the obligation of contracts. (2) That the judgment of the court below is in conflict with that provision of the Constitution.

Attempt was made about the time the defendant Company was incorporated to support the theory that a street passenger car was not a vehicle in the nature of an omnibus, and that the street passenger cars were not taxable in any form under the legislative Act which authorized the city authorities to issue licenses to persons to keep and use omnibuses or vehicles in the nature thereof, upon the ground that the street passenger car was not a vehicle in the nature of an omnibus. Controversy arose, and the Supreme Court of the State effectually disposed of the question in favor of the City.

Questions of importance were decided by the court in that case, most or all of which are more or less applicable to the case before the court. They are as follows: (1) That a grant to a corporation to carry passengers in cars over the streets of a city does not, necessarily, involve exemption from liability to municipal regulations, the right granted being neither greater nor less than that possessed by a natural person. (2) That when a corporation is authorized to pursue a specified business within a municipality, it is intended that the business shall be conducted under the rules, restrictions and regulations which govern others transacting the same business. (3) That the right to construct cars and own a railway neither enlarges nor diminishes the right to run cars and carry passengers, and that a reasonable charge for the use of the privilege to transact such a business is not a denial of the right. (4) That an ordinance, requiring passenger cars to be numbered and pay a stipulated sum when licensed, is a valid police regulation, and that such an ordinance might be passed under the Act which authorized the city authorities to pass ordinances for the licensing of omnibuses and other vehicles of conveyance of a like nature.

Since that decision, it is not doubted that the subject of imposing license fees, in cases like the present, is within the jurisdiction of the city authorities, if the statute under which they have exercised such jurisdiction is a valid Act passed in pursuance of the Constitution.

When the Company was incorporated, the charter, as before remarked, contained the provision providing for the payment of a six per cent tax on the excess of dividends over six per cent on the par value of the stock, and the further provision that the Company shall also pay such license for each car run as is now paid by other passenger railway companies in the city. What the defendants contend is that the closing enactment of the section amounts to a contract that the railway company shall never be required to pay any greater license fee than was then required of such companies running passenger cars on the streets of the City. Other railway companies at that time paid an annual license of $30, and the defendants insist that the Act of the Legislature increasing the license to $50 per annum is unconstitutional and void.

Two answers are made to that proposition by the plaintiff City, either of which is sufficient to show that the judgment must be affirmed: (1) That the language of the Act of incorporation referred to does not amount to a contract of any kind, and certainly not to such a contract as that attempted to be set up by the defendants. (2) That, even if the language employed in the charter is sufficient to amount to a contract that the license charge should not exceed the amount paid at that date by other such companies, still it cannot benefit the defendants, for the reason that the Constitution of the State in force when the Act of incorporation was passed provides that the Legislature shall have the power to alter, revoke or annul any charter of incorporation hereafter conferred by or under any special or general law, whenever in their opinion it may be injurious to the citizens, subject only to the condition that the alteration, revocation or annulment shall be made in such manner "that no injustice shall be done to the corporators." Art. 1, sec. 26; Purdon, Dig., 9th ed., p. 17.

Exemptions of the kind set up are to be strictly construed, but it is unnecessary to invoke that canon of construction to any considerable extent, as the language employed is not sufficient to take the case out of the rule that the alleged exemption will not be sustained unless it be expressed in clear and unambiguous terms. Taken in their widest sense, the words employed are no more than sufficient to warrant the construction that the Legislature intended that the Corporation should not then be required to pay any greater charge as license than other companies were required to pay for the same privilege, and it may, perhaps, be regarded as a guaranty against invidious exemptions adverse to the corporators in future legislation upon the subject; but it is plain that there is nothing in the language of the section to warrant the court in holding that the Legislature intended to contract that the license charged for such passenger cars should never exceed the annual sum of $30.

Railway companies of the kind, it appears, were first required to pay an annual sum of $50 for each car run the year previous to the passage of the Act which is the subject of controversy in the present litigation. Neither party refers to that Act as of any importance in this case, except as a part of the state legislation upon the subject. Then comes the Act in controversy, to which reference has already been made. Sess. L. Pa., 1868, 848.

When the street railway system of the City was comparatively in its infancy, the city authorities, under the legislative Act empowering them as such authorities to charge reasonable fees for granting licenses to such companies, fixed the sum at $80 per annum for each car run. Regulations of the kind were in force and operation when the charter of the defendant Company was granted. Other companies previously incorporated were at the time paying only that sum per annum for each car, and the 10th section of the charter granted to the defendant Company provided that the then new Company should pay the same as was paid by the other passenger railway companies.

Beyond doubt they were required to pay the same amount as was paid by the other companies, and it is, perhaps, a reasonable construction that, without further legislation, they could not be required to pay any greater sum, but the language of the section does not, in terms, contain any such prohibition. None of the other companies have any such immunity from increased taxation, and if construed to have that effect in favor of the defendant Company it would have an extremely invidious operation at the expense of all other similar companies. Invidious exemptions are not favored, nor ought they to be, as they are, in principle, utterly opposed to the rule of equality, which ought always to prevail in imposing public burdens.

Taxation is an act of sovereignty to be performed, so far as it conveniently can be, with justice and equality to all. Crawford v. Burrell, 53 Pa., 219; Cooley, Tax., 152. Common burdens should be sustained by common contributions, regulated by fixed rules, and be apportioned, as far as possible, in the ratio of justice and equity. Sutton v. Louisville, 5 Dana, 28, 31.

Viewed in the light of these suggestions, it is clear that the State never made such a contract with the defendant Company as that supposed in the assignment of errors.

It seems that the Supreme Court of the State, when it became their duty at an earlier period to examine the question, came to the conclusion that the power to impose the license or tax might be supported as a police power derived under the Act passed for the regulation of omnibuses or vehicles in the nature of the same, it appearing that at that time no legislative Act had conferred the express power to tax the cars of the Company. R. Co. v. Philadelphia, 58 Pa., 119-124.

Since that the Act in question in this case has been enacted, which itself requires all such companies without discrimination to pay the annual license or tax of $50 for each car intended to be run over the city roads during the year.

Stress, it appears, was laid in the court below upon the words of the Act, "as required by their charters," as if the obligation did not arise unless it was created by the terms of the charter; but the Supreme Court showed, conclusively, that the Act of the Legislature, when properly construed, did not sustain the proposition, and it appears to have been abandoned. Charters of the kind, as the Supreme Court showed in the opinion given in this case, required obedience to the lawful ordinances of the City under the exercise of its municipal powers, which, as the Supreme Court there say, is plainly evidenced by the remainder of the section imposing the tax of $50, by which the Legislature took away from the City all power by ordinance or otherwise to regulate passenger railways, "Unless authorized by the express terms of a law referring directly to such corporations."

Voluntary payments of the amount imposed by the new Act were made by the Company for sixty or seventy cars, from which the Supreme Court of the State held that it followed as a legal conclusion that the Company had accepted the Act.

All power to regulate such companies, by ordinance or otherwise, was taken away from the City during that period, and the court held that, inasmuch as the Company had enjoyed the benefit of that prohibition ever since it was enacted, it must be understood that they have accepted the Act. Some weight is, doubtless, to be given to that argument, but it is clear that the right of the State to impose such a tax, rate or imposition in the future cannot be taken away by mere implication arising from a direction to pay a certain sum, the universal rule being that it requires some plainer negative of the power of the State to levy moneys for public purposes than is found in such a direction. Indications of such an intention might, perhaps, be found in other statutory provisions, sufficient, when added to such a direction and when taken together as a whole, to amount to a contract to relinquish the power; but when it is sought to prove such an exemption the statutory evidence of the same must be plain and unambiguous, and if not direct it must at least be such as is inconsistent with any other hypothesis, and conclusive that such was the intention of the Legislature. Cooley, Const. Lim., 4th ed., 341.

II. Much discussion of the second proposition, in view of the conclusive support given to the first, is quite unnecessary. Power to alter, revoke or annul any charter of incorporation was vested in the Legislature by the Constitution more than a quarter of a century before the defendant Company was incorporated.

Even when the language of the charter is sufficient to amount to a contract, it was twice admitted by Judge Story, in Dart. Coll. v. Woodward, that alterations and amendments may be made in the charter, where the power for that purpose is reserved to the Legislature in the Act of incorporation. 4 Wheat., 518, 708, 712.

Acts of incorporation, granted subsequently to the adoption of the Constitution, must be construed as if the provision of the instrument in question was embodied in the charter. Private charters, of the kind importing such an exemption, are held to be contracts because they are based for their consideration on the liabilities and duties which the corporators assume by accepting the terms therein specified; and the general rule is, that the grant of the franchise on that account can no more be resumed by the Legislature, or its benefits be diminished or impaired without the assent of the corporators, than any other grant of property or legal estate, unless the right to do so is reserved in the Act of incorporation, or by some immemorial usage or general law of the State in operation at the time the charter was granted. Holyoke Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall., 500, 511 [82 U. S., XXI., 133, 137].

Charters of private corporations duly accepted, it must be admitted, are, in general, executed contracts, but the different provisions, unless they are clear, unambiguous and free of doubt, are subject to construction, and their true intent and meaning must be ascertained by the same rules of interpretation as apply to other legislative grants, the universal rule being, that, whenever the privileges granted to such a corporation come under revision in the courts, the grant is to be strictly construed against the corporation and in favor of the public, and that nothing passes to the corporation but what is granted in clear and explicit terms. Rice v. R. R. Co., 1 Black, 358 [66 U. S., XVII., 147]; Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet., 420.

Whatever is not unequivocally granted in such charters is taken to have been withheld, as all such charters and Acts extending the privileges of corporate bodies are to be taken most strongly against the corporators. Sedgwick, Stat., 2d ed., 292; Lees v. Canal Co., 11 East, 645.

Vested rights, it is conceded, cannot be impaired under such a reserved power, but it is clear that the power may be exercised and to almost any extent, to carry into effect the original purposes of the grant and to protect the rights of the public and of the corporators, or to promote the due administration of the affairs of the corporation. College Cases, 13 Wall., 190, 218 [80 U. S., XX., 550, 554].

Tested by these considerations, it is clear, even if it be admitted that the language of the charter is sufficient to import a contract, that the power of the Legislature under the Constitution is amply sufficient to justify that department of the State to pass the Act raising the license for each car from $30 to $50.

Judgment affirmed.

WILLIAM T. WOLSEY ET AL., AND THE STATE OF IOWA, Appts.,
v.
RICHARD B. CHAPMAN.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 755-772.)

Lands donated to Iowa—reservation of public lands from sale—President's order—grants to Iowa—adjustment between U. S. and Iowa—Des Moines Company.

1. The title of the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company to the lands donated to Iowa for the improvement of Des Moines River, by the Act of Aug. 8, 1846, is good as against the State and Railroad companies under the Railroad Grant of 1856, and as against preemptioners after 1855 under the Act of 1841.

2. There can be no reservation of public lands from sale except by reason of some treaty, law or authorized act of the Executive Department of the

See 11 Otto.

Government; and the acts of the heads of departments, within the scope of their powers, are in law the acts of the President.

3. An order sent out from the appropriate executive department in the regular course of business, is the legal equivalent of the President's own order, reserving lands from sale.

4. The grant by the United States to Iowa in 1861 was for the benefit of bona fide purchasers from the State under the grant of Aug. 8, 1846 and not to purchasers under the school land grant.

5. The adjustment of 1866 between the United States and Iowa settled no rights as between any other parties than the State and the United States.

6. The Governor had the right to convey to the Des Moines Company, under the Joint Resolution of Mar. 22, 1858, all the lands which had before that time been approved and certified to the State under the river grant, excepting such as had been sold or agreed to be sold by the officers of the State prior to Dec. 23, 1853, "under said grant."

A PPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Iowa.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. Galusha Parsons, for appellants.

Messrs. Geo. G. Wright and E. C. Litchfield, for appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This case presents again for consideration the Des Moines River improvement grant. 9 Stat. at L., 77. It is a suit in equity brought by Chapman, who claims under the river grant, to quiet his title as against Wolsey, whose rights depend on a patent from the State of Iowa granting the lands in dispute as part of lands ceded to the State under the 8th section of the Act of Congress passed September 4, 1841, entitled "An Act to Appropriate the Proceeds of the Sales of the Public Lands and to Grant Preemption Rights." 5 Stat. at L., 453. That section is as follows:

"Section 8. And be it further enacted, that there shall be granted to each State specified in the 1st section of this Act five hundred thousand acres of land for purposes of internal improvement; Provided, That, to each of the said States which has already received grants for said purposes there is hereby granted no more than a quantity of land which shall, together with the amount such State has already received as aforesaid, make five hundred thousand acres, the selections in all of the said States to be made within their limits respectively in such manner as the Legislature thereof shall direct; and located in parcels conformably to sectional divisions and subdivisions, of not less than three hundred and twenty acres in any one location, on any public land except such as is or may be reserved from sale by any law of Congress or Proclamation of the President of the United States, which said locations may be made at any time after the lands of the United States in said States, respectively, shall have been surveyed according to existing laws. And there shall be, and hereby is granted to each new State that shall be hereafter admitted into the Union, upon such admission, so much land as including such quantity as may have been granted to such State before its admission, and while under territorial government, for purposes of internal improvement as aforesaid, as shall make five hundred thousand acres of land, to be selected and located as aforesaid."

Section 10 granted preemption rights in the public lands, but provided that "No lands included in any reservation, by any treaty, law or Proclamation of the President of the United States, or reserved for salines, or for other purposes; no lands reserved for the support of schools, nor the lands acquired by either of the last two Treaties with the Miami Tribe of Indians in the State of Indiana, or which may be acquired of the Wyandot Tribe of Indians in the State of Ohio, or other Indian reservation to which the title has been or may be extinguished by the United States at any time during the operation of this Act; no sections of land reserved to the United States alternate to other sections granted to any of the States for the construction of any canal, railroad or other public improvement; no sections or fractions of sections included within the limits of any incorporated town; no portions of the public lands which have been selected as the site for a city or town; no parcel or lot of land actually settled and occupied for the purposes of trade and not agriculture; and no lands on which are situated any known salines or mines, shall be liable to entry under and by virtue of the provisions of this Act."

At that time Iowa was a Territory, organized under the Act of June 12, 1838. 5 Stat. at L., 235. On the 8th of August, 1846, Congress passed the Act making the Des Moines River grant, 9 Stat. at L., 77, the material parts of which are as follows:

"An Act Granting Certain Lands to the Territory of Iowa, to Aid in the Improvement of the Navigation of the Des Moines River, in said Territory.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that there be, and hereby is granted to said Territory of Iowa, for the purpose of aiding said Territory to improve the navigation of the Des Moines River from its mouth to the Raccoon Fork (so-called) in said Territory, one equal moiety, in alternate sections, of the public lands (remaining unsold, and not otherwise disposed of, incumbered, or appropriated), in a strip five miles in width on each side of said river, to be selected within said Territory, by an agent or agents to be appointed by the Governor thereof, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

Section 2. And be it further enacted, That the lands hereby granted shall not be conveyed or disposed of by said Territory, nor by any State to be formed out of the same, except as said improvements shall progress; that is, the said Territory or State may sell so much of said lands as shall produce the sum of $30,000, and then the sales shall cease until the Governor of said Territory or State shall certify the fact to the President of the United States that one half of said sum has been expended upon said improvements, when the said Territory or State may sell and convey a quantity of the residue of said lands sufficient to replace the amount expended; and thus the sale shall progress as the proceeds thereof shall be expended, and the fact of such expenditure shall be certified as aforesaid.

Section 4. And be it further enacted, That whenever the Territory of Iowa shall be admitted into the Union as a State, the lands hereby granted for the above purpose shall be and become the property of said State for the purpose contemplated in this Act and for no other, provided the Legislature of the State of Iowa shall accept the said grant for the said purpose."

On the 28th of December, 1846, Iowa was admitted into the Union as a State. 9 Stat. at L., 117. By the Constitution, under which the admission was granted, the 500,000 acres of land to which the State became entitled by the Act of 1841 were appropriated to the use of common schools (Const. Iowa, 1846, art. 9, School Fund and Schools, sec. 3), and on the 2d of March, 1849, Congress, by a special Act, assented to this appropriation. 9 Stat. at L., 349.

On the 17th of October, 1846, the Commissioner of the General Land-Office requested the Governor of the Territory to appoint an agent to select the land under the river grant, at the same time intimating that the grant only extended from the Missouri line to the Raccoon Fork of the Des Moines River. On the 17th of December, a few days before the admission of the State, the territorial authorities designated the odd numbered sections as the lands selected under the grant. The State accepted the grant in form, by Joint Resolution of the General Assembly approved January 9, 1847. On the 24th of February following, the State created a "Board of Public Works," to whom were committed the work, construction and management of the river improvement, and the care, control, sale, disposal and management of the lands granted the State by the Act of 1846. This Board was organized September 22, 1847, and on the 17th of February, 1848, the Commissioner of the General Land-Office, in an official communication to the Secretary of the Board, gave it as the opinion of his office that the grant extended throughout the whole length of the river within the limits of the State. On the 19th of June, 1848, without any notice of a revocation of this opinion, a Proclamation was issued by the President, putting in market some of the lands above the Raccoon Fork which would go to the State if the Commissioner was right in the construction he gave the grant. This led to a correspondence on the subject between the proper officers of the State and the United States, which resulted in the promulgation of an official opinion by the Secretary of the Treasury, bearing date March 2, 1849, to the effect that the grant extended from the Missouri line to the source of the river. In consequence of this opinion, the Commissioner of the General Land-Office, on the first of the following June, directed the registers and receivers of the local land-offices to withhold from sale all the odd numbered sections within five miles on each side of the river above the Raccoon Fork.

Afterwards, the state authorities called on the Commissioner of the General Land-Office for a list of lands above the Raccoon Fork which would fall to the State under this ruling. The list was accordingly made out, and on the 14th of January, 1850, submitted to the Secretary of the Interior for approval; jurisdiction of matters of that kind having before that been transferred by law from the Treasury to the Interior department. On the 6th of April, the Secretary returned the list to the Land-Office with a letter declining to recognize the grant as extending above the Raccoon Fork without the aid of an explanatory Act of Congress, but advised that any immediate steps for bringing the lands into market be postponed, in order that Congress might have an opportunity of acting on the matter if it saw fit.

On the 20th of July, 1850, the agent of the State having in charge the school lands and school fund gave notice at the General Land-Office that he had selected the particular piece of land in controversy in this suit as part of the 500,000 acre grant under the Act of 1841. Other lands coming within the river grant, if extended above the Raccoon Fork, amounting in the aggregate with this piece to 12,813 $\frac{51}{100}$ acres, were included in a list of similar selections approved at the Land Department in Washington on the 20th of February, 1851. Two days afterwards, February 22, the Board of Public Works of the State formally demanded of the Secretary of the Interior for the river grant all the alternate odd sections above the fork. On the 26th of July the order of the Secretary of the Interior, under date of April 6, 1850, withholding the disputed lands from sale, was continued in force until the end of the approaching session of Congress, in order to give the State an opportunity of petitioning for an extension of the grant.

On the 29th of October, 1851, the Secretary of the Interior, after consultation with the President and his Cabinet, and pursuant to a decision there made, wrote the Commissioner of the General Land-Office as follows:

"Sir:—I herewith return all the papers in the Des Moines Case, which were recalled from your office about the first of the present month.

I have reconsidered and carefully reviewed my decision of the 26th July last, and in doing so find that no decision which I can make will be final, as the question involved partakes more of a judicial than an executive character, which must ultimately be determined by the judicial tribunals of the country; and although my own opinion on the true construction of the grant is unchanged, yet, in view of the great conflict of opinion among the executive officers of the government, and also in view of the opinions of several eminent jurists which have been presented to me in favor of the construction contended for by the State, I am willing to recognize the claim of the State, and to approve the selections without prejudice to the rights, if any there be, of other parties, thus leaving the question as to the proper construction of the statute entirely open to the action of the judiciary. You will please, therefore, as soon as may be practicable, submit for my approval such lists as may have been prepared, and proceed to report for like approval lists of the alternate sections claimed by the State of Iowa above the Raccoon Fork, as far as the surveys have progressed, or may hereafter be completed and returned."

The lists were made out accordingly, and the following indorsement put thereon by the Secretary:

"The selections embraced in the within list (No. 3) are hereby approved in accordance with the views expressed in my letter of the 29th instant to the Commissioner of the General Land-Office, subject to any rights which may have existed at the time the selections were made known to the Land-Office by the agents of the State, it being expressly understood that this See 11 OTTO.

approval conveys to the State no title to any tract or tracts which may have been sold or otherwise disposed of prior to the receipt by the local land-officers of the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land-Office, communicating the decision of Mr. Secretary Walker, to the effect that the grant extended above the Raccoon Fork."

No. 3 showed the vacant lands above the Raccoon Fork subject to the claim of the State, and included the particular parcel involved in this suit. On the 16th of March, 1852, the list was forwarded to the several local land-offices as showing the land which fell to the State under the construction given the river grant by the Secretary of the Treasury, March 2, 1849, and by the Secretary of the Interior, October 29, 1851.

On the 20th of August, 1853, the School Fund Commissioner of Webster County, under the authority of an Act of the General Assembly of the State of the 25th of February, 1847, entitled "An Act to Provide for the Management and Disposition of the School Fund," contracted to sell to William T. Wolsey the land about which this suit arose. The purchase money having been paid in full, the Governor of the State, on the 20th of December, 1854, issued to Wolsey a patent in the form required to pass title under such a sale. This patent purported, on its face, to have been granted as and for a conveyance of school lands.

On the 6th of January, 1854, after the contract of sale to Wolsey, but before the issue of the patent, the Commissioner of the General Land-Office formally withdrew the approval by the Land Department of the selection of lands as part of the 500,000 acre grant which fell within the river grant, according to the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, March 2, 1849, and the Secretary of the Interior, October 29, 1851. On the 30th of December, 1853, the Secretary of the Interior approved to the State, "under the Act of August 8, 1846, without prejudice to the rights, if any there be, of other parties," a list of the 12,813 $\frac{51}{100}$ acres erroneously approved, 20th February, 1851, as lands selected under the Act of 1841, "previous to the adjustment of the grant, and before it was known that they belonged to the State under the Des Moines River grant."

Until the 17th of December, 1853, the State itself, through its Board of Public Works, carried on the work of improving the river, paying the expense from the proceeds of the sales of the lands included in the river grant. A land-office had also been established for the sale of these lands. On that day the State entered into a contract with one Henry O'Reilly to complete the work. This contract O'Reilly transferred, with the consent of the State, to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, a New York corporation, and on the 9th of June, 1854, in consequence of this transfer, a new contract was entered into between the State and the corporation for the purpose of simplifying and more fully explaining the original contracts and agreements. By the new contract, the State agreed to convey to the company "All of the lands donated to the State of Iowa for the improvement of the Des Moines River by Act of Congress of August 8, 1846, which the said party of the second part (the State) had not sold up to the 23d day of December, 1853." This was the date at which it was supposed the sale of the lands could be stopped at the State Land-Office after the contract with O'Reilly.

On the 15th of May, 1856, Congress passed an Act, 11 Stat. at L., 9, granting to the State of Iowa, to aid in the construction of certain railroads, every alternate section of land designated by odd numbers for six sections in width on each side of each of the several roads. The granting clause of the Act contained, however, the following proviso:

"And provided further, That any and all lands heretofore reserved to the United States by any Act of Congress, or in any other manner by competent authority, for the purpose of aiding in any object of internal improvement, or for any other purpose whatsoever, be and the same are hereby reserved to the United States from the operation of this Act, except so far as it may be found necessary to locate the routes of said railroads through such reserved lands, in which case the right of way only shall be granted, subject to the approval of the President of the United States."

In 1856, the Commissioner of the General Land-Office decided not to certify any more lands to the State under the river grant, and thereupon the navigation company suspended work on the improvement. This led to a settlement between the State and the company, under the authority of a Joint Resolution of the General Assembly for that purpose, passed March 22, 1858, by which the State agreed to convey to the navigation company all the lands contained in the river grant which had been approved and certified to the State by the General Government, "Excepting all lands sold or conveyed, or agreed to be sold or conveyed by the State of Iowa, by its officers and agents, prior to the 23d day of December, 1853, under said grant." Afterwards, May 3, 1858, the Governor of the State executed to the company a deed conveying the lands now in controversy, with others, by a specific description of sections, townships and ranges; and on the 18th of the same month he executed another deed, which purported, on its face, to have been made pursuant to the Joint Resolution of the General Assembly authorizing the settlement with the company, and described the lands in the exact language of general description used in the Resolution.

Chapman, the plaintiff below, has all the title to the lands involved in this suit which passed in this way to the navigation company.

At the December Term, 1859, of this court, and during the month of April, 1860, in the case of R. R. Company v. Litchfield, 23 How., 66 [64 U. S., XVI., 500], it was decided that the river grant as originally made did not extend above the Raccoon Fork, and thereupon, on the 18th of May, 1860, the Commissioner of the General Land Office sent to the registers and receivers of the local land-offices a notice to be promulgated, as follows:

"Notice is hereby given that the lands along the Des Moines River, in Iowa, and within the claimed limits of the Des Moines grant in that State, above the mouth of the Raccoon Forks of said river, which have been reserved from sale heretofore on account of the claim of the State thereto, will continue reserved for the time being from sale or from location by any species of scrip or warrants, notwithstanding the recent decisions of the Supreme Court against the claim.

This action is deemed necessary to afford time for Congress to consider, upon memorial or otherwise, the case of actual, bona fide settlers holding under titles from the State, and to make such provision, by confirmation or adjustment of the claims of such settlers, as may appear to be right and proper."

On the 2d of March, 1861, 12 Stat. at L., 251, Congress passed the following Joint Resolution: "Joint Resolution to Quiet Title to lands in the State of Iowa.

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all the title which the United States still retain in the tracts of land along the Des Moines River, and above the mouth of the Raccoon Forks thereof, in the State of Iowa, which have been certified to said State improperly by the Department of the Interior as part of the grant by Act of Congress, approved August 8, 1846, and which is now held by bona fide purchasers under the State of Iowa, be and the same is hereby relinquished to the State of Iowa."

And on the 12th July, 1862, 12 Stat. at L., 543, the following Act was passed:

"Be it enacted, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the grant of lands to the then Territory of Iowa, for the improvement of the Des Moines River, made by the Act of August 8, 1846, is hereby extended so as to include the alternate sections (designated by odd numbers) lying within five miles of said river, between the Raccoon Forks and the northern boundary of said State; such lands are to be held and applied in accordance with provisions of the original grant, except that the consent of Congress is hereby given to the application of a portion thereof to aid in the construction of the Keokuk, Fort Des Moines and Minnesota Railroad, in accordance with the provisions of the Act of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, approved March 22, 1858; and if any of said lands shall have been sold or otherwise disposed of by the United States before the passage of this Act, excepting those released by the United States to the grantees of the State of Iowa, under the Joint Resolution of March 2, 1862, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to set apart an equal amount of lands within said State to be certified in lieu thereof; Provided, That if the said State shall have sold and conveyed any portion of the lands lying within the limits of this grant, the title of which has proved invalid, any lands which shall be certified to said State in lieu thereof, by virtue of the provisions of this Act, shall inure to and be held as a trust fund for the benefit of the person or persons respectively whose titles shall have failed as aforesaid."

After the passage of the Joint Resolution of March 2, 1861, the Commissioner of the General Land Office called on the Governor of the State for a list of the tracts of land "held by bona fide purchasers of the State of Iowa" on that date. In response to this request, the Governor and Land Commissioner of the State, on the 20th of November, 1862, furnished the list required, and, among others, included the tracts granted to the navigation company on the settlement made with that company under the Joint Resolution of March 22, 1858. This list was filed in the General Land Office December 1, 1862.

On the 30th of March, 1866, an Act was passed by the General Assembly of Iowa providing for the adjustment of certain land claims with the General Government. By this Act, Josiah A. Harvey, the Register of the State Land-Office, was appointed a commissioner to adjust the matters in dispute, and especially the excess of land which had been certified to the State above what it was entitled to receive under the Act of September 4, 1841, and the lands falling due under the Joint Resolution of March 2, 1861, and the Act of July 12, 1862.

This Act contained the following section:

"Section 2. Said commissioner shall proceed to Washington City and present said claims to the Department of the Interior, and urge the same to settlement as early and as speedily as may be consistent with the interests of the State; and he is hereby authorized to adjust the said excess of the 500,000 acre grant by permitting the United States to retain, out of the indemnity land falling to the State under said Act of Congress of July 12, 1862, an amount equivalent to such excess: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to be a relinquishment of the claim of the State under the said 500,000 acre grant to the $12,813\frac{55}{100}$ acres selected as a part of such grant, and subsequently rejected from a supposed conflict with the Act of Congress approved August, 1846, known as the Des Moines River grant; and the said commissioner is hereby instructed to secure a restoration of said selections as a part of the 500,000 acre grant, and a confirmation of the title of the State thereto, as a part of such grant."

Under this authority an adjustment was had with the United States, by which it appeared that the State was entitled to $558,004\frac{96}{100}$ acres, under the river grant, and that under the 500,000 acre grant it had received certificates for $22,660\frac{8}{100}$ acres more than it was entitled to if the $12,813\frac{55}{100}$ acres, also certified under the river grant, was not included, and $35,473\frac{54}{100}$ if it was. The excess was charged to the account of the river grant, and a balance struck accordingly. The Navigation and Railroad Company was not a party to this settlement. The adjustment was ratified by an Act of the General Assembly of the State passed March 31, 1868.

At the December Term, 1866, of this court, it was decided, in the case of Wolcott v. Des Moines Co., 5 Wall., 681 [72 U. S., XVIII., 689], that the lands included in the river grant above the Fork, as finally settled by Congress, did not pass to the State for the benefit of the railroad companies under the Act of 1856, because, at the time of the passage of that Act, the lands were reserved for the purpose of aiding in the improvement of the Des Moines River and, therefore, fell within the proviso limiting the grant to lands not so reserved.

At the December Term, 1869, of this court it was decided in the case of Riley v. Welles, No. 397 on the docket of the Term, but not reported [reported in this edition, XIX., 648], that the lands above the Racoon Fork were so far "reserved" by the action of the officers of the United States as not to be subject to preemption in 1855, under the 10th section of the Act of 1841.

On the 3d of March, 1871, Congress passed an Act, 16 Stat. at L., 582, ratifying and confirming to the State of Iowa and its grantees the title to the lands, in accordance with the adjustment made in 1866; but expressly provided "That nothing in this Act contained shall be so construed as to affect adversely any existing legal rights, or the rights of any party claiming title, or the right to acquire title, to any part of said lands under the provisions of the so-called homestead or preempted laws of the United States, or claiming any part thereof as swamp lands."

At the December Term, 1872, of this court, after full consideration, the cases of Wolcott v. Des Moines Co., and Riley v. Welles [supra] were distinctly affirmed in Williams v. Baker, 17 Wall., 144 [84 U. S., XXI., 561]; and in Homestead Co. v. R. R. Co., 17 Wall., 153 [84 U. S., XXI., 622], it was said to be "No longer an open question that neither the State of Iowa, nor the railroad companies for whose benefit the grant of 1856 was made, took any title by that Act to the lands claimed to belong to the Des Moines River grant of 1846, and that the Joint Resolution of 2d of March, 1861, and Act of July 12, 1862, transferred the title from the United States and vested it in the State of Iowa for the use of its grantees under the river grant."

The State voluntarily made itself a party to this suit, for the purpose of defending its title to the lands in controversy as part of its school lands. An Act of the General Assembly was passed March 12, 1874, authorizing this to be done.

Upon this state of facts, the court below granted the relief asked by the bill and sustained the title of Chapman. To reverse that decree this appeal was taken.

The following propositions were relied upon in the argument for the appellants:

1. That the lands in question were not "reserved" lands within the meaning of the exception in section 8, of the Act of 1841.
2. That Chapman, claiming as he did under a patent from the State later in date than that to Wolsey, cannot impeach Wolsey's title in this action.
3. That Wolsey was such a bona fide purchaser from the State that the grant of Congress under the Joint Resolution of March 2, 1861, inured to his benefit.
4. That, as the lands had been sold by the State previous to December 23, 1853, no title passed to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company under the settlement made upon the authority of the Joint Resolution of the General Assembly of March 22, 1858; and,
5. That by the adjustment and settlement between the State and the United States in 1866, the title of the State under the 500,000 acre grant, and as part of the school lands, was confirmed.

These several propositions will be considered in their order:

1. As to the right of the State, on the 20th of February, 1851, to select these lands as part of the 500,000 acre grant.

It has been settled in this court that the title of the Des Moines Company is good as against the State and railroad companies under the railroad grant of 1856, and as against preemptioners after 1855 under the Act of 1841. We are not asked to disturb these rulings, and should not be inclined to do so if we were. It is contended, however, that the language used in the 8th section of the Act of 1841, defining the reservation, is so different from that of the 10th section, under consideration in Riley v. Welles and from that of the Act of 1856, involved in Wolcott's Case and the cases reported in 17 Wallace [84 U. S., XXI., 561, 622], as to render our former decisions of no controlling authority on the question now to be determined. We do not so understand the effect of those decisions. Whatever might be the force of such an argument if the cases involving the Act of 1856 stood alone, it seems to us impossible to distinguish the question now presented from that disposed of in Riley v. Welles. In that case the language under consideration was, "Lands included in any reservation, by any treaty, law or Proclamation of the President of the United States, or reserved for salines, or for other purposes," and in this, "Any public land, except such as is or may be reserved from sale by any law of Congress or Proclamation of the President of the United States." In the Act of 1856 the corresponding language is, "Any and all lands heretofore reserved to the United States by any Act of Congress, or in any other manner by competent authority, for the purpose of aiding in any object of internal improvement, or for any other purpose whatever."

It is conceded that the lands in controversy were actually reserved from sale by competent authority when the selection was made under the Act of 1841. They were reserved also in consequence of the Act of 1846. The proper Executive Department of the Government had determined that, because of doubts about the extent and operation of that Act, nothing should be done to impair the rights of the State above the Raccoon Fork until the differences were settled, either by Congress or judicial decision. For that purpose an authoritative order was issued, directing the local land-officers to withhold all the disputed lands from sale. This withdrew the lands from private entry and, as we held in Riley v. Welles, was sufficient to defeat a settlement for the purpose of preemption while the order was in force, notwithstanding it was afterwards found that the law, by reason of which this action was taken, did not contemplate such a withdrawal. This, it is agreed, settles the present case, unless that decision resulted from the addition of the words, "reserved for saline or for other purposes," which appear in the 10th section and not in the 8th.

The object of all interpretation is to ascertain the intent of the law-makers; to get at the meaning which they wished their language to convey. A critical examination of particular words is never necessary except in cases of doubt. Sections 8 and 10 are parts of the same Act. By one, a grant of public lands to certain States for certain purposes was provided for; and by the other, preemption rights were given to individual citizens. Both had reference to public lands, and gave the respective beneficiaries the power of making their own selections. There seems to be no good reason why the selections of the preemptioneer should be restricted within narrower limits than those of the State, and we cannot believe it was the intention of Congress to give a State the power to take lands under section 8, which had actually been reserved by the United States for any purpose whatever. It is true, in that section only reservation by a law of Congress or the Proclamation of the President are specially spoken of, but it must have been the intention to include in this all lawful reservations. In the 10th section a reservation by treaty is specially mentioned; but we can hardly believe it would be seriously contended that, under the 8th section, a State could select lands reserved by a treaty because the word "treaty" was omitted in that section.

The truth is, there can be no reservation of public lands from sale except by reason of some treaty, law or authorized act of the Executive Department of the Government; and the acts of the heads of departments, within the scope of their powers, are in law the acts of the President. In Wilcox v. Jackson, 13 Pet., 498, the question was directly presented whether a reservation from sale by an order from the War Department was a reservation "by order of the President," and the court held it was. The language of the statute then under consideration was (p. 511), "Or which is reserved from sale by Act of Congress or by order of the President, or which may have been appropriated for any purpose whatever;" and in the opinion of the court it is said (p 513): "Now, although the immediate agent in requiring this reservation was the Secretary of War, yet we feel justified in presuming that it was done by the approbation and direction of the President. The President speaks and acts through the heads of the several departments, in relation to subjects which appertain to their respective duties. Both military posts and Indian affairs, including agencies, belong to the War Department. Hence we consider the act of the War Department, in requiring the reservation to be made, as being, in legal contemplation, the act of the President; and consequently, that the reservation thus made was, in legal effect, a reservation made by order of the President, within the terms of the Act of Congress." That case is conclusive of this, unless the word "proclamation," as used in the present statute, has a signification so different from "order" in the other as to raise a material distinction between the two cases. We see no such intention on the part of Congress. A proclamation by the President, reserving lands from sale, is his official public announcement of an order to that effect. No particular form of such an announcement is necessary. It is sufficient if it has such publicity as accomplishes the end to be attained. If the President himself had signed the order in this case, and sent it to the registers and receivers who were to act under it, as notice to them of what they were to do in respect to the sales of the public lands, we cannot doubt that the lands would have been reserved by proclamation within the meaning of the statute. Such being the case, it follows, necessarily, from the decision in Wilcox v. Jackson that such an order sent out from the appropriate Executive Department in the regular course of business is the legal equivalent of the President's own order to the same effect. It was, therefore, as we think, such a Proclamation by the President reserving the lands from sale as was contemplated by the Act. This being the case, under our former decisions, no title passed to the State by the approval of the selection of the lands in dispute under the Act of 1841. Being lawfully reserved from sale at the time of the selection, they were not included in the grant which that Act provided for.

2. As to the right of Chapman to question Wolsey's title.

Of this we entertain no doubt. If the State had no title when the patent issued to Wolsey, he took nothing by the grant. No question of estoppel by warranty arises, neither does the after acquired title inure to the benefit of Wolsey, because when the United States made the grant in 1861 it was for the benefit of bona fide purchasers from the State, under the grant of 1846. This is evident as well from the tenor of the Joint Resolution of 1861 as from the Act of 1862. The relinquishment under the Joint Resolution is of all the title which the United States retained in the tracts of land above the Racoon Fork "Which have been certified to said State improperly by the Department of the Interior as part of the grant by the Act of Congress approved August 8, 1846, and which is now held by bona fide purchasers under the State of Iowa;" and by the Act of 1862 the lands are, in terms, to be held and applied in accordance with the provisions of the original grant. This legislation, being in pari materia, is to be construed together, and manifests, most unmistakably, an intention on the part of Congress to put the State and bona fide purchasers from the State just where they would be if the original Act had itself granted all that was finally given for the river improvement. The original grant contemplated sales by the State, in execution of the trust created, and the bona fide purchasers referred to must have been purchasers at such sales. This being so, the grant, when finally made, inured to the benefit of Chapman rather than Wolsey. Neither took title from the State at first, and as the final grant from the United States was, in legal effect, to Chapman or his grantors, he has the right to have that fact declared by a judicial decision against Wolsey, who sets up his adverse claim.

3. As to the alleged bona fide purchase of Wolsey.

This has been substantially disposed of by what we have already said. He purchased under the school land grant. His patent so in terms declares. Consequently he cannot be a purchaser under the river grant, to confirm which, as has been seen, the legislation of 1861 and 1862 was had.

4. As to the adjustment of 1866.

We are clearly of the opinion that this adjustment settled no rights as between any other parties than the State and the United States. The conflicting claimants were not parties to that settlement. The agent of the State was instructed not to relinquish the claim of the State under the school land-grant, and he did not do so. The United States simply applied themselves to the adjustment of quantities under all the grants, and whenever they did speak were careful to say that nothing which was done should be construed as affecting adversely any existing rights. The result was to leave the whole question to the ultimate determination of the courts.

See 11 OTTO.

5. As to the right of the Governor to convey the lands in question to the Des Moines Company under the Joint Resolution of March 22, 1858, authorizing a conveyance upon settlement with the company.

The original contract between the State and the company contemplated a conveyance of all the river grant lands not sold by the State on the 23d of December, 1853. This should be construed in the light of the fact that the Act making the river grant provided for sales of the granted lands to furnish the means of making the required improvement and, if this contract stood alone, we should have no hesitation in holding that the sales referred to were such as had been made in the execution of the trust under which the lands were held, but if there could be any doubt on that subject, the Resolution which authorized the settlement removes all grounds for discussion. By that Resolution, all the lands which had before that time been approved and certified to the State under the river grant were to be conveyed to the company, excepting such as had been sold or agreed to be sold by the officers of the State prior to December 23, 1853, "under said grant." The land now in controversy had been so certified, and it had also been sold under that grant. Therefore, the Governor was expressly authorized to include it in his conveyance.

This disposes of all the questions urged upon our consideration, and the decree of the court below is, consequently, affirmed.

Public franchises—ferries and bridges—right of State.

1. Exclusive rights to public franchises are not favored. If granted, they will be protected; but they will never be presumed.

2. The Statutes of Georgia do not confer on the inferior courts of its several counties the power of contracting away the right of the State to establish ferries and bridges in a particular locality.

3. The statutes give these courts the right to establish ferries or bridges, but not to tie the hands of the public in respect to its future necessities.

Submitted Jan. 22, 1880. Decided Mar. 2, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Georgia.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Fillmore Beall, O. A. Lochrane and E. N. Broyles, for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. J. Branham, for defendants in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

NOTE.—Jurisdiction of U. S. Supreme Court to declare state law void, as in conflict with State Constitution; to revise decrees of state courts as to construction of state laws; power of States to construe their own statutes. See note to Jackson v. Lamphire, 28 U. S. (3 Pet.), 280.

It is for state courts to construe their own statutes; Supreme Court will not review their decisions except when specially authorized to by statute. See note to Commercial Bk. v. Buckingham, 46 U. S. (5 How.), 317.

This was a suit in equity, brought by Wright and Shorter in the Superior Court of Floyd County, Georgia, to restrain the defendants from continuing and maintaining a toll-bridge across the Etowah River, at Rome, in that county. The facts are these: in July, 1851, the Inferior Court of Floyd County entered into a contract with one H. V. M. Miller, by which the court, for a good and valuable consideration, granted to Miller and his heirs and assigns forever, so far as it had authority for that purpose, the exclusive right of opening ferries and building bridges across the Oostanaula and Etowah Rivers, at Rome, within certain specified limits. Miller, on his part, bound himself by certain covenants and agreements appropriate to such a contract. He afterwards assigned his rights under the contract, so that when this suit was commenced the complainants, Wright and Shorter, were the owners. Large amounts of money were expended in building and maintaining the required bridges, and the franchise is a valuable one. In December, 1872, the commissioners of roads and revenue for the county authorized the defendants to erect and maintain a toll-bridge across the Etowah, within the limits of the original grant to Miller. The bill avers that "The said Board of Commissioners in the making and conferring of said franchise exercised legislative powers conferred upon it by the laws of the State; that the said grant is in the nature of a statute of the Legislature; that the same is an infringement of the said grant and contract made by the said superior (inferior) court to and with the said H. V. M. Miller, under whom complainants hold, and impairs the obligation and validity thereof, and is repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, art. 1, sec. 10, par. 1, which prohibits a State from passing any law impairing the obligation of contracts; and the complainants pray that the said grant to said defendants be by this court annulled and declared void, and the defendants perpetually enjoined from any exercise of the privileges thereby conveyed and granted."

There is no dispute about the facts, and in the answer it is expressly stated that the commissioners of roads and revenue "Are vested with legislative or quasi legislative powers and exclusive powers on this subject and, therefore, * * * the order making said bridge and streets public has all the authority, sanction and effect of an Act of the Legislature of the State, and cannot be interfered with by the unauthorized and void act of any public functionary of this State." The parties, by stipulation before the hearing, eliminated everything from the case except so much as was necessary to obtain "A final and legal decision upon the main question, to wit: whether or not the Inferior Court of Floyd County, Georgia, could and did grant to the complainants or their assignors an exclusive franchise, such as is set up and claimed in the complainants' bill, and whether or not, therefore, the subsequent grant of the bridge franchise, described in the pleadings, by the said Board of Commissioners to the defendants is or is not valid, and the right of complainants to the relief prayed for." It was also agreed that the defendants had title to the lands on which the piers of the bridge were built.

The superior court decided that the inferior court of the county had no power to grant Miller any such exclusive right as was claimed, and for that reason dismissed the bill. This decision was afterwards affirmed by the Supreme Court of the State on appeal, and to reverse that judgment this writ of error was brought.

Accompanying the submission of the case on its merits is a motion to dismiss because no federal question is involved.

Before proceeding to consider the questions presented by the record, we are called upon to dispose of a preliminary motion. On or before the 6th of December, 1879, the counsel for the respective parties stipulated, in writing, to submit the case on printed arguments under the 20th Rule. The plaintiffs in error ask leave to withdraw their stipulation, and set the cause down for oral argument when reached. We think their showing in support of that motion is insufficient, and that under the rule laid down in Muller v. Dows, 94 U. S., 277 [XXIV., 76], the stipulation must be enforced.

We think, also, that the motion to dismiss must be overruled. It is true, the court below disposed of the case by deciding that the state statutes did not authorize the inferior court to grant Miller an exclusive right to maintain bridges within the designated limits, and that in so doing it gave a construction to a state statute. It is also true that ordinarily such a construction would be conclusive on us. One exception, however, exists to this rule, and that is when the state court "Has been called upon to interpret the contracts of States, 'though they have been made in the forms of law,' or by the instrumentality of a State's authorized functionaries in conformity with state legislation." Bk. v. Skelly, 1 Black, 436 [66 U. S., XVII., 173]. It has been decided in Georgia that the right to receive tolls for the transportation of travelers and others across a river on a public highway is a franchise which belongs to the people collectively. Young v. Harrison, 6 Ga., 130. A grant of this franchise from the public in some form, is, therefore, necessary to enable an individual to establish and maintain a toll bridge for public travel. The Legislature of the State, alone, has authority to make such a grant. It may exercise this authority by direct legislation, or through agencies duly established having power for that purpose. The grant when made binds the public, and is, directly or indirectly, the Act of the State. The easement is a legislative grant, whether made directly by the Legislature itself, or by any one of its properly constituted instrumentalities. Justices of Pike Co. v. Plank Road, 11 Ga., 246. The complainants claim they have such a grant through the agency of the inferior court, acting under the authority of the Legislature. This is denied, because, as is insisted, the Legislature has not given the court power to make an exclusive grant. That was the precise question decided below, and under the exception to the rule just stated is reviewable here.

If the court erred in construing the statute and in holding that there was no contract, then the question is directly presented by the pleadings and the stipulation as to the facts, whether the subsequent action of the commissioners of roads and revenue is, in its legal effect, equivalent to a law of the State impairing the obligation of the contract as it was made. In this way, it seems to us, a federal question is raised upon the record, which gives us jurisdiction.

We, therefore, proceed to consider whether the inferior court had the power to grant Miller the exclusive right. It certainly has done so, if the power existed. There is no doubt that the Legislature, under the Constitution of the State in force at the time, had authority to make such a grant. The only question is, whether power for that purpose had been delegated to the inferior court.

The statutes relied on by the plaintiffs in error as conferring that authority are:

1. An Act of December 1, 1805, Cobb, Dig. 945, as follows:

"The inferior courts in the several counties in this State are hereby empowered, if they shall deem it necessary, on application being made, to authorize the establishment of such ferries or bridges as they may think necessary, other than where ferries and bridges have already been established by law, and to allow such rates for crossing thereat as are usual or customary on watercourses of the same width: Provided, nevertheless, That the Legislature shall, at all times, retain the power of making such alterations in the establishments made by the justices of the inferior courts as to them may seem proper."

2. An Act of December 19, 1818, Cobb, Dig. 952:

"Section 29. The justices of the inferior courts of each county, in this State, or a majority of them, shall have power and authority to hear and determine all matters which may come before them relative to roads, bridges, etc., as are authorized by law, either in term time, or while sitting for ordinary purposes, or at any special meeting held for that purpose."

"Section 33. The inferior courts shall have power to establish ferries, to rate the toll to be taken, as well those already established as any which may hereafter be established, within the several counties within which they may severally reside; and, generally, all other matters relative to ferries which may, in their judgment, be of public utility, any law to the contrary notwithstanding."

4. An Act of December 26, 1845, Cobb, Dig. 958:

"That the justices of the inferior court of the several counties in this State, or a majority of them, be and they are hereby authorized to contract for the building and keeping in repair of public bridges for such time and in such way as they may deem most advisable, either by letting the same to the lowest bidder, hiring hands for that purpose, or in any other way that to them may appear right and proper. And should they at any time let the same to the lowest bidder, that they be authorized to require and receive the same bond that commissioners now do."

It is conceded that these statutes contain all the authority the inferior court of Floyd County had to make the contract in question. Exclusive rights to public franchises are not favored. If granted, they will be protected, but they will never be presumed. Every statute which takes away from a Legislature its power will always be construed most strongly in favor of the State. These are elementary principles. The question here is, whether the Legislature of Georgia conferred on the inferior courts of its several counties the power of contracting away the right of the State to establish such ferries and bridges in a particular locality as the ever changing wants of the public should in the progress of time require. In our opinion it did not. It gave these courts the right to establish ferries or bridges, but not to tie the hands of the public in respect to its future necessities. The right to establish one bridge and fix its rates of toll does not imply a power to bind the State or its instrumentalities not to establish another in case of necessity. In fact, the Act of 1805, which remained in full force until the contract with Miller was made, expressly retained power for the Legislature to make such alterations of what might be done by the courts as should seem to be proper. The Act of 1818 gave the courts general power over all matters relative to ferries, and authorized them to hear and determine all matters which should come before them in relation to roads and bridges; but there was no express repeal of the proviso of the Act of 1805, and there is no such inconsistency between the two Acts as to amount to a repeal by implication. Such being the case, the original power retained by the Legislature over the Acts of the courts in this particular remained in full force. The Act of 1845 related only to the building and repairing of such public bridges as were not owned by private individuals or corporations. It conferred no new powers in respect to the bargaining away of public franchises. We see nothing in the case of Shorter v. Smith, 9 Ga., 517 to the contrary of this. All the court there decided, was, that an exclusive right had not been granted. The question of power in the inferior courts to make such a grant was not involved, and certainly not decided. The language of the court in the opinion is to be construed with reference to the question actually under consideration, and should not be extended beyond for any purpose of authority in another and different case.

Upon the whole, it seems to us that the Supreme Court of the State was right in its decision, and the judgment is, therefore, affirmed.

Non-negotiable demands—power of sale.

1. The purchasers of non-negotiable demands, from others than the original owner of them, can take only such rights as he has parted with, except when by his acts he is estopped from asserting his original claim.

2. When the owner of property in any form clothes another with the apparent title or power of disposition, and third parties are thereby induced to deal with him, they will be protected.

APPEAL from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

NOTE.—Transfer of bills and notes by assignment; obligation of assignor or transferor. See note to Pease v. Dwight, 47 U. S. (6 How.), 190.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. J. H. Bradley, for appellant:

In equity, the indorsement and delivery of the certificates was a valid assignment of all the interest of the assignor, and that interest was subject only to the state of accounts existing between the parties to whom the certificate was given, and the District of Columbia.

These certificates were choses in action. They were assignable at law and in equity. These are familiar principles. Both at law and in equity the assignee took, subject to the state of accounts between the original parties, and all other equities of which he had notice. The effort here is to make him subject to equities between the assignor and third parties, of which he had no notice.

Baldwin v. Ely, 9 How., 599; Talty v. Freedman's Sav. & Trust Co., 93 U. S. 326 (XXIII., 887); Chealey v. Taylor, 3 Gill., 251; McNulty v. Cooper, 3 Gill. & J., 218; Cox v. Sprigg, 6 Md., 274; Bentley v. McKim, 7 H. & J., 501; McNeil v. Bk. 46 N. Y., 325.

But if we are mistaken in this, then we say the defendant was an innocent bona fide purchaser for full value, and was led into these purchases by the indicia of title exhibited by the indorsement of the complainants, viz.: the fact that they had a marketable value and passed by delivery on sale; and they were in the possession of third persons, the papers having this indicia of title, and this by reason of complainant's culpable negligence. If there was any fraud on the part of the person to whom they were first indorsed and delivered, the purchaser cannot be affected thereby.

Cooper*, 3 Russ., 30; Moore v. Bk., 55 N. Y., 41.

Mr. Jas. G. Payne, for appellees:

The rule which applies to these certificates controls, not only the title which Vandenberg & Co., could give, but equally the title which Mandel and Blumenberg could give. Cowdrey could take only an equitable title, that is, subject to all the equities between the antecedent parties to the papers, whether he had notice of such equities or not. The purchaser of such a chose in action must abide by the case of the person from whom he buys. In other words, the former takes the exact position of the latter.

Y., 229.

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

The complainants, composing the firm of Vandenberg & Co., of the District of Columbia, had, previously to December 6, 1873, entered into contracts with the Board of Public Works of the District for grading, paving and improving certain streets in the City of Washington. On that day, their account, amounting to $8,451.88, for work on one of the streets, was audited and allowed, and a certificate of the auditor to that effect was issued to them. On the 17th of February following the complainants borrowed of the defendant, Blumenburgh, the sum of $3,160 for six months, and deposited with him as collateral security the certificate, to be returned upon the payment of the money. The certificate was at this time indorsed by them in blank. When the money became due, they called with the amount and accrued interest at the former place of business of Blumenburgh to pay the debt and take up their certificate; but he had disappeared, and no one there knew when he had left or whether he had gone. The complainants could not find him nor any one representing or acting for him; and, what was of more consequence, they could not find their certificate either. He had clandestinely departed from the city; and they charge in their bill, in substance, that he always intended to cheat and defraud them; and that, without their knowledge, he has disposed of the certificate to some one, who, in conjunction with him, is attempting to wrongfully use it, and thus deprive them of their property.

By the legislation of Congress relating to the District of Columbia, certificates of allowed and audited accounts, like that in question, could be surrendered to a Board of Audit, and certificates of indebtedness against the District received for them; and these latter certificates could be exchanged for interest-bearing bonds of the District. The complainants, informed that the certificate belonging to them had been presented to the Board of Audit by agents of Blumenburgh, or of persons to whom it had been passed, for the purpose either of obtaining money therefor or bonds of the District, filed the present bill to arrest the further use of the certificate, and compel its restitution to them. Learning afterwards that the appellant, N. A. Cowdrey, of New York, claimed to be owner of the certificate, and was seeking to obtain for it from the Board of Audit a certificate of the indebtedness of the District, for which an interest bearing bond could be issued, they amended their bill, and brought him in as a defendant.

In his answer he admits the possession of the certificate, and avers, in substance, that he purchased it in the ordinary course of business of a broker in Washington for value, with other certificates of a similar character, but does not state what amount he paid for it; that he was at the time ignorant of the transaction between complainants and Blumenburgh stated in the bill; and that the certificate had the blank indorsement of the complainants, which justified him in concluding that they had parted with their interest; and he insists that he is, therefore, entitled to protection as a bona fide holder for value without notice. To the answer a replication was filed, and its affirmative allegations are unsupported by any proofs. The answer cannot, therefore, be taken as evidence on his behalf. He must, therefore, be treated as one standing in the place of Blumenburgh, and holding the certificate subject to the claim and equities of the original holder. The certificate was not a negotiable instrument which could pass by indorsement and delivery. It was not a promise to pay any sum, nor was it an order upon anyone or upon any fund for the payment of money, or for the delivery of anything of value. It was simply a statement that the account of the complainants for work done by them upon one of the streets of Washington had been audited and allowed by an officer of the city, whose duty it was to ascertain and certify as to the amount and price of the work done by a contractor. Whoever takes such a certificate, whether with or without notice, takes it subject to all the rights and equities of the actual owner, as much so as if it were tangible property in the streets.

The cases where, by law, certificates of a similar character are made negotiable can have no application. It is not pretended that any law of Congress has made the certificates of the auditors of the District of Columbia negotiable, or given to them any special character beyond that which they purport on their face to possess. Nor can any weight be given to the suggestion that, by custom, these instruments are considered and treated as negotiable paper in the District. There was no evidence offered of the existence of any such custom, even had such evidence been admissible, to contravene an established rule of law.

That the purchasers of non-negotiable demands, like the certificate here, from others than the original owner of them can take only such rights as he has parted with, except when by his acts he is estopped from asserting his original claim, is established by all the authorities. He must, in such case, as Lord Thurlow said, abide by the case of the person from whom he buys. Cutts v. Guild, 57 N. Y., 229; Ingraham v. Disborough, 47 N. Y., 421; Bush v. Lathrop, 22 N. Y., 535.

If the pledgee, Blumenburgh, had written over the blank indorsement of the complainants a formal assignment to himself of the claim, and in that form had sold the certificate to Cowdrey for value, it is possible that the latter might have successfully insisted that the complainants were estopped from asserting, as against him, ownership of the claim. The principle is well settled that when the owner of property in any form clothes another with the apparent title or power of disposition, and third parties are thereby induced to deal with him, they shall be protected. The case of McNeil v. Bk., in the Court of Appeals of New York, contains a clear statement of the law on this head. There, it is true, a certificate of stock was pledged with a blank assignment and power of attorney indorsed, which the pledgee afterwards filled up, and then disposed of the stock. It was evident that the owner contemplated that the blanks in the assignment and power should be filled up, if it should ever become necessary. 46 N. Y., 325.

But the principle stated by the court is applicable where no such intention is manifested. The rights of innocent third parties, as the court there observes, "Do not depend upon the actual title or authority of the party with whom they deal directly, but are derived from the act of the real owner, which precludes him from disputing, as against them, the existence of the title or power which, through negligence or mistaken confidence, he caused or allowed to appear to be vested in the party making the conveyance." Here the complainants could have expressed in their indorsement the purpose of the deposit of the certificate with Blumenburgh; that it was as security for a specified sum of money; and thus imparted notice to all subsequent purchasers or assignees that the pledgee held only a qualified interest in the claim. But having indorsed their name in blank, they virtually authorized the holder to transfer or dispose of the certificate by writing an absolute assignment over their signature. Had it, therefore, appeared in this case that Cowdrey paid any money for the certificate, and took it with the assignment which he himself afterwards wrote over the signature of the complainants, we are inclined to think that his defense would have been sustainable. But as he has not shown that he parted with any value for the claim, and no assignment was at the time indorsed over the blank signature, he must be treated as standing in the shoes of his alleged vendor, Blumenburgh.

Decree affirmed.

Dissenting, Mr. Justice Swayne and Mr. Justice Miller.

v.

COUNTY OF WEBSTER, IN THE STATE OF IOWA, AND JONATHAN HUTCHISON, TREASURER OF SAID COUNTY,

AND CROSS APPEAL.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 773-781.)

Iowa lands—taxation of—delay in payment—enjoining collection.

1. The lands which passed to the bona fide purchasers from the State of Iowa under the Joint Resolution of Congress, approved March 2, 1861, did not become taxable by the laws of the State before that date.

2. The revenue year of the State for 1861 commenced before March; therefore, the lands were not taxable for that year but were for the year 1862, and thereafter.

3. Where a State, under whose authority a tax is levied, sets up a title in itself, to the property taxed, adverse to that of the true owner, and forbears to enforce the collection until the title is adjusted, no claim can be made by it for extraordinary compensation on account of such delay in payment of the tax.

4. In such case a court of equity may enjoin the collection of the extraordinary compensation which the revenue laws of the State give for a delay in payment of taxes.

Submitted Dec. 22, 1879. Decided Mar. 8, 1880.

CROSS appeals from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Iowa.

This was an action in equity, commenced in the court below by Edwin C. Litchfield against the County of Webster, in the State of Iowa, and Jonathan Hutchison, its Treasurer, for the purpose of enjoining respondents from collecting taxes levied for the years 1859 to 1866 inclusive, on lands claimed to be owned by the complainant, and for other relief. The court below decided that the taxes levied for the years 1862 to 1866 inclusive, were legal and constituted a lien upon the lands in question. The court however relieved the complainant from the statutory penalties and simply added six per cent interest to the taxes. A decree having been entered in accordance with the opinion, both parties appealed to this court.

The case is fully stated in the opinion of the court, and in the case therein referred to, of Wolsey v. Chapman, No. 104, of this Term, ante, 915.

Mr. George C. Wright, for Litchfield.

Mr. J. F. Duncombe, for the County and its Treasurer.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

The primary question to be decided in this case is as to the time when the lands, which passed to the bona fide purchasers from the State of Iowa under the Joint Resolution of Congress, approved March 2, 1861, 12 Stat. at L., 251, became taxable by the laws of the State. The controversy is about taxes assessed for the years 1859, 1860, 1861, 1862, 1863, 1864, 1865 and 1866.

The facts affecting the title are fully stated in the case of Wolsey v. Chapman, decided at the present Term [ante, 915], where we held, following the principles settled in R. R. Co. v. Litchfield, 23 How., 66 [64 U. S., XVI., 500], Wolcott v. Des Moines Co., 5 Wall., 681 [72 U. S., XVIII., 689], Riley v. Welles, not reported [reported in this edition, XIX., 648], Williams v. Baker, 17 Wall., 144 [84 U. S., XXI., 561], and Homestead Co. v. R. R. Co., 17 Wall., 153 [84 U. S., XXI., 622], that the United States continued to own the lands until the adoption of the Joint Resolution. Nothing was included in the original river grant of 1846, 5 Stat. at L., 453, except the lands below the Racoon Fork. While, on account of the action of the Executive Department of the General Government, those above the Fork were reserved from sale and did not pass to the State when selected as school lands under the Act of 1841, or as railroad lands by the grant of 1856, 11 Stat. at L., 9, and were not open to preemption entry, they were not actually donated by the United States to the State, or to the purchasers from the State, until the Joint Resolution was adopted. The grant made by that Resolution was just as much an original grant as it would have been if the Act of 1846, 9 Stat. at L., 77, had never been passed. The order of the Executive Department, reserving them from sale, neither transferred any title to nor created any interest in the State. It simply retained the ownership in the United States. While the subsequent gift was, undoubtedly, induced by what had happened before, the United States, until it was made, continued to be the proprietor of the lands, both in law and in equity. Such being the case, they were not taxable before March 2, 1861. They, down to that time, actually belonged to the United States, and no one else had any interest whatever in them.

This disposes of the taxes for the years 1859 and 1860, but another question arises as to those of 1861. Under the revenue laws of Iowa, in force at that time, government lands entered or located, or lands purchased from the State, could not be taxed for the year in which the entry, location or purchase was made. Laws of Iowa, Rev., 1860, p. 110, sec. 711, par. 7. In The R. R. Co. v. Brown, 39 Iowa, 655, this was held to mean that government lands were not taxable until the next year after a patent could be demanded for them. To the same general effect are R. R. Co. v. Cherokee Co., 37 Iowa, 483; Goodrich v. Beaman, 37 Iowa, 563; R. R. Co. v. Woodbury Co., 38 Iowa, 498. The revenue year of the State for 1861 commenced before March. It is clear, therefore, that the lands were not taxable for that year. They were neither entered, located, purchased from the State, nor patented, within the meaning of the revenue laws, until then.

We think, however, that for the year 1862 and thereafter they were taxable. By the Joint Resolution, Congress relinquished all the title the United States then retained to the lands which had before that time been certified by the Department of the Interior as part of the river grant, and which were held by bona fide purchasers under the State. No further conveyance was necessary to complete the transfer, and the description was sufficient to identify the property. The title thus relinquished inured at once to the benefit of the purchasers for whose use the relinquishment was made. All the lands involved in this suit had been certified, and Litchfield or those under whom he claims were bona fide purchasers from the State. It matters not, so far as this branch of the case is concerned, that at that time there were doubts as to whether the United States retained any title which could pass under the Resolution. That question has now been settled in favor of Litchfield, and it has also been decided that after the Resolution went into effect the United States had no longer any interest in the property, legal or equitable. It became private property and, as such, subject to taxation under the revenue laws of the State.

It only remains to consider whether, under the circumstances of this case, it is within the power of a court of equity to enjoin the collection of the interest or penalty which the revenue laws of the State require the Treasurer of the County to collect, in case taxes legally assessed are not paid within the time fixed by law. The statutes regulating this matter are as follows:

"Section 759. On the first day of February, the unpaid taxes, of whatever description, for the preceding year, shall become delinquent, and shall draw interest, as hereinafter provided; * * *

Sec. 760. The treasurer shall continue to receive taxes after they have become delinquent, until collected by distress and sale; but if they are not paid before the first of March, he shall collect as a penalty for non-payment, from each tax payer so delinquent, one per cent of the amount of his tax additional, and if not paid before the first day of April, he shall collect another one per cent additional, and so for each full month which shall expire before the tax shall have been paid. The treasurer shall, in all cases, make out and deliver to the tax payer a receipt for taxes paid, stating the time of payment, the description of the land, the amount of each kind of tax, the interest on each, and costs, if any, giving a separate receipt for each year; and shall make the proper entries of such payments in the books of his office, and such receipt shall be in full for his taxes that year; * * *

By section 761 the clerk of the County Board of Supervisors is required to keep full and complete accounts with the county treasurer and, among other things, to charge him with "interest on delinquent taxes;" and "on the first day of each month ascertain the amount of delinquent and unpaid taxes of all classes on said day, and charge said treasurer in said account with one per cent on the amount thereof to be collected by him, as provided in section 52 (sec. 760) of this Act." Laws of Iowa, Rev. 1860, pp. 118, 119. On the first day of October in each year the treasurer is required to offer at public sale all the lands on which the taxes for the previous year had not been paid. Of this sale, notice was to be given by advertisement. Sec. 763, p. 119.

It appears, from the agreed statement of the parties, that the lands about which this controversy arises amount in the aggregate to 32,602 $\frac{2}{100}$ acres. Of this 3,301 acres are part of the school lands selected by the State under the Act of 1841, the particulars of which appear in the case of Wolsey v. Chapman, supra, and about 17,000 acres fall within the limits of the railroad grant of 1856, also referred to in that case. In respect to the school lands, it appears that the State has at all times claimed title adverse to that of Litchfield and his grantors. In the adjustment of the controversies with the United States, as was seen in that case, the agent acting on behalf of the State was specifically required not to relinquish any claim of the State to its selections under the Act of 1841; and even at the present Term of this court the State has appeared here as a litigant, asserting its own title and that of its grantees as superior and paramount to that of Litchfield.

As to the railroad grant of 1856; the agreed statement shows that, on the demand of the State, the 17,000 acres now in controversy were certified for the benefit of the Dubuque and Pacific Railroad Company. This claim on the part of the State was maintained and constantly asserted adversely to Litchfield until the case of Wolcott v. Des Moines Co., 5 Wall., 681 [72 U. S., XVIII., 689], was decided in this court at the December Term, 1866. That decision settled the dispute as to these lands, and from that time Litchfield has paid all taxes as they were annually assessed.

The State has never claimed adversely to Litchfield any portion of the remaining 12,000 acres, but the United States maintained that the title did not pass by the Joint Resolution of March 2, 1861, 12 Stat. at L., 251, so as to cut off preemption and homestead entries. That question remained open until the December Term, 1869, of this court, when it was settled in the case of Riley v. Welles [supra]. Until then, or, at least, until the adjustment between the United States and the State, in 1866, the title of the navigation company and its grantees to this portion of its lands was disputed by the United States, and sales conflicting with those of the navigation company were made at the Government Land-Offices.

On the 21st of September, 1860, the Treasurer and Recorder of Webster County wrote to the agent of the navigation company, the grantor of Litchfield, to the effect that the lands were on the tax book, but that until the title was adjusted they would not be advertised for sale. Before that time, on the 14th of June, 1860, the Auditor of State wrote the auditors of the several counties in which the disputed lands were situated, as follows:

"We conclude, in view of the so-called river lands, and the further question as to their being liable to tax, that it would be well not to offer them for sale for the taxes until these matters are determined or adjusted in some manner. There are two questions in regard to them. Firstly, has the State any title to them under the river grant? which it is reported has been decided in the negative, but of which we have no official information; 2d, whether they are taxable prior to 1859 as the property of the river company or their grantees. The last question I thought had been decided by our courts, but learn from Attorney-General Rice that there is some doubt about it. Upon the whole, it is thought best not to sell at present, lest it may lead to unnecessary trouble and expense."

It also appears from the statement of facts that, during the years 1863, 1864, 1865 and 1866, the taxes charged against the property were, in some particulars, in excess of what the law allowed. No person was designated on the tax book as owner. Anyone could pay the taxes and get a receipt. If one of the contesting claimants paid them supposing the lands were his, he could not, if he finally failed to maintain his title, recover from the real owner what he thus advanced. We so held in Homestead Co. v. R. R. Co., 17 Wall., 153 [84 U. S., XXI., 622].

It thus appears that, while Litchfield or his grantor was in reality the owner of the lands from 1862 to 1866, and bound to pay the taxes for those years as assessed, the State, from which the taxing power came, disputed his title and set up an adverse claim in its own right to something more than 20,000 acres. At the same time, the United States disputed his ownership of the remaining 12,000 acres. All this was known to the state authorities; and in view of the facts the State, by its proper officer, gave notice to the parties in interest that the lands would be put on the annual tax books and charged with the taxes the owner should pay, if the title had passed out of the United States or the State, in law or in equity, but that, to avoid "unnecessary trouble and expense," no legal steps would be taken to enforce the collection "until the title was adjusted." This we understand to be the legal effect of the instructions of the Auditor of State to the treasurers of the several counties in which the disputed lands were situated, and the communication from the Treasurer of Webster County to the agent of the navigation company, made while the tax books of 1859 and 1860 were in his hands for collection. As soon as the title was adjusted, and even before, Litchfield or those under whom he claims commenced the payment of the annual taxes as they fell due, and offered to pay those of 1862, 1863, 1864, 1865 and 1866, with interest at the rate allowed by law for delay in the payment of ordinary debts; but the Treasurer declined to receive less than the statutory interest or penalty, unless the taxes of 1859, 1860 and 1861 were included. Although the lands were advertised for sale in 1862 and annually thereafter, they were purposely withheld from sale until this suit was commenced.

Under these circumstances, we think equity may relieve against that part of the statutory interest which is in the nature of a penalty. This provision was, undoubtedly, made to secure promptness in the payment of taxes when actually due and demandable. It was evidently not intended so much as punishment for non-payment as compensation for delay. In all parts of the statute, except section 760, it is spoken of as interest. In one place in that section it is termed a penalty, but in another referred to as interest. The amount increases as the time of payment is put off. Now, it seems clear to us that if a State, under whose authority a tax is levied, sets up a title in itself to the property taxed adverse to that of the true owner, and to save "unnecessary trouble and expense," forbears to enforce the collection until the "title is adjusted," no claim can properly be made for extraordinary compensation on account of a delay in payment of the tax which may fairly be said to have been brought about by its own wrongful acts. Under the circumstances, Litchfield and his grantor might well have supposed that the taxes as charged were not to be treated as "delinquent," until in some form it had been determined whether the lands taxed were in law taxable. It now appears that the adverse claims of the State and the United States were unjust, and that Litchfield is bound for the payment of the taxes of 1862 and thereafter. He, therefore, actually owes the money called for by the taxes, and may properly be charged with such interest after the taxes became due as is by law payable on other money obligations; but the extraordinary compensation given by the statute for delay in payment of taxes charged on the tax books, and in the regular process of collection, occupies a different position. It is an elementary principle in equity jurisprudence, that if money is lying dead to meet an obligation, and delay in its payment is caused by the fault of him to whom it is to be paid, interest during the delay is not recoverable. Here the delay was caused by the improper interference of the State and the United States with the title. Litchfield himself has been guilty of no fraud or willful default. The State has voluntarily abstained from enforcing the collection because of doubts about its right to do so, and Litchfield has had the use of his money while the dispute remained unsettled. As soon as the title was adjusted he offered to pay what was actually due, with ordinary interest; and this was refused. Under these circumstances, we think the court below was right in enjoining the collection of all penalty or interest in excess of six per cent per annum. In Stryker v. Polk Co., 22 Iowa, 137, there is a strong intimation that in a case like this such relief might be granted. None of the objections which were found to granting the injunction asked for in that case exist here, and it is clearly made to appear that the action of the State affected the title of this plaintiff prejudicially. Such a case was made by the bill and established by the evidence. It may fairly be inferred from what is said in Litchfield v. Hamilton Co., 40 Iowa, 66, that in such a case the courts of the State would afford the remedy.

Although taxes in Iowa are levied and collected by the counties, all is done under the authority of the State, and the counties are charged with whatever is done by the State affecting the rights of the tax payer. No complaint is made by Litchfield of the amount found due from him by the court below, if the decree is in other respects right, as we find it to be.

Decree affirmed, each party to pay the costs of his own appeal.

COUNTY OF HAMILTON ET AL.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 781.)

The case of Litchfield v. County of Webster, ante, 925, followed, in regard to certain taxes on lands in Iowa.

[No. 174.]

Submitted Jan. 28, 1880. Decided Mar. 8, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Iowa.

See the preceding case for the facts.

Mr. George G. Wright, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. D. D. Chase, for defendants in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to the Supreme Court of the State of Iowa. The only federal question presented is, whether the lands in Hamilton County, which Litchfield holds by the same title he did those in Webster County, involved in the case just decided [ante, 925], were taxable for the years 1859, 1860, 1861, 1862, 1863, 1864 and 1865. For the reasons stated in the other case, we held that the taxes for 1859, 1860 and 1861 are illegal, and their collection should be enjoined, but that those for 1862 and the following years are properly collectible. The court below decided that they were legally assessed for all the years, and decreed that they be paid in full, with all interest, penalties and costs. The liability of Litchfield for interest and penalties after 1861 does not present any federal question.

We, therefore, reverse the decree of the State Court and remand the cause, with directions to enjoin the collection of all taxes and charges on the lands in question for the years 1859, 1860 and 1861, but with leave to enter such further decree in reference to the taxes of 1862 and thereafter as the court shall be advised may be proper under the circumstances.

Final decree, what is not.

A decree having been entered referring the cause to a master to state an account, and a motion made that the master proceed no further on account of alleged settlement between parties, an order, denying the motion and directing that the cause proceed, is not a final decree from which an appeal will lie to this court.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana.

The case is sufficiently stated by the court.

Messrs. Henry B. Kelly, George L. Bright and Henry L. Lazarus, for appellant.

Messrs. Shellabarger & Wilson and C. E. Fenner, for appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

A decree having been entered referring this cause to a master, to state an account of rents and profits, Liano, the appellant, appeared in court and moved that the master be directed to proceed no further with his accounting, by reason of an alleged compromise and settlement that had been made by the parties in respect to the matters in dispute. The court, after a hearing, denied the motion, and directed that "the cause proceed." From this order Liano took this appeal.

It needs only a statement of the facts, to show that we have no jurisdiction. The decree appealed from is not a final decree.

The appeal is dismissed.

v.

A. R. BURBANK ET AL.

Decision of Land Department, when conclusive—fraud—wife, right of—infants.

1. Where the question in dispute is one of fact, as to whether one, when he demanded his patent certificate as against other contesting claimants, had resided on and cultivated the lands in dispute for four consecutive years and had otherwise conformed to the requirements of the Donation Act, and this was determined by the Land Department, after a contest in which the contending parties appeared, and a full opportunity was given to be heard; such determination, in the absence of fraud, is conclusive on all questions of fact.

2. Fraud, in respect to which relief can be granted in this class of cases, must be such as has been practiced on the unsuccessful party, and prevented him from exhibiting his case fully to the department. False testimony or forged documents, even, are not enough.

3. The wife of the settler, or her heirs, get nothing before the husband, or some one for him, proves up the claim under the Act; whatever would bar her will necessarily bar her heirs.

4. Notwithstanding the infancy of the children, the decision of the Land Department concludes them as well as their father.

Submitted Dec. 16, 1879. Decided Mar. 15, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Oregon.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. W. Lair Hill, for appellants.

Mr. J. N. Dolph, for appellees.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit in equity commenced on the 24th of December, 1877. The case made by the bill is as follows:

On the 20th of July, 1848, Lemuel Scott, a married man, settled on six hundred and forty acres of land in Oregon, and became a claimant thereof under the laws of the provisional government. On the 27th of September, 1850, Congress passed the "Donation Act," 9 Stat. at L., 496, the provisions of which are fully stated in Hall v. Russell, decided at the present Term [ante, 829]. At the date of this Act, the wife of Scott lived with him on the land, and he had all the qualifications of a "settler." The lands were not then surveyed. Mrs. Scott died April 9, 1851, leaving three children, Louisa, aged five years; Caroline, aged three years, and Almeda, aged one year. Louisa and Almeda are plaintiffs in this suit.

On the 8th of October, 1852, one Joel Perkins notified the Surveyor-General of the Territory of his claim under the Donation Act to a certain tract of land as a settler. A description of this claim was duly entered in the proper book. The next day, October 9, Scott notified the Surveyor-General of his claim as a married man, which was also duly entered. The same day he presented the Surveyor-General with his proof of four years' residence, cultivation, etc., as required by section 7, and demanded a certificate of proof of compliance with the law and a designation of the part of the land inuring to himself, "and that part inuring to the said Mary Jane Scott, his wife." The claims of Scott and Perkins conflicted, and because of this the Surveyor-General declined to issue a certificate to Scott.

On the 23d of August, 1853, Scott and Perkins, in order to settle and adjust the conflict of claims between them, entered into an agreement, whereby Scott was to relinquish to Perkins all the land lying south and west of a certain line pointed out by the parties at the time on the premises, and Perkins relinquished to Scott all east and north of the same line. The parties, on the same day, undertook to reduce this agreement to writing, and Perkins, representing "That he knew and had correct information as to the courses, bearings and distances by which to describe and locate said agreed line, by referring to and connecting it with the public surveys," gave a description intended for that purpose, which was adopted.

Scott had no knowledge "of the courses, bearings and distances to connect the agreed lines with the public surveys," and relied wholly on the correctness of Perkins' representations. It is alleged that, in point of fact, the description as given by Perkins was false and made to deceive, and that the line as put into the written instrument was not the same which had been pointed out on the land when the settlement was agreed to, but gave Perkins about ninety acres more than he should have had. This ninety acre tract is the property now in dispute.

The agreement, reduced to writing under these circumstances, was signed in duplicate by both parties. Shortly after this was done, it was, as it is alleged, orally agreed between Scott and Perkins that Scott should send his copy to the Surveyor-General, and if he would allow Scott to change his notification so as to make his boundaries conform to the agreement, the copy should be filed; but if he would not, the compromise was to be abandoned. On the 27th of August, 1853, Scott sent his copy to the Surveyor-General, who refused to allow the change in the notification to be made. When this was done, Scott did not know of the alleged mistake in the description of the line. Afterwards, Perkins sent his copy of the agreement to the Surveyor-General's office and had it filed. In the meantime, the Surveyor-General, to whom Scott presented his copy, had gone out of office and a new incumbent was in his place.

On the 8th of May, 1854, Perkins, as is alleged, by means of false affidavits and the agreement thus fraudulently obtained from Scott, proved his compliance with the law under a settlement commenced June 30, 1849, and obtained a patent certificate for his claim, including the premises in controversy. Shortly afterwards, he left Oregon and never returned. On the 2d of March, 1855, Scott, as soon as he heard of what had been done, filed his protest against the allowance of the claim of Perkins, on the ground that the affidavits produced were false. He also petitioned the register and receiver to re-examine the case, "To the end that the claim and rights of said Lemuel Scott and of the heirs of his deceased wife might be secured and protected." This application was refused.

In May, 1850, Perkins executed a deed to the Board of County Commissioners of the County of Yam Hill, purporting to convey all his claim to a part of the disputed premises. Afterwards, the Probate Court of the County, acting as a Board of County Commissioners, claiming the right to enter the lands under the provisions of the Town Site Law of 1844, 5 Stat. at L., 657, caused a plat and survey to be made for that purpose. On the 19th of April, 1858, the County Commissioners of the County, having first obtained the permission of the Commissioner of the General Land-Office therefor, entered the land so surveyed as a town site, and the Town of La Fayette is located thereon. This plat and town embrace the land described in the deed from Perkins to the county.

On account of the conflict of boundaries between the town site tract, the Perkins claim and the Scott claim, Scott and the heirs of Perkins, he having died, were notified to make their contests for their respective tracts when the proceedings for the entry of the town site were pending. The children of Mrs. Scott were not notified. Pursuant to this notice, however, Scott and the heirs of Perkins did appear, and depositions were taken; but as soon as all the depositions in behalf of the town site entry were in, and before Scott was ready with his witnesses, the case was heard and decided adversely to his claim. He then petitioned for a rehearing, which was granted on the order of the Commissioner of the General Land-Office.

In November, 1859, a deputy-surveyor was appointed by the Surveyor-General to make a survey of the Scott claim. This survey was made and the plat filed. Thereupon Scott demanded a patent certificate in accordance with the plat, and a designation of the part which was to be for his own benefit and that which was to be for the benefit of his wife and her heirs.

Further testimony was then taken on the rehearing which was granted by the commissioner, and on the first of February, 1862, the register and receiver decided against the Scott claim, and in favor of the town site and the Perkins claim. It is alleged that on this rehearing, "In addition to the false and fraudulent evidence hereinbefore referred to, further false and fraudulent evidence of residence upon and cultivation of said Joel Perkins was produced by the heirs and representatives of said Joel Perkins, for the purpose of deceiving the officers of the Land-Office of the United States and defrauding the said Lemuel Scott and Caroline Scott and your orators."

From this decision of the register and receiver, Scott appealed to the Commissioner of the General Land-Office, and employed an attorney in Washington to look after the case. The attorney soon afterwards left Washington without notifying Scott. The appeal was heard in March, 1866, and the decision of the register and receiver affirmed. It is alleged "That, in transmitting said appeal to the Commissioner of the General Land-Office, the register and receiver, from whose decision the appeal was taken, failed and omitted to transmit therewith all the evidence which had been offered, introduced and used on the hearing before them, and that a large number of original depositions, exhibits and documents introduced and used in evidence before the register and receiver were not transmitted. That, among the said depositions, exhibits and documents which were not transmitted to the said commissioner, were some which had been taken, introduced and used on behalf of said Lemuel Scott on the hearing of said contest before the register and receiver, and which strongly supported the claim of said Lemuel Scott in said contest; and that, as your orators are informed and believe, the said Lemuel Scott was wholly ignorant of the omission to transmit said depositions, exhibits and documents; and fully supposed, until within one year last past, that all the depositions and evidence used in the contest before the register and receiver had been transmitted, along with the appeal." The case was heard and decided by the commissioner upon the evidence sent up and no other. Scott was not represented at the hearing by an attorney. From the decision of the commissioner, Scott appealed to the Secretary of the Interior, and employed new attorneys. This appeal was heard September 9, 1868, on the evidence sent up, and decided in favor of the Perkins claim. On the rendition of this decision, a patent certificate was issued in due form to the heirs of Perkins, for that part of the premises not included in the town site entry. A patent was made out ready for delivery March 14, 1872, but at the time of the commencement of this suit it had not been called for. A patent was issued and delivered to Yam Hill County on the town site entry some time in 1866.

Caroline Scott died August 28, 1864, leaving her father her sole heir at law. Louisa was married to James Vance in 1866, and Almeda was married to Livy Swan during the same year. On the 15th of October, 1877, Lemuel Scott conveyed to his two surviving daughters all his interest in the property.

Some of the defendants claim title under the town site entry, and some under the Perkins patent.

The prayer of the bill is, in substance, that the Perkins patent and the town site entry may be declared invalid as against the plaintiffs, and that the defendants may be required to convey to the plaintiffs such title as they respectively hold under the patent or entry.

The defendants demurred to the bill. This demurrer was sustained and the bill dismissed. From that decree this appeal has been taken.

So far as this suit depends on the original title of Lemuel Scott, it is clear, under the well settled rules of decision in this court, that there can be no recovery. The question in dispute is one of fact; that is to say, whether Scott, when he demanded his patent certificate as against the other contesting claimants, had resided on and cultivated the lands in dispute for four consecutive years, and had otherwise conformed to the requirements of the Donation Act. This was to be determined by the Land Department, and as there was a contest, the contending parties were called on in the usual way to make their proofs. They appeared, and full opportunity was given Scott to be heard. He presented his evidence and was beaten, after having taken the case through, by successive stages on appeal, to the Secretary of the Interior. This, in the absence of fraud, is conclusive on all questions of fact. We have many times so decided. Johnson v. Towsley, 13 Wall., 72 [80 U. S., XX., 485]; Warren v. Van Brunt, 19 Wall., 646 [86 U. S., XXII., 219]; Shepley v. Cowan, 91 U. S., 330 [XXIII., 424]; Moore v. Robbins, 96 U. S., 530 [XXIV., 848]; Marquez v. Frisbie, at this Term [ante, 800]. The appropriate officers of the Land Department have been constituted as pecial tribunal to decide such questions, and their decisions are final to the same extent that those of other judicial or quasi judicial tribunals are.

It has also been settled that the fraud, in respect to which relief will be granted in this class of cases, must be such as has been practiced on the unsuccessful party and prevented him from exhibiting his case fully to the department, so that it may properly be said there has never been a decision in a real contest about the subject-matter of inquiry. False testimony or forged documents even are not enough, if the disputed matter has actually been presented to or considered by the appropriate tribunal. U. S. v. Throckmorton [ante, 93]; Marquez v. Frisbie [supra]. The decision of the proper officers of the department is in the nature of a judicial determination of the matter in dispute.

The operative allegation in this bill is of false testimony only. That testimony Scott had full opportunity of meeting. Rehearings were granted him when the case seemed to require it, and he took all the appeals the law gave. The last decision was given by the highest department officer. If the evidence he presented to the register and receiver was not all considered on these appeals, it was clearly his own fault. It was more than six years from the time his first appeal was taken, before the final hearing was had. No fraud is charged on the register and receiver, or on the heirs of Perkins, in respect to the keeping back of the evidence. If any was, in fact, not sent forward, and Scott did not discover the omission until within one year of the time of the commencement of this suit, he must have been grossly neglectful of his own interests. He does not now state what the omitted evidence was, or that it was anything more than cumulative. The extent of his averment is that it strongly supported his claim in the contest. For all we know, the other evidence might have been equally strong and might have covered the whole ground.

See 11 OTTO.

As to the alleged fraud in the description of the compromise line, it is sufficient to say that, according to the bill, this fraud, if it in fact existed, was discovered long before the contest in the Land Department, and if it had any importance in the case the amplest opportunity was given to show the error and get relief against the agreement. This was one of the matters that might have been presented to the Land Department and, therefore, is concluded by the decision of that tribunal. Under these circumstances, it would be gross injustice to attempt to open that inquiry at this late day in favor of Scott himself, or anyone claiming under him upon his own title, irrespective of any his wife may have had.

This brings us to inquire as to the rights of the children and heirs of the deceased wife. In Hall v. Russell [ante, 829], we held that a grant to a settler did not take effect as against the United States, so as to pass anything more than a possessory right in the lands occupied, until the completion of the four years' residence and cultivation, and a full compliance with all the other conditions of the Act. The statutory grant was to the settler; but if he was married, the donation, when perfected, inured to the benefit of himself and his wife in equal parts. The wife could not be a settler. She got nothing except through her husband. If he abandoned the possession before he became entitled to the grant, her estate in the land was gone as well as his. In the view we take of the case, it is unnecessary to decide when a settlement became perfected so as to establish a claim; or whether, if the wife died before the end of the four years, her heirs would be entitled to her half when the grant was completed. The question here is, whether the wife or her heirs gets anything before the husband, or some one for him, proves up the claim.

The "settler" is made by the statute the actor in securing the grant. He must notify the Surveyor-General of his claim. He must occupy and cultivate the land, and otherwise conform to the provisions of the Act; and he, or some one for him, must also make the final proof. When this is done, and he becomes entitled to the grant, his wife takes her share in her own right, but up to that time he alone makes the claim. His acts affecting the claim are her acts; his abandonment, her abandonment; his neglect, her neglect. As her heirs must claim through her, whatever would bar her will necessarily bar them. The Land Department, until the final proofs are made, knows only the husband. If contests arise, he is the party to be notified. He represents the claim, and whatever binds him binds all interested through him in the questions to be decided. For this reason, whatever might have been the rights of the children of Mrs. Scott if the claim had been successfully "proved up," their father was their representative in making the proof, and they must abide the consequences of what he did or omitted to do in their behalf. It follows that, notwithstanding the infancy of the children, the decision of the Land Department concludes them as well as their father.

This disposes of the case, and the decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY OF MISSOURI, Appt.,

v.

GEORGE E. KETCHUM ET AL.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 289-300.)

Consent decree, review of—solicitor—admission—jurisdiction—parties—sale.

1. A consent decree in the Circuit Court can be appealed from. This court cannot consider any errors that may be assigned which were in law waived by the consent, but it has jurisdiction of the case.

2. Where it appears of record that a defendant assented to a decree through its solicitor, it is equivalent to a direct finding as a fact by the court, that the solicitor had authority to do what he did, and it binds this court on an appeal, so far as the question is one of fact only.

3. This is equivalent also to an admission by the company on the record that the facts exist on which the decree rests.

4. This court can consider under the appeal whether the court below had jurisdiction of the cause so as to authorize it to enter any decree. It is enough for the purposes of this appeal if the record shows that, when the consent was acted on by the court, jurisdiction was complete.

5. Consent cannot give the courts of the United States jurisdiction, but it may bind the parties and waive previous errors, if, when the court acts, jurisdiction has been obtained.

6. Where the controversy was between citizens of one or more States on one side and citizens of other States on the other side, of such a suit the Circuit Court had jurisdiction, and its decree is binding on the parties until set aside in the regular course of judicial proceedings.

7. A purchase, in the name of the solicitor of one whose property is sold, is not, necessarily, in and of itself invalid.

Argued Jan. 27, 28, 1880. Decided Mar. 22, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Missouri.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. M. H. Carpenter, N. A. Cowdrey, Tremain & Tyler, J. R. Shepley, S. T. Glover, and Mason W. Tyler, for appellant:

To the bill of complaint, as filed, both the trustees and the Company might have made separate answers denying the misconduct of the trustees; and had this fact been determined against the plaintiff, that would have ended this suit.

Hence, it results that a part of the one and single controversy between the plaintiff and the mortgagor Company is a controversy between the plaintiff and citizens of his own State. That part of the controversy cannot be settled by the Federal Courts. It is only where there is one entire controversy, complete in itself, wholly between citizens of different States, and which can be completely determined between them, that the Federal Courts have jurisdiction. Where the controversy is as between the plaintiff, a citizen of one State, and one defendant, a citizen of another State, necessarily depends upon another controversy which is really between the plaintiff and citizens of his own State, and cannot be separated in judgment, the Federal Courts have no jurisdiction.

That is precisely this case. The plaintiff cannot recover against the Company unless he shall first succeed in establishing the misconduct of the trustees. To that part of the controversy the trustees are necessary parties defendant. The Company and the trustees have a joint interest in that part of the controversy. The Company is interested to defeat the plaintiff upon this point, because that would defeat the suit. The trustees are interested to defeat the plaintiff upon this point, because, otherwise they lose control of the trust, may be taxed with costs and mulcted in damages. Therefore, this controversy, which is an integral, an inseparable part of the whole controversy, between the plaintiff and the Company, is outside of federal jurisdiction and, therefore, the court must dismiss this case, because there is no controversy in it which is entirely between citizens of different States, which condition alone would entitle the plaintiff to any relief.

Meyer v. R. R. Co., decided this Term (ante, 593.)

In the interest of a sound construction of this statute, it must be borne in mind that the word "controversy" is synonymous with the word "suit."

Curt. Com., sec. 73.

Marshall, C. J., 5 Wheat., App., p. 16, says: "A case in law or equity was a term well understood and of limited signification. It was a controversy between parties which had taken a shape for judicial decision."

In the light of these authorities, the statute should be construed as though it read "In a suit between citizens of different States." And all the plaintiffs must be capable of suing all the defendants in the Federal Courts. The parties to the controversy must be corresponding parties to the suit. This is believed to be the doctrine of this court.

Osborn v. Bk., 9 Wheat., 856; Chappedelaine v. Dechenaux, 4 Cranch, 306; Childress v. Emory, 8 Wheat., 668; McNutt v. Bland, 2 How., 9; Huff v. Hutchinson, 14 How., 586.

A consent decree is like the submission to arbitration; to be valid it must be within the submission.

Sprowl v. Stewart, 19 La. Ann., 433; R. R. Co. v. Myers, 18 How., 246 (59 U. S., XV., 380); Burchell v. Marsh, 17 How., 344 (58 U. S., XV., 96); Hurst v. Hurst, 1 Wash. (C. C.), 56; Lyle v. Rodgers, 5 Wheat., 394; Boynston v. Frye, 33 Me., 219; Sawyer v. Freeman, 35 Me., 546.

By the English practice, appeals are allowed from consent decrees in the following cases, to which we ask the court to refer:

Smith v. Turner, 1 Vern., 273 (in 1684); Colwell v. Child, 1 Cas. in Ch., 86.

In this case it was declared that it should not lie upon the plaintiff to show dissent, for it appears in the decree that it was the solicitor's assent, and if the decree want a sufficient foundation it is error, and the plaintiff shall not be put to show a negative.

In 1652 it was held in Brooks v. Dickens, which is quoted in Colwell v. Child, "That the assent of the solicitor was given in court; and the court knew such assent would not bind the party; and it was folly of the other party to proceed on that assent."

Also in the following cases:

Butterfield v. Butterfield, 1 Ves., 133; Wood v. Griffith, 1 Meriv., 35; Buck v. Fawcett, 3 P. Wms., 242; Odell v. Crone, 3 Dow., 61, 66, 75; Beddell v. Dowse, 6 Barn. & C., 264; Brangan v. Gorges, 7 Irish, Eq., 221; Atty-Gen. v. Tomline, 47 L. Jour. Ch., 473; Stannard v. Harrison, 24 Law. T. (N. S.), 570.

Appeals from consent decrees are held to be well taken in the state courts.

Saleski v. Boyd, 32 Ark., 74; Brewer v. Conn., 9 Ohio, 189; Sproul v. Stewart, 19 La. Ann., 433.

Messrs. Geo. F. Edmunds, Melville C. Day and James O. Broadhead, for appellants:

The decree was entered by consent of all parties, including the appellant. From such a decree no appeal can be taken, for the reason that error cannot be alleged in respect of any proceedings to which the party has assented.

Cole v. Scott, 14 Jur., 25; Carew v. Cooper, 12 W. R., 767; Ringgold's Case, 1 Bland, 5; Atkinson v. Manks, 1 Cow., 709; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 973, 974, 4th ed.

The authority of the solicitor to consent cannot be inquired into or impeached on appeal, for the appeal must be solely on matters appearing in the record.

Mole v. Smith, 1 J. & W., 653; Hobler's Case, 8 Beav., 101.

Appeals from consent decrees are irregular and dismissible.

Toder v. Sansam, 1 Bro. P. C., 468.

The statute concerning appeals does not change these perfectly settled rules. The statute is general; like all such statutes, it must be construed according to the principles of common sense, and its application limited to those persons who are entitled to complain of the action of the court.

The English practice has always been in conformity with the propositions before stated; and there is no exception in such cases, even in respect to jurisdiction. The essential principle is, that the party consenting has no right to bring up and open the record to the inspection of this court for any purpose whatever. If the decree below be void, it will stay void; and the consent of parties in that case will only be a mere contract between them. If it is merely voidable, and the case be capable of an adjustment securing the jurisdiction, the consenting party is estopped from complaint as in the case of any other error. There can be no appellate jurisdiction in such a case, for the court below has made no decision in the full judicial sense. A trial here would be an original trial.

Corning v. Iron Co., 15 How., 451 (precisely in point); Murphy v. Ins. Co., 25 Wend., 249; Christ's Hos. v. Grainger, 14 Jur., 339.

If the record were open for review, there was jurisdiction and no error.

(a) As to jurisdiction: the bill does not put the trustees in an attitude of controversy with the bondholders; and the answer of the trustees explicitly puts them in harmony with the interest of the bondholders and the object of the suit; so that the point against the jurisdiction is reduced simply to the fact that they stand on paper as defendants instead of co-plaintiffs. Both the Constitution and the Act of 1875, were directed to matters of substance and not of mere form.

(b) The suit was not premature, and was properly instituted on the merits. The six months' limitation of the power of the trustees after default mentioned in the mortgage, applied solely to proceedings in pais of the trustees. The equitable rights of bondholders to invoke judicial redress were in no manner interfered with. Before the decree was rendered, the default had continued more than six months, and it was the right and duty of the court in that case, to order a sale of the whole property for the payment of the whole debt, for the whole debt was then in default, according to the terms of the mortgage.

(c) In the foregoing state of the case, however it might have been in the case of a strict foreclosure, the decree for sale, without first limiting the time within which the respondents should redeem, was perfectly correct in point of law, for it followed the provisions of the mortgage, and it was in accordance with the laws of Missouri. At any time before the sale, the debtor might have brought into the court all that it claimed to be due and applied for a stay of proceedings, and protected its interest, if it had any to protect.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This case presents the following facts:

On the 10th of July, 1875, the Pacific Railroad, a Missouri Corporation, mortgaged its road and other property to Henry F. Vail and James D. Fish, trustees, citizens of New York, to secure a proposed issue of bonds amounting, in the aggregate, to $4,000,000. This mortgage will hereafter be referred to as the "third mortgage." The bonds were to bear date as of May 1, 1875, and become payable twenty years thereafter, with interest at the rate of seven per cent, falling due semi-annually on the first days of November and May in each year. The principal object of this new issue was to take up, by exchange or otherwise, outstanding income and improvement bonds of the Company, amounting in all to $3,500,000. The mortgage contained a clause to the effect that, if the Company should fail to pay the interest on any of the bonds thereby secured, for six months after the same became due and payable, and demand made therefor, or if the principal of any of the bonds, when payable, should not be paid for six months after demand, the trustees might, on the written request of holders of bonds to the amount of $500,000, the principal or interest of which should then be in arrear and unpaid, sell the mortgaged property at public auction, in the City of St. Louis, giving notice thereof in a manner particularly specified, and execute and deliver conveyances to the purchaser, applying the proceeds of the sale to the payment of the bonds.

The property mortgaged was covered by other mortgages. One was to Uriah A. Murdock, James Punnett and Luther C. Clark, citizens of New York; another, to Edwin D. Morgan and Joseph Seligman, also citizens of New York; another, to Rufus J. Lackland and Dwight Durkee, citizens of Missouri; another, to James Baker, a citizen of Missouri, and Jesse Seligman, a citizen of New York; and all were prior in lien to that to Vail and Fish, the third mortgage.

Default having been made in the payment of the interest falling due November 1, 1875, on the bonds secured by the third mortgage, George E. Ketchum, a citizen of New York, claiming to be the owner and holder of many of the bonds, commenced this suit in the Circuit Court of the United States, for the Eastern District of Missouri, on the 11th of November, in behalf of himself and the other bondholders, to foreclose the mortgage. To this suit the Railroad and the trustees of all the mortgages, including Vail and Fish, were made defendants, their citizenship being fully set forth in the bill. The superior right of all the prior mortgages was conceded, and it was also admitted that the full amount of their authorized issues was outstanding, but it was alleged that the interest on all, except that secured by the third mortgage, had been paid promptly as it matured, and that there was then no default. It was also alleged that the value of the property was greater than the amount of all the prior liens.

The bill further stated that about $2,000,000 of the income and improvement bonds had been exchanged for the bonds secured by the third mortgage, and that about $300,000 of the last named bonds had been negotiated otherwise than by exchange, and were then outstanding. It then set forth default in the payment of interest falling due November 1, 1875, after due demand made; that there was a large amount of money due from the Company for taxes; that the Company was without means to pay its valid obligations in full as they became due; that its commercial paper had been protested; that it was liable to actions, suits and proceedings on account thereof; and that there was great danger that the property covered by the mortgage might be attached or levied upon under execution or other legal process.

The bill then proceeds as follows: "Your orator further shows unto Your Honors that an application has been made by your orator, on behalf of himself and other holders of bonds secured by said mortgage to the defendants, Henry F. Vail and Henry D. Fish, to take proceedings to foreclose the aforesaid mortgage, and to protect the interest of your orator and such other holders; but that no such proceedings have been taken and, as your orator is informed and believes, some doubt is expressed whether, under such mortgage, they have the right to institute such proceedings, or any proceedings thereunder, by reason of the non-payment of the interest due November 1, 1875; and for such reason prefer not to take such proceedings; and your orator being apprehensive that his interest and the interests of other holders of like bonds may be seriously affected by delay in the institution of proceedings to foreclose said mortgage and to obtain possession of said property, has brought this action in his own behalf, and on behalf of all others similarly situated and holding like bonds secured by said third mortgage, and has made said Vail and Fish parties defendant herein."

The prayer was that the mortgaged property might be sold subject to the liens of the prior mortgages, and that, if necessary, an account might be taken. There was also a prayer in the usual form for the appointment of a receiver.

Process was duly issued and served on the 13th of December, 1875, on such of the defendants as were citizens of Missouri, and on the 8th of January, 1876, an order was taken for service on the non-resident defendants in the manner required by the rules of the court; but it does not appear that any such service was actually made. On the same 8th of January, one Thomas P. Akers, representing that he was a stockholder of the Company, that the mortgage sued on was a fraud, and that the Corporation would not resist the suit, asked that he might be permitted to come in as a defendant to protect his interests. On the 7th of February, 1876, the Company filed an answer, in which it substantially confessed all the allegations of the bill, and asserted the binding character of the bonds and mortgage. The answer concluded, however, as follows: "But it says that it is informed that a portion of said stockholders claim that they are fraudulent and void, and that the directors of this defendant were guilty of fraud in issuing the same. Therefore, this defendant asks this honorable court to permit any of the stockholders aforesaid to become a party defendant to this suit, upon a proper showing, and make such defense in the premises as they may see proper." James Baker signed the answer as solicitor of the Company, as did also the secretary of the Company, and the corporate seal was affixed.

On the 16th of February, Cornelius K. Garrison and James Seligman, citizens of New York, and Thomas W. Pierce, a citizen of Massachusetts, representing themselves to be owners of $1,797,000 of the bonds secured by the third mortgage, were admitted into the suit as plaintiffs with Ketchum, and united with him in the allegations of his bill. On the 25th of March, 1876, Peter Marie, Frank A. Otis, Robert L. Cutting, Jr., James D. W. Cutting, citizens of the State of New York, and George R. Fearing, a citizen of Rhode Island, all stockholders in the Company, asked to be made codefendants with Thomas P. Akers, with leave to defend the suit. On the 3d of April, a receiver was appointed with the usual authority, and Vail and Fish, as trustees, were authorized to exchange the bonds secured by their (the third) mortgage, for the income and improvement bonds, in accordance with the terms of the mortgage, and Akers and the County of St. Louis were given leave to file a cross-bill in thirty days. No action was taken on the petition of other stockholders to be made parties. On the 25th of April, Akers and St. Louis County filed an answer and cross-bill, in which the County of St. Louis set up a lien adverse to that of the mortgage; and both defendants alleged that the mortgage was executed in fraud of the rights of creditors and stockholders, stating particularly the defenses which the Company had thereto.

On the 5th of June, 1876, an adjourned Term of the court was held, and all the several trustees of the prior mortgages filed answers, setting up in form their respective mortgages and stating the amounts due. Each answer concluded with the statement that the answering defendant knew of no reason why the prayer of the bill should not be granted. On the next day Vail and Fish, as trustees, filed their answer, admitting all the allegations in the bill, and concluding as follows: "And these defendants, as trustees of the several and varied interests of the bondholders secured by said deed of trust, submit the same to the judgment of this honorable court, that the same may be duly provided for and protected, and ask that they may have such relief, including an allowance for the costs and expenses herein, as to your honorable court may seem meet." On the same day, Akers and St. Louis County dismissed their cross-bill and withdrew their answer without prejudice to the lien claim of the county. This being done, all the several parties appeared in court by their respective solicitors, and the court having found, among other things, the amount of income and improvement bonds of the Company outstanding, and that the entire amount of the bonds secured by the third mortgage had been issued, some, however, being still in the hands of the trustees to complete the contemplated exchanges; that Ketchum was the owner of ten of the bonds, Garrison of fourteen hundred, James Seligman of three hundred forty-seven, and Pierce of fifty, and that the interest due November 1, 1875, had not been paid, although demanded, it was, "by the consent of all parties to the suit, through their solicitors of record," adjudged and decreed "That the said Pacific Railroad do stand absolutely barred and foreclosed of and from all equity of redemption of, in and to said mortgaged premises, property and franchises," and that the mortgaged property, etc., be sold at public auction, subject to the liens of the several prior mortgages, by a master, who was named, to pay and satisfy the amounts due by the Company upon the bonds, and any other indebtedness the court might order paid out of the proceeds, "Together with the costs of suit and of said sale, including the services of said trustees, and their solicitors' and attorneys' fees in and about the management of said trust, as may hereafter be ordered by the court." Provision was also made for notice of the time and place of sale, and a conveyance to the purchaser after confirmation. The terms of sale were fixed by the decree, and if the purchase was made by or for the bondholders, all but $200,000 of the purchase money could be paid by a surrender of bonds, provision being made for paying such of the bondholders as did not come into the purchase their pro rata share of the proceeds. Sixty days' time was given after the sale, for all bondholders to come in and associate themselves with the purchasers, if the purchase should be made on account of the bondholders. Leave was also given the trustees of the mortgage to continue exchanges for the income and improvement bonds still outstanding. It was also ordered that nothing in the decree should be construed to prejudice in any manner the claim of St. Louis County, which had been set forth in its answer and cross-bill.

The property was sold under this decree to James Baker for the benefit of the bondholders. He had acted in the cause, as solicitor of the Company. On the 18th of September, a motion was made to confirm the sale. On the 22d of September, N. A. Cowdrey, Robert L. Cutting, Jr., Peter Marie, Frank A. Otis, Jacob Cromwell, George L. Kingsland, citizens of New York, and George R. Fearing, a citizen of Rhode Island, stockholders in the Company, filed a petition in court asking that they be made defendants in the suit, that the sale might be set aside, and that they have leave to defend, alleging the fraudulent character of the mortgage and that the directors were acting in bad faith towards the stockholders. This motion was denied, and on the 23d of October the sale was confirmed and a conveyance to Baker, the purchaser, ordered. On the 27th of January, 1877, the Pacific Railroad took this appeal.

See 11 OTTO.

The first question with which we are met is one of jurisdiction. It is contended on the part of the appellees that a consent decree in the circuit court cannot be appealed from, but we do not so understand the law. Section 692 of the Revised Statutes provides that an appeal shall be allowed from all final decrees in the circuit courts, etc., when the matter in dispute exceeds $5,000, and that this court "Shall receive, hear and determine such appeals." This makes appeals to this court, within the prescribed limits, a matter of right, and requires us, when they are taken, to hear and decide them. If, when the case gets here, it appears that the decree appealed from was assented to by the appellant, we cannot consider any errors that may be assigned which were in law waived by the consent, but we must still receive and decide the case. If all the errors complained of come within the waiver, the decree below will be affirmed, but only after hearing. We have, therefore, jurisdiction of this appeal.

This brings us at once to the inquiry whether the appellant, the Pacific Railroad, did consent to the rendition of the decree appealed from. It is stated affirmatively on the record that all parties, through their solicitors, did consent; but the appellant insists that its solicitor had no authority in that behalf. Early in the progress of the cause, the Company filed an answer under its corporate seal, and signed with its authority by its secretary and solicitor of record, in which every material allegation in the bill was confessed; and it was, moreover, positively stated that the bonds sued for were, in all respects, valid obligations of the Company and the mortgage a subsisting lien. In every instance in which the stockholders attempted to get into the case as parties, so that they might defend for the Corporation, it was asserted that the directors of the Company were false to their trust, and that they had either consented to or would not resist a decree. A solicitor may certainly consent to whatever his client authorizes, and in this case it distinctly appears of record that the Company assented through its solicitor. This is equivalent to a direct finding by the court, as a fact, that the solicitor had authority to do what he did, and binds us on an appeal so far as the question is one of fact only. The remedy for the fraud or unauthorized conduct of a solicitor, or the officers of the corporation, in such a matter, is by an appropriate proceeding in the court where the consent was received and acted on, and in which proof may be taken and the facts ascertained. We take a case on appeal as it comes to us in the record, and receive no new evidence. Here the record states, in terms, that the Company assented to all that has been done. This is equivalent to an admission by the Company on the record that the facts exist on which the decree rests. On an appeal, therefore, we must take all the facts as admitted, and consider only whether the case is one in which, under any state of facts, the decree could be entered. The record showing as it does affirmatively, that the Company gave its consent to the decree, we need not inquire what we would do if the case depended alone on the consent of the solicitor. It may be true also that under the peculiar provisions of this charter the stockholders have a sort of supervisory power over the doings of the directors; but they cannot avoid what has been done by the directors in a suit pending in a court against the Company, except by the employment of such remedies as are consistent with the orderly course of judicial proceedings. They cannot correct errors arising from what has thus been done by appeal, any more than the Company can. If they have been defrauded, they must apply for relief in the first instance to the court in which the fraud was perpetrated.

This disposes of all mere errors in form which are alleged against the decree. Parties to a suit have the right to agree to anything they please in reference to the subject-matter of their litigation, and the court, when applied to, will ordinarily give effect to their agreement, if it comes within the general scope of the case made by the pleadings. It was within the power of the parties to this suit to agree that a decree might be entered for a sale of the mortgaged property, without any specific finding of the amount due on account of the mortgage debt, or without giving a day of payment. It was also competent for them to agree that if the property was bought at the sale by or for the bondholders, payment of the purchase money might be made by a surrender of the bonds. And so of all the other provisions of the decree which are complained of. All these were matters about which the parties might properly agree; and having agreed, it does not lie with them to complain of what the court has done to give effect to their agreement. Although this appeal may have been instigated by the stockholders in opposition to the wishes of the directors, it is still the appeal of the Company, which was one of the parties to the agreement, and must be treated accordingly.

This leaves for our consideration, under the appeal from the decree of sale, only the question which was most strenuously pressed in the argument; that is to say, whether the court below had jurisdiction of the cause so as to authorize it to enter any decree. The objection is, that as Vail, Fish, Joseph Seligman, Punnett, Clark, Morgan, Murdock and Jesse Seligman were all citizens of the same State with Ketchum and the several parties who in the progress of the cause were admitted as co-plaintiffs with him, the suit was not between citizens of different States and, therefore, not within the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court.

The 1st section of the Act of March 3, 1875, 18 Stat. at L., 470, provides "That the Circuit Courts of the United States shall have original cognizance * * * of all suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity, where the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of costs, the sum or value of $500, * * * in which there shall be a controversy between citizens of different States. * * *"

The same general language is used in the 2d section of the same Act, in respect to the removal of suits from the State Courts, and in Removal Cases at this Term [ante, 593] we held it to mean that when the controversy about which the suit was brought was between citizens of different States, the Courts of the United States might take jurisdiction without regard to the position the parties occupied in the pleadings as plaintiffs or defendants. For the purposes of jurisdiction, the court had power to ascertain the real matter in dispute, and arrange the parties on one side or the other of that dispute. If in such arrangement it appeared that those on one side were all citizens of different States from those on the other, jurisdiction might be entertained and the cause proceeded with. That ruling, we think, applies as well to the 1st section as to the 2d.

For the purposes of this appeal, we need not inquire when the Circuit Court first got jurisdiction of this suit. It is sufficient if it had jurisdiction when the decree appealed from was rendered. As no objections were made by the parties in the progress of the cause to the right of the court to proceed, and the decree when rendered was consented to, it is enough, for the purposes of this appeal, if the record shows that when the consent was acted on by the court, jurisdiction was complete. Consent cannot give the Courts of the United States jurisdiction, but it may bind the parties and waive previous errors, if when the court acts jurisdiction has been obtained.

The subject-matter of this action was the foreclosure of the third, or Vail and Fish, mortgage. As the case was made by the bill, there could be no controversy; that is to say, no dispute, with any of the trustees of the earlier mortgages, because their liens were admitted and their interest had been paid in full as it matured. No relief was asked against them. All that Ketchum wanted was a foreclosure of the mortgage in which he was interested, subject to their admitted prior claims. In no possible way could their interests be injuriously affected, if the facts set forth in the bill were true. To the bill as filed and the case as afterwards made, these trustees were but nominal parties. They would be bound by what might be done, but all they could by any possibility claim was conceded.

This leaves only to consider the position occupied by Vail and Fish. When the suit was begun, as well as when the decree was rendered, they were trustees of the mortgage under which Ketchum and his co-plaintiffs claimed. No allegations were made against them. All that was said about them was that they doubted their right to proceed. There was no antagonism between them and Ketchum and his associates. He wanted them to proceed; they did not know as they had the legal right to do so. In the meantime he, thinking his own rights, as well as those of his associate bondholders, would be injuriously affected by delay, commenced the suit to get done just what the trustees, if they had been willing to proceed, might have done. Whatever he did was for the trustees and in their behalf, and he really had no power to do more than the trustees might have done if they had been so inclined. It is needless to inquire what might have been the result if the trustees had seen fit to dispute the right of the plaintiff bondholders to go on. They did not do so, but, on the contrary, before the decree was rendered, came in and substantially availed themselves of the suit which had been begun, so that in the end the suit, in legal effect, became their suit. Although nominally defendants according to the pleadings, they voluntarily, in the course of the proceedings, arranged themselves on the same side of the subject-matter of the action with the plaintiffs. This they had the legal right to do. After that, clearly the controversy was between citizens of one or more States on one side and citizens of other States on the other side, and when the decree was rendered the only thing to be done was to foreclose the mortgage sued on, as between the trustees of the mortgage acting with their beneficiaries and the railroad. Of such a suit the Circuit Court had jurisdiction, and its decree is, consequently, binding on the parties until set aside in the regular course of judicial proceedings.

This leaves only the question arising on the confirmation of the sale. The only objection here insisted on is, that Baker, the purchaser, was the solicitor of the appellant Company. His purchase, although nominally in his own name, was actually by and for the bondholders. He was used to hold the title until the bondholders could organize and take it. While purchases at judicial sales in the name of the solicitors and attorneys of parties whose property is sold will be scrutinized with jealous care, they will be sustained if no injustice is thereby done to the parties they represent. Here the Company, whom Baker represented as solicitor, confessed its inability to pay the debt it owed, and consented that the property held as security be sold. In the decree which it assented to, special provision was made for a purchase by or for the bondholders. We can see no harm which will result from permitting the solicitor of the Company to take the title for the bondholders under such a purchase. No complaint was made below of actual wrong. The only objection was that such a purchase was inconsistent with the duties of the solicitor. There was no speculation by the solicitor in the purchase. All he did was to hold the title until the real purchasers were in a condition to take it themselves. If there had been any proof of collusion or improper conduct on the part of the solicitor, resulting in wrong to the Company, the case would be different. As it is, we are called upon to decide whether a purchase in the name of the solicitor of one whose property is sold is, necessarily, in and of itself invalid. We think it is not. It will be scrutinized closely, but until impeached must stand. Slight circumstances may impeach it, but it is not, under all circumstances, invalid.

After a careful consideration of the whole case, we are unable to discover any error that can be corrected by appeal and, therefore, affirm the decree.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA ex rel.,

WILLIAM L. TRENHOLM, Ext., Plff. in Err.,

v.

PETER C. GAILLARD, COUNTY TREASURER OF CHARLESTON COUNTY.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 433-438.)

South Carolina law—new remedy—repeal of statute.

1. The Act of South Carolina of June 9, 1877, prescribing the mode of proving bills of the bank of See 11 OTTO.

the State tendered for taxes, is not a new contract but a new way of enforcing an old one.

2. The new remedy formed no part of the charter contract of the State. Passed as the Act was, long after the charter was granted and long after all the outstanding bills of the bank were issued, the State was restrained by no contract obligation from taking away or changing such remedy.

3. If a statute giving a special remedy is repealed without a saving clause in favor of pending suits, all suits must stop where the repeal finds them.

Argued Nov. 12, 13, 1879. Decided Mar. 22, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of South Carolina.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. D. H. Chamberlain, Edward McCrady, Jr., C. R. Miles and William A. Brawley, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Le Roy F. Youmans, M. G. De Saussure and James Lowndes, for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

In December, 1812, the State of South Carolina established a bank in the name and for the benefit of the State, and pledged the faith of the State to supply any deficiency in the funds specially set apart as its capital, and to make good any losses arising from such deficiency. The bank was authorized to issue notes and bills for circulation, and by section 16 it was provided "That the bills or notes of the said corporation originally made payable, or which have become payable on demand in gold and silver coin, shall be receivable at the Treasury of this State, either at Charleston or Columbia, and by all tax collectors, and other public officers in payment of taxes and other moneys due the State." The original charter was extended from time to time, and the bank continued in successful operation until the late civil war. At the close of the war it stopped business, and in 1868 the charter was repealed and provision made for winding up its affairs. Under the operation of this law, a large amount of the circulating notes was surrendered to the State and bonds of the State taken in exchange therefor. The time for presenting bills to be exchanged expired January 1, 1869, and only such bills as were issued prior to December 20, 1860, the date of the adoption of the Ordinance of Secession by South Carolina, could be presented at all. A considerable amount of bills issued before the repeal of the charter are still outstanding.

When the charter was granted mandamus was an existing remedy in the State for compelling public officers to perform their public duties, and in that way, under the practice which prevailed in the courts, tax collectors could have been required to receive the bills of the bank in payment of taxes.

On the 9th of June, 1877, the General Assembly of South Carolina passed an Act entitled "An Act to Provide the Mode of Proving Bills of the Bank of the State Tendered for Taxes, and the Rules of Evidence Applicable Thereto." Section 1 of that Act is as follows:

"Be it enacted, By the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of South Carolina, now met and sitting in General Assembly, and by the authority of the same, that the treasurers of the several counties in the State shall not receive in payment of taxes of the State any bills of the corporation known as the President and Directors of the Bank of the State of South Carolina, which are not genuine and valid, or the payment of which is prohibited by the Constitution of the State and of the United States, or which have been funded by the State and since fraudulently uttered. And all bills of said corporation which shall be tendered in payment of any taxes, and shall not be received as payment, shall be inclosed in a package, sealed and signed by the party tendering the said bills, and by the treasurer to whom said tender is made; and said package shall be deposited by the treasurer with the clerk of the Court of Common Pleas for the County, who shall give duplicate certificates of said deposit, one to the party tendering said bills, and the other to the treasurer, to abide the decision of the court in any proceedings which may be instituted in regard to said bills; and that in all proceedings by mandamus or otherwise to compel the reception of bills of the said corporation as a legal tender for taxes to the State and refused, an issue shall be framed under the direction of the Judge, and at a regular Term of the Court of Common Pleas for the County wherein said bills are tendered shall be submitted to a jury to inquire and determine by their verdict if the bills so tendered in payment for taxes are genuine and valid bills of the said corporation, and have not been funded by the State and since fraudulently uttered, and are bills the payment of which is not prohibited by the Constitution of the State and of the United States. And upon the trial of said issue the burden of proof shall be upon the person tendering said bills to establish that the said bills are the genuine and valid bills of the said corporation, and have not been funded by the State and since fraudulently uttered; and that said bills are bills the payment of which is not prohibited by the Constitution of the State and of the United States, and if the jury shall, by their verdict, establish that the bills so tendered are genuine and valid bills of the said corporation, and have not been funded by the State and since fraudulently uttered, and are bills the payment of which is not prohibited by the Constitution of the State and of the United States, then the treasurer of the county shall receive such bills in payment of all taxes due the State. And if the jury shall by their verdict establish that the bills so tendered are not genuine or valid bills of the said corporation, or that they have been funded by the State and since fraudulently uttered, or that they are bills the payment of which is prohibited by the Constitution of the State and of the United States, it shall then be the duty of the clerk of the said court to cancel the said bills in the presence of the court, and to make a sealed package of the bills and file the same in his office with the record of the case."

During the fiscal year commencing November 1, 1877, and while this Act was in force, William L. Trenholm, as executor, tendered the Treasurer of Charleston County certain bills of the bank in payment of taxes charged against him. This tender being refused, the bills were inclosed in a package, sealed and signed by Trenholm and the Treasurer, and deposited with the clerk of the Court of Common Pleas of the County, he giving duplicate receipts therefor, to abide the decision of the court in any proceeding that might be instituted in regard to them. All this was done before November 1, 1878.

On the 24th of December, 1878, the General Assembly of the State passed another Act repealing that of 1877. This Act, in effect, provided that, in all cases in which any person against whom any taxes stood charged had theretofore tendered in payment the bills of the bank, he might, within sixty days after the passage of the Act, pay the taxes without penalty under protest in such funds as the Treasurer would receive. This being done, it was the duty of the Treasurer to pay the money so collected into the State Treasury, giving the Comptroller-General notice that the payment had been made under protest, and the person making the payment might at any time within thirty days sue the County Treasurer in the Court of Common Pleas of the County to recover back the money. If, on the trial, it should be determined that the taxes were wrongfully or illegally collected, for any reason going to the merits, it was made the duty of the court to certify of record that the same had been wrongfully collected and ought to be refunded, and of the Comptroller-General to issue his warrant for the refunding of the taxes, and this warrant was to be paid in preference to other claims on the Treasury.

After this last Act went into effect, the Treasurer of the County advertised the property, on which the taxes of Trenholm were charged, to be sold on the 17th of March, 1869, for default in the payment. Thereupon Trenholm, on the 13th of March, filed a petition in the Court of Common Pleas of Charleston County, under the Act of 1877, to have the requisite proof taken and the bills accepted in discharge of his taxes. In his petition he assumed all the burdens imposed by the Act of 1877, and sought to avail himself of the remedy there given. The Court of Common Pleas ruled that the prayer of the petition must be granted, and ordered the issues to be framed; but the Supreme Court of the State, on appeal, decided that the Act of 1877 was repealed by that of 1878 and, consequently, the proceeding, commenced as it was after the repeal, could not be sustained. The order for framing the issues was thereupon set aside and the petition dismissed. To reverse that judgment, this writ of error was sued out.

No question is raised in this case as to whether or not the Act of 1877 impaired the obligation of the contract of the State, which is contained in the bills of the bank, or the charter. By accepting the Act and bringing suit under it, Trenholm conceded its validity. He contends, however, that when he tendered his bills in payment of his taxes, and so far complied with the provisions of that Act as to allow the bills to be deposited with the clerk of the court to abide the result of any proceeding that might be instituted in regard to them, the State entered into a new contract with him, by which it agreed to accept his bills in payment of his taxes, if he established their validity in the way provided. It is the obligation of this alleged new contract which he claims has been impaired by the Act of 1878.

We cannot find from the record that this question was presented in this precise form to the Supreme Court of the State, but it was undoubtedly involved in the case, and must have been decided directly or indirectly. No other question has been argued here.

As we look upon the Act of 1877, it does no more than provide a way of determining whether bills offered in payment of taxes are binding on the State. It provides a remedy in case a county treasurer shall wrongfully refuse to accept a bill that is offered him. It is, in fact, what its title says it is, "An Act to Prescribe the Mode of Proving Bills of the Bank of the State Tendered for Taxes, and the Rules of Evidence Applicable Thereto." It makes no offer of a new contract to a tax payer or billholder, but simply says to him, if your bills are any time refused when offered in payment of taxes, you may proceed in a certain way to compel their acceptance if they are genuine and valid. There is no new contract, but a new way of enforcing an old one.

By the Act of 1878, the remedy thus given has been taken away, with no saving in favor of tenders already made, except to give those who have made such tenders the right to pay their taxes under protest, without penalty, in sixty days, and sue to recover back what they have thus paid. They have still all their old remedies unless they have been taken away by the Act of 1878, which is not the question here. All we have to decide is, whether that Act has taken away from Trenholm the remedy he had under the one of 1877.

The new remedy formed no part of the charter contract of the State. Passed, as the Act was, long after the charter was granted and long after all the outstanding bills of the bank were issued, the State was restrained by no contract obligation from taking away or changing the remedy it then gave. All the cases in this court, where the question has arisen, agree in holding that "The States may change the remedy, provided no substantial right secured by the contract is impaired." It is enough if the contract is "Left with the same force and effect, including the substantial means of enforcement, which existed when it was made. The guaranty of the Constitution gives it protection to that extent." Walker v. Whitehead, 16 Wall., 314 [83 U. S., XXI., 357]; Tenn. v. Sneed, 96 U. S., 69 [XXIV., 610].

We agree with the Supreme Court of the State that the "proceeding" contemplated by the Act of 1877 was not "instituted" when the repeal took place. The tender and deposit of the bills laid the foundation for the authorized proceeding, but did not institute it. This is clear from the language. The bills are to be deposited "To abide the decision of the court in any proceeding which may be instituted," thus implying that when the deposit was made proceedings had not been instituted. These proceedings may be "By mandamus or otherwise, to compel the reception of the bills." The taxes are not paid by the tender. If the acceptance of the tender can be enforced, then the payment will be complete, but not before. This tender was made when a special remedy for its enforcement was allowed. Before Trenholm availed himself of that remedy it was taken away, and he was remitted to such as he had before this Act, or such as were substituted on the repeal, if that rightfully took away those which existed when the charter contract was made. But whether this be so or not, is unimportant, because it is well settled that if a statute giving a special remedy is repealed without a saving clause in favor of pending suits, all suits must stop where the repeal finds them. If final relief has not been granted before the repeal went into effect, it cannot be after. R. Co. v. Grant [ante, 231], and cases there cited. The simple question in this case is, whether this repeal was valid and constitutional as against Trenholm and his rights. We think it was, and the judgment is, consequently, affirmed.

WOODBURY PATENT PLANING-MACHINE COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

ALLEN W. KEITH.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 479-494.)

Patent right—abandonment—forfeiture—laches—invention—objection to evidence—witnesses—Woodbury's patent.

1. The action of the Commissioner in granting a patent is not conclusive of the question whether or not there had been an abandonment.

2. It is open to every person, charged with an infringement, to show in his defense that the patentee had abandoned his invention before he obtained his patent. An intention to abandon need not be expressed in words.

3. An inventor may forfeit his rights by a willful or negligent postponement of his claims. There may be an abandonment as well after as before an application has been made and rejected or withdrawn.

4. Where the applicant for a patent did nothing for sixteen years after the rejection of his first application, during which time his invention was in public use, without objection from him, he must be held to have abandoned it.

5. Mere enlargement is not invention.

6. An objection to the examination of a witness should state specifically the ground of the objection, in order that the opposite party may have the opportunity of removing it, if possible.

7. Only the names of those who had invented or used the anticipating machine or improvement, and not the names of those who are to testify of its invention or use, are required to be pleaded.

8. Woodbury was not the original and first inventor of the improvement in planing-machines, for which the patent was granted to him; and if he was, his invention had been abandoned to the public before his patent was granted.

Submitted Jan. 22, 1880. Decided Mar. 22, 1880.

A PPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts. The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. A. A. Strout, Geo. F. Holmes, J. A. L. Whittier, and Charles M. Reed, for appellant.

Messrs. B. F. Thurston and David Hall Rice, for appellee.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

The bill in this case is founded upon a patent granted to Joseph P. Woodbury on the 29th of April, 1873, for an alleged "new and useful improvement in planing-machines," numbered 138463. The specification declares the object of the improvement to be presenting the material to the cutter in such a manner as both to counteract, as far as practicable, the fluttering or tremor caused by the successive blows of the knives, and the consequent wavy and uneven surface of the planed work, and at the same time to overcome more perfectly than theretofore the tendency in the knives of the rotary cutter to loosen and dislodge the knots and shakes, and to tear the fibers of the wood irregularly, instead of severing them smoothly along the exact surface desired. To accomplish this twofold object, the patentee proposed to make use of what he denominated "a yielding pressure-bar," made of such material and of such mass as to be rigid from end to end, with its under face flat, so that it may have an extended bearing upon the work longitudinally of the machine, and mounted upon springs, so as, within certain limits, to accommodate itself to the varying irregularities in the surface of the material operated upon. The specification then proceeds to state the patentee's supposed advantages of the alleged invention, and to describe, by reference to drawings, the patented device. The claims are four, all for combinations. They are as follows:

1. The combination of a rotary cutter and a yielding pressure-bar or bars, substantially as and for the purpose described.

2. The combination of a solid bed and a yielding pressure-bar or bars for the purpose of holding down the material while being acted on by the cutter, substantially as set forth.

3. The combination of a solid bed, a rotary cutter, and a yielding pressure-bar or bars, substantially as described.

4. The combination of the two pressure-bars, one of which is supported upon arms and the other upon springs, substantially as and for the purpose set forth.

It is this use of yielding pressure-bars in the combination which constitutes principally, if not wholly, the novelty of the device described in the patent. Planing-machines with a solid bed, rotary cutter, and devices for receiving and transmitting the power, had been known and in use long before Woodbury claimed to have made his invention. The Woodworth planing-machine, substantially the first of the class; had all these in combination, and in the same combination as they are found in the machine to which Woodbury applied his yielding bars, but instead of bars Woodworth used rollers to keep firmly in position the wood to be planed. Woodbury merely substituted bars for rollers. No doubt the substitution was an improvement. It enabled the pressure upon the wood to be brought nearer to the cutters than it could be in the Woodworth machine. It had a more extended bearing and, therefore, held the material more steady under the action of the knives or cutters, and the bars, perhaps, were less likely to be clogged by the chips cut in the operation of the machine.

On the 2d of March, 1874, the patentee sold and assigned his patent to the complainant, and it brought this suit against the defendant for an alleged infringement.

The answer of the defendant denies any infringement and attacks the validity of the Woodbury patent for several reasons, any one of which, if sustained, must bar the relief which the complainant seeks. It is denied that Woodbury was the first and original inventor of the improvement claimed, and it is averred that the invention described in his patent had been publicly known and used for more than two years before his application for a patent was made, and that before that time his invention had been abandoned to the public. The answer contains other averments, which we think it unnecessary to set forth, because the controlling questions are, whether the device of Woodbury was the first and original invention, and whether, if it was, it was abandoned to the public before he obtained his patent.

Before proceeding to the consideration of the several defenses set up, it will be convenient to refer briefly to the history of Woodbury's alleged invention. Though the patent was not granted until 1873, the earliest application for it was made on the 3d of June, 1848. The invention appears to have been completed in the latter part of the year 1846, a caveat for it having been forwarded to the Commissioner of Patents as early as the 28th of May, of that year. The petition for the patent authorized and empowered J. James Greenough, as attorney for the petitioner, to alter or modify the specification, as he might deem expedient; and also to receive back any moneys which the petitioner might be entitled to withdraw, and to receipt for the same. Greenough, however, was not empowered to withdraw the application.

On the 20th of February, 1849, the application for a patent was rejected in the Patent Office, and no serious attempt appears to have been made to procure a re-examination, or to renew it, for a period of more than twenty years, though, during more than sixteen years of that time, the improved device had been in common use. In October, 1852, Greenough, the applicant's attorney, formally withdrew the application, and received back $20, of which, however, Woodbury had no notice at the time. The attorney had no sufficient authority to withdraw the application, though he had to withdraw the fee. In 1854, five years after the application had been rejected in the office, Woodbury instructed Mr. Cooper, another patent solicitor, who was acting for him in another case, to call up and prosecute anew his rejected application. This, however, was not done. Mr. Cooper, it seems probable, was deterred from taking any action in regard to the matter, by a rule which, at that time, he thought was generally enforced in the Patent Office, viz.: that an application, rejected or not prosecuted within two years after its rejection, or withdrawal, should be conclusively presumed to have been abandoned. This rule was not always enforced, and it was reversed by the Commissioner in 1869, and in the revised Patent Act of 1870, Congress enacted: "That when an application for a patent has been rejected or withdrawn, prior to the passage of this Act, the applicant shall have six months, from the date of such passage, to renew his application or to file a new one; and that, if he omitted to do either, his application should be held to be abandoned. Upon the hearing of such renewed applications, abandonment shall be considered as a question of fact." It was within six months after the passage of this Act that Woodbury renewed his application, upon which the patent was granted.

In view of this history and of the other facts appearing in the case, the question is a grave one, whether the invention, even if Woodbury was the first inventor, was not abandoned by him before his renewed application for the patent was made.

It is quite certain that the action of the Commissioner, granting the patent in 1873, is not conclusive of the question whether there had not been an abandonment. Under the 35th section of the Act of 1870, 16 Stat. at L., 198, abandonment is declared to be a question of fact. The rule of the Patent Office, though not always adhered to, had held it to be a question of law, in the cases to which it was applied, and the effect of the statute was rather to change the rule, than to make the decision of the Commissioner, granting a patent, an unreviewable decision that the invention had not been abandoned. In fact, the Commissioner may not be called upon to pass upon that question. No evidence respecting it may be before him, except mere lapse of time, and he has not, generally, the means of ascertaining what the action of an applicant for a patent has been, outside of the Patent Office. It surely cannot be claimed that patents obtained under the provisions of the 35th section of the Act are any more unimpeachable than those referred to in the 24th section. By that section the Commissioner is authorized to deal with the question whether the invention has been abandoned, as well as with the question whether it was in public use or on sale more than two years prior to the application. Yet, both these matters, as well as the originality of the invention, upon which the Commissioner must pass, may be contested in suits brought for infringement of the patent. Such defenses are allowed by the statute. It must, then, be open to every person, charged with an infringement, to show in his defense that the patentee had abandoned his invention before he obtained his patent.

It has sometimes been said that an invention cannot be held to have been abandoned, unless it was the intention of the inventor to abandon it. But this cannot be understood as meaning that such an intention must be expressed in words. In Kendall v. Winsor, 21 How., 322 [62 U. S., XVI., 165], this court said: "It is the unquestionable right of every inventor to confer gratuitously the benefits of his ingenuity upon the public, and this he may do, either by express declaration or by conduct equally significant with language; such, for instance, as an acquiescence with full knowledge in the use of his invention by others; or he may forfeit his rights as an inventor by a willful or negligent postponement of his claims." To the same effect is Shaw v. Cooper, 7 Pet., 292. These were cases, it is true, where the alleged dedication to the public, or abandonment, was before any application for a patent, but it is obvious there may be an abandonment as well after such an application has been made and rejected or withdrawn, as before, and evidenced in the same manner. In Adams v. Jones, 1 Fish. Pat. Cas., 527, Mr. Justice Grier said: "A man may justly be treated as having abandoned his application if it be not prosecuted with reasonable diligence. But involuntary delay, not caused by the laches of the applicant, should not work a forfeiture of his rights."

tions. But it requires them to be vigilant and active in complying with the statutory conditions. It is not unmindful of possibly intervening rights of the public. The invention must not have been in public use or on sale more than two years before the application for a patent is made, and all applications must be completed and prepared for examination within two years after the petition is filed, unless it be shown, to the satisfaction of the Commissioner, that the delay was unavoidable. All this shows the intention of Congress to require diligence in prosecuting the claims to an exclusive right. An inventor cannot, without cause, hold his application pending during a long period of years, leaving the public uncertain whether he intends ever to prosecute it, and keeping the field of his invention closed against other inventors. It is not unfair to him, after his application for a patent has been rejected, and after he has for many years taken no steps to re-instate it, to renew it or to appeal, that it should be concluded he has acquiesced in the rejection and abandoned any intention of prosecuting his claim further. Such a conclusion is in accordance with common observation. Especially is this so when, during those years of his inaction, he has seen his invention go into common use, and neither uttered a word of complaint or remonstrance, or was stimulated by it to a fresh attempt to obtain a patent. When, in reliance upon his supine inaction, the public has made use of the result of his ingenuity, and has accommodated its business and its machinery to the improvement, it is not unjust to him to hold that he shall be regarded as having assented to the appropriation, or, in other words, as having abandoned the invention.

There may be, it is true, circumstances which will excuse delay in prosecuting an application for a patent, after it has been rejected, such as extreme poverty of the applicant, or protracted sickness. Of such cases we are not now speaking. None of these ordinary and accepted reasons for Woodbury's inaction during the more than sixteen years that elapsed between 1854 and his presentation of the new petition upon which his patent was granted, are found in this case.

His first application, as we have seen, was rejected on the 20th of February, 1849, and he was then informed from the Patent Office that he could "withdraw or appeal." Nothing, however, was done until October 4, 1852, when his attorney withdrew the application and received back $30. True, the attorney was not empowered to withdraw the application, and it does not appear that Woodbury was then informed it had been withdrawn; but he was informed that the application had been rejected, and he gave no instructions to do anything more in the case, though instructions were asked and though he was frequently in communication with his attorney, who obtained for him another patent on the 20th of March, 1849. The rejected application was suffered to rest until February 27, 1854, when Woodbury wrote to Mr. Cooper, another attorney, informing him that he had a rejected application, filed in June, 1848, for an improvement in press ure with the rotary cutter, and asking him to call up the case and get a patent for the most he could. Mr. Cooper made application for copies of the drawings and specification and for the letter of rejection, after having been informed that the application for the patent had been withdrawn; but nothing further was done, except that Cooper informed Woodbury the application had been withdrawn by his former attorney. Thus the matter rested. Cooper's connection with it ceased in September, 1854. No effort was made in the Patent Office to have the rejected application re-instated, though such an effort must have been successful had it been made and, apparently, Woodbury acquiesced alike in the rejection and in the withdrawal, until December, 1870, when his new application was made. During all this time he was in frequent communication with the Patent Office, prosecuting, and successfully, other applications for patents. He was not pressed by poverty to such an extent as to hinder his renewal of his application. This is shown by direct evidence, and by the fact that he had means to sue for and obtain other patents. Nor was he unwarned of the danger of delay. Very soon after 1854, if not before, the use of planing-machines containing pressure-bars in combination with rotary cutters and a solid bed, was general. The defendant's answer asserts that before December 5, 1870, and since the withdrawal of Woodbury's rejected application, many thousand planing-machines, containing his invention, had been constructed, sold and used in the United States, and this assertion is accepted in the appellant's brief. This fact must have been known by him. Upon this subject the evidence is very full. As we have seen, the distinctive element of Woodbury's invention was the substitution of yielding pressure-bars for the rollers employed in the Woodworth patent. A machine patented to Joseph E. Andrews in 1845 had those pressure-bars, and Woodbury was engaged for years in selling those machines. Between 1852 and 1854 three Cornell machines of the Woodworth patent, rotary cutter, yielding pressure-bars combined with a solid bed were used by John F. Keating in his shop at Boston. Mr. Woodbury was repeatedly there while they were in use, and examined them, but he never suggested that he had any claim to the use of pressure-bars in planing-machines. There is ample evidence also that hundreds of other machines containing the same device were manufactured and sold in Boston between the years 1854 and 1870, and were frequently seen by Mr. Woodbury, calling forth no remark from him indicating that they were invasions of his rights. In view of all this, it is of little importance that, from time to time, he expressed a hope to his brother and, perhaps, occasionally to some others, that he should some time and in some way obtain a patent. Such was not his language to the public. His inaction, his delay, his silence, under the circumstances, were most significant. Though not express avowals of abandonment, "to reason's ear they had a voice" not to be misunderstood. They spoke plainly of acquiescence in the rejection of his application for a patent. They encouraged the manufacture and sale of his invention.

And there is no sufficient explanation of Mr. Woodbury's conduct; nothing which can be regarded as an adequate excuse for it. The rule of the Patent Office was not a statutory rule. It was, at most, only a rule of practice in the office, and it was not inflexible. The action of the office exhibits many instances in which departures from it were made before the Act of Congress of 1870 was passed, and even before Mr. Fisher, the Commissioner of Patents, abolished it. Case of J. W. Cochran, Comrs. Dec., 1869. If Woodbury did not intend to acquiesce in the rejection of his application, the rule was no bar to a movement by him to have it re-instated after its withdrawal. So he might have applied for a re-examination, or might have appealed, or might have filed a new one. Thus, he would have given notice that he did not intend to give up his invention to the public.

There is a wide difference between this case and Smith v. Dental Vulcanite Co., 93 U. S., 486 [XXIII., 952]. In the latter case it appeared that, after three successive rejections, the last in 1856, the application was never withdrawn nor any portion of the fee claimed. Still the applicant did not remit his efforts. He was in ill-health and wretchedly poor. But he continued to assert his expectations of ultimately obtaining a patent; made frequent applications to his friends for advances to enable him to prosecute his claim; attempted to appeal; until finally, in 1864, eight years after the third rejection, the patent was obtained. The patentee had never relaxed his vigilance. He had left nothing undone which he could do. He had kept his flag constantly flying. Nobody had been encouraged by any act or inaction of his to appropriate his invention. His patent was, therefore, sustained, and sustained only because he had been guilty of no laches. The conduct of Woodbury was in striking contrast with that we have described, and which is described more fully on page 491 of the report [925].

We are constrained, therefore, to hold that Woodbury's invention was abandoned by him before he obtained his patent.

We also concur in opinion with the circuit court that the machine built by Alfred Anson, at Norwich, Connecticut, in 1843, anticipated Woodbury's invention. That machine was never patented, though an attempt was made to obtain a patent for it. On the 16th of August, 1848, Anson applied for a patent for what his specification denominated "A new and useful improvement in the construction of the stocks of rotating cutters for dressing and cutting window-sash stuff, etc." The specification was accompanied by a model and drawings in perspective and in detail. His application, however, was rejected; and on the 20th of August, 1844, he withdrew it, and received back $30. We have before us the specification, drawings and model and, what is better, we have the original machine, with the testimony of its builder to identify it. That testimony, as well as that of other witnesses, proved clearly that the machine had at first, as it has now, all the elements in combination which compose the combinations claimed in the Woodbury patent. It had a rotary cutter. It had a solid bed under the cutter on which the material to be operated upon was placed, and over which it was moved and fed to the cutters by an endless chain. It had two yielding pressure-bars instead of rollers, adjusted by means of weights, to keep the material down on the bed, and so arranged as to cause the pressure to be felt nearer to the cutter's edge than it could be brought to bear by pressure-rollers. The yielding pressure was effected by weights, and not by springs, as in the Woodbury machine, but these are plainly mechanical equivalents for each other.

Passing, for the present, consideration of the admissibility of the evidence respecting the Anson machine, which we will notice hereafter, we proceed to observe what it proves.

The machine was built and set up in the shop of Mr. Shepard, a sash and blind-maker, at Norwich, in 1843. It has been in operation there ever since, until it was taken out to be made an exhibit in this case, a period of more than thirty years. Some slight changes have been made in it, but none in the combination described. The evidence leaves no doubt in our minds that the pressure-bars were arranged so as to be yielding, in accommodation to the uneven surfaces of the material to be shaped or planed, and that they were intended to be so arranged for such uses. Anson himself testifies that he put in the pressure-bars because he could get these nearer the cut of the cutters than he could a roller; and in his specification filed in the Patent Office he stated, "The stuff is also kept steady by means of a bar passing from the stands M and N, which bar may be raised or depressed in the same manner and simultaneously with the shafts which hold the cutters by means of the screws." He testifies, also, that he made the front bar with a rounded front, for the purpose of receiving the stuff, and that, driving the stuff under it, it would yield and the weights below would keep the stuff steady when it came to the cutters. Moreover, an inspection of the machine is sufficient to convince us that the bars are yielding, within certain limits, capable of adjustment to any varying thickness of the stuff to be operated upon.

The appellant contends that the Anson machine fails to be an anticipation of the Woodbury invention, because, as they say, it has no solid bed. It plainly has, however, a solid bed, adequate for the purposes for which the machine was intended and used for cutting and planing light material, sash and blinds, and the bed is sufficiently solid for such uses. It may be admitted it would be too weak for general planing work upon boards or plank. It is comparatively a small machine. It would not cease to be the same machine, in principle, if any one or all of its constituents were enlarged and strengthened, so that it might perform heavier work. True, the bed is divided by a slit running longitudinally from one end to the other; but the two parts are arranged so as to constitute one bed, and it is not perceived why, if enlarged, it would not answer all the purposes of the Woodbury machine. Mere enlargement is not invention. The simplest mechanic can make such a modification. Woodbury's patent claims no particular form of a bed. It does not require the bed to be of any specified thickness, or constructed in one piece. Its purpose is to furnish a firm and unyielding support to the material when passing under the cutter, and that may be done as well by constructing the bed of two parts as of one. An anvil composed of two pieces is not the less an anvil, a solid block to resist the blows of a hammer. A solid foundation of a house may be composed of more than one stone. We cannot but think this objection to the Anson machine as an anticipating device is entitled to no weight.

Secondly, the appellant contends that the machine has no such pressure-bars as are shown and described in the Woodbury patent. This objection we have already considered, perhaps as fully as need be. There is, it is true, a formal difference, but it is merely formal. The distinguishing feature of the patent is yielding pressure-bars in combination with two other elements. The Anson machine has those in the same combination. In both the machines they are substitutes for rollers, and intended to secure like advantages over the Woodworth patent, namely: while keeping down the stuff on the bed of the machine, to bring the downward pressure nearer to the line of the cut. If, in the Woodbury machine, the bars enable that pressure to be brought nearer than it is in the Anson, which is not apparent, the difference is only in degree of approximation. Such a difference would be effected in the Woodworth machine by simply changing the diameter of the rollers.

The third principal objection urged by the appellant is, that the Anson machine fails, as a whole, to perform the functions of the Woodbury machine. If by this is meant that heavy plank cannot be planed by it, the objection is well taken. For such a purpose it would need enlargement and strengthening; but that all the elements claimed for the patentee's combination are found in it, producing the same results, differing only in degree, if at all, is to us very apparent.

Upon the whole, after having studied carefully the evidence and the exhibits, we cannot doubt that every element found in the Woodbury machine, everything that was claimed by the patentee, existed in the same combination in the Anson machine, which was constructed and in full operation more than two years before Woodbury claims to have made his invention. Woodbury was not, therefore, the first and original inventor.

As the Anson machine has been in use, unchanged in the principles of its construction, from 1843 until it was taken from the shop to be made an exhibit in this case, it is not to be thrown aside as an abandoned experiment.

We have considered the case thus far, assuming that the Anson machine and all the testimony of witnesses respecting it is proper to be considered. The appellant objects, however, that most of the evidence is inadmissible, because the names of the witnesses called to sustain this defense of anticipation were not given in the answer. Section 4920, p. 960 of the Revised Statutes declares, that the proofs of previous invention, knowledge or use of the thing patented, may be given upon notice in the answer of the defendant, stating the names and residences of the persons alleged to have invented, or to have had the prior knowledge of the thing patented, and where and by whom it had been used. The statute does not declare that the names of the witnesses, who may be called to testify to such prior invention or use, shall be stated in the answer. It is only the names and residences of the persons alleged to have invented or to have had prior knowledge of the thing patented that are required.

The defendant's answer in this case, as amended, set out "That said alleged invention, described and claimed as new in the letters patent mentioned in the bill, or a substantial or material part thereof, was, before the alleged invention thereof by Woodbury, used by Alfred Anson, formerly of Norwich, and said use was known to Noah L. Cole, of said Norwich; said use being at said Norwich, in the State of Connecticut."

Anson and Cole were both examined and testified, without any objection to their competency because of want of notice. Hence it is too late to object to their testimony now. Had objection been taken at the time, the answer might have been amended. Graham v. Mason, 5 Fish. Pat. Cas., 6, per Clifford, J.; Brown v. Hall, 3 Fish., 581; Phillips v. Page, 24 How., 164 [65 U. S., XVI., 689]; Roemer v. Simon, 95 U. S., 214-220 [XXIV., 384-386].

A number of other witnesses were examined relative to the history of the Anson machine and to show that no material change had been made in its organization from 1843 to 1876, or from the time when it was first put into operation. Their names were not given in the defendant's answer, and it is now insisted that their testimony should not be received. It is, however, doubtful, to say the least, whether any objection was made to their testifying because their names had not been given in the answer. None was made specifically for that reason. After notice had been given that the defendant would proceed to take depositions at Norwich, the solicitors of the plaintiffs requested, in writing, to be informed of the names of witnesses proposed to be examined, asserting a right to such information, not under the statute, but under the English chancery rules. Clearly they had no such right under our equity rule. The names were not given in answer to the request, and when the witnesses were called the counsel for the complainants objected to their examination "for want of notice." Notice of what? The counsel of the defendant may well have understood the objection to be, that the names had not been furnished in response to the application of the complainant's solicitors, rather than that they had not been set out in the answer. An objection to the examination of a witness should state specifically the ground of the objection, in order that the opposite party may have the opportunity of removing it, if possible. Had this been done in the present case, the defendant might have postponed the examination and moved to amend his answer, if such amendment was needed.

But beyond this, it seems to be settled that the true construction of the Act of Congress is that only the names of those who had invented or used the anticipating machine or improvement, and not the names of those who are to testify of its invention or use, are required to be pleaded. It was so ruled by Grier, J., in Wilton v. R. R. Co., 1 Wall., Jr., 195, and by Nelson, J., in Many v. Jagger, 1 Blatchf., 376. Roemer v. Simon, 95 U. S., 218 [XXIV., 385]. This is all that is necessary to protect a patentee against surprise. If, in regard to an invention claimed to have anticipated his own, he is informed by the defendant's answer of the names and residences of the alleged inventors, or who had prior knowledge of the thing patented, and when and by whom it had been used, it is sufficient to apprise him of the defense, and to enable him to make all needful inquiries respecting it. He need not know who are to testify in regard to the invention or use; much less does he need to know who are to testify respecting the history and use of the prior invention, after the complainant's patent has been granted.

We think, therefore, the testimony of the witnesses objected to "for want of notice" was admissible. And even without it, the testimony of Anson and of Cole is sufficient to show the construction and use of the Anson machine in 1843, before Woodbury's invention was made.

Upon the whole, then, our conclusions are, that Woodbury was not the original and first inventor of the improvement for which the patent now owned by the complainants was granted to him, and that if he was, his invention had been abandoned to the public before his patent was granted.

It follows that the decree of the Circuit Court dismissing the bill must be affirmed.

Bill dismissed, with costs.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. P. Phillips, Thos. Allen Clarke, F. L. Bayne and W. Hallett Phillips, for plaintiffs in error:

As to first charge, see, Dimech v. Corlett 12 Moore P. C., 216.

As to second, see, The Success, 7 Blatchf., 552; McAndrew v. Adams, 1 Bing. (N. C.), 29, 38; Lowber v. Bangs, 2 Wall., 736 (69 U. S., XVII., 768); Conkling v. Massey, L. R. 8 C. P., 400; Robinson v. U. S., 13 Wall., 366 (80 U. S., XXX., 654); Humphrey v. Dale, 26 L. J. (Q. B.), 137.

Mr. C. B. Singleton, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action on a charter-party, tried before a jury in the Circuit Court for the District of Louisiana.

The defense was that, by reason of the plaintiff's delay in presenting his vessel at New Orleans for receiving the cargo, the defendants had rescinded the contract and were justified in doing so. A verdict and judgment were rendered for the plaintiff, the master of the chartered vessel. The defendants bring this writ of error.

The charter party contains a recital that, at the date of its execution, the vessel was lying in the harbor of New Orleans, while the bill of exceptions shows that she was then at sea. The court charged the jury that if at the time the defendants signed the charter-party they knew that the ship was at sea, the words "now lying in the harbor of New Orleans" should be regarded as of no significance.

That language in the charter is not a warranty or contract, but a representation; and if the charterers knew certainly that the vessel was not there, of course they were not deceived or misled by the recital, which was probably part of a printed form that attracted no attention. The evidence on the subject of this knowledge is not in the record, and it is, therefore, to be presumed in favor of the action of the court that it was full and complete. There was no error in this instruction.

The court also charged the jury that as the charter-party fixed no definite time for the vessel to be at New Orleans ready to receive the cargo, the master was bound to use reasonable diligence in bringing her to the port, and was bound to use no more. If he did, the defendants were bound by the contract. If he did not use such diligence, they were not. To this charge, also, defendants excepted.

To the charge in the abstract there could be no just objection.

The plaintiffs in error argue, in effect, that it was not warranted by the testimony.

The evidence tended to show that the master was compelled to cross the bar at the mouth of the Mississippi and to sail one fourth of the way up the river to the city without the aid of a steam-tug (which was the usual mode of carrying such vessels up to New Orleans), because no such tug was in sight, and that then a tug which offered itself at the request of the defendants was refused because of the exorbitant charge asked for the remaining part of the voyage. The bill of exceptions does not set out all of the evidence, and what is found there is very meager, especially on this point.

Under what precise circumstances the master refused the aid of the tug which offered its services, to what extent the offer was exorbitant, how it came to be sent there by defendants, and then refused to serve without excessive compensation, are all unknown to us, but were probably clear to the jury. The charge by the court that the master was bound to use due and reasonable diligence furnished the general rule of law. If there was anything in reference to his refusal to employ the tug which made a more definite instruction proper, counsel for defense should have asked for it. But none was prayed.

We are not able to see, therefore, any error in the charge of the court.

A question was asked the master as to what he would have done if the tug-boat had offered to take him up the river at the usual rates, to which defendants objected, and the question being permitted they excepted.

The answer is not given, and we cannot tell, therefore, whether it was favorable to plaintiff or defendants. It is settled law, at least in this court, that, under such circumstances, it is the evidence given which constitutes the error, if there be one, and this must be shown by the answer. Nailor v. Williams, 8 Wall., 107 [75 U. S., XIX., 348].

We see no error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

1. A party, who merely substitutes another old ingredient for one of the ingredients of a patented combination, is an infringer, if the substitute performs the same function as the ingredient for which it is so substituted, and was well known at the date of the patent.

2. Buerk's patent for an improvement in watchmen's time detectors is valid, and is infringed by Meyer's improvement in watchman's time checks.

Argued Mar. 8, 9, 1880. Decided Mar. 22, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. A. V. Briesen, for appellant.

Mr. J. Van Santvoord, for appellee.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Equivalents may be claimed by a patentee of an invention consisting of a combination of old elements or ingredients, as well as of any other valid patented improvement, provided the arrangement of the parts composing the invention is new, and will produce a new and useful result.

Such a patentee may, doubtless, invoke the doctrine of equivalents as against an infringer of the patent; but the term "equivalent," as applied to such an invention, is special in its signification, and somewhat different from what is meant when the term is applied to an invention consisting of a new device or an entirely new machine.

Pressure in a machine may be produced by a spring or by a weight; and where that is so, the one is a mechanical equivalent of the other. Cases arise also where a rod and an endless chain will produce the same effect in a machine; and where that is so, the constructor, in operating under the patent, may substitute the one for the other, and still claim the protection which the patent confers. Exactly the same function in certain cases may be accomplished by a lever or by a screw; and where that is so, the substitution of the one for the other cannot be regarded as invention.

Patentees of an invention, consisting merely of a combination of old ingredients, are entitled to equivalents; by which is meant that the patent, in respect to each of the respective ingredients comprising the invention, covers every other ingredient which, in the same arrangement of the parts, will perform the same function, if it was well known as a proper substitute for the one described in the specification at the date of the patent. Hence, it follows that a party who merely substitutes another old ingredient for one of the ingredients of the patented combination is an infringer, if the substitute performs the same function as the ingredient for which it is so substituted, and it appears that it was well known at the date of the patent that it was adaptable to that use. Gill v. Wells, 22 Wall., 1, 28 [89 U. S., XXII., 699, 711].

Due process was issued against the present respondent and two others, to wit: Theodore Kahn and Charles Keinath, all of whom were duly served, but the respondent last named never filed an answer, and submitted to a decree pro confesso. Both of the other respondents appeared and jointly answered, setting up two principal defenses: (1) That the complainant was not the original and first inventor of the improvement. (2) They deny in their answer that they have in any manner infringed the patent of the complainant, or ever invaded any of his rights, as alleged in the bill of complaint.

Proofs were taken, the parties heard, and the circuit court having overruled both defenses, sent the cause to a master to ascertain what amount the complainant was entitled to recover. Hearing was had before the master, and he made a report, as required by the decretal order. Exceptions were filed by the respondents who were again heard before the circuit court in support of their motion to set aside the master's report. Modifications of an important character were made by the circuit court in the report of the master, both in respect to the amount adjudged to the complainant and in respect to the portions to be paid by the respective respondents, the decree being that the complainant do recover of the three respondents the sum of $1,961; and also against the first two in the sum of $3,748.28, with interest and costs, as therein specified.

Seasonable appeal was taken by the first named respondent, and since the appeal was entered here he has filed the following assignment of errors: (1) That the circuit court erred in holding that the patent of the complainant is good and valid. (2) That the circuit court erred in holding that the respondents have infringed the claims of the complainant's patent.

Patented time detectors for watchmen were known in the art prior to the date of the patent described in the bill of complaint, and it appears that the complainant, at a certain period anterior to that date, became the owner of such a patent and that he surrendered the same, and that it was re-issued in his name for the then unexpired portion of the term. Certain alterations were made in the specification of the re-issue and, as there described, the invention provided a watch for the watchman, which he carried with him in his rounds, so constructed that, by the insertion of a key kept at each of the stations he was required to visit, he could make a record within the watch indicating the several stations visited, with the precise time of each visit and the order in which the respective visits were made. Each watch was provided with a lock, so that the watchman had no access to its interior, and as the record of each station could only be made by the peculiar key that belonged to such station, which was there made fast, the watchman could not deceive his employers by making a false record.

All these several functions were effected by using a watch or small portable clock movement inclosed in a strong case, the lid of which could be locked and the key kept by the employer. Like a watch, it had an arbor upon which the hour-hand was placed, and a drum was attached so as to revolve as the hour-hand revolved, the purpose of which was to carry the roll of paper to receive the marks indicating the time of each visit. By marks on the paper it was divided into spaces corresponding in their position, relatively, as respects the center of the watch, to the hours and minutes of the watch dial; and by lines drawn lengthwise it was also divided into spaces corresponding in number to the number of markers to be used in effecting the patented result.

Exterior to the watch movement, but within the case, there were placed small steel bars or springs, terminating each in a point bent at right angles, while the other end was fixed firmly to the circular plate or frame of the watch-movement. These springs were placed and held in a gang, one above another, so that the points were in a row perpendicular to the watch face, at and exterior to the point on the dial of the watch indicating the hour of twelve, and each point was directly opposite one of the longitudinal spaces in the strip of paper around the circumference of the drum.

What the inventor desired to accomplish was to show the exact time of each visit of the watchman, and it is obvious that if the point of one of the springs is pressed inward upon the revolving drum it will perforate the paper within its proper longitudinal division, and that the perforation will show the hour and minute at which it was made; and in order to permit such perforation without injuring the steel point, the periphery of the drum was channeled by narrow longitudinal grooves beneath each of the spaces in the paper placed around the drum to receive the marks. Keys were also provided varying from each other in the location and width of the bit and in the number of the bits, so that when one was inserted in the key-hole contiguous to the steel spring and turned, it would press one of the springs inward upon the paper and make the required perforation, while another would press two springs and make two perforations, another three, and so on, as more fully set forth in the specification. Buerk v. Valentine, 9 Blatchf., 479.

Since the term of that patent expired, the complainant has obtained a patent for the invention in controversy in this case, which, as he admits, is for the same purpose as the other, but which he insists is a valuable improvement in accomplishing the purpose for which both inventions were made. In its main features, the new improvement consists in dispensing with the drum entirely and the paper wound around its circumference. Instead of that, it attaches a circular disk to the arbor of the hour-hand to revolve therewith, and attaches thereto a circular flat paper dial, of larger diameter, divided by vertical lines, corresponding with the hours and minutes of a watch dial, and having a portion of its exterior divided into spaces by circular lines drawn at uniform distances, and corresponding to the location of certain steel points as the paper disk is revolved. Beneath the circular plate forming the support or frame of the watch movement, the gang of steel bars or springs is firmly attached to the plate in such position that the points are in a straight line radial to the center, and over each point is a hole in the plate so that each can be pushed upward, the point thereof passing through the hole sufficiently to perforate the paper dial in the space corresponding to the point of the spring. Over the row of holes is placed a small strip of metal, called a fixed index, which is fastened to the circular plate or frame of the watch and extends towards the center of the disk and is raised sufficiently above the revolving disk to permit the paper dial to revolve freely under it and over the holes through which the spring-points are to rise; and to prevent injury to these points, holes are made in its under surface opposite each point, into which the points as they rise may enter, and then by the power of the spring be withdrawn to their respective positions below the plate. Devices, called keys, of a like character to those used in the prior invention, are provided to be inserted in a key-hole so located that the bit of the keys when turned will force the springs upwards instead of inwards, as in the other apparatus previously explained. Perforations are made by the combination in the exterior portion of the revolving paper dial, which indicate the precise hour and minute when it was made, and the particular key that was employed, with all the variations accomplished by the devices described in the specification of the prior patent.

Attempt is made in argument to support the first assignment of error chiefly by reference to three exhibits introduced in evidence by the respondents, which were known and used by the public prior to the date of the patent described in the bill of complaint. They are the patent of Schwilgue, the patent of Rowbotham, and the patent of Nolet.

Before entering upon a separate examination of these several patents, it is proper to remark that it is not pretended that any one of them embodies the entire invention secured to the complainant in his letters patent. Nothing of the kind is pretended, but it is insisted that each contains some feature, device or partial mode of operation corresponding in that particular to the corresponding feature, device or partial mode of operation exhibited in the complainant's patent.

Suppose that is so; still it is clear that such a concession cannot benefit the respondent, it being conceded that neither of the exhibits given in evidence embodies the complainant's invention or the substance of the apparatus described and claimed in his specification. Where the thing patented is an entirety, consisting of a single device or combination of old elements incapable of division or separate use, the respondent cannot escape the charge of infringement by alleging or proving that a part of the entire invention is found in one prior patent, printed publication or machine, and another part in another prior exhibit, and still another part in a third exhibit, and from the three or any greater number of such exhibits draw the conclusion that the patentee is not the original and first inventor of the patented improvement. Bates v. Coe [ante, 68].

Authority is given to a defendant in an action at law or to a respondent in an equity suit to plead or set up in the answer that the patentee is not the original or first inventor of the improvement; but if the plaintiff or complainant introduces his patent in evidence, the burden is cast upon the defending party to prove his defense, which he may do by showing that the thing patented had been invented or discovered by some other person in this country prior to the alleged invention in the pending suit, or that it had been patented or described in some printed publication in this or any foreign country. R. S., sec. 4920.

Apply that rule to the facts of the case, and it is clear, to a demonstration, that neither of the exhibits given in evidence by the respondents constitutes any defense to the charge contained in the bill of complaint. Curtis, Pat., 4th ed., sec. 98.

Similarities may, doubtless, be shown between certain features of the apparatus invented by Schwilgue and the apparatus patented to the complainant, as contended by the respondents; but they utterly fail to point out the differences, except in one or two particulars. They differ not only in construction but in the mode of operation, and in almost every particular which gives value to the device as a time detector for watchmen, the foreign patent being much more cumbersome and inconvenient than that of the complainant. Stationary detectors were employed at an early period, to secure fidelity in watchmen in making the rounds of their beat in factories or other business establishments. Detectors of the kind were soon followed by portable watch movements which were carried by the watchman, on which he stamped with ink or other coloring matter the proof of his visit to the several rooms within his beat. Enough appears, to show that the patent of Rowbotham was nothing more than an improved apparatus of that class, being evidently so unlike that of the complainant as not to deserve much examination.

Nor is it necessary to enter much into detail in disposing of the other exhibit introduced by the respondents, as it evidently belongs to the same class of detectors as the preceding, and bears little or no relation to the apparatus of the complainant.

Argument to show that the present apparatus of the complainant is, substantially, different from that described in the expired patent, cannot be required, as the comparison already given is amply sufficient to prove that difference to everyone not blinded by self-interest or prejudice. Tested by these considerations, it is plain that nothing remains for re-examination but the question of infringement.

Persons seeking redress for the unlawful use of their inventions, must allege and prove that they or those under whom they claim are the original and first inventors of the improvement, and that the patent for the same has been infringed by the party against whom the suit is brought. Where the patent in suit is introduced in evidence it affords a prima facie presumption that the invention is new and useful; but the burden to prove infringement never shifts if the charge is denied in the plea or answer. Sufficient proof of infringement may be derived from the comparison of that which is used by the defending party with the description of the invention given in the specification of the patent which constitutes the foundation of the suit, and where the invention is embodied in a machine or apparatus, that mode of conducting the examination is usually the most satisfactory. Sufficient explanations of the complainant's patent have already been given, which need not be repeated.

None, it is presumed, will deny that the time detector sold by the respondents is, in appearance and general construction, similar to that described in the specification of the complainant. Beyond all doubt, the respondents employ a watch movement with a series of keys and a single hole, together with a revolving dial fastened to the watch arbor. Like the complainant, they dispense with the hour and minute hands of the watch and attach the false or paper revolving dial to the arbor of the apparatus. Their stationary index is exactly the same as that of the complainant, and they also employ a series of markers arranged radially to the center of the dial; but the markers are unyielding, while the index is so constructed as to enable the markers to perform the same function as those employed in the complainant's apparatus. They arrange their markers under the false dial, and place the yielding index over the back of the false dial, so that the marks are made from the inside instead of from the outside.

Expert testimony was taken by the complainant, and his witness testified that the apparatus of the respondents is substantially the same in construction and mode of operation as that described in the complainant's specification, and gave his reasons for the conclusion in substance and effect as follows: that the arrangement of the markers is in a line radiating from the center, the markers being made stationary, so that instead of pressing against the keys while the index supports the paper, the keys, supported by the stationary index, press the paper against the markers; the faces of the markers, instead of being simple points, form what is called small figures, and the divisions of the paper dial, by concentric circles, is omitted, it appearing that the different figures are made to indicate the different stations, but the arrangement of the gang of markers is preserved. It is denied by the respondents that the index in their apparatus yields; but the witness testifies that, by taking a sight over the edge of the case parallel to the dial when the watch is open, the stationary index is seen to yield, and acts as a spring. Taken as a whole, he regards the marking device as substantially similar to that employed by the complainant.

Unless there is some yielding, either of the markers or the index, it is not easy to see how the key could be turned without tearing the paper or breaking the key; from which it must follow, as contended by the complainant, that the respondents have substituted for his series of yielding spring-points and index a series of permanent or unyielding markers and a yielding index, retaining the other necessary elements of a false dial which shall receive the impressions by the use of the described keys.

Differences between the two arrangements undoubtedly exist, as is usually the case where one is borrowed from the other without consent. Most or all of those differences are well described by the Circuit Judge in the case to which reference has already been made. Speaking of the infringing apparatus, he says that the gang of steel springs, instead of being placed beneath the circular plate or frame of the watch movement, is attached to the lid of the case of the instrument, immediately over the location of the gang of springs in the complainant's detector. When closed, the line or row of points is in the same straight line radially from the center, and in order to perforate the paper dial they must be pressed downward instead of upward. To that end the key-hole is placed in the side of the lid over the gang of springs instead of being placed in the body of the case below the springs. Instead of the fixed index placed over the holes through which the points rise to perforate the paper, the respondents have, in the same location, a row of holes in the plate or frame of the movement, into which the points enter, to protect them from injury when making the perforations. During the act of perforation the paper in the complainant's apparatus is sustained by the fixed index, but the necessity for that in the infringing apparatus is obviated by making the motion of the springs downward, whereby the plate of the watch performs the same function during such act.

Other minor differences exist in the manner the paper disk is attached to the revolving disk, which is fastened to the arbor of the watch movement, but they are not deemed to be of the substance of the infringed invention. Examples are also produced as exhibits where are shown watch dial hands on the detector of the respondents which do not appear on the apparatus of the complainant; but that is a matter not supposed to be included in the infringed patent.

Suffice it to say, without entering further into the comparison of the two specifications, that we are all of the opinion that the charge of infringement is fully sustained, both by the comparison of the specifications, one with the other, and by the proofs exhibited in the transcript.

Exceptions were taken to the master's report; but the rulings of the court in respect to the amount adjudged to the complainant for the infringement not having been assigned for error, are not the proper subject of re-examination. Buerk v. Imhaeuser, 14 Blatchf., 19.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR, COLLECTOR OF THE PORT OF NEW YORK, Plff. in Err.,

v.

WILLIAM E. DODGE ET AL., as PHELPS, DODGE & Co.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 34-37.)

Duty Act—sufficient protest.

1. Under sections 2503 and 2504, of the Revised Statutes, "tin plate" and "terne tin" are dutiable at only ninety per cent of the rate of fifteen per cent ad valorem.

2. A protest against the payment of illegal duties is sufficient if it is so distinct and specific as to apprise the collector of the nature of the objection made to the duty imposed.

[No. 206.]

Argued Mar. 16, 17, 1880. Decided Mar. 29, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

The defendants in error, Messrs. Phelps, Dodge & Co., imported into the Port of New York, subsequently to June 22, 1874, the date of the approval of the revision of the statutes, sundry invoices of tin plates and terne tin, upon which Collector Arthur exacted a duty of fifteen per centum ad valorem. Messrs. Phelps, Dodge & Co. claimed that the goods were only dutiable at ninety per cent of that rate.

The duty was paid under protest. Appeals were duly made to the Secretary of the Treasury; he affirmed the decision of the Collector; and this suit was commenced for the excess exacted by the Collector over the amount admitted to be due.

The following is a copy of the protest:

Sir: We do hereby protest against the payment of 15 per cent charged on sixteen hundred and fifty (1650) boxes of tin plates of the dutiable value of $14,422 gold, contained in our entry made on the 23d day of September, 1874, per S. S. Algeria, from Liverpool, England, in cases marked, P. D. & Co., and various other marks; claiming that, under existing laws, said goods are only liable to a duty of 90 per cent of 15 per cent or 13½ per cent, because title 33, section 2503, of the codification of the revenue laws provides certain rates and duties on articles which are mentioned in Schedule E, of section 2504, with the provisions that all articles mentioned in 2503 shall have the benefit of 10 per cent reduction, one of the provisions, on all metals not herein otherwise provided for, and on all manufactures, of, etc., etc., includes tin plate, and we pay the amount exacted in order to get possession of the goods, and look to you for refund of the same.

Dated New York, September 29, 1874.

Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiffs, and the defendant sued out this writ of error.

Mr. S. F. Phillips, Solicitor-Gen., for plaintiff in error.

Mr. John E. Parsons, for defendants in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

The principal question in this case is, whether, under sections 2503 and 2504 of the Revised Statutes, "tin plate" and "terne tin" are dutiable at fifteen per cent ad valorem, or at ninety per cent of that rate. It is conceded that, under the Act of 1872, 17 Stat., at L., 281, secs. 2, 4, which continued in force until the Revised Statutes went into effect, the duty was fifteen per cent ad valorem.

The sections of the Revised Statutes referred to, so far as they are material to the determination of the case, are as follows:

"Section 2503. There shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles mentioned in the schedules contained in the next section, imported from foreign countries, the rates of duty which are by the schedules respectively prescribed; Provided, That on the goods, wares and merchandise in this section enumerated and provided for, imported from foreign countries, there shall be levied, collected and paid only ninety per centum of the several duties and rates of duty imposed by the said schedules upon said articles, severally; that is to say:

On all iron and steel, and on all manufactures of iron and steel, of which such metals, or either of them, shall be the component part of chief value, excepting cotton machinery.

On all metals not herein otherwise provided for, and on all manufactures of metals of which either of them is the component part of chief value, excepting percussion-caps, watches, jewelry and other articles of ornament: Provided, That all wire rope and wire strand, or chain made of iron wire, either bright, coppered, galvanized or coated with other metals, shall pay the same rate of duty that is now levied on the iron wire of which said rope or strand or chain is made; and all wire rope and wire strand or chain made of steel wire, either bright, coppered, galvanized or coated with other metals, shall pay the same rate of duty that is now levied on the steel wire of which said rope or strand or chain is made."

* * * * *

"Section 2504. Schedule E. Metals.

* * * * *

Tin in plates or sheets, terne, and tagger's tin; fifteen per centum ad valorem."

* * * * *

In U. S. v. Bowen, decided at the present Term [ante, 631], we held that the Revised Statutes must be treated as a legislative declaration by Congress of what the statute law of the United States was December 1, 1873, on the subjects they embrace, and that when the meaning was plain, the courts could not look to the statutes which have been revised to see if Congress erred in that revision. Looking, then, to this case, we find that Congress has declared the law to be that only ninety per cent of the rates of duty imposed by the schedules in section 2504 shall be collected on all metals not otherwise provided for in section 2503, and on all manufactures of metals of which either of them is the component part of chief value, and on iron and all manufactures of iron of which that metal shall be a component part of chief value. In this there seems no ambiguity, and if "tin plates" and "terne tin" are metal or manufactures of metal, or if they can be classed as iron or manufactures of iron in which iron is the component part of chief value, there cannot be a doubt that they come within the ninety per cent clause. They are classified in the schedules as metals. All the elements of which they are composed are metals. Their manufacture consists in the combination of the several component parts. The tin is still tin, and the iron still iron. There has been no substantial chemical change. All their metallic qualities still remain. They are what they purport to be, manufactures of iron, tin and sometimes lead, and the result is a new article of commerce, of which metals, as metals form the component parts. Although they have, when combined, a particular name, it is a name applicable to the element in the combination, whose use it was intended in this way to secure. Percussion-caps, watches and jewelry and other articles of ornament, made of metal, must have been considered as manufactures of metal, or it would not have been necessary to except them by name from the operation of the reduction clause.

Without pursuing the subject further, it is sufficient to say that we are clearly of the opinion that the articles in question were dutiable only at ninety per cent of the rate of fifteen per cent ad valorem.

An objection is made to the sufficiency of the protest. The claim is, that it was not so distinct and specific as to apprise the Collector of the nature of the objection made to the duty imposed. "Technical precision," says Mr. Justice Clifford, for the court in Davies v. Arthur, 96 U. S., 151 [XXIV., 759], "is not required; but the objection must be so distinct and specific as, when fairly construed, to show that the objection taken at the trial was at the time in the mind of the importer, and that it was sufficient to notify the collector of its true nature and character, to the end that he might ascertain the precise facts, and have an opportunity to correct the mistake and cure the defect, if it was one that could be obviated." We have had no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that the protest in this case fully meets the requirements of this rule. No one could have any doubt of the nature and character of the claim that was made.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

WEST JERSEY RAILROAD COMPANY.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 71-87.)

Corporate powers—railroad lease—charter—void contract—ratification—ultra vires.

*1. The powers of corporations organized under legislative charters are only such as the statutes confer. Conceding that what is fairly implied is as much granted as what is expressed, it remains that the charter of a corporation is the measure of its powers, and that the enumeration of these powers implies the exclusion of all others.

2. A lease by a railroad company, of all its road, rolling stock and franchises, for which there is no authority given in its charter, is ultra vires and void.

3. The ordinary clause in the charter, authorizing such corporations to contract with other transportation companies for the mutual transfer of goods and passengers over each other's roads, is no authority to lease its road and franchises.

4. The franchises and powers granted to such corporations are, in a large measure, designed to be exercised for the public good, and this exercise of them is the consideration of the public grant. Any contract by which the corporation disables itself to perform those duties to the public, or attempts to absolve it from their obligation without the consent of the State, is a violation of its contract with the State and is forbidden by public policy and is, therefore, void.

*Head notes by Mr. Justice MILLER.

NOTE.—Corporations possess only powers conferred by statute creating them, and those necessarily implied. See note to Huntington v. Savings Bk., 96 U. S., XXIV., 777.

5. The fact that the Legislature, after such a lease is made, passes a statute forbidding the directors of the company, its lessees or agents, from collecting more than a fixed amount of compensation for carrying passengers and freight, is not a ratification of such lease or an acknowledgment of its validity.

6. Where, in a lease of this kind for twenty years, the lessors have resumed possession at the end of five years, and the accounts for that period have been adjusted and paid, a condition in the lease to pay the value of the unexpired term is void, and the case does not come within the principle that executed contracts which were originally ultra vires shall stand good for the protection of rights acquired under a completed transaction.

Argued Jan. 23, 1880. Decided Mar. 29, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. A. Sydney Biddle, Peter L. Voorhes and George W. Biddle, for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. Samuel Dickson, John C. Bullitt and A. Browning, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice MILLER delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiffs in error entered into a contract on the 8th day of October, 1863, with the Millville and Glassboro Railroad Company of New Jersey, which, in the resolution of the Board of Directors by whom it was initiated, is called a lease of the road. This agreement was confirmed by a vote of the stockholders and was to continue for a period of twenty years from the first day of April, 1863. It, however, contained a provision that the Railroad Company could at any time put an end to it upon three months' notice to the other party; but, in that event, arbitrators were to be chosen who should decide upon the value of the contract and the amount of damages incurred by and equitably and justly due to the other party by reason of such action. Under this provision the Railroad Company ended the contract and resumed possession of the road April 1, 1868.

About this time, by Acts of the New Jersey Legislature, the Millville and Glassboro Railroad Company was consolidated with the West Jersey Railroad Company, which succeeded to all the rights and obligations of the former company and the road was delivered by plaintiffs, on the first of April, 1868, to the latter.

Efforts at arbitration, which it is unnecessary to recite here, having proved abortive, the plaintiffs in error brought the present action in the Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania to recover the value of the contract and the damages sustained by them by its termination under the clause of the agreement already mentioned.

The court held the contract void, and instructed the jury to find a verdict for defendants. This writ of error brings up the judgment entered on that verdict, for review.

The ground on which the court so held, and on which the ruling is supported in argument here, is, that the contract amounted to a lease, by which the railroad, rolling stock and franchises of the Corporation were transferred to plaintiffs, and that such a contract was ultra vires of the Company.

It is denied by appellants that the contract can be fairly called a lease.

But we know of no element of a lease which is wanting in this instrument. "A lease for years is a contract between lessor and lessee, for possession of lands, etc., on the one side, and a recompense by rent or other consideration on the other." 4 Bac. Abr., 632.

"Anything corporeal or incorporeal lying in livery or in grant may be the subject-matter of a lease and, therefore, not only lands and houses, but commons, ways, fisheries, franchises, estovers, annuities, rent charges, and all other incorporeal hereditaments are included in the common law rule." Bouv. L. D., "Lease;" 1 Wash. Real. Prop., 310.

The railroad and all its appurtenances and franchises, including the right to do the business of a railroad and collect the proper tolls, are leased to the plaintiffs for a period of twenty years by the Corporation. In return it receives from plaintiffs one half of all the gross earnings of the road as rent. The usual right of re-entry for failure to perform covenants, in addition to the special right to terminate the lease on notice, is found in the instrument, and the usual covenant for repairs and proper running of the road, equivalent to good husbandry on a farm, is also there.

The provision for complete possession, control and use of the property of the Company and its franchises by the lessees is perfect. Nothing is left in the lessor but the right to receive rent. No power of control in the management of the road and the exercise of the franchises of the Company. A solitary exception to this statement, of no value in the actual control of its affairs, is found in the sixth clause of the lease, which is a covenant that the lessees will discharge anyone in their service on the request of the Corporation, evidenced by a resolution of the Board of Directors.

But while we are satisfied that the contract is both technically and in its essential character a lease, we do not see that the decision of that point either way affects the question on which we are to pass. That question is, whether the Railroad Company exceeded its powers in making the contract, by whatever name it may be called, so that it is void.

It is, perhaps, as well to consider this question in the order of its presentation by the learned counsel for plaintiffs, upon whom the burden of showing the error of the circuit court devolved the duty of proving one of the following propositions:

1. The contract was within the powers granted to the Railroad Company by the Act of the New Jersey Legislature under which it was organized.
2. That, if this be not established, the lease was afterwards ratified and approved by another Act of that Legislature.
3. That, if both these propositions are found to be untenable, the contract became an executed agreement under which the rights acquired by plaintiffs should be legally respected.

The authority to make this lease is placed by counsel primarily in the following language of the 13th section of the Company's charter:

"That it shall be lawful for the said Company, at any time during the continuance of its charter, to make contracts and engagements with any other corporation, or with individuals, for the transporting or conveying any kinds of goods, produce, merchandise, freight or passengers, and to enforce the fulfillment of such contracts."

This is no more than saying, "You may do the business of carrying goods and passengers, and may make contracts for doing that business. Such contracts you may make with any other corporation or with individuals." No doubt a contract by which the goods received from other railroads or carrying companies should be carried over the road of this Company, or by which goods or passengers from this road should be carried by other railroads, whether connecting immediately with them or not, are within this power, and are probably the main object of the clause. But it is impossible, under any sound rule of construction, to find in the language here used a permission to sell, to lease, or to transfer the entire road and the rights and franchises of the Corporation to others. To do so is to deprive the Company of the power of making those contracts which this clause confers and of performing the duties which it implies.

In the case of R. Carriage & Iron Co. v. Riche, decided in the House of Lords in 1875, and reported in 7 Eng. and Ir. App. Cas. [L. R. 7 H. L., 653], the memorandum of association, which, as Lord Cairns said, stands under the Act of 1862 in place of a legislative charter, thus described the business which the association was authorized to conduct: "The objects for which this company is established are to make, sell or lend on hire, railway carriages and engines, and all kinds of railway plant, fittings, machinery and rolling stock; and to carry on the business of mechanical engineers and general contractors; to purchase and sell as merchants, timber, coal, metals or other materials; and to buy and sell any such materials on commission or as agents." This company purchased a concession for a railroad in Belgium, and entered into a contract for its construction, on which it paid large sums of money. The company was sued afterwards on the agreement with Riche, the contractor, and the contract was held valid in the Exchequer Chamber by a majority of the judges, on the ground that, while it was in excess of the power conferred on the directors by the memorandum, it had been made valid by ratification of the shareholders, to whom it had been submitted.

The House of Lords reversed this judgment, holding unanimously that the contract was beyond the powers conferred by the memorandum above recited, and being beyond the powers of the association, no vote of the shareholders whatever could make it valid. The case is otherwise important in its relation to the one before us, but it is cited here for its parallelism in the construction of the clause defining the powers of the Company.

If a memorandum which described the parties as engaging in furnishing nearly all the materials, machinery and rolling stock which go to make a railroad and its equipments, and then empowered them to carry on the business of mechanical engineers and general contractors, cannot authorize a contract to build a railroad, surely the authority to build a railroad and to contract for carrying passengers and goods over its own road and over others is no authority to lease out the road, and with the lease to part with all its powers to another company or to individuals. We do not think there is anything in the language of the charter which authorized the making of this agreement.

It is next insisted, in the language of counsel, that though this may be so, "A corporate body may (as at common law) do any act which is not either expressly or impliedly prohibited by its charter; although where the act is unauthorized by the charter a shareholder may enjoin its execution; and the State may, by proper process, forfeit the charter."

We do not concur in this proposition. We take the general doctrine to be in this country, though there may be exceptional cases and some authorities to the contrary, that the powers of corporations organized under legislative statutes are such and such only as those statutes confer. Conceding the rule applicable to all statutes, that what is fairly implied is as much granted as what is expressed, it remains that the charter of a corporation is the measure of its powers, and that the enumeration of these powers implies the exclusion of all others.

This class of subjects has received much consideration of late years in the English courts, and counsel, on both sides of the present case, have relied largely on the decisions of those courts. Among the cases cited by both sides is that of E. Anglian R. Co. v. Eastern Co. R. Co., 11 C. B., 775.

In that case the Eastern Counties Railway Company had made a contract in which, among other things, it covenanted to take a lease of several other railroads whose companies had introduced into Parliament a bill for consolidation under the name of East Anglian Railway Company, and to assume the payment of the parliamentary expenses of this Act of consolidation.

This covenant was held void as beyond the power conferred by the charter. "They cannot," said the court, "engage in a new trade, because they are incorporated only for the purpose of making and maintaining the Eastern Counties Railway. What additional power do they acquire from the fact that the undertaking may in some way benefit their line? Whatever be the object or prospect of success, they are still but a corporation for the purpose only of making and maintaining the Eastern Counties Railway; and if they cannot embark in new trades because they have only a limited authority, for the same reason they can do nothing not authorized by their act and not within the scope of their authority." This case, decided in 1851, was afterwards cited with approval by the Lord Chancellor in 1857 in delivering the opinion of the House of Lords in the case of R. Co. v. Hawkes, 5 H. L. Cas., 331; and it is there stated that it was also acted on and recognized in the Exchequer Chamber in the case of McGregor v. R. Co., 2 L. J. (N. S.), Q. B., 69. Both these cases are cited approvingly in the opinion of Lord Cairns in the case of the Ashbury Company, on appeal in the House of Lords.

This latter case, as decided in the Exchequer Chamber [Riche v. R. C. & I. Co.], L. R., 9 Exch., 224, is much relied on by counsel for plaintiffs here as showing that, though the contract may be ultra vires when made by the directors, it may be enforced if afterwards ratified by the shareholders or if partly executed.

But in the House of Lords, where the case came on appeal, this principle was overruled unanimously in opinions delivered by Lord Chancellor Cairns, Lords Selbourn, Chelmsford, Hatherly and O'Hagan, and the broad doctrine established that a contract not within the scope of the powers conferred on the corporation cannot be made valid by the assent of everyone of the shareholders, nor can it by any partial performance become the foundation of a right of action.

It would be a waste of time to attempt to examine the American cases on the subject, which are more or less conflicting, but we think we are warranted in saying that this latest decision of the House of Lords represents the decided preponderance of authority, both in this country and in England, and is based upon sound principle.

There is another principle of equal importance and equally conclusive against the validity of this contract, which, if not coming exactly within the doctrine of ultra vires as we have just discussed it, shows very clearly that the Railroad Company was without the power to make such a contract.

That principle is, that where a corporation, like a railroad company, has granted to it by charter a franchise intended in large measure to be exercised for the public good, the due performance of those functions being the consideration of the public grant, any contract which disables the corporation from performing those functions which undertakes, without the consent of the State, to transfer to others the rights and powers conferred by the charter, and to relieve the grantees of the burden which it imposes, is a violation of the contract with the State, and is void as against public policy. This doctrine is asserted with remarkable clearness in the opinion of this court, delivered by Mr. Justice Campbell, in the case of R. R. Co. v. Winans, 17 How., 30 [58 U. S., XV., 27]. The corporation in that case was chartered to build and maintain a railroad in Pennsylvania by the Legislature of that State. The stock in it was taken by a Maryland corporation, called the Baltimore and Susquehanna Railroad Company, and the entire management of the road was committed to the Maryland company, which appointed all the officers and agents upon it, and furnished the rolling stock. In reference to this state of things and its effect upon the liability of the Pennsylvania corporation for infringing a patent of the defendant in error, Winans, this court said: "This conclusion (argument) implies that the duties imposed upon plaintiff (in error) by the charter are fulfilled by the construction of the road, and that by alienating its right to use, and its powers of control and supervision, it may avoid further responsibility. But these acts involve an overturn of the relations which the charter has arranged between the Legislature and the community. Important franchises were conferred upon the corporation to enable it to provide facilities for communication and intercourse, required for public convenience. Corporate management and control over these were prescribed, and corporate responsibility for their insufficiency provided as a remuneration for their grant. The corporation cannot absolve itself from the performance of its obligations without the consent of the Legislature. Beman v. Rufford, 1 Sim. (N. S.), 550; Winch v. R. Co., 13 L. & Eq., 506."

And in the case of Black v. Canal Co., 7 C. E. Green, 130 [22 N. J. Eq., 130], Chancellor Zabriskie says: "It may be considered as settled that a corporation cannot lease or alienate any franchise, or any property necessary to perform its obligations and duties to the State, without legislative authority." For this he cites some ten or twelve decided cases in England and in this country.

This brings us to the proposition that the Legislature of New Jersey has given her consent by an Act which amounts to a ratification of this lease.

That Act is entitled "A Supplement to the Act entitled 'An Act to Incorporate the Millville and Glassboro Railroad Company,'" approved April 10, 1867; and its only purpose was to regulate the rates at which freight and passengers should be carried. It reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., "That it shall be unlawful for the directors, lessees or agents of said railroad to charge more than three and a half cents per mile for the carrying of passengers, and six cents per ton per mile for the carrying of freight or merchandise of any description, unless a single package, weighing less than one hundred pounds; nor shall more than one half of the above rate be charged for carrying any fertilizing materials, either in their own cars or cars of other companies running over said railroad; Provided, That nothing contained in this Act shall deprive the said railroad company, or its lessees, of the benefits of the provisions of an Act entitled 'An Act Relative to Freights and Fares on Railways in the State,' approved March 4th, 1858, and applicable to all other railroads in this State."

It may be fairly inferred that the Legislature knew at the time the statute was passed that plaintiffs were running the road, and claiming to do so as lessees of the Corporation. It was not important for the purpose of the Act to decide whether this was done under a lawful contract or not. No inquiry was probably made as to the terms of that lease, as no information on that subject was needed.

The Legislature was determined that whoever did run the road and exercise the franchises conferred on the Company, and under whatever claim of right this was done, should be bound by the rates of fare established by the Act. Hence, without undertaking to decide in whom was the right to the control of the road, language was used which included the directors, lessees and agents of the railroad.

The mention of the lessees no more implies a ratification of the contract of lease than the word "directors" would imply a disapproval of the contract. It is not by such an incidental use of the word "lessees," in an effort to make sure that all who collected fares should be bound by the law, that a contract unauthorized by the charter, and forbidden by public policy, is to be made valid and ratified by the State.

It remains to consider the suggestion that the contract, having been executed, the doctrine of ultra vires is inapplicable to the case. There can be no question that, in many instances, where an invalid contract, which the party to it might have avoided or refused to perform, has been fully performed on both sides, whereby money has been paid or property changed hands, the courts have refused to sustain an action for the recovery of the property or the money so transferred.

And in regard to corporations, the rule has been well laid down by Comstock, Ch. J., in Parish v. Wheeler, 22 N. Y., 494, that the executed dealings of corporations must be allowed to stand for and against both parties when the plainest rules of good faith require it.

But what is sought in the case before us is the enforcement of the unexecuted part of this agreement. So far as it has been executed, namely: the four or five years of action under it, the accounts have been adjusted, and each party has received what he was entitled to by its terms. There remains unperformed the covenant to arbitrate with regard to the value of the contract. It is the damages provided for in that clause of the contract that are sued for in this action; damages for a material part of the contract never performed; damages for the value of a contract which was void. It is not a case of a contract fully executed. The very nature of the suit is to recover damages for its non-performance. As to this, it is not an executed contract.

Not only so, but it is a contract forbidden by public policy and beyond the power of the defendants to make. Having entered into the agreement, it was the duty of the Company to rescind or abandon it at the earliest moment. This duty was independent of the clause in the contract which gave them the right to do it. Though they delayed its performance for several years, it was, nevertheless, a rightful act when it was done. Can this performance of a legal duty, a duty both to stockholders of the Company and to the public, give to plaintiffs a right of action? Can they found such a right on an agreement void for want of corporate authority and forbidden by the policy of the law? To hold that this can be done is, in our opinion, to hold that any act done under a void contract makes all its parts valid, and that the more you do under a contract forbidden by law, the stronger the claim to its enforcement in the courts.

We cannot see that the present case comes within the principle that requires that contracts which, though invalid for want of corporate power, have been fully executed, shall remain as the foundation of rights acquired by the transaction.

We have given this case our best consideration on account of the importance of the principles involved in its decision and, after a full examination of the authorities, we can see no error in the action of the Circuit Court, and its judgment is, therefore, affirmed.

TIONAL BANKING ASSOCIATION.

*Waiver of jury—former suit pending—attach-

1. An agreement to waive a trial by jury sufficiently appears if the record declares that "the cause was called for trial by the court, the jury having been waived in writing."

2. Where there was a plea of another suit pending for the same cause, the court may compel the plaintiffs to elect whether they would submit to judgment on the plea, or discontinue the first suit and pay the costs thereof.

3. The fact that the amount of an attachment bond is fixed by an order of a judge, makes no difference in Louisiana as to the effect of the invalid-ity of an insufficient bond upon the subsequent proceedings. According to the Code of that State, as construed by its courts, the bond, on obtaining an attachment given by the attaching creditor, must be for a sum exceeding by one half that which he claims.

4. Where such bond is not given, a judgment, so far as it gives a privilege upon the property attached, with recourse on the bond on which the property attached was released, will be reversed.

[No. 186.]

Argued Mar. 9, 1880. Decided Mar. 29, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Charles Case and Robert Mott,
for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. J. D. Rouse and Wm. Grant, for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action on a promissory note for $5,000 and interest thereon at five per cent per annum from maturity, December 21, 1871. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiffs with privilege upon property which was attached in the course of the proceeding, with recourse on the principal and sureties on the bond upon which the property attached was released. The defendant brought this writ of error.

It is assigned for error: first, that the issue on one of the exceptions (lis pendens) was tried by the court and not by a jury, no agreement to waive a trial by jury appearing in the record.
The record, however, declares explicitly that "The exception in this cause was called for trial by the court, the jury having been waived in writing." In the absence of anything to the contrary, this is conclusive that the proper agreement was made.

The next error assigned is, that after an exception had been filed by the defendant, alleging that another suit had been commenced against her for the same cause in the Sixth District Court for the Parish of Orleans, and had been removed into the Circuit Court of the United States, and was still pending, the said circuit court allowed the plaintiffs to elect whether they would, within a time limited, discontinue that suit, which was first brought, and pay the costs of the same. The record shows that the court below did order that the plaintiffs might elect to proceed in the present suit upon paying the costs in the first suit, and discontinuing the same; otherwise, the exception would be maintained. The plaintiffs did so elect, paid the costs, and discontinued the first suit. The defendant objected to this course, insisting that she was entitled, upon her exception, to have the present suit absolutely dismissed.

The exception of lis pendens is given by the Code of Practice, art. 335, as follows: "There are two kinds of declinatory exceptions: 1.
When the exception is taken to the competency of the judge, pursuant to the rules above provided; 2. When it arises from the fact of another suit being pending between the same parties, for the same object, and growing out of the same cause of action, before another court of competent jurisdiction. In both cases the suit must be dismissed, and the plaintiff decreed to pay costs."

The former suit in the present instance not being pending in "another court," but in the same court, the case is not within the words of the article. It has been held, however, to be within its spirit. Dick v. Gilmer, 4 La. Ann., 520. But in other cases, the pendency of the former suit in another court has been deemed material. Weeks v. Flower, 9 La., 385; Succession of Ludwig, 3 Rob. (La.), 92. And the exception is not necessarily a peremptory one in any case; for if before the trial thereof the former suit be terminated, the exception, it is said, will fail. Schmidt v. Braun, 10 La. Ann., 26.

Since the exception in the case of suit pending in the same court is not within the words of the Code, but rests upon its equity, and since in such cases both suits are under the control of the court in which the exception is made, we think the court might well exercise the discretion which was done in the present case; in compelling the plaintiff to elect whether he will submit to judgment on the exception, or discontinue the first suit and pay the costs thereof.

The remaining assignments of error relate to the issue of an attachment in the case, and to the privilege given by the judgment upon the attached property, with recourse against the sureties on the bond given for its release.

The attachment was issued upon a supplemental petition filed in the case, and sworn to by one of the plaintiffs, stating the amount of the debt, $5,000 and interest thereon from December 21, 1871, and that the defendant resided out of the State of Louisiana. The Judge below made an order that an attachment be issued upon the plaintiffs giving bond in the sum of $3,200, with solvent surety, etc. The writ was issued, and under it the marshal, on the 11th of January, 1877, attached a plantation and sugar-house thereon, with its contents, consisting of sugar and other property sufficient to satisfy the claim; and on the 13th of January released the property by the claimant giving a bond for its release in the sum of $9,000. On the same day, the defendant entered a rule to show cause why the attachment should not be set aside, upon the ground, amongst others, that it was issued without the plaintiffs giving the bond required by law as a prerequisite therefor. This rule was subsequently dismissed by the court below, and a bill of exceptions was taken by the defendant.

The fact that the amount of an attachment bond is fixed by an order of a judge, makes no difference in Louisiana as to the effect of the invalidity of an insufficient bond upon the subsequent proceedings. Graham v. Burckhalter, 2 La. Ann., 415.

The question is, whether the bond in this case was sufficient, being for only $3,200, when the debt exceeded $6,000. The law on the subject is based on article 245 of the Code of Practice, which is in the following words:

"Art. 245. A creditor, his agent, or attorney in fact, praying such attachment, must, besides, annex to his petition his obligation in favor of the defendant for a sum exceeding one half that which he claims, with the surety of one good and solvent person residing within the jurisdiction of the court to which the petition is presented, as a security for the payment of such damages as such defendant may recover against him in case it should be decided that the attachment was wrongfully obtained."

This law has stood in the same form in the Code of Practice since its first promulgation in 1825. But the words "for a sum exceeding one half that which he claims" are an incorrect translation of the French copy of the Code. The correct translation would be "for a sum exceeding by one half that which he claims." And the Supreme Court of Louisiana has always construed the law as though the word "by" had been inserted, as required by the correct translation, numerous cases being reported in which judgment has been reversed because the attachment bond did not exceed by one half the amount of the debt claimed, and no case being found to the contrary. See, Williams v. Barrow, 3 La., 57; Jackson v. Warwick, 17 La., 436; Graham v. Burckhalter, 2 La. Ann., 415; and cases referred to in the Code. It would seem that this settled construction ought to prevail. The reason for an attachment bond, as explained by the Supreme Court of Louisiana, requires the construction which was adopted. Prior to the adoption of the Code, a bond for double the amount of the demand was required. "Its object, and the object of all such laws," says the court, "is to secure the absentee from all damages he may sustain by illegal seizure of his property. An interpretation such as the plaintiff contends for would, in many instances, defeat the purpose of the Legislature. Damage is sometimes sustained by the debtor to the whole amount of the sum claimed from him, and a bond to half that amount would only be half security." [Williams v. Barrow], 3 La., 59.

As the law has never been changed, but stands now as it has stood for more than fifty years and, as no decision to the contrary of those referred to has ever been made, we think that we must be governed thereby.

This view receives support from the law which requires the plaintiff to give bond as a condition of arresting the person of the defendant. Originally no bond was required; but in 1856 an Act was passed to amend the 214th article of the Code respecting process of arrest, and prescribed a bond to be given by the plaintiff "for a sum exceeding by one half the amount of that which he claims." In this case the French copy is exactly the same as in the case of attachments.

So with regard to appeal bonds (art. 575), the Code of Practice from the first prescribed a bond "for a sum exceeding by one half," etc.; See 11 OTTO.

the French being the same as in the other cases.

It is true that, in 1868, an amendment of article 575 was passed changing the above words to "a sum exceeding one half the amount." This amendment was abrogated in 1870 in the new Code; but whilst it was in force a case occurred in which the court followed the altered reading, and considered a bond for "one half the amount" sufficient. But this may have been on account of the seemingly designed alteration of the law.

No such design can be asserted in the present case. The law stands in the same words in which it has always stood, and we think it must have its long accepted meaning.

For this cause the judgment of the circuit court must be reversed, so far as it gives a privilege upon the property attached, with recourse on the principal and sureties on the bond upon which the property attached was released. The rest of the judgment, not being affected by the error in question, should be affirmed. The suit was not commenced by attachment, but by citation, which was personally served upon the defendant, who appeared and filed the exception of lis pendens before the supplemental petition for an attachment was filed. Under these circumstances, it would be unjust to reverse the personal judgment for the amount of the debt. We are only required to reverse that portion of it which depends upon the attachment.

The judgment is, therefore, affirmed, except as to the last clause thereof, which gives a "privilege upon the property attached, with recourse on the principal and sureties on the bond upon which the property attached was released;" and as to that part, it is reversed, with costs.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 320-332.)

Notice to attorney—dealings with executor—illegal act—partnership—misappropriation.

1. Information to an attorney, is information to his client, and the latter is affected with notice of all facts, which notice can be charged upon his attorney.

2. A person dealing with an executor, exercising his power of disposition of the personal assets of an estate in his hands, to raise money, not for the estate, but for the business of a commercial firm, is bound to look into his authority to make such a disposition of them, and is held to a knowledge of all the limitations which the will, as well as the law, put upon his power.

3. Property thus held by an executor, acquired from him by third parties with knowledge of his trust and his disregard of its obligations, may be followed and recovered.

4. The authority of an executor to continue a specifically designated existing interest in the firm, does not extend to the use, in its business of any other funds of the estate, or to the use of any property which he received in his official character to raise funds for that purpose.

5. Applying notes held by an executor, or using them to obtain money for that purpose, is a misappropriation of them, and the parties receiving them, knowing of the directions of the testator, cannot hold them against the claim of his representatives.

APPEALS from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Miller & Frost and P. C. Smith, for appellants.

Messrs. C. C. Bonney and Goudy & Skinner, for appellees:

The legal title to the note sued for, was duly transferred to J. C. Ayer & Co., for value paid at the time of transfer and the right to assign and transfer it is unquestionable.

1 Redf. Wills, 3d ed., 131, 419; 3 Redf. Wills, 130, 137; Farhall v. Farhall, L. R., 7 Eq. Cas., 286; Hough v. Bailey, 32 Conn., 288; Miles v. Durnford, 2 Sim. (N. S.), 239; Whale v. Booth, 4 T. R., 625, note; Dwight v. Newell, 15 Ill., 335; Petrie v. Clark, 11 Serg. & R., 388.

The power granted by the will of Thomas T. Renick, is ample to authorize the pledge of the note in controversies to raise money; and to warrant the investment of the money so raised, in the printing-press works at Canton, Ohio.

Gandolfo v. Walker, 15 Ohio St., 274.

The transfer of the note in controversy to J. C. Ayer & Co., cannot be impeached unless for actual fraud, and no charge of such fraud is made in the pleadings or shown by the proofs.

The power of the executor of Thomas T. Renick to pledge the note to J. C. Ayer & Co. for money advanced at the time, is perfectly clear.

Gordon v. Preston, 1 Watts, 385; Jackson v. Brown, 5 Wend., 594; Curtis v. Leavitt, 15 N. Y., 161; Petrie v. Clark, 11 Serg. & R., 388; *Russell v. Even B. F. Renick, the executor, whose good faith is not impeached, could not be held liable for any loss arising from the pledge of the note and the investment of the money; and much less can Ayer & Co., to whom he transferred the note in controversy, be held responsible for any such loss.

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

These are suits in equity to compel the delivery to the complainants of two promissory notes, each for $39,250, alleged to belong to the estate of Renick Huston, deceased, brought by the administrators de bonis non of that estate and the administrator de bonis non of the estate of Thomas T. Renick, deceased. They were commenced in a court of the State of Illinois and, upon application of the defendants, Ayer et al., in the first case, and of the First National Bank, in the second case, were transferred to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois. That court dismissed the bill in both cases, and from its decrees they are brought here on appeal.

The facts out of which the suits arise are substantially these: In February, 1864, one Renick Huston, then a resident of Ohio, died possessed of a tract of land, about eighty acres in extent, near Chicago, Illinois. The legal title to the land stood in the name of Job R. Renick, but it is admitted that he held it as trustee for the estate of Huston, and to re-imburse Thomas T. Renick for certain expenditures incurred on account of the property. The deceased left a will, by which, after making certain bequests, he devised one third of the residue of his estate to Thomas T. Renick, whom he named as his executor, and to whom letters testamentary were issued. The property having been sold at different times for taxes, and being subject to various charges, Renick advanced money to a large amount, stated to be between $20,000 and $30,000, to redeem it from the sales and to pay off the claims upon it. He was authorized under the will to sell the real estate and, accordingly, in July, 1872, he sold it to one Joel D. Harvey for $157,000, payable one fourth in cash and the balance in one, two and three years, for which notes were given, secured by a trust-deed of the property executed to one J. Edwards Fay. There were six notes in all, three being each for $39,250, and the other three for the installments of interest as they fell due. They were all made payable to the order of Thomas T. Renick individually. The cash payment was sufficient to re-imburse him for his outlays, and he held the notes as executor of Huston's estate.

In August, 1873, Thomas T. Renick died in Ohio, leaving a will, and appointing his brother, Benjamin, executor of his estate. Letters testamentary were accordingly issued to Benjamin, and the notes of Harvey subsequently came into his possession as executor. At the time of his death the deceased held in his name an interest in a commercial firm, known as Tower, Classen & Co., engaged in the manufacture and sale of chromatic printing-presses, at Canton, Ohio, which he had acquired by funds belonging one third to himself, one third to the children of a deceased brother, and one third to a sister. In his will he made a request that the whole interest should be retained in the company, under the control of his brother, so long as the latter should deem it profitable. His own interest he bequeathed to his brother in trust for himself and certain nephews and nieces mentioned, in equal proportions, to be held and controlled by him so long as he should deem it advisable. Several other bequests were made by the testator to different parties, and the payment of an annuity to one of his brothers was directed. Soon afterwards Benjamin purchased the interest of Tower in the company, and then the firm name was changed to that of B. T. Renick & Co.

In September, 1873, the complainants, Palmer C. Smith and Job R. Renick, were appointed administrators de bonis non with the will annexed of the estate of Huston. And when the second note of Harvey was about maturing, application was made to Smith, as such administrator, to consent to extend the time of its payment and that of the third note. After some negotiation, and the maturity of one of the notes, Smith signed an agreement, in which, after reciting that the notes were the property of the estate of Renick Huston, deceased; that a suit was pending in Ohio affecting the property of the estate, and that until its termination it was desirable that the money should be invested; and that other parties—the West Chicago Land Company, to which portions of the real property had been sold—had assumed the payment of the notes and interest, he stipulated not to press the payment of the notes until such time as he should require the money by reason of the termination of the suit, the extension in no event to exceed two years. This agreement bears date September 12, 1874. The parties who had assumed the obligation to pay the notes were not content with the agreement without the signature of Benjamin Renick, executor of the estate of Thomas Renick, as the notes were in his possession and were payable to the order of his testator. After a good deal of negotiation, his signature, as executor of the estate of Thomas Renick, was obtained to a similar agreement for an extension of time, stipulating that he also would not press the payment of the notes unless he should require the money to make a settlement of that estate. It does not, however, contain the recital of the one signed by Smith, that the notes were the property of the estate of Huston. This agreement was not executed until the 19th of February, 1875, though it was dated back to the date of the one signed by Smith, and both agreements were placed in the hands of one James R. Goodman. On the same day the following indorsement was made on each of the notes:

“FEBRUARY 19th, 1879.

Payment of the within notes extended, as per contract of September 12th, 1874, now in the hands of James R. Goodman, Esq., for a period not exceeding two years from July 15th, 1874.

J. EDWARDS FAY, Trustee, etc.,

B. T. RENICK,

Executor and Trustee of Thomas T. Renick, deceased.”

In May following, the firm of B. T. Renick & Co., the successors, as mentioned, of Tower, Classen & Co., applied, through a broker in New York, to the defendants, J. C. Ayer & Co., of Lowell, Mass., for a loan of $39,250, and offered to pledge as collateral security for the money one of the notes of Joel A. Harvey, given upon the purchase of the land near Chicago, and secured by a trust deed of the property. Ayer & Co. agreed to make the loan if the security was approved by their attorney, to whom it was referred to examine and report as to its sufficiency. The attorney made the examination. He testifies that he examined the two notes of Harvey and the deed of trust securing them, an abstract of title to the land, and a copy of the will of Thomas T. Renick; that he talked with the trustee under the trust-deed, and with Benjamin Renick, the executor of Thomas T. Renick, in whose possession the notes were at the time; that Benjamin informed him that he wished to use the money borrowed in the business of B. T. Renick & Co., manufacturers of chromatic printing presses; that the establishment was the one designated in the will as that of Tower, Classen & Co.; and that the notes had each the indorsement of the extension mentioned. The attorney reported to Ayer & Co. that the security was valid and sufficient to pay the notes, and advised them to take the note first maturing. Immediately afterwards he was directed to complete the loan. He accordingly took the note of B. T. Renick & Co. for $39,250, dated May 26, 1875, payable to Ayer & Co., at their office in Lowell, Massachusetts, and, as collateral security, received the note first falling due of Harvey for the same amount, both of which he transmitted to Ayer & Co. It is to compel a surrender of this note to the complainants that the first of the above named suits is brought.

In June following this transaction, the firm of B. T. Renick & Co. desired a further loan of $30,000, and employed Mr. J. Edwards Fay to obtain it on the security of the third note of Harvey for $39,250. Mr. Fay applied to the First National Bank of Westboro', Mass., for the loan. He showed to its officers the note of Harvey, having the indorsement extending the time of payment for a period not exceeding two years, pursuant to the agreement deposited with Goodman, and informed them of the trust-deed executed to him to secure its payment. The indorsement, as already seen, showed that the note was held by B. T. Renick as executor. He also told them of the loan made by Ayer & Co., upon the security of the second note, the examination then made by their attorney into the sufficiency of the security and his favorable report. He also mentioned the relation which Benjamin Renick, as executor of Thomas T. Renick, deceased, bore to the firm of B. T. Renick & Co., and that he made the application for the loan at the request of that firm. The bank thereupon agreed to make the loan. A note of B. T. Renick & Co., for $30,000, dated June 1, 1875, payable on the 15th of July, 1876, was accordingly executed and delivered to it, with the note of Harvey as collateral security, and the money received. It is to compel a surrender to the complainants of the note thus pledged as collateral that the second of the above suits is brought. Soon after the bills were filed, Benjamin Renick resigned his position as executor of the estate of Thomas T. Renick, and Edward J. Van Meter was appointed in his place as administrator de bonis non with the will annexed, and by leave of the court a supplemental bill was filed in both cases, and he was allowed to appear in each as a co-complainant and join in the prayer for relief.

There is no question as to the actual ownership of the notes of Harvey taken by Ayer & Co. and the First National Bank of Westboro'. They belong to the estate of Renick Huston. The only interest which Thomas T. Renick had in them grew out of his relations to that estate for advances and services and as a residuary legatee. The question for determination is, whether Ayer & Co. and the Bank took the notes under such circumstances as to be able to hold them or either of them against the demand of Huston's estate, or of that of the estate of Thomas T. Renick, from whose executor they were received. So far as the present suits are concerned, it is of no consequence to the defendants whether the notes be regarded ultimately as the property of the estate of Huston or of the estate of Thomas T. Renick. They can only insist that, as in their negotiations they knew nothing of the claims of Huston's estate, and dealt with the notes as the property of Renick's estate, they shall be entitled to all the protection which that fact may confer. We shall so treat the cases and consider their rights. There is no doubt that Ayer & Co. relied entirely upon the judgment of their attorney as to the power of the executor of the estate of Thomas T. Renick to pledge the note for moneys borrowed to be used in the business of the firm of B. T. Renick & Co. Still they must be held to know the law and the limitations which it prescribes to the powers of executors in the disposition of property coming into their hands as such officers; and, however free from intentional wrong, they must bear the responsibility of a mistaken judgment with respect to those limitations. The facts brought to the knowledge of their attorney in his inquiries respecting the note and the authority of Benjamin T. Renick to pledge it, are considered in law as brought to their knowledge. Information to him of all essential matters affecting the subject he was investigating was in law information to them, and their action must be adjudged accordingly. The law, indeed, goes much further than this; it considers the principal as affected with notice of all facts, notice of which can be charged upon the attorney. Here the attorney examined the will of Thomas T. Renick; he knew that the note in question was held by Benjamin T. Renick in his character as executor of Thomas' estate, and not in his own right; the agreement referred to in its indorsement of extension of time of payment made him acquainted with that fact. It stipulated not to press for payment of the note until the money was required for the settlement of that estate; and he was informed beforehand that the money to be borrowed on the pledge of the note in question as security was to be used in the business of B. T. Renick & Co.

The Bank of Westboro' had no attorney of its own in the transaction. It relied upon the representations of the attorney of B. T. Renick & Co., employed to negotiate the loan. He informed the Bank, however, of all facts essential to its knowledge, or acquainted it with such matters as upon inquiry would have given the information. It knew that the note was held by B. T. Renick as assets of Thomas T. Renick's estate, and not in his own right; it was so informed by the attorney; the indorsement on the note declared the fact also; and the agreement, to which the indorsement referred and to which its attention was called, would have removed all doubt on the subject, if any could have existed. It must be presumed to have known what it could thus easily have ascertained; and, dealing with an executor exercising his power of disposition of the personal assets of an estate in his hands, ostensibly to raise money, not for the estate or the settlement of its affairs, but for the business of a commercial firm, it was bound to look into his authority to make such a disposition of them, and is held to a knowledge of all the limitations which the will as well as the law put upon his power.

There is no doubt that, unless restrained by statute, an executor can dispose of the personal assets of his testator by sale or pledge, for all purposes connected with the discharge of his duties under the will. And even where the sale or pledge is made for other purposes, of which the purchaser or pledgee has no knowledge or notice, but takes the property in good faith, the transaction will be sustained; for the purchaser or pledgee is not bound to see to the disposition of the proceeds received. But the case is otherwise where the purchaser or pledgee has knowledge of the perversion of the property to other purposes than those of the estate, or the intended perversion of the proceeds. The executor, though holding the title to the personal assets, is not absolute owner of them. They are not liable for his debts, nor can he dispose of them by will. He holds them in trust to pay the debts of the deceased, and then to discharge his legacies; and, as in all other cases of trust, he is personally responsible for any breach of duty. And property thus held, acquired from him by third parties with knowledge of his trust and his disregard of its obligations, can be followed and recovered. The law exacts the most perfect good faith from all parties dealing with a trustee respecting trust property. Whoever takes it for an object other than the general purposes of the trust, or such as may reasonably be supposed to be within its scope, must look to the authority of the trustee, or he will act at his peril.

The adjudications in support of this doctrine are very numerous. The doctrine pervades the whole law of trusts. In Colt v. Lasnier, reported in 9th Cowen, 320, Chief Justice Savage, of the Supreme Court of New York, after reviewing the cases, concludes that the correct rule both in England and in that State is: "That any person receiving from an executor the assets of his testator, knowing that this disposition of them is a violation of his duty, is to be adjudged as conniving with the executor, and that such person is responsible for the property thus received, either as purchaser or pledgee." And so, in many cases, it has been held that the payment by the executor, of his own private debt, with the assets of the testator is a devastavit; that is, a wasting of the estate. There are, indeed, some exceptions to this, as where the executor has paid debts of the testator with his own money to the value of the assets used. But, beyond a few exceptions of this kind, such a use of the assets is considered entirely indefensible, and the party receiving them will not be permitted to retain them, on the ground that the transaction itself gives him notice of their misapplication, and thus necessarily involves him as a participator in the fraud. And the doctrine is supported by many authorities, that where a party has reasonable grounds for believing that an executor intends to misapply them, or is in the very transaction converting them to private uses, such party can take no advantage from the transaction. In the case of Miller v. Williamson, the Court of Appeals of Maryland held that the fact that the executor made an assignment of such assets to secure a debt owing to parties by a mercantile firm of which he was a member, was sufficient, in contemplation of law, to notify them that he was about to commit a devastavit. 5 Md., 219. And where an administrator had assigned promissory notes of the estate in his hands for goods for his own use, the Supreme Court of Indiana held that it was a waste of the assets; and that if the assignee had knowledge, even from the nature of the transaction, that the administrator was thus acting in violation of his trust, the right of property in the notes was not divested, and he could not hold the notes or profit by such assignment as against those rightfully entitled to them. Thomasson v. Brown, 43 Ind., 203; see, also, Fleld v. Schieffelin, 7 Johns. Ch., 150, and Petrie v. Clark, 11 Serg. & R., 377.

In the cases at bar, the defendants, Ayer & Co., and the directors of the Bank knew that the pledging of the assets of the estate, of which Benjamin T. Renick was executor, to secure a loan for the business of a commercial house, was a misuse of them, unless, indeed, the will of his testator authorized it. The law imputed such knowledge to them. They could not say that such assets could be rightfully used as collateral security for loans to be employed in the business of a commercial house. It would be attributing to them the lack of ordinary good sense to suppose they entertained any such notion. The question then arises, whether the will of Thomas T. Renick authorized the assets of his estate, or the moneys to be raised upon them, to be used in the business of B. T. Renick & Co.

In that will the testator mentions a certain interest in the firm of Tower, Classen & Co. acquired by funds belonging to him, a sister, and the children of a deceased brother; and he desired that such interest should be continued in the firm, under the control of his brother, so long as the latter should deem it profitable; and that his own share should be retained in like manner for certain parties, so long as he should deem it advisable; and he bequeathed it to him as trustee for that purpose. It did not authorize the use of any of the general assets of the testator in that business, or the borrowing of money on its account. It may, indeed, be doubted whether the new firm of B. T. Renick & Co. can be considered as the same firm as Tower, Classen & Co. The change of the old firm by Tower's withdrawal may have taken from it the person upon whose judgment alone the testator relied for a wise management of its business. We cannot say that a confidence reposed in the firm, which existed when the will was made, would have been extended to another firm consisting of different associates. But, assuming that its identity remained after the change of members and name, it is perfectly clear that the authority of the executor to continue a specifically designated existing interest in the firm did not extend to the use in its business of any other funds of the estate, or to the use of any property which he received in his representative character, to raise funds for that purpose.

In Burwell v. Mandeville, reported in 2d Howard, 560, this doctrine is stated by this court with great distinctness. There the testator and one Cawood had been partners, and in his will the testator desired that his interest in the partnership should be continued until the expiration of the term limited by the articles between them, See 11 Otto.

the business to be continued by his partner, and the profit and loss to be distributed in the manner there provided. After his death, his partner carried on the business of the partnership, but failed before the expiration of the stipulated term; and the object of the suit was to reach the general assets of the estate of the testator to pay certain debts of the firm contracted after his decease. It was held that the general assets were not thus liable. The court observed that it was competent for partners to provide by agreement for the continuance of the partnership after the death of one of them; or for one partner by his will to provide for the continuance of the partnership after his death, and if it was consented to by the surviving partner, it would become obligatory. "But then," continues the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Story, "in each case the agreement or authority must be clearly made out; and third persons, having notice of the death, are bound to inquire how far the agreement or authority to continue it extends, and what funds it binds; and if they trust the surviving party beyond the reach of such agreement or authority or fund, it is their own fault, and they have no right to complain that the law does not afford them any satisfactory redress. A testator, too, directing the continuance of a partnership, may, if he so choose, bind his general assets for all the debts of the partnership contracted after his death. But he may also limit his responsibility, either to the funds already embarked in the trade, or to any specific amount to be invested therein for that purpose; and then the creditors can resort to that fund or amount only, and not to the general assets of the testator's estate, although the partner or executor or other persons carrying on the trade may be personally responsible for all the debts contracted." And after citing several authorities from the English reports in support of these positions, the learned Justice remarks, "That nothing but the most clear and unambiguous language, demonstrating in the most positive manner that the testator intends to make his general assets liable for all debts contracted in the continued trade after his death, and not merely to limit it to the funds embarked in that trade, would justify the court in arriving at such a conclusion from the manifest inconvenience thereof, and the utter impossibility of paying off the legacies bequeathed by the testator's will, or distributing the residue of his estate, without, in effect, saying at the same time that the payments may all be recalled if the trade should become unsuccessful or ruinous." Ex parte Garland, 10 Ves., 109; Ex parte Richardson, 3 Madd., 138; Pitkin v. Pitkin, 7 Conn., 307; Lucht, Admr., v. Behrens, 28 Ohio 231.

According to the doctrine of this case, and many others to the same purport might be cited, there is no authority in the will of Thomas T. Renick justifying the use of the general assets of his estate in the business of B. T. Renick & Co., even if this firm be identical with that of Tower, Classen & Co. Applying the notes of Harvey held by his executor, or using them to obtain money for that purpose, was a misappropriation of them, as much so as if they had been used for any other private business. The parties receiving them, knowing of the directions of the testator, cannot hold them against the claim of his representatives. The resignation of the executor who connived at this misappropriation having been accepted, and the administrator de bonis non with the will annexed having been appointed in his place, there is no objection to the prosecution of the suits in the latter's name, in conjunction with the representatives of Huston's estate, to compel the restoration of the notes. And as the notes in fact belong to the estate of Huston, the administrators de bonis non of that estate may insist that, when they are returned by Ayer & Co. and the National Bank of Westboro', they shall be delivered over to them.

In what we have thus said of the misappropriation of the notes, we have assumed that they belonged to the estate of Thomas T. Renick; for the defendants, Ayer & Co., and the Bank of Westboro' contend that they had a right to so treat them, as they were in the possession of his executor, claiming them as part of the assets of his testator. But the want of authority on the part of the executor to pledge them is only the more marked from the fact that his testator only held them as executor for another estate, although that fact has not been allowed to affect the defense.

The decree of the court below in both cases must, therefore, be reversed, and the court directed to enter a decree, in the first case, that the defendants, Ayer & Co., surrender the note of Harvey taken by them to the complainants, the administrators de bonis non of the estate of Renick Huston; and that a like decree be entered in the second case against the first National Bank of Westboro', to surrender to the same complainants the other note of Harvey held by it, and that all other parties be enjoined from interfering with their collection of the said notes; and it is so ordered.

Note.—Subsequent to the decision of these cases, the following opinion was delivered in response to certain petitions.

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

The petition for a rehearing in the first case, and the petition for a modification of the decree in the second case, are both denied. The pledging of the notes of Harvey, belonging to the estate of Renick Huston, or to the estate of Thomas T. Renick—and for the purposes of these suits it matters not to which, as the representatives of both estates are parties complainant—as security for moneys borrowed for the use of a mercantile firm, was a plain misappropriation of the property of one of the estates. Our decree was that the notes should be returned to the representative of the estate from which they were wrongfully taken. The defendants retain their claims against the firm of B. T. Renick & Co., on its notes, and can prosecute them before the ordinary tribunals; and if any members of the firm have interests in the estate of Renick Huston, or of other deceased parties, they can seek to subject those interests to the payment of the claims without prejudice from our decree in these cases. Petitions denied.

v.

STATE OF TENNESSEE AND SAMUEL WATSON, TRUSTEE OF THE BANK OF TENNESSEE.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 337-341.)

Suit against State—right to sue.

1. That a State cannot be sued in its own courts, without its consent, is an elementary principle. This is a privilege of sovereignty.

2. The right to sue, which the State of Tennessee once gave its creditors, was not, in legal effect, a judicial remedy for the enforcement of its contracts; and the obligations of its contracts were not impaired, within the meaning of the prohibitory clause of the Constitution of the United States, by taking away what was thus given.

[No. 5.]

Submitted Oct. 27, 1879. Decided Mar. 29, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Tennessee.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. G. J. Pillow and John Baxter, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. J. B. Heiskell, Casey Young and B. J. Lea, for defendants in error.

Brief by Messrs. Hoadly, Johnson & Colston and E. L. Andrews, for Tennessee bondholders.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 19th of January, 1838, the State of Tennessee established a bank in its own name and for its own benefit, and pledged its faith and credit to give indemnity for all losses arising from any deficiency in the funds specifically appropriated as capital. The State was the only stockholder, and entitled to all the profits of the business. The bank was, by its charter, capable of suing and being sued. At that time the Constitution of the State contained this provision: "Suits may be brought against the State in such manner and in such courts as the Legislature may by law direct." Art. 1, sec. 17. No law had then been passed giving effect to this express grant of power, but in 1855 it was enacted that actions might be instituted against the State under the same rules and regulations that govern actions between private citizens, process being served on the district attorney of the district in which the suit was instituted. Code, sec. 2807. No power was given the courts to enforce their judgments, and the money could only be got through an appropriation by the Legislature.

In 1865 this law was repealed, and after that there was no law prescribing the manner or the courts in which suits could be brought against the State. On the 16th of February, 1866, an Act was passed to wind up and settle the affairs of the Bank, under which an assignment of all the property was made to Samuel Watson, Trustee. Afterwards, on the 16th May, 1866, the State and the trustee filed a bill in equity, in the Chancery Court at Nashville, against the Bank and its creditors, for an account of debts and assets and a decree of distribution. At the November Term, 1872, of the court, the Memphis and Charleston Railroad Company was admitted as a defendant to this suit, and given leave to file a cross-bill. This cross-bill was accordingly filed, and set forth an indebtedness from the Bank to the Railroad Company, which accrued while the law allowing suits against the State was in existence, and sought to enforce the liability of the State under the indemnity clause of the charter. To this bill both the State and Watson, the Trustee, demurred, and assigned for cause, among others, that the State could not be sued. The demurrer was sustained by the Chancery Court, and the cross-bill dismissed. An appeal was then taken to the Supreme Court of the State, where the decree below was affirmed, upon the express ground that the repeal of the law authorizing suits against the State was valid, and did not impair the obligation of the contract which the Railroad Company had. All other questions were waived by the court, and the decision placed entirely on the ground that as the State could not be sued in its own courts, the bill must be dismissed. To reverse that judgment this writ of error was brought.

The question we have to decide is not whether the State is liable for the debts of the Bank to the Railroad Company, but whether it can be sued in its own courts to enforce that liability. The principle is elementary that a State cannot be sued in its own courts without its consent. This is a privilege of sovereignty. It is conceded that when this suit was begun the State had withdrawn its consent to be sued, and the only question now to be determined is, whether that withdrawal impaired the obligation of the contract which the Railroad Company seeks to enforce. If it did, it was inoperative, so far as this suit is concerned, and the original consent remains in full force, for all the purposes of the particular contract or liability here involved.

The remedy, which is protected by the contract clause of the Constitution, is something more than the privilege of having a claim adjudicated. Mere judicial inquiry into the rights of parties is not enough. There must be the power to enforce the results of such an inquiry before there can be said to be a remedy which the Constitution deems part of a contract. Inquiry is one thing; remedy another. Adjudication is of no value as a remedy unless enforcement follows. It is of no practical importance that a right has been established if the right is no more available afterwards than before. The Constitution preserves only such remedies as are required to enforce a contract.

Here the State has consented to be sued only for the purposes of adjudication. The power of the courts ended when the judgment was rendered. In effect, all that has been done is to give persons holding claims against the State the privilege of having them audited by the courts instead of some appropriate accounting officer. When a judgment has been rendered, the liability of the State has been judicially ascertained, but there the power of the court ends. The State is at liberty to determine for itself whether to pay the judgment or not. The obligations of the contract have been finally determined, but the claimant has still only the faith and credit of the State to rely on for their fulfillment. The courts are powerless. Everything after the judgment depends on the will of the State. It is needless to say that there is no remedy to enforce a contract if performance is left to the will of him on whom the obligation to perform rests. A remedy is only wanted after entreaty is ended. Consequently, that is not a remedy, in the legal sense of the term, which can only be carried into effect by entreaty.

It is clear, therefore, that the right to sue, which the State of Tennessee once gave its creditors, was not, in legal effect, a judicial remedy for the enforcement of its contracts, and that the obligations of its contracts were not impaired, within the meaning of the prohibitory clause of the Constitution of the United States, by taking away what was thus given. This renders it unnecessary to consider whether in this suit a cross-bill could have been maintained by the Railroad Company if the right to sue had been continued, and also whether a remedy given after the charter of the Bank was granted, but in force when the debt of the Bank was incurred, might be taken away without impairing the obligation of the contract of the State to indemnify the creditors against loss by reason of any deficiency in the capital. Neither do we find it necessary to determine what would be a complete judicial remedy against a State, nor whether, if such a remedy had been given, the obligation of a contract entered into by the State when it was in existence would be impaired by taking it away. What we do decide is that no such remedy was given in this case.

Judgment affirmed.

ADOLPHUS DURANT, Appt.,

v.

CHARLES S. STORROW ET AL.

(See S. C., "Durant v. Essex Co.," 11 Otto, 555-557.)

Mandate from this court—judgment by divided court.

1. On a mandate from this court affirming a decree of the circuit court, that court can only reverse the order of this court and proceed with the execution of its own decree as affirmed.

2. The judgment of this court, by a divided court, is just as much its judgment for all the purposes of the case in hand, as if it had been unanimous.

Argued Mar. 18, 1880. Decided Mar. 29, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. E. F. Hodges, for appellant:

The respondents urge the following charges of neglect and omission:

1. That the complainant, if aggrieved by the order dismissing his bill absolutely, could have appealed to the Supreme Court, and should have done so. We answer:

1. It is true such remedy was open to him, and upon appeal the bill would have been dismissed without question.

Kent v. Freehold L. & B. M. Co., L. R., 3 Ch., App., 493; In re Wiltshire Iron Co., Ex parte Pearson, L. R., 3 Ch., App., 443; Johnson v. Fox, 5 J. J. Marsh, 647.

2. In equity, where a right has been lost by mistake or inadvertence, relief is granted if justice demands.

King v. Hamlet, 4 Sim., 223; Rochester v. Lee, 1 McN. & G., 467; McNamara v. Arthur, 2 Ball. & B., 349; Pearse v. Dobinson, 13 L. T. (N. S.), 518.

The complainant does not ask to have a deed set aside for mistake of law, but asks that his proceedings in this court may be relieved from disabilities arising from such mistakes.

3. The effect of a judgment by a divided court upon the existing equities and future remedies of the complainant was not defined, and counsel, learned in the law, might well believe that it was no bar to subsequent suits.

4. The complainant, acting upon the advice of those whose learning is assured by their professional leadership, and whose authority is sanctioned by their official relations to the court, selected remedies which the wisdom of the tribunals to whom he appealed rejected. This is precisely the mistake which invokes aid from the primal function of a court of equity. If he would have found relief upon appeal, and has not appealed because misled by the unusual form given to the case by the court, then when the error is discovered, he should be relieved from the consequences of the mistake.

Brooksbank v. Smith, 2 Y. & C. Exch., 58; Hough v. Richardson, 3 Story, 659; cases cited, Story, Eq., 1 (N. S.), 1521, a.

If upon appeal he would have been relieved, he should be here and now.

Evans v. Clement, 14 Ill., 209.

As to the lapse of time, see:

Buckner v. Forker, 7 Dana, 51; Bond v. Hopkins, 1 Sch. & L., 418; Sturgis v. Morse, 3 DeGex & J., 1; Deniston v. Little, 2 Sch. & L., 10 n.; Hovenden v. Annesley, 2 Sch. & L., 607; Lindsay v. Lynch, 2 Sch. & L., 1.

This is not a bill of review to which any technical rule can apply, but a petition to the court to correct an error in its record, addressed to that judicial discretion which regards substance and not form.

Partridge v. Osborne, 5 Russ., 195; Elliott v. Balcom, 11 Gray, 286; Pearse v. Dobinson (supra).

If it appears from the record that some right existed in the complainant that had not been decided or definitely adjudicated in the suit, then the bill should be dismissed without prejudice.

Stott v. Barkerville, 6 Munf., 20; McNeill v. Cahill, 2 Bligh, 228; Woollam v. Hearn, 7 Ves., 211-222; Stevens v. Guppy, 3 Russ., 171-185; Lindsay v. Lynch, 2 Sch. & L., 1; Mortlock v. Butler, 10 Ves., 292.

The record discloses the judicial assertions, that the complainant has rights, and that those rights have not been finally passed upon.

1. The circuit court passed a decree in his favor.

Upon the coming in of the master's report, the complainant declined to accept the decree, and claimed much more. Thereupon the court dismissed the bill without costs. This is a judicial determination that he had some right.

2. The Supreme Court Judges, upon full examination and two arguments, could not agree as to those rights.

(a) They could not decide that he had none; or

(b) They could not decide their value, and the mode of relief.

This non-adjudication by the Supreme Court is certainly conclusive proof that one half of the members were of opinion the complainant was entitled to some relief.

It seems fair to infer that the other members differed as to the mode of relief, rather than as to the right.

At all events, four of the Judges were of opinion he was entitled to have the decree dismissing his bill set aside.

It would be very rank presumption for us to offer argument to prove that an error is manifest upon this record, since both courts in terms assert and act upon the error.

Mr. James J. Storror, for appellees:

A decree of dismissal merely, and a decree of dismissal "without prejudice," are essentially different decrees.

If the court below enters one when it ought to enter the other, this is an error of substance, for which an appeal will lie, and which this court will correct upon such an appeal or upon motion.

Durant v. Essex Co., 7 Wall., 109 (74 U. S., XIX., 156); Gaylords v. Kelshaw, 1 Wall., 83 (68 U. S., XVII., 612); Barney v. Baltimore, 6 Wall., 289 (73 U. S., XVIII., 827); Hobson v. McArthur, 16 Pet., 195; Perkins v. Fourniquet, 14 How., 328.

The decree of 1855 was of dismissal generally; and when the mandate of 1858 ordered that decree to stand affirmed, the circuit court had not the power to vary it as requested. Upon motion of the complainant it expressly passed upon this question, and no attempt to revise that ruling was made from 1858 until 1874.

If there was fault or error at the time, it was not in the circuit court, which obeyed the mandate, but in this court, which issued it, and upon this topic the answers are:

(a) Error of this court can only be corrected by a direct and timely application to it, and no such application has been made.

Southard v. Russell, 16 How., 570; Browder McArthur, 7 Wheat., 58; Bridge Co. v. Stewart, 3 How., 424.

There has been an appeal in the former case, and after an appeal no bill of review will lie, either for errors of law apparent on the record, or for newly discovered evidence, "Unless the right is reserved in the decree of the appellate court, or permission be given on an application to that court directly for the purpose. This appears to be the practice of the court of chancery and House of Lords in England, and we think it founded in principle essential to the proper administration of the law and to a reasonable termination of litigation between parties in chancery suits."

Southard v. Russell (supra).

(b) The necessary, legal and intended result of a division of opinion here upon an appeal in equity is, that the decision below shall stand affirmed, not merely as a disposition of a particular cause, but as a bar to further litigation.

Durant v. Essex Co. (supra); Durant v. Essex Co., 8 Allen, 103.

The object of the petitioner is to revise the decision made and carried out in 1858, which was that such a decree should be then entered as would bar further litigation. No power now exists to grant an application for this purpose, however or wherever made. It could only be done by an application for a rehearing which, by Rule 88, must be made at the same term, or by an appeal or bill of review. Sixteen years have elapsed, and in the United States Courts no appeal and no review in any form can be had after five years.

Story, Eq. Pl., secs. 410, 635; 3 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1726; p. 1629 of new ed.; Thomas v. Harvie's Heirs, 10 Wheat., 146; Whiting v. Bk., 13 Pet., 6; R. R. Co. v. Horst, 93 U. S., 301 (XXIII., 901).

This case shows that on or about the 11th of October, 1847, the present appellant filed his bill in equity in the court below against certain defendants for certain relief. After pleadings, proofs and hearing, that court dismissed his bill absolutely. Appeal was thereupon taken in due form to this court. After one hearing, we ordered a re-argument. Upon the re-argument, the decree below was affirmed "by a divided court." When our mandate went down, the present appellant, in May, 1858, asked the circuit court that he might have leave to discontinue his suit, or if that could not be done, that his "bill might be dismissed without prejudice." All these several requests were refused, and the court simply ordered execution on the decree which had been affirmed.

Afterwards, the appellant filed a new bill in the circuit court to obtain the same relief as in the old suit, but setting up what he called new matter. To this bill the former decree was pleaded in bar, and the plea sustained by the circuit court, because the first bill had been dismissed absolutely. From that decree an appeal was taken to this court, and at the December Term, 1868, in Durant v. Essex Co., 7 Wall., 107 [74 U. S., XIX., 154], we decided that the decree, absolute in its terms, dismissing the bill on the merits, was a final determination of the controversy, and constituted a bar to any further litigation of the same subject between the same parties.

Thereupon, on the 29th of June, 1874, the appellant filed a petition in the circuit court setting up these facts and his newly discovered matter, and asked that the decree affirmed here in 1858, might "Be revoked or so modified that his bill of complaint be dismissed without prejudice to his further proceeding at law or equity." This petition was denied, and to reverse that order the present appeal was taken.

Waiving all questions as to the right of appeal from such an order, we are clearly of the opinion that the circuit court could do no otherwise than it did. On a mandate from this court affirming a decree, the circuit court can only record our order and proceed with the execution of its own decree as affirmed. It has no power to rescind or modify what we have established. Our judgment by a divided court is just as much our judgment for all the purposes of the case in hand as if it had been unanimous. The result of the appeal to us was an affirmance of what had been done below. After the appeal was taken, the power of the court below over its own decree was gone. All it could do after that was to obey our mandate when it was sent down. We affirmed its decree and ordered execution. We might have ordered a modification so as to declare that the dismissal should be without prejudice. We did not do so. The circuit court had no power after that to do what we might have done and did not do.

Decree affirmed.

Relief in equity for mistake—formal parties.

1. Courts of equity afford relief in case of mistake of facts, and allow parol evidence to vary and reform written contracts and instruments, when the defect or error arises from accident or misconception.

2. Mere formal parties do not oust the jurisdiction of the court, even if they are without the requisite citizenship, where it appears that the real controversy is between citizens of different States.

Argued Mar. 15, 1880. Decided Mar. 29, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Georgia.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. A. T. Akerman, B. H. Hill and H. B. Thompson, for appellant.

Messrs. A. R. Lawton and H. R. Jackson, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Trusts are either express or implied, the former being such as are raised or created by the act of the parties, and the latter being such as are raised or created by presumption or construction of law. Cook v. Fountain, 3 Swanst., 585, 592.

Implied trusts may also be divided into two general classes: First. Those that rest upon the presumed intention of the parties. Second. Those which are independent of any such express intentions, and are forced upon the conscience of the party by operation of law. 2 Story, Eq. Jur., 9th ed., sec. 1195.

Sufficient appears to show that the complainant, on the 6th day of May, 1874, filed her bill of complaint in the court below against the respondents, to wit: Darius S. Skinner and John N. Lewis and Charles S. Hardee, executors of Charles S. Henry, deceased, who in his lifetime was the trustee of Penelope W. Tefft and her three children. Preliminary to the charging part of her complaint, she alleges and states that on the 28th of October, 1847, she intermarried with William P. Tefft, who, on the 9th of August, five years later, departed this life intestate and without children, leaving the complainant as his sole heir and legal representative; that on the 4th of June, six years subsequent to the death of her first husband, she intermarried with Charles C. Walden, who, on the 8th day of December of the next year, departed this life testate, leaving no children by the complainant; and that he by his will bequeathed to her all the property and rights owned and possessed by her at the date of their marriage; and that the father of her first husband died intestate on the 30th of June, 1862, but that no administration was ever had upon his estate, and that his widow, the mother of her first husband, departed this life testate on the 11th of September, eleven years later; that her first husband had two brothers at the date of her marriage neither of whom ever married and both of whom died without children, as alleged in the bill of complaint; that at the death of the eldest of the two he had a life policy of insurance for $5,000, which his administrator collected and paid to his two living brothers.

Allegations then follow in the bill of complaint, which relate more immediately to the subject-matter of the controversy, from which it appears that Elias Fort, June 28, 1831, conveyed a certain tract of land to Charles S. Henry and Stephen C. Greene, as trustees and in trust for Penelope W. Tefft and her three sons, William P. Tefft, Henry D. Tefft and Charles E. Tefft, and it is therein declared that the said property is for the use of the mother during her lifetime and the three sons, and that after the death of the mother it shall be for the use of the three sons alone as tenants in common, and that in case of sale "The proceeds to be re-invested upon the same uses and trusts as aforesaid, and if not sold, then the property, after the death of the mother, was to be distributed by said trustees to each of the said sons as shall survive and attain the age of twenty-one years."

Greene, one of the trustees, subsequently died, leaving Charles S. Henry the sole surviving trustee under the trust-deed, and she charges that on the 19th of July, 1848, the Mayor and Aldermen of the City of Savannah conveyed to him, as such trustee, a certain lot of land numbered five, Monterey Ward, in said city, the lot being then subject to certain annual ground-rents, as specified in the conveyance, and the complainant avers that the conveyance is informal and incomplete, inasmuch as the trustee never signed it, as it was intended, and that it fails to set forth and express the trust interests of the three children as it should do. Wherefore she alleges that it should be reformed and be made to conform to the purposes of the trust as created and set forth in the original trust-deed.

Persuasive and convincing reasons in support of that request are alleged, which will hereafter be reproduced when the merits of the controversy are considered.

Relief specific and general is prayed, as is more fully set forth in the transcript. Process was served and the respondents appeared, and after certain interlocutory proceedings filed separate answers.

All of the defenses to the merits are set up in the answer of the first named respondent, who admits all of the preliminary matters alleged in the bill of complaint. He also admits that there was in existence at the time of the first marriage of the complainant the trust estate held by the surviving trustee arising under the conveyance from Elias Fort to the said two trustees, which, as he alleges, was held for the sole and separate use of the mother during her life, and remainder at her death to her three sons as tenants in common.

Prior to that transaction there is no controversy between the parties as to the facts, and he also admits that the authorities of the city conveyed the lot called Monterey Ward to the surviving trustee, but he alleges that, by the terms of the conveyance, the legal title to the lot vested in the trustee in trust for the sole and separate use of the mother, the trust being executory only so long and for such time as the cestui que trust should remain a feme covert; and he denies that the conveyance is informal and incomplete in any particular, or that it was ever expected or intended by anyone that the trustee should sign the same; and he avers that it was accepted by the trustee for the purposes therein set forth.

Attempt is also made to enforce that view by a specific denial of most of the reasons assigned in the bill of complaint in support of the request that the conveyance to the trustee, of the lot called Monterey Ward, may be reformed so as to conform to the trusts created and expressed in the antecedent trust-deed.

Both of the other respondents allege that they are citizens of the State where the suit is brought, and deny that the circuit court had any jurisdiction to make or execute any order, judgment or decree against them in the premises.

Proofs were taken, the parties heard, and the circuit court entered a decree in favor of the respondents, dismissing the bill of complaint. Prompt appeal was taken by the complainant to this court, and since the appeal was brought up she has filed the assignment of errors set forth in the brief of her counsel. They are ten in number, all of which will be sufficiently considered in the course of the opinion, without giving each a separate examination.

Before examining the questions presented in respect to the second deed, it becomes necessary to ascertain the true construction and meaning of the original trust-deed so far as respects the second trust therein created and defined. Eight hundred dollars constituted the consideration of the conveyance, and it was made upon the trust that if, during the lifetime of the mother of the three sons, it should be deemed advisable by her to sell and convey the premises, then upon this further trust that the trustees as aforesaid, or the survivor of them, upon her application and with her consent, signified by her being a party to the conveyance, will sell and convey the lot and improvements for the best price which can be obtained for the same, to any person or persons whatsoever, without applying to a court of law or equity for that purpose to authorize the same, and the proceeds thereof upon the same trusts as aforesaid to invest in such other property or manner as the mother of the sons shall direct and request for the same use, benefit and behalf.

Explicit and unambiguous as that provision is, it requires no discussion to ascertain its meaning; nor is it necessary to enter into any examination of the third trust specified in the conveyance, as it is conceded that the trust property was sold by the surviving trustee for re-investment during the lifetime of the mother at her request, she joining in the conveyance as required by the terms of the instrument creating the trust.

Twenty-four hundred dollars were received for the conveyance of the trust property, and all of that sum, except $600 turned over to the mother, was invested in buildings then being erected upon lot numbered five, called the Monterey Ward. Purchase of that lot had previously been made by the surviving trustee named in the original trust-deed, and it appears that the parties understood that it was to be upon the same uses and trusts as were contained in the trust-deed by which the title to the lot sold was acquired.

Proof that the new lot numbered five, called Monterey Ward, was purchased by the father and the three sons during the lifetime of the father, seems to be entirely satisfactory, and it is equally well established that each contributed one fourth part of the sum of $240 paid for the purchase money of the lot. Satisfactory proof is also exhibited that Henry D. Tefft, one of the three brothers, died August 13, 1849, unmarried and intestate, and that he had a valid subsisting insurance upon his life in the sum of $5,000, which his administrator collected and paid to his surviving brothers.

Eighteen hundred dollars of the proceeds arising from the sale of the property acquired by virtue of the first trust-deed were appropriated towards erecting buildings on the new lot purchased by the father and the three sons while in full life, and when the one whose life was insured deceased, the two survivors appropriated each his proportion of the money received to the same purpose, with the understanding that the property was subject to the same uses and trusts as the property previously acquired and sold.

Competent proofs of a convincing character are also exhibited in the transcript, that the first husband of the complainant contributed other sums towards completing the buildings, leaving no doubt that he paid his full proportion for the improvements as well as for the lot purchased of the city authorities.

Enough appears, to show that the buildings were completed more than two years before the first husband of the complainant died intestate and without children, when it is obvious that she became the sole heir to all the interest he possessed in the said estate, whatever it might be. Two years elapsed after the buildings were completed before the father of the three sons died, and the proofs show that during that period the complainant resided with the parents of her husband, and that her rights as his heir at law were uniformly recognized by the family; that she continued to reside there with her mother-in-law after the death of the senior Tefft, until the decease of his widow, and that throughout that period she paid one half of all repairs, taxes, insurance and other expenses of the property as if she were equally interested in the same with her mother-in-law, and was liable to bear an equal proportion of all such expenses.

Opposed to that is the proof that the mother-in-law, one year before her death, when in a low and depressed frame of mind, bequeathed the whole of the lot in question to the first named respondent, who is her nephew, and on the same day executed a deed to him of the entire property, to take effect in possession after her death. Sole title to the premises in fee simple is claimed by the respondent under those instruments, and he brought ejectment against the complainant to dispossess her of the premises, and it appears that she was at great disadvantage in attempting to defend the suit, because the trustee had omitted to see that the title was conveyed in trust for the benefit of the cestuis que trust as in the prior trust deed, as he should have done, to carry into effect the understanding of all the parties to the sale of the prior trust premises and the purchase of the lot in question. What she alleges is that the purchase of the new lot was made for the same cestuis que trust as those described in the deed of the old lot, and that the understanding of all was that the deed of the new lot should contain and declare the same uses and trusts in favor of the same persons, and the proofs to that effect are full and entirely satisfactory.

Support to that view is also derived from the fact that the surviving trustee in the old deed the grantee in the new deed, and that he is therein more than once described as trustee, and in the introductory part of the instrument is denominated trustee of Mrs. Penelope W. Tefft, wife of Israel K. Tefft, of the city and State previously mentioned in the same instrument.

Ten years before the suit was instituted the trustee in the new deed departed this life, and the other two respondents were appointed and qualified as his executors. Unable to obtain complete redress at law, the complainant prays that the deed of conveyance from the city, of the lot and improvements in question, may be reformed and be made to conform to the true intent and purpose for which the lot was purchased, and to that end that it may be made to include the same uses and trusts raised, created, and declared in the prior deed from Elias Fort, according to the understanding and agreement of all the parties.

Besides that she also prays that her equities in and to the property, including the improvements, may be set forth, decreed and allowed by the court, including such as are in her favor from the payment of taxes, insurance and repairs upon the property during the lifetime and since the death of her mother-in-law, and that the first named respondent may be enjoined from further proceeding in his ejectment suit to recover possession of the premises.

Courts of equity afford relief in case of mistake of facts, and allow parol evidence to vary and reform written contracts and instruments, when the defect or error arises from accident or misconception, as properly forming an exception to the general rule which excludes parol testimony offered to vary or contradict written instruments. Where the mistake is admitted by the other party, relief, as all agree, will be granted, and if it be fully proved by other evidence, Judge Story says, the reasons for granting relief seem to be equally satisfactory. 1 Story, Eq. Jur., 9th ed., sec. 156.

Decisions of undoubted authority hold that where an instrument is drawn and executed that professes or is intended to carry into execution an agreement, which is in writing or by parol, previously made between the parties, but which, by mistake of the draftsman, either as to fact or law, does not fulfill or which violates the manifest intention of the parties to the agreement, equity will correct the mistake so as to produce a conformity of the instrument to the agreement; the reason of the rule being that the execution of agreements fairly and legally made is one of the peculiar branches of equity jurisdiction, and if the instrument intended to execute the agreement be from any cause insufficient for that purpose, the agreement remains as much unexecuted as if the party had refused altogether to comply with his engagement; and a court of equity will, in the exercise of its acknowledged jurisdiction, afford relief in the one case as well as in the other, by compelling the delinquent party to perform his undertaking according to the terms of it and the manifest intention of the parties. Hunt v. Rousmaniere, 1 Pet., 1, 13; Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat., 174, 211.

Even a judgment when confessed, if the agreement was made under a clear mistake, will be set aside if application be made, and the mistake shown while the judgment is within the power of the court. Such an agreement, even when made a rule of court, will not be enforced if made under a mistake, if seasonable application be made to set it aside; and if the judgment be no longer in the power of the court, relief, says Marshall, Ch. J., may be obtained in a court of chancery. The Hiram, 1 Wheat., 440, 444.

Equitable rules of the kind are applicable to sealed instruments, as well as to ordinary written agreements; the rule being that if, by mistake, a deed be drawn plainly different from the agreement of the parties, a court of equity will grant relief by considering the deed as if it had conformed to the antecedent agreement. So if a deed be ambiguously expressed in such a manner that it is difficult to give it a construction, the agreement may be referred to as an aid in expounding such an ambiguity; but if the deed is so expressed that a reasonable construction may be given to it, and when so given it does not plainly appear to be at variance with the agreement, then the latter is not to be regarded in the construction of the former. Hogan v. Ins. Co., 1 Wash. (C. C.), 419, 422.

Rules of decision in suits for specific performance are necessarily affected by considerations peculiar to the nature of the right sought to be enforced and the remedy employed to accomplish the object. Where no question of fraud or mistake is involved, the rule with respect to the admission of parol evidence to vary a written contract is the same in courts of equity as in those of common law; the rule in both being that when an agreement is reduced to writing by the act and consent of the parties, the intent and meaning of the same must be sought in the instrument which they have chosen as the repository and evidence of their purpose, and not in extrinsic facts and allegations. Proof of fraud or mistake, however, may be admitted in equity to show that the terms of the instrument employed in the preparation of the same were varied or made different by addition or subtraction from what they were intended and believed to be when the same was executed.

Evidence of fraud or mistake is seldom found in the instrument itself, from which it follows that unless parol evidence may be admitted for that purpose the aggrieved party would have as little hope of redress in a court of equity as in a court of law. Even at law, all that pertains to the execution of a written instrument or to the proof that the instrument was adopted or ratified by the parties as their act or contract, is necessarily left to extrinsic evidence, and witnesses may, consequently, be called for the purpose of impeaching the execution of a deed or other writing under seal, and showing that its sealing or delivery was procured by fraudulently substituting one instrument for another, or by any other species of fraud by which the complaining party was misled and induced to put his name to that which was substantially different from the actual agreement. Thoroughgood's Case, 2 Coke, 5.

When the deed or other written instrument is duly executed and delivered, the courts of law hold that it contains the true agreement of the parties, and that the writing furnishes better evidence of the sense of the parties than any that can be supplied by parol; but courts of equity, says Chancellor Kent, have a broader jurisdiction and will open the written contract to let in an equity arising from facts perfectly distinct from the sense and construction of the instrument itself. Pursuant to that rule, he held it to be established that relief can be had against any deed or contract in writing founded on mistake or fraud, and that mistake may be shown by parol proof and the relief granted to the injured party whether he sets up the mistake affirmatively by bill or as a defense. Gillespie v. Moon, 2 Johns. Ch., 585, 596.

Parol proof, said the same learned magistrate, is admissible in equity to correct a mistake in a written contract in favor of the complainant seeking a specific performance, especially where the contract in the first instance is imperfect without referring to extrinsic facts. Keisselbrack v. Livingston, 4 Johns. Ch., 144; Cathcart v. Robinson, 5 Pet., 264.

Many cases support that proposition without qualification, and all or nearly all agree that it is correct where it is invoked as defense to a suit to enforce specific performance. Little or no disagreement is found in the adjudged cases to that extent, but there are many others where it is held that the rule is unsound when applied in behalf of a complainant seeking to enforce a specific performance of a contract with variations from the written instrument. Difficulty, it must be admitted, would arise in any attempt to reconcile the decided cases in that regard, but it is not necessary to enter that field of contest and conflict in the case before the court for several reasons: (1) Because, by comparing the original trust deed with the deed of the lot in question, in view of the attendant circumstances, the inference is very cogent that the second was designed and intended as a complete substitute for the first. (2) Because the proof shows to a demonstration that the consideration for the purchase of the second lot was paid in equal proportions by the father and each of the three sons. (3) Because it appears that the expensive improvements made upon the lot in question were made from the moneys of each of the three sons, advanced at the request of the father. (4) Because it appears that the family and every member of it understood from the first and throughout that the trustee held the property in trust for the mother and the three sons. (5) Because the father, from the date of the deed to the time of his death, recognized the premises as acquired and held for the benefit of his wife and their three sons. (6) Because the mother of the three sons, after the decease of the first husband of complainant, recognized her as interested in the property, and continued to do so at all times throughout her life, until about the time she conveyed the lot in question to the respondent.

Both the deed and her will bear date September 28, 1872, and the proofs show that she was at the time in a low, depressed state of mind, and that she departed this life within one year subsequent to the execution of those instruments. Prior to that, and throughout the whole period subsequent to the death of her husband, the proofs show that she uniformly recognized the complainant as the owner of a moiety of the lot and the improvements, and always required her to pay one half of all repairs, taxes, insurance, and other expenses of the property.

By the terms of the original deed the property was conveyed to the trustees, subject to the payment of taxes, assessments and ground rent, to and for the sole and separate use, benefit and behoof of the mother and her three sons during her lifetime; and after her death to the three sons as tenants in common in equal parts, with the provision that if the mother during her lifetime should deem it advisable, she might sell and convey the premises; and that, in that event, the further trust was raised and created that the trustees or the survivor of them, upon her application and with her consent signified by becoming a party to the conveyance, might sell and convey the lot and improvements for the best price which could be obtained for the same, without any application to a court of law or equity for that purpose, and to invest the proceeds thereof upon the same trusts in such other property or manner as the mother should direct, and for the same use, benefit and behalf.

Provision was also made that if no such sale and reinvestment was made during the lifetime of the mother, then the trustees were to sell the same for the sole use and benefit of the three sons or the survivor or survivors of them, share and share alike, until the youngest should arrive at the age of twenty-one years, when the trustees might sell and convey the same at the request of such survivor or survivors, and divide the proceeds to the survivor or survivors, share and share alike.

Taken as a whole, the proofs show, to the entire satisfaction of the court, that the lot in question was purchased and conveyed to the surviving trustee upon the same trusts as those raised and created in the first deed; and that the trustee, through mistake, failed to have those trusts properly declared in the deed of trust to him as he should have done; and that the prayer of the bill of complainant, that the deed of the lot and improvements in question ought to be reformed and the rights of the complainant be ascertained and adjudged as if the deed in question contained the same trusts as those raised and created in the original trust-deed, is reasonable and proper and should be granted.

See 11 OTTO.

Courts of equity, beyond all doubt, possess the power to grant such relief, and the proofs, in the judgment of the court, are such as to entitle the complainant to such a decree, unless the remaining defense set up by the respondent must prevail. Cooper v. Phibbs, L. R. 2 H. L., 149, 186; Cochrane v. Willis, 34 Beav., 359, 366. Such a decree, of course, cannot now be made against the trustee, as he is not living; but the executors, as contended by the complainant, are competent to perform that duty, and she prays that the decree may be adapted to the present state of the parties.

Suppose all that is true; still it is contended by the principal respondent that the decree below is correct, because the claim is barred. Much discussion of that defense will not be necessary, beyond what is required to ascertain the facts.

When the father died, the complainant was living on the premises, and she continued to reside there most or all the time during the widowhood of the mother of her first husband, except while she lived with her second husband, and when he died she returned to live with her mother-in-law. During all that time the proofs show that she was constantly recognized as the lawful heir to the estate of her deceased husband, until about a year before the decease of the mother, who also resided on the premises. Prior to that, the rights of the complainant were unmistakably recognized, and nothing of consequence had occurred to indicate any intent to call her just right in question. Soon after that, however, the respondent commenced an action of ejectment against her to recover possession of the entire lot and improvements, she still being in possession and, doubtless, hoping and expecting that her rights would yet be acknowledged without the necessity of expensive litigation. Expectations of the kind not being realized, she filed the present bill of complaint. Laches are imputed to her; but the court, in view of the circumstances and of the embarrassments growing out of the obvious defects in the conveyance intended to secure her rights, is of the opinion that the evidence of laches is not sufficient to bar her right to recover in the present suit. Without more, these remarks are sufficient to show that the defense cannot be sustained, and it is accordingly overruled.

Two or three remarks will be sufficient to show that the objection that the Circuit Court has no jurisdiction to enter the required decree against the executors of the deceased trustee cannot be sustained. Jurisdiction as between the complainant and respondent is unquestionable; and, if so, it is clear that the fact that the trustee, if living, was a citizen of the same State with the complainant would not defeat the jurisdiction in a case where he is a mere nominal party, and is merely joined to perform the ministerial act of conveying the title if adjudged to the complainant. Where that is so, the executor, in case of the decease of the trustee, if authorized by the law of the State to execute such a conveyance, may also be joined in the suit under like circumstances, merely to accomplish the like purpose. Where the real and only controversy is between citizens of different States, or an alien and a citizen, and the plaintiff is, by some positive rule of law, compelled to use the name of another to perform merely a ministerial act, who has not nor ever had any interest in or control over it, the courts of the United States will not consider any others as parties to the suit than the persons between whom the litigation before them exists. McNutt v. Bland, 2 How., 9, 15; Browne v. Strode, 5 Cranch, 303; Coal Co. v. Blatchford, 11 Wall., 172, 177 [78 U. S., XX., 179, 181].

Cases arise in the Federal Courts in which nominal or even immaterial parties are joined, on the one side or the other, with those who have the requisite citizenship to give the court jurisdiction in the case; and where that is so, the rule is settled that the mere fact that one or more of such parties reside in the same State with one of the actual parties to the controversy, will not defeat the jurisdiction of the court. Decisive authority for that proposition is found in a recent ruling of Mr. Justice Miller, in which he states, to the effect, that mere formal parties do not oust the jurisdiction of the court, even if they are without the requisite citizenship, where it appears that the real controversy is between citizens of different States. Arapahoe Co. v. R. Co., 4 Dill., 277, 283.

Nothing is claimed of the executors in this case except that they shall perform the ministerial act of conveying the title, in case the power to do so is vested in them by the law of the State, and the court shall enter a decree against the principal respondent to that effect. From all which it follows that the complainant is entitled, as between herself and the principal respondent, to the relief prayed in the bill of complaint; but the court, in view of all the circumstances, will not proceed to determine either the proportion of the trust property which belongs to the complainant or the amount she is entitled to recover of the said respondent. Instead of that, those matters are left to be ascertained and determined by the Circuit Court, with authority, if need be, to refer the cause to a master to report the facts, with his opinion thereon, subject to the confirmation of the Circuit Court.

Executors of the trustee, in such a case as the complainant alleges, are, under the law of the State, the successors of the deceased trustee, and that, as such, they may execute whatever remains executory in the trust at the time of his decease; from which it would follow, if that be so, that it will be the duty of the executors of the deceased trustee in this case, when the rights of the complainant are fully ascertained, to make the necessary conveyance to perfect her title to the same extent as the trustee might do if in full life. Express authority is reserved to the Circuit Court to ascertain the rights of the complainant as if the trust-deed was reformed, and to make the necessary decree to perfect her title in such mode and form as the law of the State and the practice of the state courts authorize and provide. Crafton v. Beal 1 Ga., 322; Brown v. Tucker, 47 Ga., 485.

Costs in this court will be taxed to the principal respondent in favor of the complainant, but no costs will be allowed against the other two respondents.

Decree reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings in conformity with the opinion of the court.

v.

PIKE COUNTY, MISSOURI.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 677-688.)

State construction of statute—latest decision—rule of construction—effect on bonds.

1. This court treats the construction which the highest court of a State has given to a statute of the State as part of the statute.

2. But where different constructions have been given to the same statute at different times, it will not follow the latest decisions, if thereby contract rights which have accrued under earlier rulings would be injuriously affected.

3. The true rule is, to give a change of judicial construction in respect to a statute the same effect in its operation on contracts and existing contract rights that would be given to a legislative amendment; that is to say, make it prospective, but not retroactive.

4. The rights of the parties in regard to municipal bonds are to be determined according to the law as it was judicially construed to be when the bonds in question were put on the market as commercial paper.

5. This rule applied to bonds of a county in Missouri.

Argued Jan. 5, 6, 1880. Decided Mar. 29, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Missouri.

This was an action brought in the court below by Jos. M. Douglass, the plaintiff in error, against the defendant in error on certain coupons detached from bonds, alleged to have been issued by the defendant in error in behalf of Cuivre Township, under the Township Aid Act of March 23, 1868. The defendant demurred to the petition, and the demurrer was sustained by the court below, upon the ground that the Act under which the bonds in question were issued was in conflict with section 14, article 11 of the Constitution of Missouri, adopted in 1865. Judgment was entered in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff sued out the present writ of error.

Messrs. John H. Overall, J. O. Broadhead and Frederick N. Judson, for plaintiff in error:

The point raised upon the other side is, that since the decision of this court in Cass County v. Johnston, 95 U. S., 360 (XXIV., 416), the Supreme Court of Missouri in the cases of State v. Brassfield, 67 Mo., 331, wherein two Judges, out of the five constituting the court (two not sitting), made the decision, and Webb v. Lafayette Co., 67 Mo., 353 (two Judges dissenting), has decided the Township Aid Act of 1868 unconstitutional, and all bonds issued under it void.

To break the force of these decisions, counsel cited, State, ex rel. R. R. Co. v. Linn Co. Ct., 44 Mo., 504; Ranney v. Baeder, 50 Mo., 600; State v. Sanderson, 54 Mo., 203, dissenting opinion of Judge Napton, 67 Mo., 371; Township of Pine Grove v. Talcott, 19 Wall., 666 (86 U. S., XXII., 227); State v. Miller, 50 Mo., 129.

Mr. Thos. J. C. Fagg, for defendant in error:

NOTE.—Municipal bonds; how affected by change of ruling of highest court of State, or by change in Constitution. See note to Mitchell v. Burlington, 71 U. S., XVIII., 350.

The United States Courts will be controlled by the decisions of the State Courts after the issue of bonds, when the question is one that depends upon the construction of a local statute.

King v. Wilson, 1 Dill., 555; Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall., 175 (68 U. S., XVII., 520); Olcott v. Supervisors, 16 Wall., 678 (83 U. S., XXI., 382); Butz v. Muscatine, 8 Wall., 575 (75 U. S., XIX., 490); Supervisors v. U. S., 18 Wall., 71 (85 U. S., XXI., 771); Chicago v. Sheldon, 9 Wall., 50 (76 U. S., XIX., 594); Pine Grove Township v. Talcott, 19 Wall., 666 (86 U. S., XXII., 227).

Counsel also contended that the Supreme Court of Missouri had not, in the cases decided by it previous to 1878, directly decided the Act in question to be constitutional.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

We are asked to reconsider our decision in Cass Co. v. Johnston, 95 U. S., 360 [XXIV., 416], because since that case the Supreme Court of Missouri, in State v. Brassfield, 67 Mo., 331, and Webb v. Lafayette Co., 67 Mo., 353, has held the "Township Aid Act" which we sustained, to be unconstitutional. The question presented, as we view it, is not so much whether these late decisions are right, as whether they should be followed in cases having reference to bonds put out and in the hands of innocent purchasers when they were announced. In the Cass County case we said that the Supreme Court of the State had often been called on to construe and give effect to the Act, and had never before that time in a single instance expressed even a doubt as to its validity. We have again examined all the cases, and find that what we then said was true. Judge Dillon, who filled the office of Circuit Judge in the Eighth Circuit with such distinguished ability during nearly all the time the Act was in operation from its original passage until after the recent decisions, remarked in Westerman v. Cape Girardeau Co., 7 Cent. L. J., 354: "A hundred cases—and I do not think I exaggerate—have been brought on these township bonds in the Federal Courts of this State, and prior to the decision in Harshman v. Bates Co., 92 U. S., 569 [XXIII., 747], none of the able lawyers defending these cases ever made a point that the Act of March 23, 1868, was unconstitutional." The reason is obvious. At the very outset it was thought best to take the opinion of the Supreme Court of the State on that subject. The Act went into operation in 1868, and in 1869, State v. Linn Co., 44 Mo., 504, was decided. There a township had voted to subscribe to the stock of a railroad company, and the county court had made the subscription; but after this was done the court refused "To deliver the bonds, for the alleged reason, only, that the Act under which the subscription was made was unconstitutional and void." An application was then made for a mandamus to compel the delivery of the bonds; and the only questions presented by the counsel for the respondent in the argument of the case, as shown by the report, were those of constitutionality, and especially was it urged that the Act was repugnant to article 11, section 14, which, quoting from the opinion, "Declares the General Assembly shall not authorize any county, city or town to become a stockholder in or loan its credit to any company, association or corporation, unless two thirds of the qualified voters of such county, city or town, at a regular or special election to be held therein, shall assent thereto." All the objections presented were considered by the court, and in conclusion it was said: "The county court having made the subscription, the company is entitled to the bonds." It is quite true that the precise objection which has since been raised was not then urged or considered; but the alleged discrepancy between the Act and the Constitution was just as apparent then as it is now, and Judge Dillon, in Foot v. Johnson Co., 6 Cent. L. J., 346, says: "Suits, in great numbers, on these township bonds have been brought in the Circuit Court of the United States for this district, and they have been defended by the ablest lawyers in the State, upon every ground that they conceived open to them; but this difference between the phraseology of the Constitution and the Act, so patent that it could not escape attention, was never presented or urged in any case, so far as either of us recollect, as invalidating the Act." In Cass Co. v. Johnston, we attributed this to the fact that in other cases it had been substantially decided that the language of the Act and that of the Constitution were, in legal effect, the same, and at that time took occasion to look somewhat critically into the rulings on that subject. We have again examined that question, and are satisfied with the correctness of our former conclusion. It is thought, however, that we did not give sufficient effect to the case of State v. Sutterfield, 54 Mo., 391. As to that, we said the question presented related to another clause of the Constitution, and that the decision was placed expressly on the ground of a difference between the two provisions. In this it is urged we were in error. The clause of the Constitution there under consideration was article 4, section 30, which is: "The General Assembly shall have no power to remove the county seat of any county, unless two thirds of the qualified voters of the county, at a general election, shall vote in favor of such removal." Under this provision of the Constitution a statute was passed providing for elections in such cases, to the effect, "If it shall appear by such election that two thirds of the legally registered voters of said county are in favor of the removal of the county seat of such county, then," etc. In the opinion the court say: "There is no doubt that, in general, when an election is held to determine the choice of a candidate, or the determination of some question of public policy, the plurality required by law, whether it be a bare majority or two thirds or three fourths, is determined by the result of the vote cast, without regard to the number declining to vote; and this is upon the ground that a failure to vote is assumed, or may be presumed, to be an acquiescence in whatever result may be produced by the action of those who feel a sufficient interest in the election to go to the polls and vote, and for the further reason that in most cases there is no mode by which the number of absentees can be ascertained. * * * Our Constitution in regard to the proposed removal of county seats, it seems to me, hardly admits of two constructions. It prohibits the Legislature from removing them unless two thirds of the qualified voters shall, at a general election, vote for the removal. The words do not imply an acquiescence or negative sanction, or a negative assent inferred from absence, but a positive vote in the affirmative; and the number of votes required is specifically named, and there is no difficulty in ascertaining what that number is, since the same Constitution provides for a registration, and points out who qualified voters are; and the statute in this case uses the words 'legally registered voters,' and requires two thirds of them to vote for the change." The court then refers to the case of State v. St. Joseph, 37 Mo., 270; State v. Binder, 38 Mo., 450, and State v. Winkelmeier, 35 Mo., 103, and says: "In none of these cases, however, was there any examination of or construction given to the precise language of the constitutional provision now under consideration. * * * The present case, however, presents very different considerations. The question of removing county seats was regarded by the framers of the Constitution as of sufficient importance to require very stringent provisions in that instrument, and an examination of the laws in force on this subject, at the time of the adoption of the new Constitution, will show the great importance of requiring a strict compliance with its provisions." We think, then, we were not in error in supposing that the court believed there was an essential difference between the two provisions of the Constitution, and especially so as the Judge who delivered the opinion of the court in State v. Sutterfield, by his dissent in the later cases of State v. Brassfield, and Webb v. La Fayette Co., clearly indicates his disapproval of the effect upon the question now under consideration which was then given that case.

The legislative recognition of the difference between these two clauses of the Constitution is equally apparent. The Constitution went into effect in July, 1865, and it became the duty of the Legislature, at its next session, which commenced in November, to adapt the old laws to the new order of things. In this connection, it must be borne in mind that the provision for a registration of voters was first introduced into the policy of the State by this new Constitution.

The then existing law regulating the removal of county seats provided that "Whenever three fifths of the taxable inhabitants of any county, as ascertained by the tax list made and returned last preceding the application, shall petition the county court praying a removal of the seat of justice thereof to a designated place, the court shall appoint five commissioners," etc. R. S., Mo., 1855, p. 514, sec. 1. To meet the requirements of the new Constitution on this subject, an election was provided for, and it was enacted that if it should appear by such election that two thirds of "the legally registered voters" were in favor of the removal, commissioners should be appointed to perform the same duties prescribed in the old law. Gen. Stat. Mo., 1865, p. 223, secs. 20-22. Here it is evident the Legislature had in mind both the provision for registration of voters and the somewhat unusual requirement that two thirds of the qualified voters of the county should vote for the measure.

The old law respecting the subscription by the county courts to the capital stock of railroad corporations was as follows: "It shall not be lawful for the county court of any county to subscribe to the capital stock of any railroad company, unless the same has been voted for by a majority of the resident voters who shall vote at such election under the provisions of this Act." Acts of 1860-61, p. 60, sec. 2. In adapting this to the new constitutional requirements, this is the language used: "It shall be lawful for the county court of any county, the city council of any city or the trustees of any incorporated town, to take stock, etc., provided that two thirds of the qualified voters of such county, city or town, at a regular or special election to be held therein, shall assent to such subscription." Gen. Stat. Mo., 1865, p. 338, sec. 17. This, it will be seen, is the exact language of the Constitution itself, and the intention evidently was to leave its meaning to be ascertained by judicial construction. By another statute passed at the same session of the Legislature, the charter of the City of St. Joseph, which had before authorized subscriptions to the capital stock of railroad companies if a majority of the real estate owners in the city sanctioned the same, was amended so as to require that question to be submitted "To a vote of the qualified voters of said city, and in all such cases it shall require two thirds of such qualified voters to sanction the same." Acts of 1865-66, p. 269, sec. 1. At the same session, in amending the charter of the Town of Clarksville, evidently to accomplish the same object, this is the language employed: "After first having obtained the consent of the inhabitants, as required by the Constitution of the State." Gen. Stat. Mo., 1865, p. 254, sec. 1.

At the February Term, 1866, of the Supreme Court of the State, that court was called on. In State, ex rel. Bassett, v. St. Joseph [supra], to give a construction to the Act amending the charter of St. Joseph. Under that Act, an election was held on the 13th of January, 1866, to vote upon the question of an issue of bonds, and four hundred and four votes were polled, of which three hundred and thirty-six were in favor of and fifty-eight against the measure. The mayor refused to sign the bonds after the vote was taken, and a mandamus was asked to require him to do so. The only reason he gave for declining to sign the bonds was, that "He was in doubt whether the matter was to be determined by two thirds of the votes polled at the special election, or by two thirds of all the voters resident in the city, absolutely, whether voting or not." In the argument, in support of the application for the writ, the attention of the court was called to the fact that there was "No registry law by which the qualified voters in the city could be ascertained," and it was further said, "The votes cast at the last election for city officers and the votes cast at said subsequent election furnish the only correct criterion to ascertain the number of qualified voters in the city at the time said special election was held." In the opinion, mention is also made of the number of votes polled at the next preceding election; but the court, after stating the exact question put by the mayor as indicating his own doubts, uses this direct and unmistakable language: "We think it was sufficient that two thirds of the qualified voters who voted at the special election authorized for the express purpose of determining that question, on public notice duly given, voted in favor of the proposition. This was the mode provided by law for ascertaining the sense of the qualified voters on that question. There would appear to be no other practicable way in which this matter could be determined." It is true, the bonds voted at this election were not to be used in payment of subscriptions to the stock of railroad companies, but the law construed was the one in which provision was made for such subscriptions. Following this, at the October Term, 1866, of the same court, was the case of State v. Binder, 38 Mo., 450, in which similar language in another statute was construed, and State v. St. Joseph cited as establishing the doctrine "That an election of this kind authorized for the very purpose of determining that question, on public notice duly given, was the mode contemplated by the Legislature as well as by the law for ascertaining the sense of the legal voters upon the question submitted, and that there could not well be any other practicable way in which such a matter could be determined. And," continues the court, "certainly, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, it may be presumed that the voters, voting at an election so held, were all the legal voters of the city; or, that all those who did not see fit to vote (if there were any) acquiesced in the action of those who did vote, and so are to be considered as equally bound and concluded by the result of the election. Ree v. Foxcroft, 2 Burr., 1017; Wilcox, Corp., 546." Certainly, after these two decisions, made under the circumstances that attended them, and with the mind of the court directed by counsel in their argument to the registration laws, it might fairly be assumed by the Legislature to have been judicially determined that the assent of two thirds of the qualified voters voting at an election duly called and notified, was the legal equivalent of the assent of two thirds of the qualified voters of an election precinct. Hence, it was that the session of the Legislature which began in January, 1868, and as soon, probably, as the effect of these decisions had become generally understood, to avoid all future doubts as to what was meant, the equivalent language, as construed by the courts, was used, instead of that of the Constitution itself. And so we find not only in the Township Aid Act, but in other Acts depending for their authority on the same clause of the Constitution, the requisite assent of those voting at an election was deemed by the Legislature to be the assent of the qualified voters.

It was under this state of facts and the law that State v. Linn Co. [supra], was heard and decided. Other objections to its constitutional validity than those which had formerly been considered were raised, argued and decided in favor of the law. From that time forward, and until long after the issue of the bonds now in question, the law was treated by the courts and the people as valid and constitutional. No lawyer, asked for a professional opinion on that subject, could have hesitated to say that it had been settled. It would seem as though every question which could be raised had in some form, directly or indirectly, been presented and decided. While some of the decisions were rendered before the passage of the Township Act, it is so clear that the peculiar language of that Act was the consequence of those decisions that we do not deem it unreasonable to give them all the effect they would have if made afterwards.

See 11 OTTO.

We are, then, to consider whether, under these circumstances, we must follow the later decisions to the extent of destroying rights which have become vested under those given before. As a rule, we treat the construction which the highest court of a State has given a statute of the State as part of the statute, and govern ourselves accordingly; but where different constructions have been given to the same statute at different times, we have never felt ourselves bound to follow the latest decisions, if thereby contract rights which have accrued under earlier rulings will be injuriously affected. The language of Chief Justice Taney, in Rowan v. Runnels, 5 How., 134, expresses the true rule on this subject. He said, p. 139: "Undoubtedly, this court will always feel itself bound to respect the decisions of the state courts and, from the time they are made, regard them as conclusive in all cases upon the construction of their own laws. But we ought not to give them a retroactive effect, and allow them to render invalid contracts entered into with citizens of other States which, in the judgment of this court, were lawfully made." Afterwards, in Ohio Ins. & Tr. Co. v. Debolt, 16 How., 416, the same learned Chief Justice, after reiterating what he had before said in Rowan v. Runnels, uses this language: "It is true the language of the court in that case is confined to contracts with citizens of other States, because it was a case of that description which was then before it. But the principle applies with equal force to all contracts which come within its jurisdiction." This distinction has many times been recognized and acted upon. Supervisors v. U. S., 18 Wall., 71 [85 U. S., XXI., 771]; Fairfield v. Gallatin Co. [ante 544]. Indeed, if a contrary rule was adopted, and the comity due to state decisions pushed to the extent contended for, "It is evident," to use again the language of Chief Justice Taney, in Rowan v. Runnels, "that the provision of the Constitution of the United States, which secures to the citizens of another State the right to sue in the courts of the United States, might become utterly useless and nugatory." The true rule is to give a change of judicial construction, in respect to a statute, the same effect in its operation on contracts and existing contract rights that would be given to a legislative amendment; that is to say, make it prospective, but not retroactive. After a statute has been settled by judicial construction, the construction becomes, so far as contract rights acquired under it are concerned, as much a part of the statute as the text itself, and a change of decision is, to all intents and purposes, the same in its effect on contracts as an amendment of the law by means of a legislative enactment.

So far as this case is concerned, we have no hesitation in saying that the rights of the parties are to be determined according to the law as it was judicially construed to be when the bonds in question were put on the market as commercial paper. We recognize fully, not only the right of a state court, but its duty to change its decisions whenever, in its judgment, the necessity arises. It may do this for new reasons, or because of a change of opinion in respect to old ones; and ordinarily we will follow them, except so far as they affect rights vested before the change was made. The rules which properly govern courts, in respect to their past adjudications, are well expressed in Boyd v. Alabama, 94 U. S., 645 [XXIV., 302], where we spoke through Mr. Justice Field. If the Township Aid Act had not been repealed by the new Constitution of 1875, art. 9, sec. 6, which took away from all municipalities the power of subscribing to the stock of railroads, the new decisions would be binding in respect to all issues of bonds after they were made; but we cannot give them a retroactive effect without impairing the obligation of contracts long before entered into. This we feel ourselves prohibited by the Constitution of the United States from doing. We always regret to find ourselves in conflict with the courts of the States in matters affecting local law, but, when necessary, we cannot refrain from acting on our own judgment without abrogating our constitutional jurisdiction.

For these reasons, the judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer to the petition, and take such further proceedings, not inconsistent with this opinion, as law and justice may require.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri.

This case was the same in its history and facts as No. 155, the names of the parties being changed. The bonds in question were issued by the defendant County in behalf of Kaw Township, for the benefit of the Wyandotte, Kansas and Northwestern Railroad Company.

Messrs. Henderson & Shields, for plaintiffs in error:

"The decisions of the Supreme Court of Missouri, commencing with the Linn County case, in 1868, and continuing down to 1878, in which the constitutionality of the Act of March 23, 1868, and the validity of bonds issued under it were in question, are supported by the decisions, not only of this court, but by nine tenths of the state courts of the Union."

Douglass v. Pike County, ante, 968, followed.

[No. 134.]

Argued Jan. 6, 1880. Decided Mar. 29, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Missouri.

This was an action commenced in the court below by the plaintiff in error on certain coupons attached to bonds alleged to have been issued by the County Court of Pike County in behalf of Calumet Township, in payment of the subscription of that township to the capital stock of the Clarksville and Western Railroad Company. These bonds were issued under the authority of the Township Aid Act. The defendant demurred to the petition and judgment was rendered sustaining the same upon the opinion of the presiding Justice. The plaintiff sued out this writ of error.

The Judges were divided in opinion upon five questions of which the following are the first three:

First. Whether the petition sets forth a legal cause of action against the defendant.

Second. Whether the demurrer to the petition ought to be sustained.

Third. Whether the defendant had authority under the Constitution and laws of the State of Missouri to subscribe to the capital stock of the Clarksville and Western Railroad Company at the time said subscriptions were made, although two thirds of the qualified voters of the respective townships named did at a special election duly called and held therefor, actually vote in favor of said subscriptions.

Baeder*, 50 Mo., 600; Rubey v. Shain, 54 Mo., 207; State v. Sanderson, 54 Mo., 203; State v. Cunningham, 51 Mo., 479; State v. Co. Ct. Bates Co., 57 Mo., 70; State v. Clarkson, 59 Mo., 149.

Messrs. Fillmore Beall, Geo. T. Edmunds and Thos. J. C. Fagg, for defendants in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This cause comes here with a certificate of division. Although several questions are certified, the only point seriously pressed in the argument is that just decided in Douglass v. Pike County [ante, 968]. For the reasons stated in the opinion in that case we answer the first and third questions in the affirmative and the second in the negative. This makes it unnecessary to consider the fourth and fifth.

This judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, with instructions to overrule the demurrer to the petition and take such further proceedings, not inconsistent with our opinion in Douglass v. Pike County [ante, 968], as law and justice may require.

Suits against State.

Where, in suits against a State, the state courts are made little else than auditing boards, and if funds are not voluntarily provided to meet the judgment, the courts are not invested with power to supply them, there is no such remedy for the enforcement of the contracts of the State as may not, under the Constitution of the United States, be taken away by a law of the State.

[No. 22.]

Argued Oct. 28, 29, 1879. Decided Mar. 29, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State Alabama.

On the 4th of April, 1874, the South and North Alabama Railroad Company, a Corporation chartered and organized under the laws of Alabama, exhibited a bill in the Chancery Court of Montgomery County, against the State of Alabama, as sole defendant. In this bill it was claimed that the State was liable to the Railroad Company as trustee, for a large sum of money received by the State from "The Three per Cent Fund" arising from the proceeds of the sales of public lands under the Act of Congress of Mar. 2, 1819, "To Enable the People of Alabama Territory to Form the Constitution and State Government, and for the Admission into the Union upon an Equal Footing with the Original States."

An amended bill was afterward filed in December, 1874.

The State, by its Attorney-General and by its Solicitor, appeared in the cause, and filed its answer to the original bill May 20, 1874. No answer was made to the amended bill. May 11, 1875, the State, by its Attorney-General, Mr. Sanford, entered a motion in the cause to dismiss it and to strike it from the docket, on the grounds that there is no law which authorizes suits to be brought or prosecuted against the State of Alabama, and that this suit cannot be further maintained because the law which may have authorized its institution has been repealed.

On this motion the Chancery Court dismissed the bill.

The complainant appealed from that decree to the Supreme Court of Alabama, and at its December Term, 1875, that court affirmed the decree of the Chancery Court. At the time when the original bill was filed, the statutes of Alabama permitted citizens of the State, and domestic corporations, to sue the State in the Chancery Courts as well as in the courts of law; but all such statutes were repealed by Act of the General Assembly approved December 18, 1874.

NOTE.—Effect of repeal of statute, on pending action. See note to U. S. v. Tynen, 78 U. S., XX., 153.

See 11 OTTO.

U. S., Book 25.

Messrs. Samuel F. Rice, Thomas G. Jones and A. A. Wiley, for plaintiff in error.
Mr. John T. Morgan, for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This case, like that of R. R. Co. v. Tennessee [ante, 960], presents the question of the constitutionality of a law taking away the right to sue a State on its contracts. The Constitution and laws bearing on the question are much the same in Alabama as in Tennessee; but in Alabama it was provided "That if judgment should be rendered against the State, it was the duty of the Comptroller, on the certificate of the clerk of the court, together with that of the judge who tried the cause, that the recovery was just, to issue his warrant for the amount, but no certificate could issue until six months after the recovery of the judgment." Code 1867, sec. 2536. It was also the duty of the Treasurer to pay all warrants drawn on him by the Comptroller under the authority of law (Code, sec. 422), but the Constitution, in force then and now, provided in express terms that no money should be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law. Const., 1834 and 1870, art. 2, sec. 24.

The proceedings in this case were begun while these laws were in force; but before final hearing the laws were repealed, and thereupon, on motion of the State, the suit was dismissed for want of jurisdiction. The Supreme Court affirmed this decision; and the question is, therefore, directly presented by this writ of error, whether the repealing statute is valid and constitutional as against this appellant, so far as it affects the present cause of action, which accrued while the right to sue existed.

We are unable to see any substantial difference between this case and that of R. R. Co. v. Tennessee [supra]. Under both the Tennessee and Alabama statutes the courts are made little else than auditing boards. If funds are not voluntarily provided to meet the judgment, the courts are not invested with power to supply them. In Alabama, a warrant for the payment may be secured, but the State may stop payment by withholding an appropriation. Perhaps the judgment creditor may take one step further towards the collection in Alabama than he can in Tennessee; but both States may refuse to pay, that is, may refuse to make the necessary appropriation, and the courts are powerless to compel them to do so. In neither State has there been granted such a remedy for the enforcement of the contracts of the sovereignty as may not, under the Constitution of the United States, be taken away.

Judgment affirmed.

Dissenting, Mr. Justice Swayne.

Mr. Justice Strong did not sit in the argument and took no part in deciding this case.

On petition for rehearing.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

We have examined with care the cases in Alabama referred to in the elaborate brief filed with this petition, and are unable to see that they decide more than that a judgment creditor is entitled to his warrant on the Treasury for the amount of his recovery. No case has gone beyond this. The Treasurer must pay the warrant when issued, if he has funds in his hands appropriated for that purpose; but if there has been no appropriation, he cannot any more pay a warrant issued on a judgment than one lawfully issued without a judgment. Take this case as an illustration. The demand made by the Railroad Company is an extraordinary one, and involves a large amount of money. Should a recovery be had, and the warrant paid without reference to the specific appropriations, which had been made by the Legislature, of the funds in the Treasury, it would almost of necessity embarrass the government in its daily operations. The constitutional provision referred to in our former opinion was, among other things, intended to meet just such a state of facts. Knowing what appropriations are made, the Legislature provide the funds to meet them. If, from any cause, an unusual claim arises, the parties must wait for the payment until the Legislature can provide the money. The case is precisely like that of a judgment in the Court of Claims against the United States. By the Constitution of the United States, "No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law." Art. 1, sec. 9. Hence the party who gets a judgment must wait until Congress makes an appropriation before his money can be had.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

DALLAS COUNTY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

ALFRED HUIDEKOPER.

Existence of corporation—when question cannot be raised.

1. In an action on bonds of a county issued in payment of its subscription to a railroad company, the point that the charter of the company had ceased before the company was organized is a question between the State and the company alone.

2. Whether the corporation had a legal existence or not when the subscription was made, is a question that cannot be raised in a collateral proceeding; particularly where the corporation did exist as matter of fact, and was, at that time, in the exercise of all its chartered franchises.

[No. 225.]

Argued Mar. 25, 1880. Decided Apr. 5, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri.

This was an action at law, brought in the court below by the defendant in error against Dallas County, the plaintiff in error, upon certain coupons detached from bonds issued by the County under authority of an Act passed by the State Legislature, to incorporate the Laclede and Fort Scott Railroad Company, which Act was approved Jan. 11, 1860. The circuit court made a special finding of facts upon which the law was declared to be with the plaintiff, and judgment was rendered accordingly. The defendant sued out this writ of error.

The defense relied upon was substantially the same as that relied upon by the County in its equity action in the same court against Huidekoper, for which see No. 224, post.

Messrs. S. H. Boyd, A. D. Matthews, and B. L. Brush, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Joseph Shippen, for defendant in error.

(Counsel relied upon nearly the same arguments and authorities as in the equity case, No. 224.)

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

We think the only question in this case was settled by the Supreme Court of Missouri in Smith v. County of Clark, 54 Mo., 59, where it was held on a petition for rehearing, after the case had been once decided, p. 81, that "Whether the corporation had a legal existence or not when the subscription was made, is a question that cannot be raised in a collateral proceeding." In this case, as in that, the corporation "Did exist as a matter of fact, and was in the exercise of all its chartered franchises when the subscription was made and the bonds issued." That case, like this, was a suit upon coupons for interest attached to bonds issued by the County in payment of its subscription to the capital stock of a railroad corporation, and the point made was "That the charter of the company had ceased before the company was organized." That, the court said, was "a question between the State and the company," and gave judgment against the County. We had occasion to consider the same question in Macon Co. v. Shores, 97 U. S., 276 (XXIV., 889), and held the same way.

Judgment affirmed.

DALLAS COUNTY IN THE STATE OF MISSOURI, Appt.,

v.

ALFRED HUIDEKOPER.

SAME v. WILLIAM DAVOL.

Dallas County v. Huidekoper, ante, followed.

[Nos. 224, 226.]

Argued Mar. 25, 1880. Decided Apr. 5, 1880.

APPEALS from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri.

The following statement and briefs apply specially to No. 224. No. 226 differed in no important particular.

This was a bill in equity filed in the court below, by Dallas County against Alfred Huidekoper, to enjoin the collection of two judgments recovered by him against the said County in said court, on interest coupons detached from bonds, alleged to have been issued by said County to the Laclede and Fort Scott Railroad Company to aid the company in the construction of its railroad, of which said Huidekoper claimed to be an innocent holder for value, and for other proper relief.

The bill avers that Huidekoper had theretofore brought two actions at law in the United States.

Circuit Court for the Western District of Missouri, against the appellant, for the collection of interest coupons detached from bonds issued by appellant, and therein had recovered judgments which said Huidekoper was proceeding to enforce by proceedings in mandamus for the levy and collection of taxes. Further averment is:

"And your orator further shows unto Your Honors, that the bonds from which the coupons sued on in said actions were detached, were bonds for $1,000 each, purporting to have been made by the County of Dallas to the Laclede and Fort Scott Railroad Company, dated the first day of July, 1870, for value received, payable at the German American Bank, in the City of New York, at twenty years after date, with interest at the rate of seven per cent per annum, payable semi-annually, on the first days of July and January, of each year, on presentation and delivery at said bank of the interest coupons attached. The said bonds and each of them contained the following recital, and no other: 'This bond is issued pursuant to an order of the County Court of the County of Dallas, made on the 17th day of August, 1869, by authority granted in the charter of the Laclede and Fort Scott Railroad Company, by an Act of the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, entitled, 'An Act to Incorporate the Laclede and Fort Scott Railroad Company, Approved January 11, 1860,' that the said recital in said bond is the only power claimed by said county justices to issue the same.'"

"And your orator avers that no good or valuable consideration was ever given by said railroad company to your orator for the said illegal subscription to its pretended capital stock and issue of bonds and coupons as stated; that the certificates purporting to be certificates of stock in said pretended railroad company were illegally issued by persons having no authority to act for said railroad company, and that said stock and bonds were issued after the 14th day of June, 1870, when said railroad company had ceased to exist under said Act of January 11, 1860, and when said County Court of Dallas County had no power under the Constitution and laws of Missouri of 1865, to issue bonds to pay for the stock subscribed to said pretended railroad company, unless two thirds of the qualified voters of the County of Dallas, at a regular or special election held therein, shall assent thereto."

The relief prayed for was, that said judgments be annulled, and said Huidekoper be perpetually enjoined from enforcing them.

To which bill the respondent demurred, on the ground that the bill did not state facts sufficient to entitle appellant to any such relief as that prayed for; also to the jurisdiction of the court to grant such relief against a writ of mandamus.

The demurrer was sustained and the bill dismissed. The County brings the case here by appeal.

Messrs S. H. Boyd, A. D. Matthews and B. L. Brush, for appellant:

If there was no company authorized under the charter, as alleged in the bill and admitted by the demurrer, the bonds are illegal and void, even in the hands of innocent holders for value.

Marsh v. Fulton Co., 10 Wall., 683 (77 U. See 11 OTTO.

S., XIX., 1042); Dallas Co. v. MacKenzie, 94 U. S., 660 (XXIV., 182); Harshman v. Bates Co., 92 U. S., 569 (XXIII., 747); Steines v. Franklin Co., 48 Mo., 167; Rubey v. Shain, 54 Mo., 207.

The charter of the alleged company was repealed by the Constitution of 1865. The new Constitution of Missouri took effect July 4, 1865.

1 Wag. Stat., 365, art. XIII., sec. 7.

It will, doubtless, be contended that the question of corporation or no corporation is one between the State and the corporators. This may all be true; yet, the determination of that fact constitutes an important factor in solving the question, whether the county court had the power of making this subscription and issuing these bonds; and that the County had a good but unavailable defense, constituted the stronger reason for a court of equity to interfere by enjoining the collection of the judgment, until at last that question had been determined. A court of equity will enjoin the collection of a judgment where the party had a good, available defense at law, but which, from fraud or accident or mistake, not attributable to their own neglect or carelessness, they were prevented from asserting.

Hungerford v. Sigerson, 20 How., 156 (61 U. S., XV., 869); Lansing v. Eddy, 1 Johns. Ch., 49; Bartholomew v. Yaw, 9 Paige, 165; Berry v. Thompson, 17 Johns., 436; Ins. Co. v. Young, 1 Cranch, 336.

Mr. Joseph Shippen, for defendant in error:

I. Equity does not annul judgments at law and restrain their enforcements upon any ground set forth in the appellant's bill, which avers no fraud, accident or mistake.

Hungerford v. Sigerson, 20 How., 156 (61 U. S., XV., 869); U. S. v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S., 61 (ante, 93); Brown v. Buena Vista Co., 95 U. S., 157 (XXIV., 422); Crim v. Handley, 94 U. S., 652 (XXIV., 216); Hendrickson v. Hinckley, 17 How., 443 (58 U. S., XV., 123).

II. The Missouri Constitution and general statutes of 1865, did not repeal the power previously granted to Dallas County by the General Assembly, by the 14th section of the charter of the Laclede and Fort Scott Railroad Company, to subscribe stock in said corporation and issue bonds therefor.

State v. Macon Co. Ct., 41 Mo., 453; Smith v. Clark Co., 54 Mo., 558; Callaway Co. v. Foster, 93 U. S., 567 (XXIII., 911); Scotland Co. v. Thomas, 94 U. S., 682 (XXIV., 219); Henry Co. v. Nicolay, 95 U. S., 619 (XXIV., 394); Schuyler Co. v. Thomas, 98 U. S., 169 (ante, 88); Cass Co. v. Gillett, No. 98, Oct. Term, 1879 (ante, 585).

III. Said Constitution did not prohibit expressly or by implication, the power to organize corporations previously chartered by the General Assembly.

State v. Macon Co. Ct., 41 Mo., 453; State v. R. R. Co., 48 Mo., 468.

IV. The alleged irregularities in the organization of the Laclede and Fort Scott Railroad Company could not have availed as a defense to the respondent's original actions at law, if pleaded and proven therein; much less can they be successfully invoked to annul the judgments recovered.

112); Coloma v. Eaves, 92 U. S., 484 (XXIII., 579); Randolph Co. v. Post, 93 U. S., 502 (XXIII., 957); Leavenworth Co. v. Barnes, 94 U. S., 70 (XXIV., 63); Douglas Co. v. Bolles, 94 U. S., 104 (XXIV., 46); Johnson Co. v. Thayer, 94 U. S., 631 (XXIV., 133); Cass Co. v. Johnston, 95 U. S., 360 (XXIV., 416); St. Louis v. Shields, 62 Mo., 247; Smith v. Clark Co., 54 Mo., 58.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

These are suits in equity to enjoin the collection of judgments against Dallas County on coupons for interest attached to the same class of bonds just considered in Dallas Co. v. Huid-ekoper, No. 225 [ante, 974], and relief is asked on the ground that the charter of the railroad company had expired before any organization was effected under it, and that this fact was not known to the County until after the judgment was rendered. After what has been said in the other case, it is clear that the bills were properly dismissed without considering the power of a court of equity to sustain such a suit, and the decree in each of the cases is, consequently, affirmed.

Jurisdiction as to amount.

Where, in an equity action, a decree was rendered for the complainant for $784.53, and the account involved a large number of items, amounting to several thousand dollars, but the items in the master's report which were excepted to, amounted only to $1,773.76: held, that the latter amount is the only amount in dispute, and it is not sufficient with interest from date of master's report to date of decree to give this court jurisdiction.

[No. 223.]

Argued Mar. 24, 1880. Decided Apr. 5, 1880.

APPEAL from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

This was an action in equity, brought in the court below by the appellant, for the purpose of having an account stated between him and the defendant, now appellee. The case was referred to the special auditor, who reported a balance due to Burr, of $784.53. The account involved a large number of items, amounting in the aggregate to several thousand dollars. The complainant filed exceptions to the report of the auditor, as appear in the opinion of the court, but these exceptions were overruled by the court at Special Term, and judgment entered for the complainant for the amount awarded by the special auditor. This decree was affirmed by the court in General Term, and the complainant appealed to this court.

Mr. C. H. Armes, for appellant.

Messrs. John F. Hanna and James M. Johnston, for appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

The matters in dispute on this appeal are those presented by the exceptions to the master's report. These are:

First exception,.....	$1,500.00
Second exception—First item,.....	$13.25
Second item,.....	125.46
Third item,.....	17.50
Fourth item,.....	117.55
	273.76
Total, as of February 25, 1873.....	$1,773.76

The addition of interest to this amount, from the date at which the master made up the account, until the decree below, will not make the value of the amount in dispute equal to that necessary to give us jurisdiction.

Appeal dismissed.

v.

JONATHAN EDWARDS, Trustee.

Overruling demurrer—election to consider principal sum due.

1. It is not sufficient ground to reverse a decree in equity, that, on overruling defendant's demurrer to the bill, no leave to answer was given, where no application was made for time to answer and no harm to defendant resulted.

2. Where bonds contain a stipulation that on default in payment of interest, the principal shall become due at the option of the obligee, the election by the bondholders to consider the principal sum due is sufficiently proven by bringing a suit by the trustee on the deed of trust given to secure them and the production of the bonds at the hearing.

Submitted Mar. 24, 1880. Decided Apr. 5, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Minnesota.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. M. Lamphrey and C. K. Davis, for appellants.

Mr. H. R. Bigelow, for appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This case shows that on the first day of May, 1874, Henry M. Rice applied to the Equitable Trust Company, of New London, Conn., for a loan of $25,000, for five years, with interest at the rate of ten per cent per annum. His application resulted in his executing to the company twenty-five bonds, of $1,000 each, payable five years after date, with interest semi-annually at the rate of seven per cent per annum. The difference between seven and ten per cent interest was taken in advance, the company deducting fifteen per cent from the face of the loan when paying over the money.

The bonds contained a provision to the effect that if default should be made in the payment of any one of the installments of interest as they fell due, and the default should continue for ten days, the principal of the bonds should become due at the election of the holders without notice. Payment was secured by a deed of trust from Rice and his wife to Edwards, the trustee.

Default was made in payment of an installment of interest falling due November 1, 1875, and in another due May 1, 1876. Thereupon Edwards, the trustee, on the 9th of September, 1876, filed a bill in equity to foreclose the trust, alleging an election by the holders of the bonds to consider the principal sum due, as well as the interest. Rice and wife appeared and filed what is termed a "plea," to so much of the bill as avers that election was duly made that the principal should be due and payable, in which they denied all the allegations of the bill in that behalf. An issue was made on the averments in this plea, and on the 16th of July, 1877, the court below decided that the commencement of the suit and the production of the bonds at the hearing, was sufficient evidence of the election in the absence of any proof that the owners of the bond did not sustain the trustee in the course he had pursued. The cause was then at once referred to a master to ascertain the amount due. On the 6th of August a report was made, finding due at that date $29,210.22 principal and interest, and on the same day the court entered the usual decree of foreclosure and sale for that amount. On the 20th of August, Rice appeared, by his solicitors, and moved the court to open the decree in respect to the amount due, and to refer the cause again to a master to state the account on the basis of deducting a proper sum for the interest taken in advance. Upon this petition an order was made on the master to compute, ascertain and report the amount which should be deducted for this cause. The master heard the parties and reported that a deduction of $1,120.60 should be made for unearned interest paid in advance, but the court, upon consideration, refused to modify the decree as originally entered. Rice and his wife thereupon took this appeal.

The errors assigned are: 1, that, upon overruling the plea, a decree was entered without assigning the defendant to answer the bill as provided in equity Rule 34; 2, that there was no proof that any election had been made, before the suit was brought, to consider the principal due; and, 3 that the decree was not modified by deducting therefrom, $1,120.60.

As to the first error assigned, it is sufficient to say that no application was made for time to answer, and it nowhere appears that the failure to conform to the rule has resulted in harm to the appellants. In Allis v. Ins. Co., 97 U. S., 145 [XXIV., 1008], we said we would not reverse a decree for an immaterial departure from technical rules when we could see that no harm had been done. Here it is not pretended that the appellants have any other defense to the action than such as they set up in their plea, or presented to the court in their application for a modification of the decree. Upon both these defenses, they were fully heard, and the case is now here for review, with a sufficient record to enable us to pass upon all the questions presented. Under such circumstances it would be clearly wrong to reverse the decree because time was not given to file a formal answer, setting up what already appeared in the case.

We agree with the court below that the election by the bondholders, to consider the principal sum due, was sufficiently proven by the bringing of the suit by the trustee and the production of the bonds at the hearing.

The laws of Minnesota put no limit on the rate or amount of interest for which the parties may contract in writing. The contract in this case was to pay the fifteen per cent in advance, and the continuance of the loan for the five years was made dependent on the prompt payment of the semi-annual interest at the rate of seven per cent.

Decree affirmed.

In an action against a Railroad Company for negligence, an instruction to the jury that if the Company undertook to run its trains by telegraph, it was bound to have suitable telegraph lines and operators, and if it did not, and thus occasioned the injury sued for, it would be liable, is proper.

[No. 219]

Submitted Mar. 23, 1880. Decided Apr. 5, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Maine.

This was an action brought in the court below by Walker, the defendant in error, against the plaintiff in error, to recover damages for a personal injury received by Walker, in a collision between two trains on the railroad leased and operated by the plaintiff in error. Judgment was rendered in the court below for the plaintiff, and the defendant sued out this writ of error.

The case is further stated in the opinion.

The following is the opinion of Judge Fox, delivered on a motion for a new trial in the circuit court, Clifford, J., also being present.

Fox, J. In March, 1873, the defendants were the lessees of the railroad from Island Pond to Portland, and the plaintiff was in their employment on the train for the distribution of ties for the repairs of the road. This train was known as the "tie train"; had its conductor and engineer, and its movements were directed and controlled by Chevalier, the train dispatcher at Island Pond, by means of the telegraph. On the 25th of March, this train, with the plaintiff, left Gorham for South Paris, with orders to work between these places, distributing ties, keeping clear of all regular trains, and arrived seasonably at Gilead before 9.50. The same day at 4.30 P. M., freight train No. 6 left Portland for Island Pond. Its movements should have conformed to the time-table of the Company, but it fell behind, and was thirty minutes late at Bryant's Pond. These two trains came into collision near West Bethel, about five and a half miles from Gilead, and the plaintiff sustained serious injuries, for which he has brought the present action. At the trial a verdict was rendered for the plaintiff, which the defendants move to set aside as against law and evidence.

For a correct understanding of the case, some explanations of the distances between the various stations on the road from Gilead to Bryant's Pond and the arrival and the departure of the trains is important.

Gilead is seventeen miles west from Bryant's Pond, with three stations intervening: first, West Bethel, about six miles from Gilead; then Bethel, three and seven eighths miles from West Bethel; next, Locke's Mills, about three miles east from Bethel and four and a half miles east of Bryant's Pond. There was telegraph communication with but one of the stations between Gilead and Bryant's Pond in Bethel.

Chevalier, called by defendants, testified that he was the chief train dispatcher at Island Pond and, as such, had charge of the trains, made the crossing of regular trains when late, regulated the movements of the trains by telegraph, and was provided at Island Pond with all the means requisite to transact the business; that, by the seventeenth rule of the road, "The stoppage of trains having the right of track must invariably be secured before the crossing train is dispatched or the track considered to be clear"; that, on the morning of March 25, the telegraph operator at Gilead at 9.50 reported to him the tie train then at Gilead, and wanted orders; replied to him, "Wait a minute," then telegraphed to Island Pond, who replied "Ay, Ay"; commenced to give an order for Bryant's Pond for No. 6 train, and Bryant's Pond operator stopped me and reported No. 6 had started at 9.50; then telegraphed to Bethel and continued doing so for twenty-five minutes; got no answer till 10.22; then inquired where No. 6 was. Bethel replied "Gone"; reported No. 6 off at 10.15; had previously sent an order to the tie train at Gilead at 10.15 to cross No. 6 at West Bethel, but told the operator at Gilead to hold order a minute; told him to let the tie train go; he reported it away at 10.20. No. 6 left Bethel at 10.15, having right of way over tie train; gave no notice to No. 6 that tie train was to cross them at West Bethel. Collision was caused by my negligence in not sending No. 6 before I gave the order to the tie train. I violated above rule. With the business of the Grand Trunk, a telegraph is necessary at West Bethel; the telegraph operator was the ticket agent, and did all the work at Bethel. I understood he was absent twenty-five minutes in freight shed, out of his office, at the time.

The writ contains two counts; the second charging that by reason of the fault, negligence and carelessness of defendants in not providing careful and suitable superintendents, telegraph operators and other servants, and by reason of the fault, negligence, carelessness and mismanagement of said Corporation and its superintendents, train dispatchers, telegraph operators and other servants, in wrongfully and carelessly neglecting to telegraph, to warn and instruct the servants of said Company having possession, charge and control of another train belonging to said defendants, etc., and by other negligent acts and omissions of said defendants, the collision was occasioned, etc.

At the trial, the court instructed the jury, among sundry instructions not excepted to, that the defendants, if they undertook to manage and conduct the business of running their trains by telegraph, were bound to have a proper and fit telegraph line for this purpose, with a reasonable number of telegraph stations and operators to properly conduct and control the running of the trains; and it is for the jury to decide whether this duty was performed by the defendants, or whether they were guilty of negligence and want of ordinary care in this respect, by not having the regular number of telegraph stations and operators for conducting the business of the road; if they were guilty of such negligence and want of ordinary care, and that occasioned the injury which otherwise would not have occurred, the jury would be authorized to find a verdict for plaintiff.

Although excepted to at the trial, the correctness of this ruling was conceded at the hearing on the motion for a new trial, by the learned counsel for the Corporation, and it is sustained by all the authorities and was merely the application of the rule of law, that when injuries to servants or workmen happen by means of improper and defective machinery and appliances used in the prosecution of the business, the master is accountable. Snow v. R. R. Co., 8 Allen, 446, and cases there cited.

It is now argued that such was not the ground of action as set forth in the writ and, therefore, this instruction was improperly given, and for that cause a new trial should be had; that the claim as made in the writ was for negligence of the servants of the Company, and not for injuries occasioned by its own negligence. The second count, of which an abstract is before recited, does not clearly charge that the injury was occasioned by the negligence of the Corporation as well as by that of its telegraph operator and other servants; and while the specific negligence of the defendant is not as sharply defined in the writ as could have been desired, yet we think it is set forth as a ground of complaint, and after verdict is sufficient.

It does not anywhere appear that this objection was taken at the trial, and if it had been and an amendment requested, it should have been allowed under all the circumstances developed by the evidence. For a technical objection of this character a new trial should not be granted when justice has been done and the objection could be removed by an amendment before the new trial shall be had.

The instructions given being unobjectionable, a new trial can only be granted because the evidence was not sufficient upon this point to authorize the verdict. A careful revision of the testimony satisfies the court that the finding of the jury in this respect was warranted by the evidence. The question for the jury to pass upon was, whether this Company, conducting its running of trains to a great extent by telegraph, had provided the requisite number of telegraph stations and operators for its business. From Gilead to Bryant's Pond was seventeen miles, with three stations intervening, at only one of which, Bethel, were there any facilities for governing the movements of the trains by telegraph; and at that place the jury were warranted in finding that the various duties which the operator there had to perform, of ticket seller, freight agent, etc., as well as telegraph operator, were such that he could not properly discharge them all; and thus that the Company were requiring of him more than he could attend to, and so that it had failed to furnish a suitable operator at that point, leaving the whole distance of seventeen miles unprotected in this behalf. Admitting that the Company were negligent in this respect, it is claimed that the negligence of Chevalier in not detaining the tie train at Gilead, according to rule 17, but giving it the right of way over train No. 6, was also a cause of the injury; that here was double negligence; that of the defendants as well as their servant, who was a fellow-servant of the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff cannot recover from the injury occasioned by the negligence of a fellow-servant. The correctness of this latter proposition or its applicability to this case we do not propose to consider, as, in our view, contributory negligence to defeat a right of action must be that of the party injured, which, it is not claimed, existed in the present case. Paulineer v. R. R. Co., 5 Vroom, 155.

Motion overruled.

Judgment on the verdict.

Messrs. J. & E. M. Rand, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Strout & Holmes, for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

Although much and probably all the testimony in this case is embodied in the bill of exceptions, the only exception taken below was to the following instruction to the jury:

"The defendants, if they undertook to manage and conduct the business of running their trains by telegraph, were bound to have a proper and fit telegraph line for this purpose, with a reasonable number of telegraph stations and operators to properly conduct and control the movements of the trains. And it is for the jury to decide whether this duty was performed by the defendants or whether they were guilty of negligence and want of ordinary care in this respect by not having the requisite number of telegraph stations and operators for conducting the business of the road. If they were guilty of such negligence and want of care and thus occasioned their jury which otherwise would not have occurred, then the jury would be authorized to find a verdict for plaintiff."

We see no error in this instruction as an abstract principle of law, and no complaint is made of it here on that account. The whole effort on the part of the plaintiff in error has been to show that, upon the evidence, the verdict ought to have been in its favor. That question, we cannot consider. The instruction was right, and certainly not so far inapplicable to the allegation in the writ as to justify a reversal of the judgment on that account.

The judgment is affirmed.

MERCHANTS' NATIONAL BANK OF LITTLE ROCK, Plff. in Err.,

v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 1-6.)

Banking law.

Section 3413 of the Revised Statutes concerning banking associations, banks and bankers, is valid.
[No. 218.]

Submitted Mar. 23, 1880. Decided Apr. 5, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Arkansas.

See 11 Otto.

This was an action brought in the court below, by the United States, to recover the tax imposed by the Act of March 26, 1867, and section 3413, R. S., U. S.

In the present case the party charged with the paying out in question is a national Bank, and the notes paid out were those of the City of Little Rock.

The pleadings, which consist of complaint, answer and demurrer, present the question whether the above statute is constitutional, the objection being that the tax in question is virtually laid upon an instrumentality of the State of Arkansas.

Messrs. John McClure and B. C. Brown, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. S. F. Phillips, Solicitor-Gen., for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought by the United States to recover the tax imposed by section 3413 R. S., which is as follows: "Every national banking association, state bank or banker or association shall pay a tax of ten per centum on the amount of notes of any town, city or municipal corporation paid out by them."

The only question presented is as to the constitutionality of this statute, the objection being that the tax is virtually laid upon an instrumentality of the State of Arkansas.

We think this case comes directly within the principles settled in Bk. v. Fenno, 8 Wall, 539 [75 U. S., XIX., 484], where it was distinctly held that the tax imposed by that section on national and state banks for paying out the notes of individuals or state banks used for circulation (Rev. Stat. sec. 3412) was not unconstitutional. The reason is thus stated by the Chief Justice: "Having thus, in the exercise of undisputed constitutional powers, undertaken to provide a currency for the whole country, it cannot be questioned that Congress may constitutionally secure the benefit of it to the people by appropriate legislation. To this end Congress has denied the quality of legal tender to foreign coins, and has provided by law against the imposition of counterfeit and base coin on the community. To the same end Congress may restrain, by suitable enactments, the circulation as money of any notes not issued under its authority. Without this power, indeed, its attempts to secure a sound and uniform currency for the country must be futile." P. 549.

The tax thus laid is not on the obligation, but on its use in a particular way. As against the United States, a state municipality has no right to put its notes in circulation as money. It may execute its obligations, but cannot, against the will of Congress, make them money. The tax is on the notes paid out, that is, made use of as a circulating medium. Such a use is against the policy of the United States. Therefore, the banker who helps to keep up the use by paying them out, that is, employing them as the equivalent of money in discharging his obligations, is taxed for what he does. The taxation was no doubt intended to destroy the use; but that, as has just been seen, Congress had the power to do.

Judgment affirmed.

v.
CITY OF BOSTON.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 16-22.)

Instructions to jury—destruction of property to prevent fire—Massachusetts law.

1. In the Courts of the United States, whenever, in the trial of a civil case, it is clear that the evidence will not warrant a verdict for a party, and that if such a verdict is rendered the other party would be entitled to a new trial, it is the right and duty of the judge to direct the jury to find for the party entitled to its verdict.

2. At common law, everyone has the right to destroy real and personal property, in cases of actual necessity, to prevent the spreading of a fire, and there is no responsibility on the part of such destroyer and no remedy for the owner.

3. Under the Statutes of Massachusetts and the ordinances of Boston, in order that a person may recover for a building blown up in that City to prevent the spread of fire, at least three engineers of the fire department—the chief engineer being one, if present—must have consulted together touching the blowing up of that particular building.

Argued Mar. 22, 23, 1880. Decided Apr. 5, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. Geo. W. Morse, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. J. P. Healy, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in error alleges and relies upon the following case.

A great fire occurred in the City of Boston on the night of the 9th and 10th of November, 1872. The bankrupt was then the lessee and occupant of the premises described in the declaration. The fixtures, merchandise and tools belonging to him in the part of the building covered by the lease were of the value of $60,000, and his leasehold estate of the value of $10,000. The fire did not first break out in the premises of the bankrupt, but that part of the building and the contents were in danger from its progress. Three fire engineers, then at a place of danger in the immediate vicinity, directed the building, including his premises, to be demolished, to arrest the spreading of the fire. The building was blown up and destroyed accordingly. This measure stopped the progress of the fire. The premises were left unfit for occupation, and the personal effects of the bankrupt before mentioned were destroyed by the catastrophe. This action is brought by the assignee in bankruptcy to recover what was thus lost to the bankrupt.

The claim is founded upon certain statutes of the State of Massachusetts and an ordinance of the City of Boston. A brief reference to their provisions, material to be considered in this case, will be sufficient.

In cases of fire, any three of certain designated officers "May direct any house or building to be pulled down or demolished when they may judge the same to be necessary in order to prevent the spreading of the fire." Mass. Gen. Stat., ch. 24, sec. 4.

"If such pulling down or demolishing of a house or building is the means of stopping the fire, or if the fire stops before it comes to the same, the owner shall be entitled to recover a reasonable compensation from the city or town; but when such building is that in which the fire first broke out, the owner shall receive no compensation." Mass. Gen. Stat., ch. 24, sec. 5.

The City of Boston was authorized to establish a fire department, to consist of so many engineers, etc., "As the City Council, by ordinance, shall from time to time prescribe." Mass. Spec. Stats., 1850, ch. 22.

Pursuant to the authority thus conferred, the City Council, in the manner prescribed, created such a department, and declared that it should "Consist of a chief engineer and thirteen assistant engineers," etc. Ordinances of Boston, ed. 1869, sec. 1.

It was provided that "The chief engineer shall have the sole command at fires over all other engineers and officers and members of the fire department, and other persons who may be present at such fires," etc. Ord. of Boston, ed., 1869, sec. 6.

"Whenever it is adjudged at any fire; by any three or more of the engineers present, of whom the chief engineer, if present, shall be one, to be necessary, in order to prevent the spreading of the fire, to pull down or otherwise demolish any building, the same may be done by their joint order." Ord. of Boston, ed. 1869, sec. 11.

It appears that at the fire here in question the chief engineer and a number of the assistant engineers were present. Upon that subject there is no controversy.

The case was first tried in the District Court of the United States for that district.

The learned Judge who presided at the trial directed the jury to render a verdict for the defendant, which was, accordingly, done.

The plaintiff in error excepted, and having embodied in the record all the evidence given on the trial, sued out a writ of error and removed the case to the circuit court.

There the judgment of the district court was affirmed. A further writ of error has brought the case here for review.

It is now a settled rule in the courts of the United States that whenever, in the trial of a NOTE.—Municipal corporation is not liable for damages for destruction of building to prevent spread of fire.

The destruction of private property by the fire department of a city to stay a fire, is not such an act as will sustain an action for damages against the city at common law, and is not taking private property for public use. Keller v. City of Corpus Christi, 50 Tex., 614; S. C., 32 Am. Rep., 613; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp., secs. 756, 757.

No action lies for the damage occasioned by acts done by way of self-defense against a common enemy, such as the destruction of property to prevent the spreading of a conflagration. Russell v. Mayor, etc., of N. Y., 2 Den., 461; Rex v. Pagham, 3 B. & C., 355; 2 Man. & R., 463; Surocco v. Geary, 3 Cal., 72; Amer. O. P. Works v. Lawrence, 1 Zab., 248, 714; S. C., 3 Zab., 590; affg. 3 Zab., 9.

A municipal corporation is not liable, unless by express statute, for the destruction of a building torn down to arrest the progress of a fire, no matter whether done under the direction of the municipal officers, who had no authority so to direct, or by the bystanders on their own motion. McDonald v. Red Wing, 13 Minn., 38; Republica v. Sparhawk, 1 U. S. (1 Dall.), 357; Mayor, etc., of New York v. Lord, 17 Wend., 285; affd. 18 Wend., 126; Field v. Des Moines, 39 Iowa, 575; S. C., 18 Am. Rep., 46.

civil case, it is clear that the state of the evidence is such as not to warrant a verdict for a party, and that if such a verdict were rendered the other party would be entitled to a new trial. It is the right and duty of the judge to direct the jury to find according to the views of the court. Such is the constant practice, and it is a convenient one. It saves time and expense. It gives scientific certainty to the law in its application to the facts and promotes the ends of justice. Merch. Bk. v. St. Bk., 10 Wall., 604, 637 [77 U. S., XIX., 1008, 1015]; Improv. Co. v. Munson, 14 Wall., 442 [81 U. S., XX., 867]; Pleasants v. Fant, 22 Wall., 116 [89 U. S., XXII., 780].

The rule in the English courts is substantially the same. Ryder v. Wombwell, L. R., 4 Exch., 32; Giblin v. McMullen, L. R., 2 P. C., 335. In the latter case it was said: "In every case, before the evidence is left to the jury, there is a preliminary question for the judge, not whether there is literally no evidence, but whether there is any upon which a jury can properly proceed to find a verdict for the party introducing it, upon whom the onus of proof is imposed.

At the common law everyone had the right to destroy real and personal property, in cases of actual necessity, to prevent the spreading of a fire, and there was no responsibility on the part of such destroyer, and no remedy for the owner. In the case of the Prerogative, 12 Rep. [Coke], 13, it is said: "For the Commonwealth a man shall suffer damage, as: for saving a city or town, a house shall be plucked down if the next one be on fire; and a thing for the Commonwealth every man may do without being liable to an action." There are many other cases besides that of fire, some of them involving the destruction of life itself, where the same rule is applied. "The rights of necessity are a part of the law." Respublica v. Sparhawk, 1 Dall., 357, 362; see also, Mouse's Case, 12 Rep. [Coke], 63; 15 Vin., tit. Necessity, sec. 8; Cast Plate Co. v. Meredith, 4 T. R., 794; Am. Print W. v. Lawrence, 1 Zab., 248; 3 Zab., 591; Stone v. Mayor of N. Y., 25 Wend., 173; Russell v. Mayor, etc., of N. Y., 2 Den., 461.

In these cases the common law adopts the principle of the natural law, and finds the right and the justification in the same imperative necessity. Burlam., 145, sec. 6; Burlam., 159, ch. 5, secs. 24-29; Puffendorf, B. 2, ch. 6.

The Statute of Massachusetts, as far as it goes, gives as a bounty that which could not have been claimed before. How far the statute trenches upon the legal and natural right which everyone possessed prior to its enactment, is a subject we need not consider.

All the questions arising in this case are questions of local law. It is our duty to consider the controversy as if we were a court of the State, and sitting there to apply her jurisprudence.

The subject was within her police power, and it was competent for her to legislate upon it as she might deem proper. It is wholly beyond the sphere of federal authority.

Whether the statute is to be construed strictly, as being in derogation of the common law, or liberally, as being remedial in its character, are points within the exclusive cognizance of her tribunals. The jurisdiction of the district court arose from the incidental fact that a claim in behalf of a bankrupt's estate was involved, and that his assignee was the plaintiff.

In order to charge the City, "The remedy being given by statute only, the case must be clearly within the statute." * * * "The city is responsible by force of the statute only, and such responsibility is limited to the cases specially contemplated." Taylor v. Plymouth, 8 Met., 465.

The law of the case has been clearly laid down by the highest judicial court of the State, and we cannot do better than quote it at length.

"The plain intent of the statute is, that no house or building shall be demolished unless it shall be judged necessary by three fire-wards, or by the other officers authorized to act in their absence, or where no fire-wards have been appointed. It is the united judgment of the officers to whom the power is given, acting upon the immediate exigency, and determining the necessity which is contemplated by the statute. Its language is capable of no other reasonable interpretation. It is a joint authority expressly given to the officers designated, acting together, and cannot be exercised by a minority or by any one of them.

"It is not sufficient, therefore, that a general conclusion or judgment was arrived at by the three fire-wards or the other officers mentioned, that it was necessary to destroy some buildings in order to put a stop to the further extension of a fire. They must go further. They must determine upon the particular house or building which they shall adjudge necessary to be destroyed for the purpose. This cannot be left to the individual judgment of any one of the fire-wards." Ruggles v. Nantucket, 11 Cush., 433.

The validity of the ordinance creating the fire department was not questioned in the argument here, and we see no reason for doubt upon the subject. The statute which authorized the ordinance declared that "The engineers or other officers," appointed pursuant to the provisions of the latter, should be clothed with all the powers and duties "conferred upon fire-wards by the Revised Statutes or special acts relating to the City of Boston now in force," and that the City Council might "make such regulations in regard to their conduct and government" as it might see fit to ordain. For all the purposes of this case the engineers were fire-wards at and during the fire here in question. Several things were necessary to the validity of an order for the destruction of the tenement of the bankrupt:

At least three engineers of the fire department—the chief engineer, if present, being one—must have consulted together touching the blowing up of that particular building.

They must all have arrived at the conclusion that it was necessary to destroy it in order to arrest the progress of the flames.

They must all jointly and specifically have ordered that building to be destroyed.

Upon looking carefully through the record, we have failed to find the slightest proof that any three of the fire engineers ever consulted in relation to destroying the building to which this controversy relates; that any three, jointly or severally, expressly or by implication, gave an order that it should be destroyed; or that this particular building was ever present to the minds of any three of the engineers in that connection.

The Mayor was on the ground early after the commencement of the fire, and was there, actively engaged, until the next morning. He heard consultations as to the use of gunpowder, but his testimony is an entire blank as to the points here under consideration.

The chief engineer was called by the plaintiff and was fully examined.

He gave authority to numerous persons according to this formula:

"Col. Shepard will blow up buildings or remove goods as his judgment directs.

J. S. DAMRELL, Chief Engineer."

The utter nullity of such an instrument is too plain to require remark.

In the course of the chief engineer's testimony these questions and answers occur:

"Q. You and the engineers did not direct the blowing up of any buildings in Boston by gunpowder?"

A. No, sir. Not when I was present. If any three engineers did so, when I was not present, I have yet to learn the fact.

Q. Did you know that any three engineers directed the demolishing of any building by gunpowder?

A. I do not know the fact."

The building was blown up by General Burt, the Postmaster of Boston. He had a written paper from the chief engineer, and it was in his possession when he testified. The document is not in the record, and its contents are not shown. Upon the points here in question his testimony was as follows:

"Q. Did you, at any time, consult with three of the engineers of the City, after you started the scheme of blowing up?"

A. I don't think we did. I had in my mind distinctly what to do, and we stuck to it until we got it done.

Q. You used your own discretion entirely?"

A. I intended to. I intended to keep that line plumb up, if I could, and not to let it get into the new postoffice building, and not get over into this part of the City."

These witnesses are unimpeached and uncontradicted, and what they say is conclusive. It is unnecessary to refer particularly to the rest of the testimony. Nothing is to be found in it in conflict with the parts we have quoted. It affords no ground for a plausible conjecture that the facts were otherwise. The plaintiff not only failed to prove what he claimed, but his own testimony counter-proved it and established the negative. The proposition was vital to his case.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Suits by salvors.

Salvage, what constitutes.

Salvors cannot proceed against the ship and cargo in rem and in personam against the consignees of the cargo, in the same libel.

[No. 212.]

Argued Mar. 19, 1880. Decided Apr. 5, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. C. B. Singleton and R. H. Brown, for appellants.

Mr. John A. Campbell, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Salvage is the compensation allowed to persons by whose voluntary assistance a ship at sea or her cargo or both have been saved in whole or in part from impending sea peril, or in recovering such property from actual peril or loss, as in cases of shipwreck, derelict or recapture.

Three elements are necessary to a valid salvage claim: (1) A marine peril. (2) Service voluntarily rendered when not required as an existing duty or from a special contract. (3) Success in whole or in part, or that the service rendered contributed to such success.

Proof of success, to some extent, is as essential as proof of service, for if the property is not saved, or if it perish, or, in case of capture, if it is not retaken, no compensation will be allowed. Compensation as salvage is not viewed by the admiralty courts merely as pay on the principle of quantum meruit or as a remuneration pro opere et labore, but as a reward given for perilous services voluntarily rendered, and as an inducement to mariners to embark in such dangerous enterprises to save life and property.

Sufficient appears, to show that important assistance was rendered by the steamer, Mayflower, and her crew to the steamer Sabine, in the nature of salvage service, as alleged in the libel. Both steamers were at the time in the Ouachita River, and each was bound on a trip to the Port of New Orleans. When The Mayflower approached the landing described in the libel, those in charge of her deck discovered that the steamer Sabine was in distress, and it appears that those in command of the latter steamer hailed The Mayflower and requested assistance. It also appears, from the pleadings, that the injured steamer had a cargo of six hundred and nineteen bales of cotton, consigned to various merchants at the port of destination, together with a number of passengers; that she and her cargo were in peril, owing to the fact that in attempting to back out from the landing she struck a snag or other obstruction beneath the surface of the river and became fast. Many of her flooring timbers and bottom planks were broken, and it is alleged that she had sixteen to eighteen inches of water in her hold and that it was rapidly gaining on her pumps.

Success attended the efforts of the salvors, both as to the steamer and her cargo, and they delivered all the cotton to the consignees. Before the cargo was delivered to the consignees they executed to the master of The Sabine an average bond, agreeing to pay their respective proportions of whatever sums should be found due as expenses, charges and sacrifices in consequence of the said disaster.

Efforts to settle the matter amicably having failed, the owner, master and crew of The Mayflower filed a libel in the district court against the steamer Sabine and her cargo and the several consignees to whom the cargo was delivered. Process issued, and the return of the marshal shows that he seized the injured steamer. Service was also made upon the several consignees, but it is not shown that the cargo saved or any part of it was ever seized.

Due appearance was entered by the respective consignees, and they filed certain exceptions to the libel. Those still relied on are as follows: (1) That there was no seizure of the cargo and that a libel in rem cannot be maintained without a seizure. (2) That the consignees are not proceeded against as owners or possessors of the cargo. (3) That a suit in personam and a suit in rem cannot be maintained in such a case. (4) That a suit in personam for salvage services must be against those for whom the services were performed. (5) That the respondents are consignees, and that the cargo had been disposed of and accounted for to those who owned the cotton.

Hearing was had, and the district court sustained the exceptions and dismissed the libel as to the excepting parties. Dissatisfied with the decree of the district court, the libelants appealed to the circuit court, where they were again heard, and the circuit court affirmed the decree of the district court. Still not satisfied the libelants have appealed to this court, and now assign for error that the circuit court erred in holding that the 19th Admiralty Rule applies to the case, because, as they insist, that the libel in this case is not a suit in rem and in personam within the meaning of that rule, and that the exception should have been dismissed.

Suits for salvage may be in rem against the property saved or the proceeds thereof in personam against the party at whose request and for whose benefit the salvage service was performed. Power is vested in the Supreme Court to regulate the practice to be used in suits in equity or admiralty by the circuit or district courts as conferred by an Act of Congress, which has been in force for many years. 5 Stat. at L., 518; R. S., sec., 917.

Pursuant to that authority, the Supreme Court prescribed the preceding rule, which correctly describes the several modes in which salvors may seek compensation for unrequited salvage services. Salvors, under the maritime law, have a lien upon the property saved, which enables them to maintain a suit in rem against the ship or cargo or both, where both are saved in whole or in part. Such a remedy is the one usually pursued, and in view of the fact that the lien is maritime and exists quite independently of possession, it ordinarily affords the best mode of securing the payment of their salvage claims. Wms. & Br. Pr., 147; The Elizabeth and Jane, 1 Ware, 35; The Bee, 1 Ware, 332, 344. Suits of the kind may be enforced against the proceeds of the property, where it appears that the property saved had been previously seized under admiralty process and sold, and the proceeds paid into the registry of the court. Examples of the kind may be given, as where the property saved consisting of the the ship and cargo, and the same were subsequently seized for a violation of the revenue laws, and sold as perishable property before the libel for salvage was instituted, or where there were more than one set of salvors, and the first set caused the property to be seized and sold under an order of court before the second obtained process of attachment. Cases of the kind not infrequently arise, and in all such the proceeds in the registry of the court represent the property saved, and it is clear that the suit may be against the proceeds as provided in the 19th Rule. The Blackwell, 10 Wall., 12 [77 U. S., XIX., 874]; The Evbank, 1 Sumn., 400.

Services of the kind are often rendered by more than one set of salvors, and where that is so, the second, if they do not join with the first set, may, as before remarked, proceed against the proceeds, or they may, pending the proceeding in the suit, apply to the court by petition to be admitted as parties to the original libel. Adams v. The Island City, 1 Cliff., 210; Norris v. The Island City, 1 Cliff., 219.

Compensation in such a case is usually enforced by a libel in rem, but where the parties rendering the salvage service are employed and sent out by the owners or insurers, the persons employed may proceed in personam against their employers for compensation, even though they were unsuccessful, unless they contracted that their right to compensation should depend upon their success, as in the ordinary case of salvage service, without being antecedently employed.

Employers, in such a case, are liable to those rendering service, under such circumstances, in a suit in personam, within the last clause of the Admiralty Rule, but there is no authority for holding that salvors may proceed against the ship and cargo in rem and in personam against the consignees of the cargo in the same libel.

Libelants in a suit for collision may proceed against the ship and master or against the ship alone, or in personam against the master or the owner alone, but the terms of the 19th Rule are different, limiting the right of the salvor to a suit in rem against the property saved or the proceeds thereof, or in personam against the party at whose request and for whose benefit the salvage service was performed.

Important service, it may be assumed, was rendered by the libelants, but they were neither employed nor sent out by the consignees, nor did the consignees request them to go to the assistance or relief of the ship or cargo.

Concede that the request of the master for assistance would be sufficient to enable the salvors to maintain an action in personam against the owners of the property; still the concession will not benefit the libelants in this case, as the libel is against the ship and cargo and the consignees to whom the cargo was delivered; nor would they be in any better condition even if they had joined the owners instead of the consignees, as the difficulty would still remain that the proceeding is in rem against the ship and cargo and in personam against the owners of the cargo without joining the owners of the ship.

Persons to whom goods are consigned may be the owners of the goods, or the goods may be the property of the consignors, or they may even belong to a third party; the fact being that the consignees are named in the bill of lading merely as agents of the shipper to deliver the goods in pursuance of some letter of advice. Nothing appears in this case to explain the transaction, except that it is alleged in the libel that the different parcels of the cargo when rescued were delivered to the several respondents therein described as consignees.

Authorities may, doubtless, be found to support the proposition that the salvors may proceed in rem against the ship and cargo or in personam against the owners of the property saved from the impending peril, but there is no well considered authority which gives any countenance to the theory that the two modes of proceeding may be joined in the same libel. The Boston, 1 Sumn., 328, 341; The Hope, 3 C. Rob., 215.

Actions in rem are prosecuted to enforce a right to things arrested to perfect a maritime privilege or lien attaching to a vessel or cargo or both, and in which the thing to be made responsible is proceeded against as the real party; but actions in personam are those in which an individual is charged, personally, in respect to some matter of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. Both the process and proceedings are different, and the appropriate decree in the one might be absolutely absurd in the other.

Our admiralty rules were promulgated in accordance with the Act of Congress and, as Mr. Parsons says, they have all the effect of law, from which he draws the conclusion that no suit in such a case will lie against an owner in personam jointly with a suit in rem against the vessel. 2 Pars. Admr., 378; Dean v. Bates, 2 Woodb. & M., 87, 92; The Atlantic v. The Ogdenburgh, 1 Newb. Adm., 139.

Beyond all doubt, the views of Mr. Parsons are sustained by the true construction of the 19th Admiralty Rule, which is expressed throughout in the disjunctive form, and plainly requires the action, if against the property saved or the proceeds thereof, to be in rem, the alternative clause clearly referring to a case where the property saved has been sold and the proceeds of the sale have been deposited in the registry of the court. Plain as that part of the rule is, further discussion of it is not necessary, as the libelants scarcely attempt in that regard to controvert the theory of the respondents.

Suppose the respondents are correct in that respect; still the libelants insist that the form of the libel may be supported under the last clause of the rule, which gives the right to an action in personam against the party at whose request and for whose benefit the salvage service was performed, and their argument is that the service in the case resulted in a benefit to the owners of the cargo; but the case fails to show that the owners of the cargo ever requested the service, and it is clear that they are not joined in the libel. They, the libelants, must show the request and the benefit, and unless they show that both concur, they cannot make out a case even within their own theory; to which it may be added that the libel is against the consignees and not against the owner, unless it can be assumed that the consignees are the owners of the cargo, which certainly is not authorized by anything that appears in the transcript.

But there is not a circumstance in the case tending to show that any such request was made, either by the consignees of the cargo or the owners of the same; nor can it, for a moment, be admitted that such an action can be maintained either against the consignees or the owners merely because the saving of the cargo resulted to their benefit. Volunteer assistance rendered to such property when in peril, and which is successful in saving the property or some portion of it, constitutes the proper foundation to support an action for salvage in rem against the ship and cargo or the proceeds thereof.

Reported cases may be found where the owners or insurers of such property, being informed that the property was in peril, sent out vessels and mariners for its assistance and relief, and in such a case it is, undoubtedly, true that the persons employed, both for their own services and for the use of the vessel or other appliances, may maintain a libel in personam to enforce the payment of just compensation for all such services.

There is a broad distinction, said Dr. Lushington, between salvors who volunteer to go out and salvors who are employed by a ship in distress. Salvors who volunteer go out at their own risk for the chance of earning reward, and if not successful they are entitled to nothing, the rule being that it is success that gives them a title to salvage remuneration. But if men are engaged to go out to the assistance of a ship in distress they are to be paid according to their efforts, even though the labor and service may not prove beneficial to the vessel or cargo. The Undaunted, 1 Lush., 90.

No one can doubt that for such service the proper remedy is an action in personam, as provided in the last clause of the Admiralty Rule prescribing the mode of procedure to recover salvage compensation. Unless the property saved is destroyed after having been restored, or is clandestinely removed from the jurisdiction, the salvors require no more convenient or effectual remedy than the action in rem against the property, as their compensation cannot exceed its value; and if destroyed without their fault or removed from the jurisdiction to defeat their remedy, no doubt is entertained that they may proceed in personam against the owners of the salvaged property, though the case is not specifically provided for in the 19th Rule, to which reference has been made. The Emblem, 2 Ware (Davies), 61; The Boston [supra]; Dunlap, Pr., 511; The Trelawney, 3 C. Rob., 216, n.

Mere employment to render such a service is no bar to such a libel, the rule being that nothing short of a contract to pay a given sum for the services to be rendered, or a binding engagement to pay at all events, whether successful or unsuccessful in the enterprise, will defeat the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court. The Camanche, 8 Wall., 448, 477 [75 U. S., XIX., 397, 405].

Compensation for such services, if voluntarily rendered, cannot exceed the value of the property saved, and for that the salvors have a maritime lien on the property independent of possession, and which continues until the compensation is paid, so long as the property remains in specie. Macl. Ship., 2d ed., 593; The Gustaf, 1 Lush., 506; Maude & P., Ship., 3d ed., 487.

Viewed in the light of these suggestions, it is clear to a demonstration, that the decision of the Circuit Court is correct. Nott v. Sabine, 2 Woods, 211.

Decree affirmed.

Laches—contract, in equity—specific performance—arbitration.

1. Complainants in an equity suit are not chargeable with the laches caused by the defendants therein.

2. In equity, a contract for the sale of land is treated, for most purposes, precisely as if it had been specifically performed.

3. The principle is not inflexible, that the court will not specifically enforce the contract where the price is not fixed or is left to be fixed by arbitration.

4. Where land is agreed to be taken in part payment of a debt, the value at which it is to be taken to be fixed by arbitration, and the owner dies before appointing arbitrators, the agreement may be specifically enforced. If the valuation cannot be made modo et forma, the court will substitute itself for the arbitrators.

Argued Mar. 17, 18, 1880. Decided Apr. 5, 1880.

APPEAL from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. Jno. D. McPherson, for appellants.

Mr. Geo. F. Appleby, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellants sue in their character of Trustees of the Bank of Washington. The charter of that bank expired a great many years ago, and the trustees who now bring this suit and conduct its affairs do so under an Act of Congress. At the time of the expiration of the charter, there was a large indebtedness to it on the part of Daniel Carroll, part of which was secured and other part not secured.

There were several judgments against Carroll in favor of the bank, and he had a suit in chancery for the adjustment of disputed matters in regard to this indebtedness.

On the 3d day of November, 1846, an agreement in writing was entered into between Carroll and these trustees by which all their disputes were settled, and the sum due by him to the bank ascertained, and mode of payment and security agreed upon.

This agreement is the foundation of the present suit. Among other things, completed at the time, was the payment of part of the debt by Carroll and the release of certain real estate from the lien of plaintiff's judgments. The transfer of judgments held by Carroll against other persons to the trustees, with an understanding that all that should be collected on them should be credited on the judgment of the bank against Carroll, and certain property known as the Sligo estate, in which Carroll had an undivided interest, was by him to be conveyed to the bank as soon as he could procure a partition with the other part owners. Carroll also covenanted that, after all this was done, he would give good security for any balance due by him to the bank. As the agreement with regard to the Sligo property is the matter of principal importance in this suit we give that part of it verbatim: "The said Daniel Carroll shall forthwith cause, at his expense, the property known as the Sligo estate, of which he is the owner of an undivided share to be legally or equitably divided between him and the other owner or owners thereof, and shall immediately thereafter, by a valid deed, convey the share or portion of said property which may be allotted to him unto the trustees of the said bank, or as they may direct, in fee simple, at such price as three competent freeholders—to be selected, one by the said Daniel Carroll, another by the trustees of said bank, and the third by the other two appraisers—shall estimate and adjudge the same to be worth, as if sold on a credit of three equal payments at one, two and three years, with interest thereon payable semi-annually; and the price, on the due execution of said conveyance to the trustees of said bank, or as they may direct, shall be credited against the said judgments, so as aforesaid held by the bank against said Daniel Carroll."

Much of the agreement was performed on both sides. Money was paid and property released, and the bill avers that all that the trustees agreed to do or could do was done; but it avers that there is, including interest, over $40,000 of the original debt unpaid, and no security has been given. In reference to the Sligo property it is alleged that no partition was made by Mr. Carroll in his lifetime (he died in May, 1849), but that his devisees effected such partition in 1866, and have since sold some part of the property allotted to them in that partition and received the purchase money. It also alleges that the trustees were not aware that any such partition had been made until 1872, this suit having been commenced in 1876. They also set up an attempt, in 1875, to bring these matters before the court in the original chancery suit, pending when the agreement was made, by an amended bill and revivor, which was overruled.

The defendants, who are the devisees and executors under Carroll's will, filed a general demurrer to the bill, with twenty grounds of demurrer, which was sustained by the court below and the bill dismissed.

The demurrer being general to the whole bill must be overruled, if there is any part of the bill which entitles plaintiffs to relief.

The main ground of the demurrer is the lapse of time since the cause of action accrued, and this is relied on in reference both to the Statute of Limitations and the general doctrine of laches. If the judgments against Carroll have never been revived, by scire facias or otherwise, the debt which they represented is barred by limitation, and cannot be enforced by any proceeding at law for its collection. The bill is silent on that subject. It may admit of doubt whether, in the mere absence of any such allegation, the court will raise the presumption of payment on which the equitable defense is founded. Without deciding this, we think there is another ground on which defendants must be put to their answer, and in that answer they can plead or rely on NOTE.—Specific performance; plaintiff must show performance or readiness and offer to perform; when denied; decreed against subsequent purchaser with notice; where vendor is unable to fulfill wholly. See note to Colson v. Thompson, 15 U. S. (2 Wheat.), 336; note to Hepburn v. Dunlop, 14 U. S. (1 Wheat.), 180; and note to Pratt v. Carroll, 12 U. S. (8 Cranch), 471. See 11 OTTO.

the statute, or lapse of time coupled with an averment that the judgments are no longer alive.

That matter concerns the Sligo property. No bill for specific performance could have been brought against Carroll or his devisees until the partition which the agreement required him to make was made. The delay in making this partition was the delay of Carroll and of his devisees after his death. For this the plaintiffs were in no manner chargeable with laches and should receive no detriment. Fry, Specific Perf., sec. 740; Ridgway v. Wharton, 6 H. L. Cas., 292.

The partition was made in 1866, and the knowledge of it did not come to plaintiffs until 1872. If they had known it as soon as it occurred, six years, under all the circumstances, was no unreasonable delay on their part, seeing that defendants had taken twenty years to perform one part of the contract, namely: to make partition.

In 1872, as soon as they learned that the partition had been made, the trustees attempted to assert their rights by an effort to revive the old chancery suit out of which the agreement arose. Being defeated in this, they commenced the present suit in March, 1876. We think that, on the face of the bill, plaintiffs are not barred by lapse of time. If there are other matters not shown in the bill, which would make that a bar, no injury can accrue to defendants by requiring them to show them by way of answer or plea.

It is said, however, in regard to the Sligo property, that the original contract is one of which a court of equity cannot enforce specific performance, because the price to be paid for it is not definitely fixed, and because a court of equity cannot enforce the agreement to submit that price to the award of arbitrators.

It cannot be successfully disputed that, in the general terms thus stated, this is the established equity doctrine. And if this was a case in which the plaintiffs had agreed to buy and the defendants to sell, the conveyance of the property and the actual payment of the price resting in covenants yet to be performed, the latter being the sole consideration of the former, the principle would be applicable to this case.

It is, however, quite otherwise in the matter before us. This particular clause was only one of many which adjusted longstanding and complicated transactions and compromised a vexatious litigation. Money was paid, and liens released, surety discharged, and suits settled by this agreement. Plaintiffs parted with rights and Carroll received value under it, the consideration of which was, at least in part, this clause about the Sligo estate.

The contract differs in another particular from the cases cited to show that it cannot be enforced. The doctrine there rests upon the ground that the court must be enabled to enforce the payment of the price simultaneously with compelling the conveyance, and it cannot do this by enforcing an arbitration. But in the case before us the price was already paid. The money was in Mr. Carroll's hands. The only thing to be done was to determine how much of his debt to the bank was to be satisfied by the conveyance. The case is, therefore, one in which the land was sold to the bank and the purchase money left in the hands of the vendor.

By the terms of the agreement, Carroll was to convey immediately after partition, and then the price was to be ascertained. If he had conveyed, as it was his duty to do, or if his heirs had conveyed as soon as they had made partition, the conveyance would not be rescinded because they could not agree upon the price or upon arbitrators. With the title in plaintiffs and the money in possession of defendants, a court would find a way to ascertain the credit to be allowed on Carroll's debt to the bank.

Another view is the probability that Carroll's debt as to everything else is barred, and that the debt is three or four times the value of this property. So that its valuation is a mere form, immaterial to either party.

In view of a court of equity, a contract for the sale of land is treated, says Justice Story, for most purposes, precisely as if it had been specifically performed. The vendee is treated as the owner of the land and the vendor as the owner of the money. The vendor is deemed, in equity, to stand seised of the land for the benefit of the purchaser, and the trust attaches to the land so as to bind the heir of the vendor. See, 1 Story, Eq. Jur., sec. 790, and the cases there cited. Of course, the equity here stated is the stronger when the purchase money is actually in the hands of the vendor.

Nor is the principle inflexible that the court will not specifically enforce the contract where the price is not fixed or is left to be fixed by arbitration.

The case of Cheslyn v. Dalby, 2 Younge & C., 170 (Exch. Ch.), is very much like the present. Cheslyn being indebted to Dalby in a large unliquidated sum, gave a deed of trust to Dalby for money borrowed at the time, with a stipulation that it should also stand as security for the unliquidated debt of Dalby to be afterwards ascertained by arbitration. Cheslyn having paid the principal sum secured by the deed of trust, brought suit for a reconveyance, and Dalby filed a cross-bill to have his debt paid out of the property before this was done. The objection was raised that this was in the nature of specific performance, and the amount being uncertain and no award having been made, it could not be done. But the objection was overruled.

Baron Alderson, says: "1. It is admitted there is some balance due to Thomas Dalby, and it is agreed that the estate is to be subject to a lien for that balance. But, secondly, there is also an agreement as to a specific mode of ascertaining that balance in case of dispute. Now, the latter has failed by events over which the parties had no control. But it seems to me, notwithstanding this, the former part remains entire, and if Mr. Cheslyn has admitted that there is a balance due, and has by a deed, executed under such circumstances as that it ought to be enforced, agreed that his estate should be subject to a lien for that balance, why am I to decree a reconveyance of the estate without compelling him to fulfill that part of the agreement?" It was, accordingly, referred to a master to state an account in which this unascertained balance of Mr. Dalby's debt should be included.

In the present case, Mr. Carroll made his agreement, in which a balance unascertained was admitted to be due; the land was to stand in part payment of this balance. Mr. Carroll died before arbitrators could be appointed to fix the sum at which the estate should be taken. The demurrer admits all this.

The case of Dinham v. Bradford, L. R. 5 Ch. App., 519, is another case in which where one partner was, in a certain event, to take the partnership assets at a valuation to be ascertained precisely as in the case before us, Lord Hatherley said: "Here is a man who has had the whole benefit of the partnership in respect to which this agreement was made, and now refuses to have the rest of the agreement performed on account of the difficulty which has arisen. * * * If the valuation cannot be made modo et forma the court will substitute itself for the arbitrators."

So of the case before us. Carroll has had all the benefit of the agreement, in releasing property from liens, in paying his debt by his claims on others, and in a long indulgence, and now, because he has died without appointing arbitrators, his heirs say this part of the agreement must fail.

We think, on the whole, the demurrer should be overruled, and defendants put to their answer, and for this purpose the decree of the court below is reversed, and the case remanded to it for further proceedings.

Duress, what is not.

1. Where claimants executed a new contract to the Government in place of the old one, on the Government refusing to carry out the old one, they cannot recover the greater compensation provided by the old contract.

2. The hardships of particular cases should not induce the courts to disregard the long-settled rules of law.

CROSS appeals from the Court of Claims.
The cases are stated by the court.

Statement of the case by Mr. Justice Harlan:

The case as set forth in the findings of fact is this:

In 1863, claimants were partners in trade, doing business in the City of New York, under the firm style of Silliman, Matthews & Co. At various times they executed with the United States, the latter represented by Major Van Vliet of the Quartermaster's Department, several charter-parties for barges of which they were owners. The barges were delivered to the Quartermaster's Department, and remained in service during the periods respectively set forth in See 11 Otto.

The petition. The claimants were paid at the charter rates up to and including the 31st of October, 1863.

On the 2d of June, 1863, the Quartermaster-General, by letter, instructed Quartermaster Van Vliet that all double-decked barges then in service and used for transporting cattle, horses, etc., should, from and after the first of that month, be made to conform to a standard of compensation at rates not to exceed $4 per ton per month.

The owners of the barges, being notified by Van Vliet of the Quartermaster-General's instructions, replied that their barges were only measured as single-deck, and that the rate of $4 per ton per month would not pay them unless they were allowed to measure the upper deck also, and that rather than accept the reduction they preferred to have their boats discharged.

This reply of the claimants having been communicated to the Quartermaster-General, he directed Major Van Vliet to discharge the barges from service as rapidly as he could procure others upon the terms just stated, and under a new form of charter-party prescribed by the Quartermaster-General.

In reply to this direction Major Van Vliet, on the 22d of July, 1863, informed the Quartermaster-General that it was impossible to obtain barges at New York at the rates indicated by the latter, taking the registered tonnage as the standard of measurement, which represented only their hold-measurement, and not their actual carrying capacity; and that compensation at the rate of $4 per ton of actual carrying capacity would exceed that stipulated for in the then existing charter-parties.

From July 22, 1863, till December, 1863, no further correspondence took place in regard to the barges, and they remained in the service as before.

On the 10th of December, 1863, the Quartermaster-General instructed Major Van Vliet that the double-decked barges chartered by the latter must be brought within the price stated in the letter of June 2, 1863, and that no higher rate would be allowed for them from and after December 1, 1863.

This instruction having been communicated by Major Van Vliet to the claimants, the latter, on the 14th of December, having before them the form of the new charter-party which had been proposed by the Quartermaster-General, stated to Major Van Vliet, by letter, that, rather than sign the new charter-party they had decided to have their barges returned to them, and that they would not let them for $4 per ton per month.

On the 28th of December, 1863, the Quartermaster-General issued a circular letter to several quartermasters and assistant quartermasters, among whom was Major Van Vliet, stating that no payments would be made for charter money for services rendered and due after March 31, 1863, under any other form of charter-party than that which had, on the last named date, been prescribed by the Quartermaster-General.

After the date of the last mentioned letter, one of the claimants, Silliman, went to Washington and demanded of the Quartermaster-General the return of the barges to the claimants at New York. That officer replied that the Government could not spare them; and when Silliman remonstrated with him against their retention by the Government, the Quartermaster-General said the Government needed the barges and would keep them, and he declined to pay the arrears then due the claimants for their services under the original charter-parties. Thereafter the claimants made repeated calls on Maj. Van Vliet for arrearages of money, and were informed that he was ordered not to pay them any until they had made new charter-parties.

On the 8th of January, 1864, the claimants addressed a letter to the Secretary of War, complaining of the treatment they had received from officers under him, stating that two of them had gone to Washington and could find no person who would modify the new charter-party so that they might accept the terms that could be agreed upon, and adding the following words:

"We now complain as follows, viz.:

1. That we have requested that our barges be returned to New York and delivered to us as per charter-party, and have been refused.

2. That we have 'certificates of service' for November and December, 1863, and the Quartermaster at New York has orders not to pay until we make new charters, and we refuse to make them as the blank charters dictate, but are willing to make some concession in price if any person can be named here to negotiate.

3. We desire to sell, if we cannot have our barges or obtain money for their use, as we cannot meet our obligations to our captains and crews without money to do it, and hope you will act favorably for us at an early date."

On the 5th of March, 1864, the claimants wrote to the Quartermaster-General, proposing to accept the new charter-parties from the first of the month nearest the acceptance of the same, with certain modifications.

These modifications were accepted by the Quartermaster-General on the 19th of March, 1864, with the exception of the date offered for their taking effect, which he required should be on the 1st of April, 1863.

On the 23d of March, 1864, the claimants, by letter to the Quartermaster-General, said as follows:

"We have been paid to November 1, 1863, and if we have to go back to April 1, 1863, we shall have to stop payment, as we have depended on this money to keep along in our business.

* * * We have been told by other parties that they dated new charters from December 1, and we can see no reason that they should be favored above us. * * * We cannot go back to April 1, 1863."

To this letter the Quartermaster-General replied, on the 11th of April, 1864, that all charter-parties, without exception, executed to take effect December 1, 1863, for vessels in the service April 1, 1863, had been required to take effect from the latter date.

After this letter the claimant, Matthews, went to Washington and had interviews with the Quartermaster-General and other officers in his office, in which he again remonstrated, as had before been done by his partner, Silliman; to which the Quartermaster-General replied that they had laid down the rule and were determined that nothing else should be done until the new charter-parties had been executed; that until that was done they would keep the barges and not pay for them. Said Matthews, during his visit to Washington, finally agreed with Colonel Clary, an officer in the Quartermaster-General's office, to make the new charter-parties, stating that they did so under protest and yielded to necessity; and insisting, after he had agreed to make them, that it was wrong to make new charter-parties.

On the 16th of May, 1864, in pursuance of Matthews' agreement, the new charter-parties were signed by the claimants and an officer of the Quartermaster's Department.

The compensation therein stipulated to be paid after October 31, 1863, was, from and after that date, from time to time paid to the claimants for each of the barges, and when each payment was made the claimants, without objection or protest, gave a receipt therefor as "in full of the above account."

The claimants, in their petition, assert claims against the United States for certain balances, computed upon the basis of the original charter-parties, after crediting the several sums received from time to time under the last agreements or charter-parties, which they claim to have been executed under compulsion, and not, therefore, binding upon them.

They also sue to recover damages alleged to have resulted from the use of the barges in a negligent and improper manner by the agents of the Government, and for injuries done to them while in the government service, not attributable to ordinary wear and tear.

The Court of Claims held claimants bound by the terms of the charter-parties last executed, but allowed a portion of the damages claimed.

Both parties appealed from the judgment.

Messrs. T. J. Durant and C. W. Hornor, for appellants.

Mr. Chas. Devens, Atty. Gen., for United States.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

The barges in question were delivered by claimants to the Government under the original charter-parties, binding the latter to pay for their use at an agreed rate, during such period as they were retained in its service. The Government was as much bound by the terms of the contracts as were the claimants, and no alteration thereof could take place without the assent of both contracting parties.

The Quartermaster's Department demanded that the claimants should execute new charter-parties, containing stipulations essentially different as to compensation, from those embodied in the contracts under which the Government obtained possession of the barges. It announced its purpose to retain possession and withhold all compensation, unless and until the claimants executed the proposed new charter-parties. In other words, the department informed claimants that it would not comply with the provisions of the original contracts unless the claimants would submit to material alterations against their interests and to the advantage of the Government. Claimants distinctly refused to give their assent to the proposed alterations, and asked that the barges be returned. But this reasonable request was not complied with by the agents of the Government. Their conduct was in plain violation of the rights of the claimants.

Had the claimants stood upon their contract rights, it is perfectly clear that the Government could have been compelled to pay the amount stipulated in the original contracts to be paid for the use of the barges. The claimants could have sued for each installment of rent as it became due, or when the Government returned the barges they could have sued, as they now sue, for the whole amount due under the original charter-parties. They had a full and complete remedy by suit against the Government, in the Court of Claims, for the enforcement of their rights under those contracts. That court had then, as it has now, jurisdiction to hear and determine all claims founded upon contracts, express or implied, with the United States. Its final judgments, sustaining such claims, were then as now made payable out of any general appropriation by law for the satisfaction of private claims against the Government.

Instead, however, of seeking the aid of the law, claimants, with a full knowledge of their legal rights, executed new charter-parties and, from time to time, received payments according to the rates prescribed therein; protesting, when the new agreements were signed, that they were executed against their wishes and under the pressure of financial necessity. They now seek the aid of the law to enforce their rights under the original charter-parties, upon the ground that those last signed were executed under such circumstances as amounted, in law, to duress. Duress of, or in, what? Not of their persons, for there is no pretense that a refusal, on their part, to accede to the illegal demand of the Quartermaster's Department would have endangered their liberty or their personal security. There was no threat of injury to their persons or to their property, to avoid which it became necessary to execute new charter-parties. Nor were those charter-parties executed for the purpose, or as a means of obtaining possession of their property. They yielded to the threat or demand of the department solely because they required, or supposed they required, money for the conduct of their business or to meet their pecuniary obligations to others. Their duty, if they expected to rely upon the law for protection, was to disregard the threat of the department, and apply to the courts for redress against its repudiation of a valid contract.

We are aware of no authority in the text books or in the adjudged cases to justify us in holding that the last charter-parties were executed under duress. There is present no element of duress, in the legal acceptance of that word. The hardships of particular cases should not induce the courts to disregard the long settled rules of law.

The case is one which, in some aspects, appeals strongly to the sense of justice of the Government, which cannot afford to reap the fruits of an arbitrary abrogation by its officers, of valid, binding contracts made in its name with the citizen. If, in view of the condition of the country during the recent war, the claimants were unwilling to embarrass or imperil the operations of the Government by contests in the courts as to property which, possibly, was needed by the military department for supplying the necessities of our army, these facts only strengthen the claim of appellants to relief. But that relief must come from the Legislative and not from the Judicial Department.

We perceive no error in the judgment, and it is affirmed as to all parties.

v.

PATRICK CARRAHER.

Remanding to State Court, of case removed.

A case which has been removed from a State to a Federal Court, will be remanded to the State Court, where part of the defendants are citizens of the same State with the plaintiff, and the controversy is not wholly between citizens of different States.

[No. 245.]

Submitted Apr. 6, 1880. Decided Apr. 12, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois.

The question decided is stated by the court. Messrs. Henry D. Beam and Augustus N. Gage, for appellant.

Messrs. James E. Munroe and W. C. Gowdy, for appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

The order, remanding this cause to the State Court, is affirmed, on the authority of Meyer v. Construction Co. [ante, 593]. Carraher occupies one side of the controversy about which the suit is brought (that is to say, the title to the property in question), and Portia Gage, Henry H. Gage and John Forsythe the other. Henry H. Gage and Forsythe are citizens of the same State with Carraher. There is no controversy in the suit, which is wholly between citizens of different States, and which can be fully determined as between them.

v.

EDWARD A. LEWIS ET AL., Judges of the St. Louis Court of Appeals.

(See S. C., "Mo. v. Lewis," 11 Otto, 22-33.)

Fourteenth constitutional Amendment—its construction and intent—laws and remedies—different courts in same State.

*1. The equality clause in the 1st section of the Fourteenth Amendment, viz.: that which prohibits any State from denying to any person the equal protection of the laws, contemplates the protection of persons, against unjust discriminations by a State; it has no reference to territorial or municipal arrangements made for different portions of a State.

2. It was not intended to prevent a State from arranging and parceling out the jurisdiction of its several courts as it sees fit, either as to territorial limits, subject-matter or amount, or the finality of their several judgments or decrees.

*Head notes by Mr. Justice BRADLEY

3. Each State has full power to make political subdivisions of its territory for municipal purposes, and to regulate their local government, including the constitution of courts, and the extent of their jurisdiction.

4. A State may, if it pleases, establish one system of law in one portion of its territory, and another system in another; provided, always, that it does not encroach upon the proper jurisdiction of the United States, and does not abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, nor deprive any person of his rights without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws in the same district.

5. By the Constitution and laws of Missouri, a court called the St. Louis Court of Appeals has exclusive jurisdiction, in certain cases, of all appeals from the circuit courts in St. Louis and some adjoining counties; the Supreme Court has jurisdiction of appeals in like cases from the circuit courts of the remaining counties of the State. This adjustment of appellate jurisdiction is not forbidden by anything contained in the 14th Amendment.

Argued Mar. 3, 1880. Decided Apr. 12, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Missouri.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Frank J. Bowman, in person, and David Wagner, Hiram J. Grover, J. S. Black, Geo. F. Edmonds and C. C. Simmons, for plaintiff in error:

The record in this case shows that in the State of Missouri there is a denial of equal justice before the courts; remedial rights and privileges granted to a large portion of its citizens are denied to others; the citizens residing in one hundred and nine counties of the State enjoy the right and privilege of an unrestricted appeal to the Supreme Court of the State, and at the same time, in like cases, the right of appeal is denied to the citizens of the State residing in four of the counties in the easterly portion of the State, as also to those residing in the City of St. Louis.

It cannot be answered that the right and privilege of a hearing before the St. Louis Court of Appeals is a full equivalent for the deprivation of a hearing before the Supreme Court of Missouri; for the superiority of the wisdom and power of the latter, is recognized in the State Constitution, by giving to it superintending control over all other State Courts, and in some instances a right of appeal from the St. Louis Court of Appeals.

The duty of the State, under a republican form of government, to give equal remedial rights, is as imperative as that it impose equal burdens and obligations.

Vanant v. Waddel, 2 Yerg., 270; Reynolds v. Baker, 6 Cold., 221; Walley v. Kennedy, 2 Yerg., 554; Bk. v. Cooper, 2 Yerg., 621.

The right of the People of the State to provide by constitutional provisions for the establishment of intermediate appellate courts throughout the State is unquestionable; but to allow to a large portion of the citizens of the State, the remedial right and privilege of a hearing and adjudication of all questions concerning their legal rights and privileges before the Supreme Court of the State, and deny to other citizens of the State the same privilege, is in plain violation of the fundamental principle of perfect equality, recognized and guaranteed by the provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

Const., art. 4, sec. 4; Const. 14th Amend.; Budd v. State, 3 Humph., 490; Vanant v. Waddel, 2 Yerg., 270; Jones v. Perry, 10 Yerg., 59; Bk. v. Cooper (Special Court at Nashville), 2 Yerg., 599.

The provisions of the Constitution of Missouri herein complained of are without precedent. In no other State Constitution now in force can any similar provision be found.

If the plaintiff in error was of African descent, and the Constitution of Missouri prohibited any negro from appealing to the Supreme Court of the State for a redress of injuries, we apprehend that no doubt would be entertained that such a provision was a denial of the "equal protection of the laws," and in violation of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, and this court would not hesitate to so decide.

Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall., 72 (83 U. S., XXI., 407).

The discrimination complained of in this case is not against the negro, but is against a class or portion of the citizens of the State of Missouri, equally entitled to protection from wrongful and unconstitutional discrimination and oppression of the dominant majority. These citizens of St. Louis are clearly entitled to as full a protection of their constitutional rights of equality before the courts of the State as though of African descent. To contend otherwise, and insist that protection of the constitutional right of equality before the law was alone guaranteed to persons of African descent by the adoption of the 14th Amendment, would lead to the inconsistent conclusion, that the very Amendment of the Constitution which sought to establish equality before the law, established inequality by giving preference to the rights of the negroes, in affording them a superior protection.

Bk. v. Okely, 4 Wheat., 244; Munn v. Ill., 94 U. S., 125 (XXIV., 84).

Messrs. Henry Hitchcock and Chester H. Krum, for defendants in error:

The only right here said to have been denied to plaintiff in error, is the alleged right of appeal to a particular court. But due process of law does not in any case include a right of appeal as such, but only due notice and opportunity to be heard according to the settled course of judicial proceedings in such cases.

1. The right of appeal in any case, from or to any court, depends exclusively on the jurisdiction of such court, conferred by Constitution or statute, subject to constitutional provisions. The nature and extent of such jurisdiction in state courts rests exclusively in the discretion of the Legislature, and may be conferred or withdrawn at its pleasure, so that vested rights be not thereby impaired. It is matter of remedy, not of right, and is within the exclusive province of state legislation.

Ex parte McCordle, 7 Wall., 514 (74 U. S., XIX., 265); Sharp v. Robertson, 5 Gratt., 604-606; Cooley, Const. Lim., 361, and cases cited.

2. "Due process of law" never was held anywhere to include a right of appeal in any proceeding from any court, where due notice and opportunity was given for "hearing before condemnation, and judgment before seizure." This court has lately declared that it is not denied in any case where a party deprived of his property has had, "By the laws of the State, a fair trial in a court of justice, according to the modes of proceeding applicable to such a case." It does not even include the right of trial by jury in the state courts, and in those courts is regulated by the law of the State, as there expounded.

Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S., 105 (XXIV., 620); McMillan v. Anderson, 95 U. S., 41 (XXIV., 335); Kennard v. La., 92 U. S., 480 (XXIII., 478); Murray v. Hoboken, L. & I. Co., 18 How., 280 (59 U. S., XV., 376); Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S., 93 (XXIII., 679).

It is absurd to contend that due process of law includes the right of appeal; seeing that, although the 5th Amendment, requiring due process of law in the Federal Courts, has been in force since the foundation of the government, yet from the beginning until now the right of appeal from the circuit courts has been denied without question, not only in civil cases involving less than $2,000, now increased to $5,000, but to every person convicted of, and executed for, a capital crime. The same words now applied to the States by the 14th Amendment, have the same meaning.

Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S., 103 (XXIV., 619); U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S., 554 (XXIII., 592); Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall., 80 (83 U. S., XXI., 409); Bk. v. Okely, 4 Wheat., 244.

3. The provisions of the Missouri Act concerning attorneys, under which plaintiff in error was disbarred, include every element recognized by this court in Kennard v. La., as together satisfying the constitutional requirement of "due process of law," including a hearing on appeal; although the Missouri Constitution provides a different appellate court for certain different classes of cases. And the decisions of the St. Louis Court of Appeals and the Missouri Supreme Court, appearing in the record, are of themselves conclusive in this court, unless shown to be contrary to the cited provisions of the United States Constitution.

Kennard v. La. (supra); Walker v. Sauvinet, (supra); McMillan v. Anderson (supra).

The provisions of section 12, article VI., of the Missouri Constitution, do not deny, to any person affected thereby, the equal protection of the laws of Missouri, in any case within those provisions.

1. This provision of the 14th Amendment is held by this court to be so clearly intended for the protection of the African race, that a strong case of state oppression, by denial of equal justice in its courts, would be necessary for its application to any other.

Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall., 81 (83 U. S., XXI., 410).

2. The question before this court is not whether, by the judgment of the circuit court, disbarring plaintiff in error, or by that of the Court of Appeals affirming that judgment, a wrong was done to him by reason of any error, irregularity or false judgment in that proceeding; but solely whether the law of Missouri touching the disbarment of attorneys, if followed, would have furnished plaintiff in error the protection guaranteed by the Constitution, namely: a protection in respect of his privilege to practice as an attorney in the courts of Missouri, equal to that afforded by the general laws of that State to any other person having the like privilege under like circumstances.

See 11 OTTO.

Kennard v. La. (supra).

3. The cases from Tennessee cited in plaintiff's brief furnish precisely the test above suggested, for equal laws, as compared with unequal, partial or oppressive ones.

The reiterated assertion which constitutes the plaintiff's brief, to the effect that the cited provisions of the Missouri Constitution deny to persons residing in certain portions of the State, "remedial rights and privileges" granted to residents of all other portions, is a completely erroneous representation of those provisions.

No one within the jurisdiction of the State of Missouri is thereby, in any case whatever, denied a writ of error from or an appeal to the Supreme Court of Missouri on the ground of his residence, nor on any other ground which is or may not be applicable to any other person in the State of Missouri, in like circumstances and situation.

The power to create and define the jurisdiction of the several courts of justice of any State, and to determine what shall be the procedure therein, is within the exclusive control of such State. Due process of law, in any State, is such process as, under the general laws thereof, is provided in the settled course of judicial proceedings. Even in suits at common law, it need not include a trial by jury.

Walker v. Sauvinet (supra).

The assertion in the brief for plaintiff in error, that the provisions of the Missouri Constitution here complained of are without precedent, is singularly incorrect, unless so literally meant as to be unworthy of notice.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to the Supreme Court, of Missouri, brought by Frank J. Bowman, the plaintiff in error, to reverse a judgment of that court refusing to issue a mandamus to the St. Louis Court of Appeals, consisting of the three Judges named as defendants in error. The object of the mandamus applied for by Bowman was to compel the St. Louis Court of Appeals to grant his application for an appeal from a judgment of said court to the said Supreme Court of Missouri, which application had been refused. The judgment which he complained of was an affirmance of a judgment previously given by the Circuit Court of the City of St. Louis removing him from practice at the bar.

By the Constitution and laws of Missouri, an appeal lies to the Supreme Court of that State from any final judgment or decree of any circuit court, except those in the Counties of St. Charles, Lincoln, Warren and St. Louis, and the City of St. Louis; for which counties and city the Constitution of 1875 establishes a separate court of appeal, called the St. Louis Court of Appeals, and gives to said court exclusive jurisdiction of all appeals from and writs of error to the circuit courts of those counties and of said city; and from this court, the St. Louis Court of Appeals, an appeal lies to the Supreme Court only in cases where the amount in dispute, exclusive of costs, exceeds the sum of $2,500, and in cases involving the construction of the Constitution of the United States or of Missouri, and in some other cases of special character which are enumerated. No appeal is given to the Supreme Court in a case like the present arising in the counties referred to, or in the City of St. Louis; but a similar case arising in the circuit courts of any other county would be appealable directly to the Supreme Court.

The plaintiff in error contends that this feature of the judicial system of Missouri is in conflict with the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, because it denies to suitors, in the courts of St. Louis and the counties named, the equal protection of the laws, in that it denies to them the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of Missouri in cases where it gives that right to suitors in the courts of the other counties of the State.

If this position is correct, the 14th Amendment has a much more far-reaching effect than has been supposed. It would render invalid all limitations of jurisdiction based on the amount or character of the demand. A party having a claim for only $5 could, with equal propriety, complain that he is deprived of a right enjoyed by other citizens, because he cannot prosecute it in the superior courts; and another might equally complain that he cannot bring a suit for real estate in a justice's court, where the expense is small and the proceedings are expeditious. There is no difference in principle between such discriminations as these in the jurisdictions of courts and that which the plaintiff in error complains of in the present case.

If, however, we take into view the general objects and purposes of the 14th Amendment, we shall find no reasonable ground for giving it any such application. These are to extend United States citizenship to all natives and naturalized persons, and to prohibit the States from abridging their privileges or immunities, and from depriving any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, and from denying to any person within their jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. It contemplates persons and classes of persons. It has not respect to local and municipal regulations that do not injuriously affect or discriminate between persons or classes of persons within the places or municipalities for which such regulations are made. The Amendment could never have been intended to prevent a State from arranging and parceling out the jurisdiction of its several courts at its discretion. No such restriction as this could have been in view, or could have been included, in the prohibition that "No State shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." It is the right of every State to establish such courts as it sees fit, and to prescribe their several jurisdictions as to territorial extent, subject-matter and amount, and the finality and effect of their decisions; provided it does not encroach upon the proper jurisdiction of the United States, and does not abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States; and does not deprive any person of his rights without due process of law, nor deny to any person the equal protection of the laws, including the equal right to resort to the appropriate courts for redress. The last restriction, as to the equal protection of the laws, is not violated by any diversity in the jurisdiction of the several courts as to subject-matter, amount or finality of decision, if all persons within the territorial limits of their respective jurisdictions have an equal right, in like cases and under like circumstances, to resort to them for redress. Each State has the right to make political subdivisions of its territory for municipal purposes, and to regulate their local government. As respects the administration of justice, it may establish one system of courts for cities and another for rural districts; one system for one portion of its territory and another system for another portion. Convenience, if not necessity, often requires this to be done, and it would seriously interfere with the power of a State to regulate its internal affairs to deny to it this right. We think it is not denied or taken away by anything in the Constitution of the United States, including the Amendments thereto.

We might go still further, and say, with undoubted truth, that there is nothing in the Constitution to prevent any State from adopting any system of laws or judicature it sees fit for all or any part of its territory. If the State of New York, for example, should see fit to adopt the civil law and its method of procedure for New York City and the surrounding counties, and the common law and its method of procedure for the rest of the State, there is nothing in the Constitution of the United States to prevent its doing so. This would not, of itself, within the meaning of the 14th Amendment, be a denial to any person of the equal protection of the laws. If every person residing or being in either portion of the State should be accorded the equal protection of the laws prevailing there, he could not justly complain of a violation of the clause referred to. For, as before said, it has respect to persons and classes of persons. It means that no person or class of persons shall be denied the same protection of the laws which is enjoyed by other persons or other classes in the same place and under like circumstances.

The 14th Amendment does not profess to secure to all persons in the United States the benefit of the same laws and the same remedies. Great diversities in these respects may exist in two States separated only by an imaginary line. On one side of this line there may be a right of trial by jury, and on the other side no such right. Each State prescribes its own modes of judicial proceeding. If diversities of laws and judicial proceedings may exist in the several States without violating the equality clause in the 14th Amendment, there is no solid reason why there may not be such diversities in different parts of the same State. A uniformity which is not essential as regards different States cannot be essential as regards different parts of a State, provided that in each and all there is no infraction of the constitutional provision. Diversities which are allowable in different States are allowable in different parts of the same State. Where part of a State is thickly settled, and another part has but few inhabitants, it may be desirable to have different systems of judicature for the two portions; trial by jury in one, for example, and not in the other. Large cities may require a multiplication of courts and a peculiar arrangement of jurisdictions. It would be an unfortunate restriction of the powers of the State Government if it could not, in its discretion, provide for these various exigencies.

If a Mexican State should be acquired by treaty and added to an adjoining State or part of a State, in the United States, and the two should be erected into a new State, it cannot be doubted that such new State might allow the Mexican laws and judicature to continue unchanged in the one portion, and the common law and its corresponding judicature in the other portion. Such an arrangement would not be prohibited by any fair construction of the 14th Amendment. It would not be based on any respect of persons or classes, but on municipal considerations alone, and a regard to the welfare of all classes within the particular territory or jurisdiction.

It is not impossible that a distinct territorial establishment and jurisdiction might be intended as or might have the effect of a discrimination against a particular race or class, where such race or class should happen to be the principal occupants of the disfavored district. Should such a case ever arise, it will be time enough then to consider it. No such case is pretended to exist in the present instance.

It is apparent, from the view we have taken of the import and effect of the equality clause of the 14th Amendment, which has been relied upon by the plaintiff in error in this case, that it cannot be invoked to invalidate that portion of the judicial system established by the Constitution and laws of Missouri, which is the subject of complaint. This follows without any special examination of the particular adjustment of jurisdictions between the courts of Missouri as affected by its Constitution and laws. Such a special examination, however, if it were our province to make it, would readily show that there is no foundation for the complaint which has been made. The plaintiff in error has had the benefit of the right of appeal to the full extent enjoyed by any member of the profession in other parts of the State. In the outside counties they have but one appeal, from the Circuit Court to the Supreme Court. In St. Louis, he had the benefit of an appeal from the Circuit Court of St. Louis County to the St. Louis Court of Appeals. This is as much as he could ask, even if his rights of appeal were to be nicely measured by the right enjoyed in the outside counties. The Constitution of the State has provided two courts of appeal for different portions of its territory: the St. Louis Court of Appeals for one portion, and the Supreme Court for another portion. It is not for us, nor for any other tribunal, to say that these courts do not afford equal security for the due administration of the laws of Missouri within their respective jurisdictions. Where the decisions of the St. Louis Court of Appeals are final, they are clothed with all the majesty of the law which surrounds those of the Supreme Court. If, in certain cases, a still further appeal is allowed from the one court to the other, this fact does not derogate in the least from the credit and authority of those decisions of the former which, by the Constitution and laws of the State, are final and conclusive.

But this special consideration is an accidental phase of the particular case. The true ground on which the case rests is the undoubted power of the State to regulate the jurisdiction of its own tribunals for the different portions of its territory in such manner as it sees fit, subject only to the limitations before referred to; and our conclusion is that this power is unaffected by the constitutional provision which has been relied on to invalidate its exercise in this case.

The judgment of the Supreme Court of Missouri is affirmed.

AMOSKEAG MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Appl.,

v.

DAVID TRAINER ET AL., Trading as D. TRAINER & SONS.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 51-67.)

Trade-mark—right to—restraining use of.

1. The object of a trade-mark is to indicate, either by its own meaning or by association, the origin or ownership of the article to which it is applied.

2. A right to the exclusive use of words, letters or symbols, to indicate merely the quality of the goods to which they are affixed, cannot be acquired.

3. Where a label, used by the defendants, is not calculated to mislead purchasers as to the origin of the goods to which it is attached, and does not resemble the device of the complainant, except both have the letters "A, C, A," in their center, a bill to restrain defendants from the use of it cannot be sustained.

Argued Dec. 17, 1879. Decided Apr. 12, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Geo. M. Dallas and Jas. E. Gown, for appellant.

Messrs. E. G. Platt, Samuel Dickson and John C. Bullitt, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit in equity to restrain the defendants from using on ticking manufactured and sold by them the letters "A, C, A," in the sequence here named, alleged by the complainant to be its trade-mark, by which it designates ticking of a particular quality of its own manufacture; and to compel the defendants to account for the profits made by them on sales of ticking thus marked.

It appears that the complainant, a Corporation created under the laws of New Hampshire, commenced the manufacture of ticking at Amoskeag Falls, in that State, some time prior to 1834, and marked its products with a label or ticket consisting of a certain device, within which were printed, in red colors, the name of the Company, its place of manufacture, the words "Power Loom," and in the center the single letter "A" or "B" or "C" or "D," according to the grade of excellence of the goods, the first quality being indicated by the first letter and the decreasing quality from that grade by subsequent letters in the alphabet. The device, apart from the words mentioned, was a fancy border in red colors, square outside and elliptical within, and the words in the upper and lower lines of the label were printed in a line corresponding with the inside curve of the border.

NOTE.—Trade-marks; when an injunction will be granted restraining the unauthorized use of. See note to McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S., XXIV., 328.

In the year 1834, or about that time, the Company introduced an improvement in its manufacture, by which it produced a grade or quality of ticking superior to any which it had previously manufactured. For goods of this quality it used in its label or ticket, in place of the single letter A, the three letters A, C, A. The original device, with its colored border and printed words, indicating the company by which and the place where the goods were manufactured was retained; the only alteration consisting in the substitution of the three letters A, C, A, in place of the single letter A. Subsequently the Company changed its place of manufacture from Amoskeag Falls to Manchester, in the same State, and a corresponding change was then made in the label. The three letters mentioned were placed in the label or ticket on all goods of the very highest quality manufactured by the complainant, the single letter being retained in the labels placed on other goods to indicate a lower grade or quality. The combination of the three letters was probably suggested, as is stated, by the initials of the words in the Company's name, Amoskeag Company, with the letter A previously used, to denote the best quality of goods it manufactured. It is contended by the complainant that the combination was adopted and used to indicate, not merely the quality of the goods, but also their origin as of the manufacture of the Amoskeag Company. It is upon the correctness of this position that it chiefly relies for a reversal of the decree dismissing the bill.

On the part of the defendants the contention is, that the letters were designed and are used to indicate the quality of the goods manufactured and not their origin; that it was so adjudged many years ago in a case to which the Company was a party in the Superior Court of the City of New York, which adjudication has been generally accepted as correct, and acted upon by manufacturers of similar goods throughout the country; and that the letters, as used by the defendants on a label or ticket having their own device, and in connection with words different from those used by the complainant, do not mislead or tend to mislead anyone as to the origin of the goods upon which they are placed.

The general doctrines of the law as to trade-marks, the symbols or signs which may be used to designate products of a particular manufacture, and the protection which the courts will afford to those who originally appropriated them, are not controverted. Everyone is at liberty to affix to a product of his own manufacture any symbol or device, not previously appropriated, which will distinguish it from articles of the same general nature manufactured or sold by others, and thus secure to himself the benefits of increased sale by reason of any peculiar excellence he may have given to it. The symbol or device thus becomes a sign to the public of the origin of the goods to which it is attached, and an assurance that they are the genuine article of the original producer. In this way it often proves to be of great value to the manufacturer in preventing the substitution and sale of an inferior and different article for his products. It becomes his trade-mark, and the courts will protect him in its exclusive use, either by the imposition of damages for its wrongful appropriation or by restraining others from applying it to their goods and compelling them to account for profits made on a sale of goods marked with it.

The limitations upon the use of devices as trade-marks are well defined. The object of the trade-mark is to indicate, either by its own meaning or by association, the origin or ownership of the article to which it is applied. If it did not, it would serve no useful purpose either to the manufacturer or to the public; it would afford no protection to either, against the sale of a spurious in place of the genuine article. This object of the trade-mark and the consequent limitations upon its use are stated with great clearness in the case of Canal Co. v. Clark, reported in the 13th Wallace, 311 [80 U. S., XX., 581]. There the court said, speaking through Mr. Justice Strong, that "No one can claim protection for the exclusive use of a trade-mark or trade name which would practically give him a monopoly in the sale of any goods other than those produced or made by himself. If he could the public would be injured, rather than protected, for competition would be destroyed. Nor can a generic name or a name merely descriptive of an article of trade, of its qualities, ingredients or characteristics, be employed as a trade-mark, and the exclusive use of it be entitled to legal protection." And a citation is made from the opinion of the Superior Court of the City of New York in the case of the present complainant against Spear, reported in the 2d of Sandford, 599, that "The owner of an original trade-mark has an undoubted right to be protected in the exclusive use of all the marks, forms or symbols that were appropriated as designating the true origin or ownership of the article or fabric to which they are affixed; but he has no right to the exclusive use of any words, letters, figures or symbols which have no relation to the origin or ownership of the goods, but are only meant to indicate their names or quality. He has no right to appropriate a sign or symbol, which, from the nature of the fact it is used to signify, others may employ with equal truth and, therefore, have an equal right to employ for the same purpose.

Many adjudications, both in England and in this country, might be cited in illustration of the doctrine here stated. For the purpose of this case, and in support of the position that a right to the exclusive use of words, letters or symbols, to indicate merely the quality of the goods to which they are affixed cannot be acquired, it will be sufficient to refer, in addition to the decisions mentioned in Wallace and Sandford, to the judgment of the Vice-Chancellor in Raggett v. Hindlater, where an injunction to restrain the use by the defendants upon their trade label of the term "nourishing stout," which the plaintiff had previously used, was refused on the ground that "nourishing" was a mere English word denoting quality. L. R., 17 Eq., 29. Upon the same principle, letters or figures which, by the custom of traders, or the declaration of the manufacturer of the goods to which they are attached, are only used to denote quality, are incapable of exclusive appropriation; but are open to use by anyone, like the adjectives of the language.

If, now, we apply the views thus expressed to the case at bar, we shall find the question involved to be of easy solution. It is clear from the history of the adoption of the letters A, C, A, as narrated by the complainant, and the device within which they are used, that they were only designed to represent the highest quality of ticking which is manufactured by the complainant, and not its origin. The device previously and subsequently used stated the name of the manufacturer, and no purpose could have been subserved by any further declaration of that fact. And, besides, the letters themselves do not suggest anything, and require explanation before any meaning can be attached to them. That explanation when made is, that they are placed in the device of the Company when it is affixed to the finest quality of its goods, while single letters are used in the same device when it is attached to goods of an inferior quality. They are never used by themselves, but merely as part of a device containing, in addition to the border in red, several printed terms. Alone, the letters convey no meaning; they are only significant as part of the general device constituting the trade-mark. Used in that device to denote only quality, and so understood, they can be used by others for a similar purpose equally with the words "superior" or "superfine," or other words or letters or figures having a like signification.

We are aware that there is in the record the testimony of several witnesses to the effect that they understood that the letters were intended to indicate the origin as well as the quality of the goods to which they were attached, but it is entirely overborne by the patent fact that the label previously disclosed the name in full of the manufacturer and by the history of the adoption of the letters, as narrated by the complainant. As it was pertinently observed in the case in Sandford, if purchasers of the ticking read the name of the company, the letters can give no additional information, even if it be admitted that they are intended to indicate the name of the company. And if they do not read the name as printed, the letters are unintelligible. If an explanation be asked of their purpose in the label, the only reasonable answer which can be given is the one which corresponds with the fact that they are designed merely to indicate the quality of the goods.

But there is another and equally conclusive answer to the suit. The label used by the defendants is not calculated to mislead purchasers as to the origin of the goods to which it is attached. It does not resemble the device of the complainant. Its border has a different figure; it is square outside and inside. It has within it the words "Omega" and "Ring Twist," as well as the letters "A, C, A." Neither the name of the complainant, nor of the place where its goods are manufactured, nor the words "Power Loom," are upon it. The two labels are so unlike in every particular, except in having the letters A, C, A, in their center, that it is impossible that anyone can be misled in supposing the goods, to which the label of the defendants is attached, are those manufactured by the complainant. The whole structure of the case thus falls to the ground. There is no such imposition practiced upon the public and no such fraud perpetrated upon the manufacturers, in attempting to dispose of the goods of one as those of another, as to call for the interposition of a court of equity.

The decree of the Circuit Court is, therefore, affirmed.

See 11 OTTO.

Mr. Justice Clifford, dissenting:

Symbols or devices used by a manufacturer or merchant to distinguish the products, manufactures or merchandise which he produces, manufactures or sells, from that of others, are called and known by the name of trade-marks. They are used in order that such products, manufactures or merchandise may be known as belonging to the owner of the symbol or device, and that he may secure the profits from its reputation or superiority. 15 Am. Cyclopaedia, 832.

Equity courts, in all civilized countries, have for centuries afforded protection to trade-marks, the object of such protection being not only to secure to the individual the fruits of his skill, industry and enterprise, but also to protect the public against fraud.

Property in a trade-mark is acquired by the original application to some species of merchandise or manufacture of a symbol or device, not in actual use, to designate articles of the same kind or class.

Devices of the kind, in order that they may be entitled to protection in a court of equity, must have the essential qualities of a lawful trade-mark; but if they have, the owner becomes entitled to its exclusive use within the limits prescribed by law, the rule being that he who first adopts such a trade-mark acquires the right to its exclusive use in connection with the particular class of merchandise to which its use has been applied by himself or his agents.

Prior use is essential to any such exclusive claim, as the right to protection begins from such actual prior use; nor does the right to protection extend beyond the actual use of the device. Hence the use of it on one particular article of manufacture or merchandise will not prevent another from using it on another and different class of articles, the rule being strictly applied that the right to protection in equity is limited to the prior use of the symbol by the owner.

Sufficient appears, to show that the plaintiffs, at an early period in the fourth decade of the present century, engaged in the manufacture of a fabric known as ticking of various grades and quality; and that, subsequently, they made a valuable improvement in the mode of manufacturing the fabric, which enabled them to produce a very superior article. Before the introduction of the improvement they had been in the habit of marking their products in that species of manufacture with one of the first four letters of the alphabet, to designate the different grades of their manufacture when offered for sale in the market. Thirty-four years ago or more they introduced the new improvement in the manufacture of the fabric, and adopted the distinctive trade-mark, of which a fac-simile is exhibited in the transcript. When examined, it will be seen that it consists of the corporate name of the complainants, with a rough engraved surrounding, and the letters A, C, A, plainly and conspicuously printed in the center of the circular outside edge.

Conclusive proof is exhibited that the peculiar combination of letters adopted by the complainants as a symbol of trade originated with them, and that it suggested itself to them as comprising the initial letters of their familiar corporate name, with the addition of the letter A at the close, which had previously been used by them as indicating the best quality of the fabric manufactured by them before they made the alleged improvement.

Single letters of the kind are frequently used as a mark of quality; but the proofs in this case show, to a demonstration, that the peculiar combination of letters adopted by the complainants at the period mentioned were not adopted to denote quality merely, but as an appropriate and distinguishing trade-mark, symbol or device, to indicate to the public and to purchasers that the fabric which bears the mark was of the manufacture of the Manufacturing Company of the complainants. Beyond all doubt they adopted the symbol or device and affixed it to the fabric of their trade to indicate the origin and ownership of the article.

Few manufactured products bear, in their own external appearance, sufficient evidence of their real character to protect the purchaser against fraudulent imitations. Integrity in manufacture and uniformity in quality are high recommendations to purchasers, and manufactured goods falling within that category are much preferred, both by the purchasers and consumers of the same; and when, by long experience, the public have learned to associate these elements of recommendation with a special symbol or brand, the wide and profitable sale of the articles bearing the same is assured, and the exclusive possession and use of the symbol or brand becomes of great value to the real owner. Purchasers are also interested that such a trade-mark should receive protection, as it is a guaranty of genuineness, and its value is proportioned to the business reputation of the owners of the same and of the excellence of their manufactures. 4 Johns. Cyclopaedia, part II., p. 916.

Infringement by the respondents is charged, and the complainants pray for an injunction and for an account. Service was made, and the respondents appeared and set up various defenses, as follows: (1) That the alleged trade-mark was never designed or used as such, but merely to designate one of the grades of the fabric which the complainants manufactured. (2) That the complainants are estopped by a prior decision of a court of competent jurisdiction to set up that the alleged symbol is a trade-mark. (3) They admit that they mark their goods with the letters A, C, A, but they deny that the mark is fraudulent or that it is calculated to deceive the public. (4) They deny that their conduct is in the slightest degree fraudulent or inequitable, or that the sale of their goods injures the complainants.

Proofs were taken, hearing had, and the circuit court entered a decree dismissing the bill of complaint. Prompt appeal was taken by the complainants to this court, and they assign the following causes of error: (1) That the circuit court erred in entering a decree dismissing the bill of complaint. (2) That the court erred in not granting the injunction as prayed. (3) That the court erred in not decreeing that the complainants are entitled to an account. (4) That the court erred in not sustaining the bill of complaint.

Attempt is made in argument to show that the symbol of the complainants was not adopted by them for any other purpose than to designate the grade or quality of the fabric which they manufacture and sell in the market; but it is a sufficient answer to that proposition to say that it is wholly unsupported by evidence, and is decisively overthrown by the proof introduced by the complainants.

Words or devices, or even a name in certain cases, may be adopted as a trade mark which is not the original invention of the party who appropriates the same to that use. Phrases, or even words or letters in common use, may be adopted for the purpose, if at the time of their adoption they were not employed by another to designate the same or similar articles of production or sale. Stamps or trade-marks of the kind are employed to point to the origin, ownership or place of manufacture or sale of the article to which it is affixed, or to give notice to the public who is the producer, or where it may be purchased. Canal Co. v. Clark, 13 Wall., 311, 322 [80 U. S., XX., 581, 583].

Subject to the preceding qualifications, a trade-mark may consist of a name, symbol, figure, letter, form or device, if adopted and used by a manufacturer or merchant in order to designate the goods he manufactures or sells, or to distinguish the same from those manufactured or sold by another, to the end that the goods may be known in the market as his, and to enable him to secure such profits as result from his reputation for skill, industry and fidelity. Upton, Trade-Mark, 9; Taylor v. Carpenter, 2 Sandf. Ch., 603.

Brands or stamps called trade-marks, says Waite, may consist of a name, figure, letter, form or device adopted and used by a manufacturer or merchant in order to designate the goods that he manufactures or sells, and to distinguish them from those manufactured or sold by another, to the end that they may be known in the market as his, and thus enable him to secure such profits as result from a reputation for superior skill, industry or enterprise. 6 Waite, Actions and Defenses, 21.

Such a manufacturer or merchant who first adopts such a trade-mark, and is accustomed to affix the same to a particular fabric of his manufacture or sale to distinguish it from all others, has a property in it, and may maintain an action for damages if used by another, or he may restrain another from using it by application to a court of equity. Hall v. Barrows, 4 De G. J. & S., 149, 156; S. C., 12 W. R., 322, 323.

Judicial protection is granted in such a case upon the ground that the honest, skillful, industrious manufacturer or enterprising merchant who has produced or brought into the market an article of use or consumption that has found favor with the public, and who, by affixing to it some name, mark, device or symbol which serves to distinguish it as his, and from that of all others, shall receive the first reward of his honesty, skill or enterprise, and shall in no manner and to no extent be deprived of the same by another who to that end appropriates the same or a colorable imitation of the same to his production, so that the public are or may be deceived or misled. Wolfe v. Barnett, 24 La. Ann., 97; Newman v. Alvord, 51 N. Y., 189, 196; Lee v. Haley, L. R., 5 Ch. App., 155; Blackwell v. Wright, 73 N. C., 310, 313.

Nothing can be better established, says the Master of the Rolls, and nothing ought to be otherwise than fully established in a civilized country, than that a manufacturer is not entitled to sell his goods under the false representation that they are made by a rival manufacturer. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Wilson, L. R., 2 Ch. Div., 434, 440; Browne, Trade-Marks, sec. 385; Osgood v. Allen, 1 Holmes, 185, 194.

When we consider, says Duer, the nature of the wrong that is committed when the right of property in a trade-mark is invaded, the necessity for the interposition of a court of equity becomes more apparent. He who affixes to his own goods an imitation of an original trade-mark, by which those of another are distinguished and known, seeks, by deceiving the public, to divert to his own use the profits to which the superior skill and enterprise of the other had given him an exclusive title, and endeavors by a false representation to effect a dishonorable purpose by committing a fraud upon the public and upon the true owner of the trade-mark. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Spear, 2 Sandf., 599, 605; Collins Co. v. Brown, 3 Kay & J., 423, 428.

Thirty years and more before the suit was commenced, the plaintiff Company adopted the trade-mark in question and affixed the same to their improved manufacture of ticking, and it appears from the evidence that they have continuously, from that date to the day the bill of complaint was filed, used the same as the symbol to designate that peculiar manufacture, which of itself is sufficient to show, if anything in the nature of proof can be, that the first defense set up in the answer ought to be overruled.

2. Much discussion of the second defense cannot be required, as the statement of the proposition that the complainants are estopped to ask relief in this case because they were partially unsuccessful in a prior suit against another party, is quite sufficient for its refutation. Neither argument nor authority is necessary to show that it has no foundation in law or justice, and it is equally clear that the supposed analogy between an admiralty decree in rem and a decree dismissing a bill in equity for the invasion of a trade mark is illusory, unfounded, and without the slightest legal effect.

Suppose that is so; still the respondents deny that the trade-mark which they use is in the slightest degree fraudulent, or that it is calculated to deceive the public. They admit that they use the letters A, C, A, but they deny that in any other respect they have used the trade-mark adopted by the complainants.

Manufacturers and merchants have severally the unquestioned right to distinguish the goods they manufacture or sell by a peculiar mark or device, so that the goods may be known in the market as the product or sale of the owner of the trade-mark or device, in order that they may thus secure the profits which the superior repute of the goods may be the means of giving to the producer or seller. Gillott v. Esterbrook, 48 N. Y. 374, 376.

Confirmation of that proposition is found in all the reported cases, and it is equally true that the owners of such trade-marks are entitled to the protection of a court of equity in the exclusive use of the symbols they have thus adopted and affixed to their goods, the foundation of the rule being that the public interest, as well as the interest of the owner of the trademark, requires that protection. 2 Story, Eq. Jur., sec. 951.

Such a party has a valuable interest in his trade or business, and having appropriated a particular label or trade-mark indicating to those who wish to give him their patronage that the article is made or sold by him or by his authority, or that he carries on his business at a particular place, he is entitled to protection against any other person who attempts to pirate upon the good-will of his customers or of the patrons of his trade or business by sailing under his flag without his authority or consent. Partridge v. Menck, 2 Barb. Ch., 101.

Redress is given in such cases upon the ground that the party charged is not allowed to offer his goods for sale, representing them to be the manufacture of the first and real owner of the trade-mark, because by doing so he would be guilty of a misrepresentation, and would deprive the real owner of the profits he might make by the sale of his goods which the purchaser intended to buy.

Compensation for such an injury was in early times given to the injured party by an action of deceit at common law, long before the Court of Chancery attempted to exercise jurisdiction to grant relief for such wrongful acts. In such an action it is, doubtless, true that the plaintiff is required to allege that the party charged infringed the trade-mark with a fraudulent intent, and to prove the charge as alleged, in order to secure a verdict and judgment for redress. Certain early cases in equity may be found where it is held that it is requisite that the allegation and proof in a chancery suit should be the same; but the practice in equity has long been settled otherwise, the rule now being that the injury the owner of the trade-mark suffers by the offering for sale in the market of other goods side by side with his, bearing the same trade-mark, entitles the real owner of the trade-mark to protection in equity, irrespective of the intent of the wrong-doer, it being held that the injury done to the complainant in his trade by loss of custom is sufficient to support his title to relief.

Neither will the complainant be deprived of remedy in equity, even if it be shown by the respondent that all the persons who bought goods from him bearing the trade-mark of the real owner were well aware that they were not of the complainant's manufacture. If the goods were so supplied by the wrong-doer for the purpose of being resold in the market, the injury to the complainant is sufficient to entitle him to relief in equity.

Nor is it necessary, in order to entitle the party to relief, that proof should be given of persons having been actually deceived, or that they bought goods in the belief that they were of the manufacture of the complainant, provided that the court is satisfied that the resemblance is such as would be likely to cause the one mark to be mistaken for the other. Edelsten v. Edelsten, 1 De G. J. & S., 185; McAndrew v. Bassett, 4 De G. J. & S., 380; Sebastian, Trade-M., 70.

Two trade-marks are substantially the same in legal contemplation, if the resemblance is such as to deceive an ordinary purchaser giving such attention to the same as such purchaser usually gives, and to cause him to purchase the one supposing it to be the other. Gorham Co. v. White, 14 Wall., 511 [81 U. S., XX., 731];

McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S., 245, 256 [XXIV., 828, 832]; Adams, Trade-M., 107.

Difficulties attend the effort to describe with precision what resemblance is necessary to constitute an infringement and, perhaps, it is not going too far to say that the term is incapable of exact definition as applied to all cases. Grant that; and still it is safe to say that no manufacturer or merchant can properly adopt a trade-mark so resembling that of another engaged in the same business as that ordinary purchasers buying with ordinary caution are likely to be misled.

Positive evidence of fraudulent intent is not required where the proof of infringement is clear, as the liability of the infringer arises from the fact that he is enabled through the unjustifiable use of the trade-mark to sell a simulated article as and for the one which is genuine. McLean v. Fleming (supra).

Unless the simulated trade-mark bears a resemblance to that which is genuine, it is clear that the charge of infringement is not made out, and it is, doubtless, true that the resemblance of the simulated one to the genuine must be such that the former is calculated to deceive or mislead purchasers intending to buy the genuine goods; but it is a mistake to suppose that the resemblance must be such as would deceive persons seeing the two trade-marks placed side by side. Exact definition may not be attainable; but if a purchaser looking at the article offered to him, said Lord Cranworth, would naturally be led from the mark impressed on it to suppose it to be the production of the rival manufacturer, and would purchase it in that belief, the court considers the use of such a mark fraudulent. Franks v. Weaver, 10 Beav., 297.

Apply that to the case before the court, and it is sufficient to control the decision; but the Chancellor went much further, and said, that if the goods of a manufacturer have, from the mark or device he has used, become known in the market by a particular name, he thought that the adoption by a rival trader of any mark which will cause his goods to bear the same name in the market, may be as much a violation of the rights of the owner as the actual copy of his device. Seizo v. Provezende, L. R., 1 Ch. App., 192, 196.

When the entire trade-mark is copied, the case is free of difficulty, as the rule is universal that the infringer is liable; but the question is: when may it be said that a trade-mark has been taken by another? Answers to that question are found in several cases, of which no one is more satisfactory than that given by the Master of the Rolls in a recent case. He says that a trade-mark to be taken need not be exactly copied, nor need it be copied with slight variations, but it must be a substantial portion of the trade-mark; to which he adds, that it has sometimes been called the material portion, but that, as he states, means the same thing, and he then remarks that it means the essential portion of the trade-mark, and finally concludes the subject by saying that "What the court has to satisfy itself of is that there has been an essential portion of the trade-mark used to designate goods of a similar description." Singer Mfg. Co. v. Wilson, L. R. 2 Ch. Div., 434, 443; Cod. Dig., sec. 342.

Argument to show that that rule is applicable to the case before the court is unnecessary, as the proposition is self-evident; and if so, it is impossible to see how anyone can vote to affirm the judgment of the circuit court. Beyond all question, the letters A, C, A are the essential feature of the trade-mark adopted by the complainants, and the respondents admit in their answer and in argument that they use the same three letters in the same combination.

Complete imitation is not required, by any of the well considered cases. Instead of that, it is well settled that the proof of infringement is sufficient if it shows even a limited and partial imitation, provided the part taken is an essential portion of the symbol. None of the cases show that the whole must be taken, nor is it necessary to show that anyone has, in fact, been deceived, if the imitation is such as to prove that it is calculated to deceive ordinary purchasers using ordinary caution. Proof of actual intent to defraud is not required, but it is sufficient if the court sees that the trade-mark of the complainant is simulated in such a manner as probably to deceive the customers and patrons of his trade and business. Filley v. Fissett, 44 Mo., 168, 178; Coats v. Holbrook, 2 Sandf. Ch., 586, 626.

Courts of justice do not always use the same language in defining what is the requisite similarity in the two trade-marks to entitle the complainant to relief, but they substantially concur that if it be such that the public may be led to believe, while they buy the goods of the respondent, that they are buying an article manufactured by the complainant, the proof of similarity is sufficient. Hirst v. Denham, L. R., 14 Eq., 542, 552.

For the purpose of establishing a case of infringement, it is not necessary to show that there has been the use of a mark in all respects corresponding with that which another person has acquired an exclusive right to use, if the resemblance is such as not only to show an intention to deceive, but also such as to be likely to make unwary purchasers suppose that they are purchasing the article sold by the party to whom the right to use the trade-mark belongs. Witherspoon v. Currie, L. R., 5 Eng. & Ir. Ap., 508-519; S. C., 27 L. T. (N. S.), 393.

Chancery courts will protect the property rights of a party in his trade-mark, and for its invasion the law will award compensation in damages. Legal redress will be accorded when it is shown that the symbol or device used by the wrong-doer is of such a character that, by its resemblance to the established trade-mark of the complainant, it will be liable to deceive the public and lead to the purchase of that which is not the manufacture of the proprietor, believing it to be his.

It is not necessary that the symbol or device should be a fac simile or a precise copy of the original trade-mark, or that it should be so close an imitation that the two cannot be easily distinguished by one familiar with the genuine device; but if the false or simulated one is only colorably different, or if the resemblance is such as may deceive a purchaser of ordinary caution, or if it is calculated to mislead the careless and unwary, and thus to injure the sale of the goods of the proprietor of the true device, the injured party is entitled to redress. Colman v. Crump, 70 N. Y., 573, 578; Glenny v. Smith, 11 Jur. (N. S.), 964.

Trade-marks usually exhibit some peculiar device, vignette or symbol, in addition to the name of the party, which the proprietor had a perfect right to appropriate, and which, as well as the name, is intended as a declaration to the public that the article is his property. Imitators frequently drop both the name and certain parts of the surroundings, and substitute their own name with a different vignette; but if the peculiar device is copied, and so copied as to manifest a design of misleading the public, the omission or variation ought to be wholly disregarded.

Proof of an intention to defraud is not required; but it is plain that the respondents acted with a design, and it would be absurd to suppose that they had no further object than the mere imitation of the trade-mark which they copied. On the contrary, it is obvious that they expected to gain an advantage in the sale of their goods by attaching their simulated device to fabrics resembling in appearance and quality the fabric of the complainants. Of course, they meant to secure to their goods a preference in the market which they otherwise would not have commanded; and it is difficult, if not impossible, to see how any such advantage could be gained unless the simulated trade-mark would enable them to sell their fabrics as that of the injured party. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Spear, supra; Fetridge v. Wells, 13 How. Pr., 386.

Proprietors of a trade-mark, in order to bring the same under the protection of a court of equity, are not obliged to prove that it has been copied in every particular by the wrong doer. It is enough for them to show that the representations employed bear such resemblance to their symbol or device as to be calculated to mislead the public, who are purchasers of the article, and to make it pass for the one sold by the true owner of the trade-mark. Walton v. Crowley, 3 Blatchf., 440-447.

Candid men cannot read the record in this case without being forced to the conclusion that the respondents took the essential feature of the complainant's trade-mark, which they had used for forty years to designate the fabric of ticking which they manufactured, and which had become known throughout the United States as the authorized symbol to indicate that description of goods; and if so, it follows, to a demonstration, that the decree of the circuit court should be reversed.

CITY OF ST. LOUIS, Substituted for the COUNTY OF ST. LOUIS, Intervener.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 306-319.)

County bonds in aid of railroad—lien for—appropriation of fund—equitable right.

*1. An Act of the General Assembly of Missouri, approved January 7, 1865, under the authority of which the County of St. Louis issued its bonds to the extent of $700,000, and loaned them to the Pacific Railroad Company of Missouri, construed, and held to have created, when accepted by the Railroad Company and the county, an equitable lien or charge, in favor of the county, upon the earnings of the Railroad to the extent necessary, to meet the interest upon the bonds; such payments and lien continuing until the bonds were paid.

2. This equitable lien or charge exists and is enforceable not only against the funds in the hands of the receiver, but against the purchaser under the decree of foreclosure heretofore rendered and against whomsoever may hold the property or have custody of its earnings.

3. The Act of January 7, 1865, is of such character that all purchasers of bonds issued under mortgages subsequently executed and all purchasers of the property, in whatever mode, were bound to take notice of its provisions.

4. Where a debtor, by a concluded agreement with a creditor, sets apart a fixed portion of a specific fund in the hands, or to come into the hands, of another from a designated source and directs such person to pay it to the creditors which he assents to do, this is an appropriation binding upon the parties and upon all persons with notice who subsequently claim an interest in the fund under the debtor.

5. A party may, by express agreement, create a charge or claim in the nature of a lien on real as well as on personal property of which he is the owner or in possession, and equity will establish and enforce such charge or claim, not only against the party who stipulated to give it, but also against third persons who are either volunteers or who take the estate on which the lien is agreed to be given with notice of the stipulation. Such agreement raises a trust which binds the estate to which it relates and all who take title thereto with notice of such trust can be compelled in equity to fulfill it.

Argued Jan. 21, 22, 1880. Decided Apr. 12, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Missouri.

This appeal is from a decree of the court below in favor of the appellee, upon its petition intervening in the foreclosure case of Ketchum v. Pacific Railroad Co.

The case is stated by the court. See, also, the opinion of the court in the foreclosure case, No. 242 of this Term, ante, 932.

Messrs. Melville C. Day, Jno. W. Noble, J. C. Orriek and James O. Broadhead, for appellants.

Messrs. Leverett Bell, Enoch Totten, N. A. Cowdrey, H. A. Clover, Frank J. Bowman, P. Phillips and Britton A. Hill, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

The present appeal brings before us for examination a decree of the circuit court rendered April 25, 1877, adjudging that the County of St. Louis had an equitable lien or charge upon the earnings of the Pacific Railroad of Missouri, to whomsoever the same may be transferred or conveyed, prior and paramount to any mortgage or other lien thereon, to the extent of $4,000 per month, payable monthly, from the first day of April, 1876, and $1,000 payable in each month of December, to meet the interest upon $700,000 of bonds issued by the County of St. Louis in the year 1875, and by it loaned to the Pacific Railroad Company, such payments to continue until the bonds are fully paid by the Company.

The decree declared the lien to exist and to be enforceable on the railroad property and franchises, against the funds in the hands of the receiver in this suit as well as the purchaser under the mortgage foreclosure sale to be hereafter referred to.

The learned Judge who heard this cause in the circuit court rested the decree upon the proposition of law, that "If a debtor by a concluded agreement with a creditor sets apart a specific amount of a specific fund in the hands, or to come into the hands, of another from a designated source, and directs such person to pay it to the creditor, which he assents to do, this is a specific appropriation binding upon the parties and upon all persons with notice who subsequently claim an interest in the fund under the debtor."

Was there an agreement of the character indicated in this statement?

That is the first question to which we shall direct our attention.

The Pacific Railroad Company was incorporated by the Legislature of Missouri in the year 1849, with power to construct a line of railway from St. Louis to Kansas City, a distance of nearly three hundred miles. For the purpose of aiding in the construction of the road, the State from time to time loaned its bonds to the Company. They amounted in the year 1855 to more than $7,000,000, and were secured by a first mortgage upon the property, franchises and income of the Company, with power of sale upon default in meeting the interest and principal of the bonds. Less than two hundred miles of the road was completed at the beginning of the recent civil war, and during its continuance but little progress was made in the work of construction.

By an Act approved February 10, 1864, the Company was authorized to borrow money "For the completion of the main road to Kansas City," and, for that purpose, to issue its bonds to the amount of $1,500,000, "To be secured by a first mortgage on the main line of the road west of Dresden," so much of the bonds as were necessary to be applied to the completion of the road from its then terminus to Kansas City, and to no other purpose. For that object, and to that amount and extent only, the State, by the express words of the Act, relinquished her first mortgage lien and right of forfeiture upon the road west of Dresden, retaining, however, a second lien and mortgage thereon; such second lien and mortgage to become forthwith, upon the payment in full of the principal and interest of the bonds authorized by that Act, the first lien and mortgage, in every respect and as fully as those held by the State.

The Act created the office of Fund Commissioner, to be filled by appointment of the Governor, subject to confirmation by the Senate. It declared that such office should "Continue until the bonds issued for the completion of the road, and the state bonds loaned to said Railroad Company, with interest thereon, are fully paid out of the earnings, or exchanged for the first mortgage bonds of said road," as thereafter provided. The Fund Commissioner became entitled and it was made his duty to take possession of the $1,500,000 of bonds authorized to be issued, negotiate the same, and their proceeds, together with the gross earnings of the road, from whatever source, to control and apply as directed in the Act.

Without referring to other provisions of the Act, it is sufficient to say that the State, through the Fund Commissioner, acquired, for its security, complete control of the earnings and income arising from the property.

Following the course of events in the history of this railroad, we find that in September, 1864, the State of Missouri was invaded by insurrectionary forces, which destroyed much of the property belonging to the Company, including bridges, depots, machine-shops and track. The cost of repairing the injury thus done and of completing and putting the road in successful operation was estimated by the Board of Directors at the sum of $700,000. These facts were communicated to the County Court of St. Louis County by a committee of the Board, in a memorial, stating: "This sum we have lost as the result of the invasion. This amount we want the County to provide by issuing to the Company the bonds of the County, under authority to be given by the Legislature, bearing seven per cent interest, the same to be a loan to complete the road, the Company to refund to the County the principal and interest as the same matures."

The memorial concluded in these words: "If completed, we believe that the earnings of the road will soon furnish all the equipments required for the increased business, pay off the $1,500,000 mortgage, provide for the payment of the county bonds now asked for, and in six or seven years commence paying on the bonds issued by the State for our benefit. But should the financial success of the enterprise not equal our expectations, the importance of the road, as a great artery of trade and commerce, will justify the expenditure asked for."

The Justices composing the County Court seem to have concurred in the propriety of the loan, but differed as to the conditions upon which it should be made. One of their number presented for adoption an order reciting the conditions which, in his judgment, should be embodied in any law authorizing bonds to be issued, viz.: that the State should relinquish so much of its mortgage upon the road as covered the rolling stock, which should then be mortgaged by the Company to the County as security for the $700,000 of bonds to be issued; that the Company should pay into the county treasury, at least thirty days prior to the maturity of the interest, the full amount thereof, in default of which the whole debt should become due, with power in the County to foreclose the mortgage; and, finally, that the proposed Act should be submitted for acceptance or rejection to the actual tax payers of the County.

Another member of the County Court offered, as a substitute, the draft of an order embodying, among other things, an Act to be submitted to the Legislature authorizing the proposed issue of bonds. This substitute declared that, in view of the importance of the completion of the road to the tax payers of the County, the court would concur (in case application should be made by the Company) in the propriety of the passage of an Act "Securing the completion of said road and the interest of the County of St. Louis in the said bonds." The proposed Act contained this provision:

"Said bonds to be issued under such conditions as may be agreed upon between said County Court and the Board of Directors of the Pacific Railroad; and the Fund Commissioner of the Pacific Railroad Company shall pay every month $4,000, and $1,000 additional each month of December, to the Treasurer of St. Louis County, to meet the interest on the above seven hundred bonds; said payments to continue until said bonds are paid by the Pacific Railroad Company."

The substitute was adopted by the County Court and, being submitted to the Legislature of Missouri, that body, on the 7th of January, 1865, passed an Act containing additional provisions. It is here given at length, since the case depends mainly, if not altogether, upon the construction which may be given to its provisions:

"Section 1. The County Court of St. Louis County is hereby authorized to issue seven hundred county bonds of the denomination of $1,000 each, having twenty years to run, and bearing interest at the rate of seven per cent per annum, payable semi-annually, the principal and interest payable in the City of New York, and loan said bonds to the Pacific Railroad Company for the completion of said road; said bonds to be issued under such conditions as may be agreed upon between said County Court and the Board of Directors of the Pacific Railroad Company, such conditions to be binding on the parties, but shall not impair or affect the validity of the bonds after they are issued.

Section 2. The Fund Commissioner of the Pacific Railroad or such person as may, at any time hereafter, have the custody of the funds of said Railroad Company, shall, every month after said bonds are issued, pay into the County Treasury of St. Louis County, out of the earnings of said Pacific Railroad, $4,000 and $1,000 additional in each month of December, to meet the interest on the said seven hundred bonds; said payments to continue until said bonds are paid off by the Pacific Railroad.

This Act to take effect and be in force from and after its passage."

This Act was accepted by the Railroad Company. It expressly agreed to comply with all its provisions. In conformity therewith bonds were issued by the County and delivered to the Railroad Company as follows: 100 bonds on 20th February, 1875; 200 bonds on 7th March, 1875, and 400 bonds on 5th May, 1875. They were sold by the Company, and the proceeds applied in the completion of the road to Kansas City.

On 15th of July, 1868, the Company executed a first mortgage on its franchises and property for $7,000,000; on first of July, 1871, a second mortgage for $3,000,000; and on 10th July, 1875, a third mortgage for $4,000,000, the latter being the same mortgage which was foreclosed by decree rendered on 6th June, 1876, in the case of R. R. Co. v. Ketchum [ante, 932]. The decree of foreclosure and sale in that case was passed in the circuit court, and has been affirmed here, at the present Term, but without prejudice to the lien claim of St. Louis County.

In view of these and other facts, to be presently detailed, it is difficult to believe that the officers of the Company had any expectation whatever that the County would make a loan of $700,000, without security of some sort, and upon the bare promise or covenant of a railroad corporation, staggering under an enormous indebtedness and without credit, that it would meet the interest upon the loan. We have seen that the committee appointed by the Company to seek financial aid from the county, expressed, officially, the belief that upon the completion of the road its earnings would soon furnish all the equipments required for increased business, pay off the $1,500,000 mortgage, provide for the payment of the county bonds then asked for, and in six or seven years thereafter commence paying on the bonds issued by the State for the benefit of the Company. But more significant as to the intention of the Company and as to the impression which it sought to produce upon the County Court is the fact that, immediately upon the passage of the Act, the president of the Railroad Company, with a view, of course, to influence the action of the County Court, presented to that body the written opinion of its counsel, prepared with unusual care, in which he declared: 1. That if the Act should be accepted by the Company, and the County should make the loan authorized, the Act would be binding upon all the parties, in favor of the County Court, to wit: the Company, the Fund Commissioner and the State. 2. That an agreement executed by the Company expressing its assent to such appropriation of the earnings of the road would create in favor of the County an equitable lien or charge upon the earnings, pro tanto. 3. That the direct authorization of such appropriations of the earnings, or rather the direction to the Fund Commissioner (the trustee) to pay this monthly appropriation out of funds, to the benefit of which it (the State) was entitled, was unquestionably a waiver or postponement of the interest of the State, cestui que trust, in favor of the County, to the extent and for the purpose specified in the Act.

See 11 OTTO.

"The Act," said counsel, "admits of no other construction." That opinion was filed and preserved by the clerk of the County Court among its records.

If the Railroad Company deemed it possible that the County would make a loan of $700,000 upon the simple promise of the Corporation to save it harmless; if they had not believed that the County Court would exact ample security for the protection of its constituents against liability, it would scarcely have been suggested through counsel that the acceptance of the Act of January 7, 1865, would amount to a specific appropriation of so much of the earnings as would suffice to meet the interest until the bonds were paid off.

We next inquire, whether any different belief was indulged by the County Court. Did its members intend the loan to be made without securing the County in some effectual mode? These questions must, in view of all the circumstances, be answered in the negative. We have seen that, when the original application was made to the County Court, one of the Justices submitted a proposition requiring the Company to secure the loan by a mortgage upon the rolling stock, the State to that extent surrendering its mortgage or lien. The substitute which was adopted described the Act which it was proposed to submit to the Legislature as an Act "Securing the completion of the road and the interest of the County of St. Louis in the issue of said bonds." The security which the proposed Act provided was a direction to the Fund Commissioner to pay the amount necessary to meet the interest, and to continue such payments until the bonds were paid by the Company. It is quite clear that a proposition to make this loan, without providing some security against liability, would not have been entertained by the County Court.

As to the State, it is abundantly clear, from the language of the Act of 1865, without reference to the circumstances under which it was passed, that the Legislature, as an inducement to the County of St. Louis to come forward and save an important enterprise, in which the State was largely interested financially, intended to waive the prior statutory lien of the State to the extent necessary to secure the prompt liquidation of the interest on the proposed loan, during the whole period the bonds were outstanding and unpaid. The State, at that time, had control of the entire earnings of the Railroad, and if the Legislature did not intend to forego any priority or advantage then enjoyed by the State, but designed only to give authority to the County to issue its bonds, that purpose could have been accomplished by the 1st section of the Act of 1865, leaving the County and the Railroad Company to make such terms and conditions as suited them.

The 2d section of the Act shows, beyond question, that the purpose of the Legislature was not so restricted; that its intention was to provide full security to the County in the event the County Court exercised the authority given by the Act. The draft of the statute submitted by the County Court to the Legislature contained only a general direction to the Fund Commissioner to pay the interest, and to continue such payments until the bonds were paid off by the Company. But so fixed was the Legislature in the purpose to protect the County, that it extended that direction to "Such person as may at any time hereafter have the custody of the funds of the Company," and, by express words, required the payments of interest, whether by the Fund Commissioner or by such other person, to be made "out of the earnings of said Pacific Railroad." The object of these additions to the Act, as submitted by the parties, cannot be mistaken. The office of Fund Commissioner was created by statute and, consequently, its continuance depended upon the will of the Legislature. To meet the contingency of the abolition of that office, the same duty was imposed upon such person as at any time thereafter should have the custody of the funds of the Company. And that there might be no misapprehension as to the source from which funds to meet the interest were to be derived, the Legislature, in effect, gave the assurance that the earnings of the Railroad, by whomsoever held, should supply the amount necessary to that end.

In this connection we may notice another important difference between the Act, in the form in which it was submitted to the Legislature, and that in which it finally passed. The former provided that the bonds should be issued "Under such conditions as may be agreed upon between said County Court and the Board of Directors of the Pacific Railroad." But the Legislature added the words, "Such conditions to be binding on the parties, but shall not impair or affect the validity of the bonds after they are issued." These last words, but for the succeeding section of the Act, would have placed the County at the mercy of the Railroad Company, and rendered it liable to holders of bonds, whether the Company complied or not with the conditions upon which the loan was made. It is manifest, that while the Legislature intended, by the language last quoted, to facilitate the sale of the bonds, and thereby secure the early completion of the road, it intended also, by the 2d section of the Act, to assure the County of St. Louis that its absolute liability to holders of its bonds was largely nominal, since, by that section, out of the earnings of the property, to the extent necessary, and whether the funds of the Company were in the custody of the Fund Commissioner or of some other person, the interest on the bonds should be paid at maturity, and such payments continued until the bonds were paid.

That the Legislature intended by the Act of 1865 to make a specific appropriation of the earnings for that purpose; that the prior lien of the State was, to that extent, waived in favor of the County; and that such appropriation and waiver were, by agreement of all the parties then interested in the property and the disposition of its income, to continue until the bonds themselves were paid or the County discharged from liability thereon, we entertain no doubt. It was not a simple, naked covenant to pay out of a particular fund; but the Act, being accepted by the parties interested, operated as an equitable assignment of a fixed portion of that fund; an assignment which became effectual without any further intervention upon the part of the debtor, and which the party holding the funds of the Company, whether the Fund Commissioner or some other person, could respect without liability to the debtor for so doing. It was an arrangement, based upon a valuable consideration, which neither the State nor the Company, nor both, nor parties claiming under either, with notice, could disregard without the assent of the County, expressed by those who had authority to bind it. It was an engagement to pay out of a specially designated fund, accompanied by express authority to its custodian to apply a specific part thereof to a definite object, in the accomplishment of which all the parties to the arrangement were directly interested. To construe the Act otherwise, will not only do violence to plain words, requiring no construction, but convict the Legislature of a deliberate design to entrap the County of St. Louis into incurring an enormous debt primarily for the benefit of the State, which controlled the earnings of the property for its own benefit.

It remains to inquire whether this agreement or arrangement can be carried into effect consistently with the settled principles of equity.

We remark that all parties claiming under mortgages executed by the Company after the acceptance of the Act of 1865—none others are interested in the determination of this case—are chargeable with notice of the appropriation of earnings made by that Act. "In this country," says Mr. Sedgwick, "the disposition has been, on the whole, to enlarge the limits of the class of public Acts, and to bring within it all enactments of a general character, or which in any way affect the community at large." Sedgwick, Stat. and Const. Law., p. 25. That Act related to matters in which the general public were concerned, and all were bound to take notice of its provisions.

We are of opinion that no insuperable obstacle exists in the way of a court of equity giving effect to this agreement or contract between the parties as against those whom the law charges with notice thereof. The relief granted by the decree seems to be in accordance with established rules in such cases.

In Legard v. Hodges, Lord Thurlow said: "I take this to be a universal maxim, that wherever persons agree concerning any particular subject, that, in a court of equity, as against the party himself, and any claiming under him voluntarily, or with notice, raised a trust. These persons have so claimed; and, therefore, this is a pure trust estate," and they must be declared trustees. 1 Ves., Jr., 478. In the report of that case in 3 Bro. Ch., 531, the Chancellor says: "I take the doctrine to be true, that when parties come to an agreement as to the produce of land, the land itself will be affected by the agreement." Upon rehearing, the former decree was affirmed. 4 Bro. Ch., 422.

In Re Strand Music Hall Co., 3 De G., J. & S., 147, the question arose whether that company had created a valid charge on their real property. "There can, I think," said Lord Justice Turner, "be no doubt that it was intended by these agreements to create a charge upon the property of the company, but it was said on the part of the official liquidator that this intention was not well carried into effect. I apprehend, however, that where this court is satisfied that it was intended to create a charge, and that the parties who intended to create it had the power to do so, it will give effect to the intention, notwithstanding any mistake which may have occurred in the attempt to effect it."

The doctrine is thus stated by Mr. Justice Story in his Equity Jurisprudence, Vol. II., sec. 1231: "Indeed, there is generally no difficulty in equity in establishing a lien, not only on real estate, but on personal property, or on money in the hands of a third person, wherever that is a matter of agreement, at least against the party himself, and third persons who are volunteers or have notice; for it is a general principle in equity that as against the party himself, and any claiming under him voluntarily or with notice, such an agreement raises a trust." The author cites, in support of these views, Legard v. Hodges [supra].

So, also, in Pinch v. Anthony, 8 Allen, 536. "It is well stated that a party may, by express agreement, create a charge or claim in the nature of a lien on real as well as on personal property of which he is the owner or in possession, and that equity will establish and enforce such charge or claim, not only against the party who stipulated to give it, but also against third persons who are either volunteers or who take the estate on which the lien is agreed to be given, with notice of the stipulation. Such agreement raises a trust which binds the estate to which it relates, and all who take title thereto with notice of such trust can be compelled in equity to fulfil it."

In the recent work of Mr. Jones on Mortgages, Vol. I., sec. 162, the author remarks: "In addition to these formal instruments which are properly entitled to the designation of mortgages, deeds and contracts, which are wanting in one or both of these characteristics of a common law mortgage, are often used by parties for the purpose of pledging real property, or some interest in it, as security for a debt or obligation, and with the intention that they shall have effect as mortgages. Equity comes to the aid of the parties in such cases, and gives effect to their intentions. Mortgages of this kind are, therefore, called equitable mortgages." So, also, in his treatise on Railroad Securities, p. 57, the same author says: "An agreement of a company to set apart specific earnings or property in the hands of a third person to meet the interest or principal of its bonds, creates an equitable lien or charge." Willard, Eq. Jur., 462; Watson v. Wellington, 1 Russ. & M., 604; Yeates v. Groves, 1 Ves., Jr., 280; Lett v. Morris, 4 Sim., 607; Ex parte Alderson, 1 Madd., 53.

Further citation of authority would seem to be unnecessary. If any doubt exists as to the case coming within these recognized principles of equity, it is sufficient to say that the appropriation of the earnings of the Railroad Company as security for the loan by the County was in pursuance of a special Act of the Legislature; and in sustaining the decree below we give effect to the legislative will as to matters over which its authority unquestionably extended.

It will be observed that we have made no allusion to the Act of March 30, 1868, subsequent to the passage of which the first, second and third mortgages were executed. In behalf of the plaintiffs in error, it is contended that the Act of 1868 shows the construction given by the circuit court to the Act of 1865 to be inadmissible. The answer to this proposition is twofold: 1. The Act of March 30, 1868, furnishes upon its face, evidence to all that the State felt itself under obligation to provide for the security of the County on account of the loan made to the Railroad Company, under the authority of the Act of January 7, 1865. 2. Be that as it may, if, as we have held, the Act of 1865, and its acceptance by the parties, constituted a contract by which the State waived its lien, in favor of St. Louis County, to the extent and for the purpose therein indicated, and by which the State, the Railroad Company and the County appropriated the Company's earnings to the payment of the interest on the County's bonds, such payments to continue until the bonds were paid off by the Company, no subsequent legislation could deprive the County of the security thus acquired. Nor could parties, who claim under subsequent incumbrances, and who are chargeable with notice of the appropriation made by the Act of 1865, destroy the equitable lien of the County, even with the consent of the Railroad Company. With that lien the property itself was chargeable by whomsoever it or the funds accruing therefrom are or may be held.

By an order heretofore made in this court, the City of St. Louis was allowed to intervene in this cause for the purpose of protecting such interest as it may have herein, and for the purpose of being heard at the argument. The claim of the City is, that, by the Constitution and laws of Missouri, it has assumed the position formerly occupied by the County of St. Louis under the Act of January 7, 1865; that the installments of money required by the Act to be paid monthly into the county treasury are due and payable to the city treasury, and that it has been subrogated to the rights and liabilities of the County as to all matters arising out of the issue of the bonds in question.

Since the making of that order, a written stipulation has been filed in this court signed by all the parties to the record, including the City, agreeing that, in the event the decree below is affirmed, the City of St. Louis shall be substituted therein in lieu and place of the County of St. Louis. The stipulation will be entered at large upon the record, and an order entered substituting the City to all the rights acquired by the County in virtue of the decree below.

We deem it unnecessary to allude to any other points discussed by counsel. We have noticed all deemed by us material. What has been said is sufficient to dispose of the cause upon its merits.

Perceiving no error in the decree, it is, in all respects, affirmed.

Mr. Justice Strong, dissenting:

I cannot concur in the judgment given in this case. I am unable to discover in the contract between the Company and the County, or in the Act of the Legislature, or in both, anything that created an equitable lien upon the earnings of the Railroad Company, or upon any of its property. Nothing more is expressed than a confident expectation that the earnings would prove sufficient to pay the interest on the county loan.

Also dissenting, Mr. Justice Bradley.

Former decree, when a bar—bill to enforce lien.

1. Where a bill, filed to enforce a lien on property, has been dismissed on the merits, it is a bar to a second suit for the same cause of action, although the second bill contains additional allegations that, after the dismissal of the former suit, the complainant has obtained judgments and issued executions on his demand.

2. Whenever a creditor has a trust in his favor, or a lien upon property for the debt due him, he may go into equity without exhausting legal processes or remedies.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

That the complainant's bill exhibits the same cause of action which was set forth in his former bill against these defendants, and that he now seeks the same relief as that which was sought in his first suit, is quite apparent. The identity of the claims and equities asserted, as well as of the relief asked, is shown by an inspection of the records, and it is hardly denied. The object of both suits was to follow and subject to the payment of a debt due by the partnership of May, Graham & Beauregard to the First National Bank of New Orleans, certain property alleged to have formerly belonged to the partnership, but which, before the first bill was filed, had been transferred to the Railroad Company. The claim made in each of the cases is that the Bank has a privilege or lien upon the property for the partnership debt; that the Railroad Company acquired the property with knowledge of the existence of the lien, and that it is charged with a trust in favor of the Bank. The decree dismissing the former bill must, therefore, be a bar to the present suit, it having been pleaded, unless the court which dismissed it was without jurisdiction of the case.

In the former bill it was not averred that judgment at law had ever been recovered against the partnership for the debt, and that an execution had been issued thereon and returned fruitless. The present bill contains such an averment. It is alleged that judgments at law were obtained against two of the members of the partnership on or about the 26th day of February, 1873, which was after the decree dismissing the former bill, and that executions issued upon those judgments had been returned that no property could be found. The complainant insists that this averment not having been made in the former bill, the decree of dismissal, though unqualified, cannot be regarded as a final adjudication of the equities between the parties, and that it is, therefore, no bar to the present suit.

It is, no doubt, generally true that a creditor's bill, to subject his debtor's interests in property to the payment of the debt, must show that all remedy at law had been exhausted. And, generally, it must be averred that judgment has been recovered for the debt; that execution has been issued, and that it has been returned nulla bona. The reason is, that until such a showing is made, it does not appear, in most cases, that resort to a court of equity is necessary; or, in other words, that the creditor is remediless at law. In some cases, also, such an averment is necessary to show that the creditor has a lien upon the property he seeks to subject to the payment of his demand. The rule is a familiar one, that a court of equity will not entertain a case for relief where the complainant has an adequate legal remedy. The complaining party must, therefore, show that he had done all that he could do at law to obtain his rights.

But, after all, the judgment and fruitless execution are only evidence that his legal remedies have been exhausted, or that he is without remedy at law. They are not the only possible means of proof. The necessity of resort to a court of equity may be made otherwise to appear. Accordingly the rule, though general, is not without many exceptions. Neither law nor equity requires a meaningless form, "Bona, sed impossibilia non cogit lex." It has been decided that where it appears by the bill that the debtor is insolvent and that the issuing of an execution would be of no practical utility, the issue of an execution is not a necessary prerequisite to equitable interference. Turner v. Adams, 46 Mo., 95; Postlewait v. Hoves, 3 Iowa, 365; Bk. v. Harvey, 16 Iowa, 141; Botsford v. Beers, 11 Conn., 369; Payne v. Sheldon, 63 Barb., 169. This is certainly true where the creditor has a lien or a trust in his favor.

So it has been held that a creditor, without having first obtained a judgment at law, may come into a court of equity to set aside fraudulent conveyances of his debtor, made for the purpose of hindering and delaying creditors, and to subject the property to the payment of the debt due him. Thurmond v. Reese, 3 Ga., 449; Cornell v. Radway, 22 Wis., 260; Sander-son v. Stockdale, 11 Md., 563.

In Brisay v. Hogan, 53 Me., 554, it was ruled that when a creditor seeks, by his bill, to obtain payment of his debt from land paid for by the debtor, but conveyed to his wife, a levy of an execution is unnecessary, if the debtor never had legal title to the land. See, also, Day v. Washburn, 24 How., 352 [65 U. S., XVI., 712].

The foundation upon which these and many other similar cases rest is, that judgments and fruitless executions are not necessary to show that the creditor has no adequate legal remedy. When the debtor's estate is a mere equitable one, which cannot be reached by any proceeding at law, there is no reason for requiring attempts to reach it by legal processes.

But, without pursuing this subject further, it may be said that whenever a creditor has a trust in his favor, or a lien upon property for the debt due him, he may go into equity without exhausting legal processes or remedies. Tappan v. Evans, 11 N. H., 311; Holt v. Bancroft, 30 Ala., 193. Indeed, in those cases in which it has been held that obtaining a judgment and issuing an execution is necessary before a court of equity can be asked to set aside fraudulent dispositions of a debtor's property, the reason given is, that a general creditor has no lien. And when such bills have been sustained without a judgment at law, it has been to enable the creditor to obtain a lien, either by judgment or execution. But when the bill asserts a lien or a trust, and shows that it can be made available only by the aid of a Chancellor, it obviously makes a case for his interference.

Now, if we are correct in these views of equity jurisdiction, it is a plain inference that the decree pleaded in bar of the present suit was a final adjudication of the equities asserted by the complainant therein.

The bill in that case asserted, in the most ample terms, the remedilessness of the complainant at law. It averred that at and before the transfer and conveyances of the partnership property, sought to be charged, to the Railroad Company, each of the members of the partnership was largely indebted, without means, and in a state of insolvency, and that they had See 11 OTTO. U. S., Book 25.

since been and still were insolvent; so that a suit at law and the recovery of a judgment against them, or either of them, would not afford the complainant any relief, because neither of the partners have or had, since the dates of the pretended transfers of said partnership property, any property whatever upon which the complainant could levy an execution at law, or seize for the satisfaction of the debt due to the Bank. What more could have been necessary to show that the complainant had no remedy at law; that his remedy, if he had any, was in equity?

But this was not all. The bill charged that the conveyances of the partnership property and the transfers by which it had been vested in the Railroad Company, were illegal and fraudulent; that the Bank had a privilege or lien upon the property; and it prayed that the various acts of sale, transfer and conveyance by which the property that had belonged to the partnership had been conveyed to the Railroad Company, should be declared null and void, and that the property should be decreed to be liable to the payment of the amount due to the Bank.

Thus it appears the bill exhibited all that was necessary to give to the court, sitting as a court of equity, complete jurisdiction over the subject of the controversy between the parties, and over all the equities now asserted by the complainant in his present suit. It must, therefore, be held that the decree dismissing that bill determined the equities of the case. And this must be so, whether the reasons for the dismissal were sound or not. That decree was affirmed in this court, and affirmed on the merits. We regarded the case and treated it as requiring an adjudication upon the complainant's equity to be paid out of the property in the hands of the Railroad Company. Nothing that can now be done in another suit can take away the legal effect of the decree. Even were we of opinion that the case was erroneously decided, it would still be res judicata, a bar to the complainant, a protection to the defendants. It would be idle, therefore, to reconsider the question whether the Bank has a lien upon the property he seeks to charge, or whether there had been a trust in the Bank's favor.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

CHARLES E. ANTHONY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
COUNTY OF JASPER.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 693-700.)

Missouri county bonds—form of—notice of law—official signatures—forged bonds.

1. The Missouri Act to provide for the registration of bonds issued by counties and towns, applies to bonds issued under the township aid law.
2. It is within the power of a State to prescribe the form in which municipal bonds shall be executed, in order to bind the public for their payment. If not so executed, they create no legal liability.
3. Dealers in municipal bonds are charged with notice of the laws of the State, granting power to make the bonds they find on the market.
4. Purchasers of municipal securities must always take the risk of the genuineness of the official signatures, and of the official character of those who execute the paper they buy.

5. Bonds not issued by the proper authorities are, in legal effect, forged.

[No. 128.]

Argued Dec. 23, 1879. Decided Apr. 12, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States, for the Western District of Missouri.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Joseph Shippen, J. B. Henderson and Thos. C. Fletcher, for plaintiff in error:

The Act of the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, entitled "An Act to Facilitate the Construction of Railroads in the State of Missouri," approved Mar. 23, 1868, which is recited in the bonds, conferred the authority upon defendant to issue the bonds in controversy.

State v. Linn Co., 44 Mo., 504 (in 1869); Ranney v. Baeder, 50 Mo., 600 (in 1872); McPike v. Pen, 51 Mo., 63 (in 1872); State v. Cunningham, 51 Mo., 479 (in 1873); Rubey v. Shain, 54 Mo., 207 (in 1873); State v. Bates Co., 57 Mo., 70 (in 1874); State v. Clarkson, 59 Mo., 149 (in 1875); State v. Daviess Co., 64 Mo., 31 (in 1875); State v. Cooper Co., 64 Mo., 170 (in 1876).

This point is expressly decided in Cass Co. v. Johnston, 95 U. S., 360 (XXIV., 416).

The Act of the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, entitled "An Act to Provide for the Registration of Bonds, Issued by Counties, Cities and Incorporated Towns, and to Limit the Issue thereof," approved Mar. 30, 1872, has no application to township bonds issued under the Act of Mar. 23, 1868, such as are now in controversy, because:

1. The Act does not embrace them expressly or in terms.

2. Nor by implication; for such implication is precluded by the distinct and peculiar character of these bonds, and by the inadaptability of the provisions of the Act thereto.

See, State v. Linn Co. (supra); Jordan v. Cass Co., 3 Dill., 245; State v. Clarkson, 59 Mo., 149.

Said statute, even if held to be applicable to township bonds, is prospective and not retrospective in its effect, and cannot invalidate such bonds in the hands of a bona fide holder, which purport to have been issued prior to the law, in payment of a stock subscription made prior to the law.

The defendant is estopped from making its attempted defense against a bona fide holder of these bonds, by reason of their recitals.

The bonds were issued pursuant to law, under a two thirds vote of the qualified voters of Marion Township. They properly related back thereto, both in substance and in form, and received the date when the contract of taking the stock was effected. The bonds recite upon their face as follows:

"This bond is issued in pursuance to an order of the County Court of said County of Jasper, made by authority of an Act of the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, entitled 'An Act to Facilitate the Construction of Railroads in the State of Missouri,' and approved on the 23d day of March, A. D. 1868, and authorized by a vote of more than two thirds of the voters of said Township.

In testimony whereof, said County of Jasper has executed this bond by the presiding Justice of the County Court of said County, under the order of said court, signing his name hereto, and by the clerk of said court, under the order thereof, attesting the same, and fixing thereto the seal of said court.

This done at the office of the Clerk of said court, this 28th day of March, A. D. 1872."

By repeated familiar decisions on this subject, the U. S. Supreme Court has declared that purchasers of such bonds are entitled to rely upon their recitals.

The bonds sued on were, in effect, forgeries. Merwin, one of the Judges of the County Court, and the County Clerk issued the bonds, without authority from the court to issue the same, and without the consent of the other Judge of the court, that the same should be issued.

John Purcell, and not R. S. Merwin, was the presiding Justice of the court Mar. 28, 1872; the day of the date of said bonds, and he continued so to be until Sep., 1872.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit upon interest coupons originally attached to bonds issued under the "Township Aid Act" of Missouri, and presents the following facts:

On the 10th of February, 1872, the Township of Marion, in Jasper County, upon a call duly made under the law, voted to subscribe $75,000 to the stock of the Memphis, Carthage and Northwestern Railroad Company upon certain conditions, and on the 28th of March following, the County Court made the subscription on the terms and subject to the conditions specified.

On the 30th of March an Act was passed by the General Assembly of Missouri, entitled "An Act to Provide for the Registration of Bonds Issued by Counties, Cities and Incorporated Towns, and to Limit the Issue thereof." Section 4 of that Act is as follows:

"Section 4. Before any bond hereafter issued by any county, city or incorporated town, for any purpose whatever, shall obtain validity, or be negotiated, such bond shall first be presented to the State Auditor, who shall register the same in a book or books provided for that purpose in the same manner as the state bonds are now registered, and who shall certify by indorsement on such bond that all the conditions of the laws have been complied with in its issue, if that be the case, and also that the conditions of the contract under which they were ordered to be issued have also been complied with, and the evidence of that fact shall be filed and preserved by the auditor. But such certificate shall be prima facie evidence only of the facts therein stated, and shall not preclude or prohibit any person from showing or proving the contrary in any suit or proceedings to test or determine the validity of such bonds or the power of any county court, city or town council or Board of Trustees, or other authority to issue such bonds, and the remedy by injunction shall also lie at the instance of any tax payer of the respective county, city or incorporated town to prevent the registration of any bonds alleged to be illegally issued or founded under any provision of this Act."

On the 4th of June, 1872, the County Court ordered that $50,000 of the bonds which had been voted should be issued, that the clerk have them registered according to law and, when registered, that they be deposited in escrow with some responsible banker in St. Louis.

John Purcell was the presiding Justice of the court in March. He continued in office until September, 1872, when he resigned, and R. S. Merwin was appointed in his place October 21, 1872. The bonds now in question were sealed with the seal of the court, affixed by the clerk, and signed by Merwin, as presiding Justice, and by the clerk in October, 1872, but antedated as of March 28. Merwin delivered them during the same month, with the first two coupons cut off, to the Union Savings Bank of St. Louis, for the use of Edward Burgess, a contractor for building the road. In November, Burgess sold them to one Wilson at fifty-five cents on the dollar, and the bank gave them up to the purchaser on his order. Neither the other Justice of the County Court, nor the court as a court, consented to what was done by Merwin, and the railroad company has never fully complied with the conditions of the vote authorizing the issue of the bonds. No registry of the bonds was ever made, as required by the Act of March 30, 1872, and they did not have upon them the certificate of registration. Anthony, the plaintiff below, was a purchaser for value of the bonds from which the coupons sued on were cut, and without any notice that they had been antedated, or were in any respect irregular or invalid.

The circuit court, on this state of facts, gave judgment against Anthony, and he has brought this writ of error.

All the questions presented in the argument of this case were disposed of in Douglass v. Pike Co., decided at the present Term [ante, See 11 Orto, 968], except such as arise under the Act of March 30, 1872. That Act, it is claimed, renders the bonds invalid, because they were not registered and had no certificate of registry on them. Against this it is urged:

1. That the Act does not apply to bonds issued under the Township Aid Law; and,

2. That if it does, the County is estopped from denying that these bonds were actually issued on the day they bear date.

The first objection is, as we think, untenable. It does not appear to have been taken or considered below. While the bonds are township bonds, in the sense that they are payable out of taxes levied on the property in the township which voted them, they were issued by the County. The County Court, which represented the County in its corporate capacity, made the subscription voted by the township, and issued the bonds in the name of the County. Under the same authority the necessary taxes are to be levied on the property in the township, and from moneys obtained in this way the county treasurer is to pay the bonds and coupons as they mature. The bonds, on their face, acknowledge an indebtedness of the County "for and on account of" the township. Since townships have no corporate organization of their own they act through the County, which, for this purpose, represents them as, under other circumstances, it does the people of the whole County.

The Act in question is not confined to the bonds of counties, but embraces all issued by counties. As there can be no township bonds except they are issued by counties, it seems to us that they come within the descriptive words used in the 4th section, and we have been unable to find anything in the other parts of the Act manifesting an intention to give these words any other than their usual and ordinary signification. The object of the new legislation, undoubtedly, was to guard against unauthorized issues of this class of public securities. For this purpose a new policy was adopted by the State. The evil which the General Assembly had in view affected township bonds, as well as those of counties, cities or towns. In fact, as ordinarily the same officers put out the township bonds that did those of the county, it is impossible to discover any good reason for guarding one against frauds and mistakes rather than the other. The records of the county court should contain an account of all that has been done in this way by that body for the townships, and the chief financial officer of the county can as easily furnish the State Auditor with a statement of these obligations as he can of those of the county at large. When the State Auditor certifies to the county court the amount required during the next year to meet maturing coupons and costs and expenses, the special tax can be levied by the county court, under the Township Aid Law, as amended in 1871 (Wagner's Stat., 331, sec. 52), on the real estate and personal property in the township for whose account the bonds were issued. No embarrassment can possibly arise in this particular, for there is no such conflict between the two statutes as to produce a repeal by implication. The registration statute is supplementary only to that under which the bonds were originally issued.

This brings us to consider the question of estoppel. There can be no doubt that it is within the power of a State to prescribe the form in which municipal bonds shall be executed, in order to bind the public for their payment. If not so executed, they create no legal liability. Other circumstances may exist which will give the holder an equitable right to recover from the municipality the money which the paper he has got represents, but he has no bond which he can enforce as such, or which can be put on the market as commercial paper. The Act now in question is, we think, of this character. It in effect provides that no bond issued by counties, cities or incorporated towns shall be valid, that is to say, completely executed, until it has been countersigned or certified in a particular way by the State Auditor. For this purpose, after being executed by the corporate authorities, it must be presented to that officer, and he must inquire and determine whether all the requirements of the law authorizing its issue have been observed, and whether all the conditions of the contract in consideration of which it was to be put out have been complied with. To enable him to do this, evidence must be submitted which he is required to file and preserve. If he is satisfied, the registry is made and the requisite certificate indorsed on the bonds. This being done, the execution of the bond is complete and, under the law, it may then be negotiated; that is to say, put on the market as valid commercial paper. When the certificate is found on the bond, the purchaser need not inquire whether what has been certified to is true. As against a bona fide holder the public is bound by what its authorized agents have done and stated in the prescribed form.

Dealers in municipal bonds are charged with notice of the laws of the State granting power to make the bonds they find on the market. This we have always held. If the power exists in the municipality, the bona fide holder is protected against mere irregularities in the manner of its execution, but if there is a want of power, no legal liability can be created. When the bonds now in question were put out, the law required that to be valid they must be certified to by the Auditor of State. In other words, that officer was to certify them before their execution was complete, so as to bind the public for their payment. We had occasion to consider, in McGarrahan v. Mining Co., 96 U. S., 316 [XXIV., 630], the effect of statutory requirements as to the form of the execution of patents to pass the title of lands out of the United States, and there say: "Each and every one of the integral parts of the execution is essential to the validity of a patent. They are of equal importance under the law, and one cannot be dispensed with more than another. Neither is directory, but all are mandatory. The question is not what, in the absence of statutory regulations, would constitute a valid grant, but what the statute requires." The same rule applies here. The object to be accomplished is the complete execution of a valid instrument such as the law authorizes public officers to put out and bind the public organization they represent for the payment of money. For this purpose the law has provided that the instrument must not only be signed and sealed on behalf of the county court of the county, but it must be certified to or countersigned by the Auditor of State. Of this law all who deal in the bonds are bound to take notice.

In order to recover in this case, it became necessary for the plaintiff to prove that the bonds from which the coupons sued on were cut had been executed according to law. He did prove that they were signed by the presiding Justice and clerk of the court, and were sealed with the seal of the court. This, before the Act of March 30, 1872, would have been enough, but after that more was necessary. The public can act only through its authorized agents, and it is not bound until all who are to participate in what is to be done have performed their respective duties. The authority of a public agent depends on the law as it is when he acts. He has only such powers as are specifically granted; and he cannot bind his principal under powers that have been taken away, by simply antedating his contracts. Under such circumstances, a false date is equivalent to a false signature; and the public, in the absence of any ratification of its own, is no more estopped by the one than it would be by the other. After the power of an agent of a private person has been revoked, he cannot bind his principal by simply dating back what he does. A retiring partner, after due notice of dissolution, cannot charge his firm for the payment of a negotiable promissory note, even in the hands of an innocent holder, by giving it a date within the period of the existence of the partnership. Antedating, under such circumstances, partakes of the character of a forgery, and is always open to inquiry, no matter who relies on it. The question is one of the authority of him who attempts to bind another. Every person who deals with or through an agent assumes all the risks of a lack of authority in the agent to do what he does. Negotiable paper is no more protected against this inquiry than any other. In Bayley v. Taber, 5 Mass., 286; S. C., 4 Am. Dec., 57, it was held that when a statute provided that promissory notes of a certain kind, made or issued after a certain day, should be utterly void, evidence was admissible on behalf of the makers to prove that the notes were issued after that day, although they bore a previous date.

It matters not that when the bonds were voted the registration law was not in force. Before they were issued it had gone into effect. It did not change in any way the contract with the railroad company. The company was just as much entitled to its bonds when it complied with the conditions under which they were voted after the law as it could have been before. All the Legislature attempted to do was to provide what should be a good bond when issued. There was nothing changed but the form of the execution.

Purchasers of municipal securities must always take the risk of the genuineness of the official signatures of those who execute the paper they buy. This includes, not only the genuineness of the signature itself, but the official character of him who makes it. This plaintiff is charged with notice of the fact that Merwin was not the presiding Justice of the County Court until October, 1872, and that he could not have signed the bonds in his official capacity until that time. Had he signed them in March, he could not have bound the township for their payment. This is equivalent to notice that they were not in fact issued before March 30, and that, consequently, they were not valid because not certified by the Auditor of State.

This case is entirely different from that of Weyanwega v. Ayling [ante, 470], where we held the town was estopped from proving that the bonds were actually signed by a former clerk after he went out of office; because the clerk in office adopted that signature as his own when he united with the chairman in delivering the bonds to the railroad company, pursuant to the vote of the town. There the bonds were not only complete in form at the time they bore date, but when they were actually issued as genuine by the proper agents, one of whom was the clerk who should have signed them. Here they were not actually complete in form when they were issued and it was only by a false date inserted by one of the two agents required by law to unite in their execution, and without the knowledge or consent of the other, who never acted at all, that they were apparently so. They were never in a condition to be issued, and were never, in fact, issued by the proper authorities. They were, in legal effect, forged.

It follows that the judgment of the Circuit Court was right and it is, consequently, affirmed.

Interest on decrees—state rule.

1. Where this court affirmed a decree in a patent case “with interest at the same rate per annum that similar decrees bear in the courts of the State,” by the word similar, decrees for the payment of money was intended.

2. It was right for the circuit court to order that the decree affirmed be executed by the collection of the money found to be due, and interest, according to the established rule in the State.

APPEALS from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois.

The case is sufficiently stated in the opinion. Messrs. George Payson and Enoch Totten, for appellants.

Messrs. Francis H. Kales and L. L. Bond, for appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

See 11 OTTO.

When these cases were here before, 94 U. S., 695 [XXIV., 238], we affirmed the decrees then appealed from “With costs and interest, until paid at the same rate per annum that similar decrees bear in the courts of the State of Illinois.” In this way we established the validity of the patent sued on, and directed the court below to proceed with the collection of its money decree, with such interest as similar decrees bear in the State. By “similar” we did not mean decrees in patent suits, for of such suits the state courts have no jurisdiction but decrees for the payment of money.

The courts of Illinois have uniformly held that money decrees carry interest at the rate of six per cent per annum, the statutory rate for judgments. For this reason it was right for the circuit court, when our mandate went down, to order that the decree affirmed be executed by the collection of the money found to be due, and interest, which, under the established rule in the State, will be at six per cent.

Affirmed.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Mississippi.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. W. K. Ingersoll, A. P. Morse and A. B. Pittman, for appellant.

Messrs. G. Gordon Adam and Durant & Hornor, for appellees.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

O'Reilly, as assignee in bankruptcy of Edrington, Jr., and Steele, filed a bill in equity in the District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi, to foreclose a lien in the nature of a mortgage in favor of Edrington, Jr., on an undivided two thirds of what was known as the Shipland plantation. In his bill he alleged it was important that the taxes on the property be paid from year to year, as the same should accrue; “That taxes in arrears be also paid; and that all clouds upon the title be removed; and that the said land be redeemed from any tax sales.” It was then alleged “That William H. Edrington, Jr., and Henry C. Edrington, as administrators of Eliza M. Edrington, deceased, and Charles S. Jeffords, claimed to have some equitable claims upon the land aforesaid for money advanced by them, for the payment of taxes, the exact nature and extent of whose claims are unknown to your orator." The prayer was, among other things, "That the rights of the defendants, Charles S. Jeffords and William H. Edrington, Jr., and Henry C. Edrington, as administrators of Eliza M. Edrington, deceased, if any they have, be ascertained, declared and settled." The administrators, defendants, appeared the day the suit was begun, and filed an answer and cross-bill. The cross-bill set forth, in substance, that the lands had been sold for taxes, and conveyed to one Richardson, April 10, 1872; that Richardson had also paid the taxes on the lands for 1870; that the payments by Richardson were, for 1870, $1,244.08, and at the tax sale $1,754.87; that on the 29th of May, 1872, Mrs. Edrington, the deceased, paid Richardson, for a deed of the lands to her, $3,142.89, being the amount advanced by him, and interest thereon $143.94, and that she afterwards paid the taxes of 1872, amounting to $1,907.11. The prayer was that the administrators might be decreed to have a lien on the lands, and that O'Reilly, the assignee, be required to pay to them the several amounts so advanced.

O'Reilly answered the cross-bill, admitting all the allegations except as to the amounts paid. As to these proof was demanded; but for such amount as should be found due, it was admitted that the administrators were entitled to the relief they asked. On the 28th of May, 1875, a decree was entered finding the amount due on the mortgage debt and ordering a sale of the property. As to the cross-bill and tax claims, all questions were reserved for future adjudications, and the decree in the principal suit was "Without prejudice to said parties in asserting their claims, either against the proceeds of said lands, when paid into the court, or against the lands themselves, in case the assignee shall become the purchaser thereof." On the 2d of December, the cause was referred to a master to ascertain and report the facts as to the tax claims, and he reported that payments had been made precisely as stated in the cross-bill, but that the taxes so paid covered the whole of the lands, and not two thirds only. The whole amount paid was $5,050.01. He also reported that O'Reilly objected to refunding the taxes of 1870, which had been paid by Richardson before sale, and that he claimed he was not, under any circumstances, chargeable with more than two thirds of the whole amount, as his lien covered only that part of the land. He also reported that the administrators offered in evidence before him an agreement, of the date of April 30, 1874, between O'Reilly as assignee, and the counsel of the Edringtons, but objection being made by O'Reilly, it was not considered by him. By this agreement, to avoid further expenses of litigation, a compromise of all matters in controversy between the parties was effected, by which, among other things, O'Reilly, as assignee, was to pay the administrators such sums of money as were paid by said Eliza M. Edrington, in purchasing the tax title to said plantation, and such further sums as have been paid by her or her heirs and administrators in the payment of taxes for and on account of such plantation. And the administrators were to release all claims. This agreement was made subject to the approval and confirmation of the District Court in bankruptcy. On the coming in of the report the agreement was approved by the court, and a decree entered to the effect that whenever the administrators should tender the assignee "deeds of quitclaim of all their interest in the lands described in the pleadings, including the one third interest in said lands not sold under the decree rendered herein," the said assignee should pay to them, from the proceeds of the sale then in his hands, the sum of $5,050.01.

From this decree O'Reilly appealed.

The principal objection to the decree below is, that it was made on the basis of an agreement of compromise entered into before the suit was begun, when that agreement was not set forth and relied on in the pleadings. The case brought up by the appeal is that made by the cross-bill, where all the several items of tax claim are set out, showing what were for taxes paid and what for purchases at tax sales. In the answer, no objection was made because the claim included the taxes on the whole property, or because those for 1870 were paid before a sale. All O'Reilly required was proof of amounts; and that being made, the right to the relief asked was conceded. No exception was taken to the amount as reported by the master. The questions as to liability for the taxes of 1870, and for the full amount paid, rather than two thirds, were first raised at the hearing at the reference. When those questions came to be considered by the court, the agreement of compromise, after having been examined and approved, was received as evidence that the full amount should be allowed. While the agreement was not directly sued on, the amount it called for was claimed in the cross-bill. No defense was set up in the answer inconsistent with what had been agreed to, and, as the agreement has been perfected by the approval of the court, we see no reason why it may not be used in evidence to show that, for a valuable consideration, the assignee has waived the objections he now makes to the amount of the recovery. The decree, as rendered, is not for the specific performance of the agreement, but is one in which the rights of the administrators are "ascertained, declared and settled," in accordance with the prayer of the original bill, and establishing a lien on the lands for the taxes paid, and requiring the assignee to refund the amount expended, as asked for in the cross-bill.

Maxim—lands taken for public use—jurisdiction of Court of Claims—restriction of—implied obligation.

*1. The maxim, that the King can do no wrong, has no place in our system of constitutional law, as

*Head notes by Mr. Justice MILLER.

NOTE.—Eminent domain; the right to payment for private property taken for public use generally recognized. Fifth Amendment to Constitution applies only to Federal Government and not to States. See note to Withers v. Buckley, 61 U. S., XV., 816.

applicable either to the Government or to any of its officers.

2. Query: whether, when Government takes awedly private property for public use, in a manner to make the taking the act of the Government, the just compensation for such property guaranteed by the Constitution can, in the absence of any other provision of law, be recovered in the Court of Claims.

3. However this may be, there does not arise such an implied contract to pay as is necessary to give that court jurisdiction, where the officer of the Government, asserting ownership in the United States, takes forcible possession of the land of the individual for the use of the Government.

4. Such a case, as it would be between individuals, is a tort, from which no implied contract to pay for use and occupation can arise.

5. The restriction of the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims to cases of contracts, express or implied, has reference to the well understood distinction between cases arising ex contractu and ex delicto, and is founded on the sound principle, that while Congress was willing to subject the Government to suits on valid contracts, which could only be valid when made by some one vested with authority to do so or something done by such authority which raised an implied contract, it did not intend to make the Government liable for the wrongful and unauthorized acts of its officers however high their place, and though done under a mistaken zeal for the public good.

6. The seizure, by an Indian agent, for the use of the agency, of buildings owned by a private citizen, under claim that they belonged to the Government, raises no implied obligation of the United States to pay for use and occupation.

APPEAL from the Court of Claims.
The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. B. F. Butler, E. Lander and Thomas Wilson, for appellant.

Messrs. Charles Devens, Atty-Gen., and John S. Blair, for appellee.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from the Court of Claims where a suit was brought by plaintiff to recover for the use and occupation of the lands and buildings which were the subject of controversy in the case just decided, between the same parties. The judgment of that court is against the claimants.

The first question arising in this case concerns the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims upon the suggestion of the Attorney-General, that the claim is not founded on contract, either express or implied. That court could have no cognizance of the case on any other ground, according to the express language of the statute defining its jurisdiction. Rev. Stat., sec. 1059.

The findings of the Court of Claims leave no doubt that the Indian agents, acting for the United States, took possession of the buildings erected many years before by the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, under which plaintiff asserts his rights, without their consent, and have retained that possession by force and against the will of that Board and of Mr. Langford. The United States always asserted that their possession was by virtue of their own title; that it was hostile to the title of claimant, and the hostility was such that the military of the United States was ordered to protect by force the occupation of the Government agents.

Conceding that the title, or even the right to possession of the premises, was in claimant, it would seem that the facts above stated show that the act of the United States in taking and holding that possession was a tort of the most unequivocal character, if the Government can be capable of a tort, and that if the case were one between individuals every implication of a contract is repelled.

Counsel for claimant, admitting this to be true, makes a very ingenious argument to prove that the Government, in taking and using the property of an individual against his consent and by force, cannot be guilty of a tort, because the nature of the relation of the Government to its citizens, and the provisions of the Constitution, create an implied obligation to pay for property, or for the use of property, so taken. The argument rests on two distinct propositions. (1) That the maxim of English constitutional law, that the King can do no wrong, is one which the courts must apply to the Government of the United States, therefore there can be no tort committed by the Government. (2) That, by virtue of the constitutional provision that private property shall not be taken for public use, without just compensation, there arises in all cases where such property is taken for public use an implied obligation to pay for it.

It is not easy to see how the first proposition can have any place in our system of Government.

We have no King to whom it can be applied. The President, in the exercise of the executive functions, bears a nearer resemblance to the limited monarch of the English Government than any other branch of our Government, and is the only individual to whom it could possibly have any relation. It cannot apply to him, because the Constitution admits that he may do wrong, and has provided a means for his trial for wrong-doing, and his removal from office if found guilty by the proceeding of impeachment. It was not found in the mouth of any of the eminent counsel who defended President Johnson on his impeachment trial to assert that by law he was incapable of doing wrong, or that, if done, it could not, as in the case of the King, be imputed to him, but must be laid to the charge of the ministers who advised him.

It is to be observed that the English maxim does not declare that the Government or those who administer it, can do no wrong; for it is a part of the principle itself that wrong may be done by the governing power, for which the ministry, for the time being, is held responsible; and the ministers personally, like our President, may be impeached; or, if the wrong amounts to a crime, they may be indicted and tried at law for the offense.

We do not understand that, either in reference to the Government of the United States or of the several States or of any of their officers, the English maxim has an existence in this country.

The other point is one which requires more delicate handling.

We are not prepared to deny that when the Government of the United States, by such formal proceedings as are necessary to bind the Government, takes for public use, as for an arsenal, custom-house or fort, land to which it asserts no claim of title, but admits the ownership to be private or individual, there arises an implied obligation to pay the owner its just value.

It is to be regretted that Congress has made no provision by any general law for ascertaining and paying this just compensation. And we are not called on to decide that when the Government, acting by the forms which are sufficient to bind it, recognizes the fact that it is taking private property for public use, the compensation may not be recovered in the Court of Claims. On this point we decide nothing.

What is pertinent to the present case is, that, conceding that principle, it does not confer on that court the authority to decide that the United States, in asserting the right to use its own property, is using that of an individual, and in taking possession of such property, under claim of title, and retaining it by force against a rival claimant, has come under an implied contract to pay him for the use of the property. In the first case, the Government admits the title of the individual and his right to compensation. This right to compensation follows from the two propositions, that it was private property and was taken for public use, neither of which is disputed.

It is a very different matter where the Government claims that it is dealing with its own, and recognizes no title superior to its own. In such case the Government, or the officers who seize such property, are guilty of a tort, if it be in fact private property. No implied contract to pay can arise, any more than in the case of such a transaction between individuals. It is conceded that no contract for use and occupation would, in that case, be implied.

Congress, in establishing a court in which the United States may primarily be sued as defendants, proceeded slowly and with great caution. As at first organized, the Court of Claims was merely an auditing Board, authorized to pass upon claims submitted to it, and report to the Secretary of the Treasury. Such confirmed claims as he approved, he submitted to Congress with an estimate for their insertion in the proper appropriation bill. Such as he disapproved demanded no further action.

It was by reason of that feature of the law that this court refused to exercise the appellate jurisdiction over awards of that court which the Act of Congress attempted to confer, because the court was of opinion that the so-called Court of Claims was not, in the constitutional sense, a court which could render valid judgments, and because there could be no appeal from the Supreme Court to the Secretary of the Treasury. Gordon v. U. S., 2 Wall., 561 [69 U. S., XVII., 921]. An Act of Congress, removing this objectionable feature, having passed, the year after that decision, the appellate power of this court has been exercised ever since. The jurisdiction of that court has received frequent additions by the reference of cases to it under special statutes, and by other changes in the general law; but the principle originally adopted, of limiting its general jurisdiction to cases of contract, remains. There can be no reasonable doubt that this limitation to cases of contract, express or implied, was established in reference to the distinction between actions arising out of contracts, as distinguished from those founded on torts, which is inherent in the essential nature of judicial remedies under all systems, and especially under the system of the common law.

The reason for this restriction is very obvious on a moment's reflection. While Congress might be willing to subject the Government to the judicial enforcement of valid contracts, which could only be valid as against the United States when made by some officer of the Government acting under lawful authority, with power vested in him to make such contracts, or to do acts which implied them, the very essence of a tort is that it is an unlawful act, done in violation of the legal rights of some one. For such acts, however high the position of the officer or agent of the Government who did or commanded them, Congress did not intend to subject the Government to the results of a suit in that court. This policy is founded in wisdom, and is clearly expressed in the Act defining the jurisdiction of the court; and it would ill become us to fritter away the distinction between actions ex delicto and actions ex contractu, as well understood in our system of jurisprudence, and thereby subject the Government to payment of damages for all the wrongs committed by its officers or agents, under a mistaken zeal, or actuated by less worthy motives.

The question is not a new one in this court.

In the case of Nichols v. U. S., 7 Wall., 122 [74 U. S., XIX., 125], where a suit was brought in the Court of Claims to recover back money exacted of an importer in excess of the duties allowed by law, the court held that no contract to refund was implied, because the money, though paid under protest, was paid voluntarily, and for this reason, among others, that court had no jurisdiction.

In the case of Gibbons v. U. S., 8 Wall., 269 [75 U. S., XIX., 453], an army contractor, who had agreed to furnish 200,000 bushels of oats at a fixed price, had, as this court held, after delivering part of the amount, been legally released from the obligation to deliver the balance. He was, however, carried before the military authority in a state of fear and trepidation and, to save himself further trouble, agreed to and did deliver the remainder of the oats. He sued in the Court of Claims for the difference between the contract price and the market price of the oats at the time of the delivery. One ground of his claim was, that he acted under duress and the constraint of fear, and his agreement to deliver at the contract price was void.

This court said, in answer to this argument, that "It is not to be disguised that this case is an attempt, under the assumption of an implied contract, to make the Government responsible for the unauthorized acts of its officers, those acts being in themselves torts. * * * The language of the statutes conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims excludes, by the strongest implication, demands against the Government founded on torts. The general principle which we have already stated as applicable to all governments, forbids, on a policy imposed by necessity, that they should hold themselves liable for unauthorized wrongs inflicted by their officers on the citizen, though occurring while engaged in the discharge of official duties. * * * These reflections admonish us to be cautious that we do not permit the decision of this court to become authority for righting in the Court of Claims all wrongs done to individuals by the officers of the General Government, though they have been committed while serving the Government and in the belief that it was for its interest. In such cases, where it is proper for the Nation to furnish a remedy, Congress has wisely reserved the matter for its own determination."

With the re-affirmation of this doctrine, which excludes the present case from the jurisdiction of that court, its judgment, dismissing the petition of plaintiff, is affirmed.

THOMAS ALDRIDGE ET AL., Appts.,
v.

WILLIAM MUIRHEAD, Assignee in Bankruptcy of THOMAS ALDRIDGE, a Bankrupt.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 397-403.)

Married women—husbands' creditors.

1. In New Jersey, when the title to real estate is conveyed to a married woman and paid for out of her separate estate, she is the bona fide owner of it, as if she were single.

2. A husband may manage the separate property of his wife without necessarily subjecting it, or the profits arising from his management, to the claims of his creditors.

[No. 244.]

Argued Apr. 6, 1880. Decided Apr. 19, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of New Jersey. The case is stated by the court.

Mr. R. Gilchrist, for appellants:

The following cases are upon the question of the construction of the married women's Acts of New Jersey:

Hornor v. Webster, 33 N. J. L., 397; Huyler v. Atwood, 26 N. J. Eq., 506; Lewis v. Perkins, 36 N. J. L., 133; Green v. Pallas, 1 Beas. (12 N. J. Eq.), 267; Quidort v. Pergeaux, 18 N. J. Eq., 478; Wells Separate Prop. of Mar. Wom., Sec. 144; Wilson v. Brown, 2 Beas., 13 N. J. Eq., 277; Peterson v. Mulford, 36 N. J. L., 485; Court of Errors—citing many decisions; Beal v. Storm, 26 N. J. Eq., 373; Symmes v. Strong, 28 N. J. Eq., 132; Stall v. Fulton, 30 N. J. L., 430; Black v. Black, 30 N. J. Eq., 219; S. P. in Penn., Wells, sec. 178; Vreeland v. Vreeland, 16 N. J. Eq., 523; Atwater v. Underhill, 23 N. J. Eq., 604, citing with approval the N. Y. case of Knapp v. Smith, 27 N. Y., 277; Owen v. Cowley, 36 N. Y., 600; Naylor v. Field, 5 Dutch. 29 N. J. L., 287; Bk. v. Sprague, 20 N. J. Eq., 24.

Messrs. Cortlandt Parker and John Linn, for appellee:

We insist as matter of law:

1. That Aldridge, alone, became liable in law to pay back to Hannah Buck, Sarah McClellan and Emma Powe any and all of the money which may have been had of either of them. He took the money and used it, and it became his to all intents and purposes. His wife had no power in law to bind herself to repay money borrowed to speculate in real estate.

See 11 OTTO.

Naylor v. Field, 5 Dutch., 29 N. J. L., 287; Dilts v. Stevenson, 17 N. J. Eq., 413, and cases cited on page 414; Glann v. Younglove, 27 Barb., 480; Eckert v. Reuter, 33 N. J. L., and cases cited; Lewis v. Perkins, 36 N. J. L., 133; Hallowell v. Horter, 35 Pa., 379.

2. If this last proposition is true, then it follows as a necessary result, that, even if Aldridge purchased the property in question with money obtained of Hannah Buck, Sarah McClellan and Emma Powe, it became his property, and he could not, by taking the deeds in the name of his wife, place it beyond the reach of his creditors.

3. That the property in question having been purchased by Aldridge with his own means, and the title taken in the name of his wife, it became, so far as the interests of his creditors were concerned, his property and his assignee in bankruptcy is, therefore, entitled to a conveyance of it to him.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit in equity brought by the assignee in bankruptcy of Thomas Aldridge, to reduce to his possession, as part of the estate, property standing in the name of Anne Aldridge, the wife of the bankrupt. The theory of the bill is that the bankrupt, while largely indebted, purchased the property in controversy with his own means, and took the title in the name of his wife to keep it away from his creditors.

New Jersey has been among the most liberal of the States in modifying the rules of the common law prescribing the marital rights of the husband in the property of his wife and in protecting her against the claims of his creditors. In 1851 a widow was given the right to demand from the personal representative of her deceased husband all personal property which, at or immediately before her coverture, belonged to her, or which came to her during coverture by bequest, gift or inheritance, if it remained in his possession at the time of his death. Laws of 1851, p. 201. In 1852 it was enacted that a married woman might receive by gift, grant, devise or bequest, and hold for her sole and separate use, real and personal property, and the rents, issues and profits thereof, and that her sole and separate property should not be subject to the disposal of her husband or liable for the payment of his debts. Laws of 1852, p. 407. In 1857 married women were authorized to bind themselves by covenants in conveyances of their lands, provided their husbands joined with them in the deed (Laws of 1857, p. 485), and in 1862 it was enacted that if a married woman transacted business or purchased property, and thereby contracted debts, she might be sued at law for the recovery of the amount, and that any judgment thus obtained should bind her property. Laws of 1862, pp. 271, 272.

It is conceded by the counsel for the appellee that the Circuit Judge expressed the law of the State accurately when he said in his opinion, filed with the record, that "The courts of the State, in numerous decisions, have construed it (the Act of 1852) to authorize the acquisition by a married woman of personal property and real estate, and to intercept the common law right of her husband to reduce her personal property to possession, and to appropriate the rents, issues and profits of her real estate, as an incident of his initiate estate by the curtesy." Another principle stated by the Circuit Judge is also conceded to be correct. It is as follows: "When, therefore, in New Jersey, the title to real estate is conveyed to a married woman, she must be considered the bona fide owner of it, as if she were a single female. But it must be intrenched in the real good faith by which an honest acquisition is distinguished. If it is purchased by her or for her, no matter by whom, and is paid for out of her separate estate, its validity cannot and ought not to be questionable. But if she has no separate estate, or that is disproportionately small compared with the consideration ostensibly furnished by her, and her means are materially supplemented by her husband's contribution from resources, whether money or its equivalent, which he could not rightfully so apply, such a transaction does not specially invite, as it certainly does not deserve, any legal sanction." It is equally true that a husband may manage the separate property of his wife without necessarily subjecting it, or the profits arising from his management, to the claims of his creditors. Voorhees v. Bonesteel, 16 Wall., 16 [83 U. S., XXI., 268].

Such being the law of the case, we come now to consider the facts. Mr. and Mrs. Aldridge, the appellants, were married in 1842. The wife had, at the time, money and personal property amounting to about $1,000, which came to her by inheritance from a deceased relative. The most of this was invested soon after in furniture for the home of the family. The husband was an instrument-maker by trade, but at some time before 1857, left that business and engaged in the manufacture of oakum. In 1857 his factory was burned, and being unable to collect his insurance money on account of the insolvency of the company in which his property was insured, he failed and became utterly insolvent. After giving up all his property to his creditors, he remained largely in debt. Confessedly, in the early part of 1861 he had nothing. In May of that year he was appointed postmaster at Hudson City, New Jersey. The emoluments of this office were then considerably less than $1,000 a year. He was also a real estate agent and conveyancer.

During that year Mrs. Aldridge received about $400 from her father's estate in England. In September, a friend of the family had a lot for sale with a barn on it. The price was $350, and the terms easy. A purchase of this lot was made in the name of the wife. Not more than $25, if that, was paid down. The balance of the purchase money was secured by assuming a mortgage already on the lot for $250, and giving another mortgage, in which the husband and wife joined, for $75. Mrs. Aldridge, with the money she had received from her father's estate, and more which she borrowed from a maiden sister, converted the barn on the lot into a house. The cost of this was between $1,000 and $1,200, and the house was occupied by the family as a residence until 1869, when it was sold with the lot for something more than $4,000.

In the course of the years 1863 and 1864, some female friends of Mrs. Aldridge, countrywomen of hers, loaned her $1,900; one furnishing $700 and the other $1,200. She also borrowed further sums from her sister, who was frequently an inmate of the family, and seems to have had money. The precise sum got from her sister does not appear, but the evidence leaves no doubt in our minds that with this and the other sums borrowed she had as her separate capital more than $3,000.

During the years 1863, 1864 and 1865 five different purchases of property were made in her name. The aggregate of all these, except the last, was only a little more than $3,000 and credit was given on much of the purchase money. Some sales were made in the meantime and a little profit realized. The last of the five purchases was made in January, 1865. The money needed to make up what was wanted for the down payment was raised by a mortgage of one of the previous purchases. The property embraced in the last purchase was sold in the early part of 1866, and a profit of nearly $4,000 realized. Many other purchases were made afterwards, but it is conceded that the money to make the payments came directly or indirectly from the returns of this last fortunate transaction.

While it may not be, in all cases, quite clear from what particular source the money came that was used in paying for each one of the earlier purchases, the testimony leaves no doubt with us that, as a whole, they were paid for from the loans made to the wife by her sister and friends, and that all the property she now has is the result of a judicious employment of the capital she thus acquired and its legitimate profits. While the negotiations were all made by the husband, the titles were openly taken in the name of the wife. The appellants were called on to answer whether the purchase money, or any part of it, was paid from the means of the husband, and they stated, under oath, most unequivocally, that it was not. This throws the burden of proof on the complainant and, after a full and careful examination of the whole case, we are unable to find that anything which the creditors of the bankrupt could have subjected to the payment of their debts ever went into the property that the wife now holds. Undoubtedly, the husband's services were largely the cause of the fortunate results; but, so far as we have been able to discover, they were devoted to the management of what was both, in law and in fact, her separate property. Her accumulations from that source do not belong to his creditors.

To our minds, it is an important element in this case that the transactions out of which this suit arose commenced thirteen years or thereabouts, before any attempt was made to impeach them. They were always open, and no effort at concealment was ever made. All deeds were taken in the name of the wife and promptly put on record. The husband's connection with all the purchases and sales must have been well known. The character of his own business must also have been understood. His bank accounts show that he was a large daily depositor in his own name. His checks were numerous and sometimes for considerable amounts. He seems sometimes to have been employed in the course of his business as land agent by heavy property owners. All his debts must have been contracted as early as 1857, and he was not adjudged a bankrupt until 1873. During all the time between these dates it is not shown that anyone ever attempted to interfere with his own business or to reach the property in the name of his wife, some of which she had held six or seven years. This can be explained in no other way than upon the assumption that the creditors knew the money he was depositing was not, to any considerable extent, his own, and that his transactions in the name of his wife were, in fact, what they purported to be, the result of a judicious management of her separate estate. After such delay, we are not inclined to set aside what has been permitted to remain so long undisturbed, simply because of an inability to explain with exact certainty from what precise source the money came which went into the purchase of each particular parcel of property. It is sufficient, for the purposes of this case, that, with the money Mrs. Aldridge borrowed from her sister and friendly countrywomen, and the profits of her several investments, she had enough of her own, which was her separate estate, to make herself the owner of all she now has without interfering with the just rights of her husband's creditors. The consideration ostensibly furnished by her is not more than we are satisfied she had, and her means were not materially supplemented by contributions from her husband's resources that in law belonged to his creditors. Such services as he rendered in her behalf were no more than were consistent with all the obligations he was under to those to whom he was indebted, and there is no evidence to satisfy us that his own money was used to make any of the payments of purchase money.

That the several loans, which made up the capital invested, were to the wife and not to the husband, is, to our minds, entirely clear. The insolvency of the husband was well understood, and it is evident from all the circumstances that the friends who made the loans would never have done so had it not been supposed that the money was to be used for the benefit of Mrs. Aldridge, and that she and her estate were to become bound for the repayment. The laws of New Jersey authorized her to contract such debts, and made her separate estate liable therefor. The signature of the husband to the notes and mortgages did not, necessarily, make the money or the property for which they were given, his. It perfected the obligation of his wife and subjected her property to liability, but did not transfer her separate estate to him. Unless his means were actually used to pay her debts, his creditors have lost nothing they ever had a right to claim as in law or equity belonging to them. Conrad v. Shomo, 44 Pa., 193; Brown v. Pendleton, 60 Pa., 419. As he was at the time hopelessly insolvent, it cannot for a moment be supposed that credit was given to his personal obligation. The wife and her separate estate furnished the only security the parties supposed they had for the money which was loaned.

We have thought it unnecessary to go over the details of the evidence in an opinion. The result we have unanimously reached is, that the decree below should be reversed and the cause remanded with instructions to dismiss the bill with costs. It is, consequently, so ordered.

Illinois State Reform School—state statute.

*1. This court will not declare an Act of the State Legislature to be repugnant to the Constitution of the State, except there be a clear and strong conviction of their incompatibility with each other. In the enactment of laws the Legislature must exercise its judgment and discretion. Upon questions of pure policy and expediency, no express or necessarily implied constitutional provision intervening, it is the sole judge.

2. The Act of the Illinois Legislature, establishing the State Reform School, examined. The provision, authorizing municipal corporations to donate money to secure its location within their limits, sustained, there being no settled or uniform construction of the State Constitution to the contrary, by the Supreme Court of the State.

[No. 232.]

Argued Mar. 31, 1880. Decided Apr. 19, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois. The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Robert G. Ingersoll, E. C. Ingersoll, Merrick & Morris and William S. Bush, for plaintiff in error:

The state court, in the case of Livingston Co. v. Weider, 64 Ill., 427, decided that the bonds were void for want of power on the part of the county to issue them.

The power of towns as political subdivisions, to levy taxes, is limited to purely local corporate purposes, and is not extended to state purposes; for "It is now well settled that a town, in its corporate capacity, will not be bound, even by the express vote of a majority, to the performance of contracts, or other legal duties, not coming within the scope of the objects and purposes for which they are incorporated."

Anthony v. Inhabitants of Adams, 1 Met., 286; Stetson v. Kempton, 13 Mass., 272; Spaulding v. Lovell, 23 Pick., 79; Hooper v. Emery, 14 Me., 375; Gale v. South Berwick, 51 Me., 177; Tash v. Adams, 10 Cush., 252; Hood v. Lynn, 1 Allen, 105; Adams v. Inhabitants of Wiscasset, 5 Mass., 328; Clayton v. Inhabitants of Hopkinton, 4 Gray, 502; Gove v. Epping, 41 N. H., 544; Op. of Justices, 52 Me., 596; Assumption of War Debts, 53 Me., 591.

It is not a corporate purpose to provide for the public defense.

Alley v. Edgcomb, 53 Me., 446; Barker v. Dizmont, 53 Me., 576; see, also, People v. Works, 7 Wend., 488; Lorillard v. Monroe, 11 N. Y., 393.

The principle of the cases just cited applies to this case. If the money subscribed was not for the purchase or improvement of property to be owned and controlled by the County, but for an institution owned and controlled by the State, then the County Board was acting as agent for the State, and in levying taxes was authorized to levy them for a state purpose, in violation of the law of uniformity. The money to be raised and which was raised, was purely for the benefit of the State, to be paid into its Treasury; and if wrongfully obtained, the State is liable, not the County. If the State accepted illegal bonds and pledged, as security for their payment, a county tax, unauthorized by law, then defendant in error is left to his remedy against the State alone, as a tax for state purposes must be uniform, in the rate of assessment, throughout the State.

A part cannot be taxed for the benefit of the whole.

Allhands v. People, 82 Ill., 235; Slight v. People, 74 Ill., 50; R. R. Co. v. Lackey, 78 Ill., 57.

Messrs. Wayne McVeagh and L. E. Payson, for defendant in error:

For what purpose, then, is taxation proper in Illinois, under the phrase "corporate purposes" named in the Constitution?

Our own court has frequently had this provision before it, and given to it a meaning which affords an easy solution of the question as it relates to this case.

See, Shaw v. Dennis, 5 Gilm., 10 Ill., 416; Johnson v. Stark Co., 24 Ill., 88; Taylor v. Thompson, 42 Ill., 9; R. R. Co. v. Smith, 62 Ill., 273; Nichol v. Nashville, 9 Humph., 268.

From these cases this proposition is clearly deducible.

If the tax is for a public purpose, and is raised under authority from the Legislature, from either real or legally assumed benefit to the municipality, then it will be sustained.

Cooley in his work on Taxation, p. 114, treating of overlying taxing districts, cites the illustration of building a state capitol; that not only may the people at large be taxed for its construction, but any local district, which, in the opinion of the Legislature, was so situated as to be peculiarly benefited by the location of the building, might be burdened by an exceptional tax, and thus the taxable property of that district contribute twice to the same object.

So it was held in Kirby v. Shaw, 19 Pa., 258, 261; Thomas v. Leland, 24 Wend., 65; Merrick v. Amherst, 12 Allen, 500.

Is there any difference in principle, on the question being considered, between a state capitol and a state reform school? Is the one any less a state institution than the other?

Marks v. Purdue University, 37 Ind., 155.

If the Legislature has fixed the district and laid the tax for the reason that, in the opinion of the legislative body, such district is peculiarly benefited, that is conclusive.

Cooley, Tax., 450; Litchfield v. Vernon, 41 N. Y., 123; People v. Lawrence, 41 N. Y., 140; Philadelphia v. Field, 58 Pa. St., 320.

So held in Illinois.

Shaw v. Dennis, 5 Gilm., 10 Ill., 416.

The judicial tribunals cannot interfere with the legislative discretion, however onerous it may be.

The Weider case has been overruled by the Supreme Court of Illinois.

Burr v. Carbondale, 76 Ill., 455; see Keithsburg v. Frick, 34 Ill., 405; R. R. Co. v. Morris, 84 Ill., 411.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

The court is asked in this action to declare an Act of the General Assembly of Illinois to be repugnant to the Constitution of that State. The Act referred to was approved March 5, 1867. It established a State Reform School for the discipline, education, employment and reformation of juvenile offenders and vagrants, between the ages of eight and eighteen years. The management of the institution was committed to a Board of Trustees, appointed by the Governor, by and with the consent of the Senate. Cook County was excepted from the operations of the Act, because a similar institution had been previously established in that County.

The Board, upon its organization, was required to proceed in the selection of a suitable site, in or near the central portion of the State, on which the necessary buildings should be erected. In determining such location, the trustees were directed to take into consideration any proposition, of the performance of which they had satisfactory assurance, to give to the State the lands necessary for the site of the "House of Refuge," or any materials or money to aid in the erection thereof. Any bond or other obligation executed to the people of the State, and delivered to the trustees of the institution, to secure any such site, money or materials, the Act declared, should be binding upon the parties executing the same. 1 Gross, Stat., 564.

On the 19th of April, 1869—the institution not then having been permanently located—an amendatory Act was passed, which, among other things, declared:

That any township, county, town or city might make a subscription in aid of the school, in money, bonds or lands, for the purpose of securing its location within its limits;

That such subscription, if by a county, should be made by resolution, to be adopted by a majority vote of its Board of Supervisors, at a regular or special meeting thereof; if by a township, by resolution of the supervisor, town clerk and assessor, acting as a Board for the township; if by a town, by resolution or ordinance of its Board of Trustees; and if by a city, by a resolution or ordinance passed in the usual manner;

That no subscription should be made by a township, town or city, except in pursuance of a popular vote, at an election called and held in the manner specified in the Act; and,

That the township, county, town or city making such subscription might provide for the payment of the principal and interest thereof, by tax upon the taxable property of such county, township, town or city, to be levied and collected as other taxes. 1 Gross, Stat., 564, et seq.

Under this legislation, the County of Livingston, through its Board of Supervisors, in consideration of the location of the school within its limits, and to aid in the erection of the necessary buildings, donated the sum of $50,000, and, in payment thereof, issued county bonds, with interest coupons attached. The bonds, dated July 15, 1869, signed by the chairman and clerk of the Board of Supervisors, under the county seal, and reciting upon their face that they were executed and issued under the provisions of the Acts of March 5, 1867, and April 19, 1869, and in accordance with the resolution of the Board of Supervisors, were delivered to the trustees of the school, who caused them to be sent to Pennsylvania for sale. They were there sold, in open market, to citizens of that State, and the proceeds applied, by the State of Illinois, to the completion of the buildings connected with the Reform School.

The institution went into operation as contemplated by the Legislature.

The present action was brought by Darlington upon some of the interest coupons, he, it is agreed, having become the legal holder thereof, in good faith, for a valuable consideration.

The circuit court gave judgment against the County.

Upon this writ of error the controlling question presented for our determination is, whether the Acts of the General Assembly of Illinois, under which the bonds were issued, are, as to the provisions authorizing municipal donations to secure the location of the Reform School, repugnant to the 5th section of article 9 of the Constitution of the State, ratified in 1848.

That section declares that "The corporate authorities of counties, townships, school districts, cities, towns and villages may be vested with power to assess and collect taxes for corporate purposes; such taxes to be uniform in respect to persons and property within the jurisdiction of the body imposing the same. And the General Assembly shall require that all the property within the limits of municipal corporations, belonging to individuals, shall be taxed for the payment of debts contracted under authority of law."

The argument of counsel in behalf of the county consists mainly of two propositions, viz.:

That, according to the settled construction by the Supreme Court of Illinois of the State Constitution, at the time the bonds in suit were issued, the General Assembly could not invest the corporate authorities of counties or other municipal organizations with power to assess and collect taxes for any except corporate purposes;

That it is equally well settled by the same court not to be a corporate purpose for a county or other municipal body to aid, by donation or otherwise, in the establishment of a state institution for the discipline, education, employment or reformation of juvenile offenders and vagrants.

In determining whether the General Assembly of Illinois has transgressed the fundamental law of that State, we recall what this court said in Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 128, where it became our duty to consider whether a statute of Georgia was in conflict with its Constitution.

"The question," said Chief Justice Marshall, "whether a law be void for its repugnancy to the Constitution is, at all times, a question of much delicacy, which ought seldom, if ever, to be decided in the affirmative in a doubtful case. The court, when impelled by duty to render such a judgment, would be unworthy of its station, could it be unmindful of the solemn obligations which that station imposes. But it is not on slight implication and vague conjecture that the Legislature is to be pronounced to have transcended its powers and its Acts to be considered as void. The opposition between the Constitution and the law should be such that the judge feels a clear and strong conviction of their incompatibility with each other."

The language was cited with approval in R. Co. v. Smith, 62 Ill., 268, where the Supreme Court of Illinois added:

See 11 OTTO.

"Enough has been cited to show the firm position of the judiciary, that the courts ought not and, in justice to the rights of a co-ordinate department of the State Government, cannot, declare a law to be void without a strong and earnest conviction, divested of all reasonable doubt, of its invalidity." Lane v. Dorman, 4 Ill. (3 Scam.), 238; People v. Marshall, 6 Ill. (1 Gilm.), 672.

Adhering to these doctrines as vital in the relations which exist between the legislative departments of the several States and the courts of the Union, we first inquire as to the state of the law in Illinois, as declared by its highest judicial tribunal, at the time, July 15, 1869, the bonds in suit were issued and put upon the market for sale.

Prior to that date it seems to have been settled by that court:

1. In Harvard v. St. Clair Drain Co., 51 Ill., 130, that, under the Constitution in force prior to that of 1848, and which contained no provision similar to section 5, article 9, of the Constitution of 1848, the right of the Legislature to confer upon municipal corporations the power of taxation for local or corporate purposes was constantly exercised and never denied or doubted; that section 5, article 9, of the Constitution of 1848, was not, therefore, intended as a grant of such power or to remove doubts as to its existence, but to define the class of persons to whom the right of taxation might be granted and the purposes for which it might be exercised; that, consequently, the Legislature could not constitutionally confer that power upon any other than the corporate authorities of a county, township, school districts, cities, towns and villages, or for any other than corporate purposes;

2. In Johnson v. Stark Co., 24 Ill., 75, re-affirmed in R. Co. v. Smith, 62 Ill., 268; Perkins v. Lewis, 24 Ill., 208; Butler v. Dunham, 27 Ill., 474; Keithsburg v. Frick, 34 Ill., 405, and other cases, that the subscription by a county to the capital stock of a railroad company engaged in the construction of a road running through the limits was a corporate purpose, for the accomplishment of which the corporate authorities of the county could, under legislative sanction, assess and collect taxes upon persons and property within its jurisdiction; that such aid was a corporate purpose, because in the completion of such improvements "The whole community is either immediately or remotely interested, those near the line on which it passes in a larger, and those more remotely situated in a less degree, but all participate in its benefits;" that, among the corporate purposes for which a county may be taxed, are court-houses, jails, poor-houses, the opening and keeping of common highways, and the erection and maintenance of bridges.

3. In Taylor v. Thompson, 42 Ill., 9, followed by Henderson v. Lagow, 42 Ill., 360, 361; Briscoe v. Allison, 43 Ill., 291; Misner v. Bullard, 43 Ill., 470, and Johnson v. Campbell, 49 Ill., 317, that a tax levied by a township under legislative authority, and in pursuance of a popular vote, to pay bounties to persons who should thereafter enlist or be drafted in the Army of the United States, was a tax for a corporate purpose; that the framers of the Constitution intended to leave a large discretion to the Legislature as to what should be considered as falling within that phrase; that the phrase "corporate purposes" should not receive "So narrow a construction as to justify the courts in holding that a municipality should not tax itself, although authorized by Act of the Legislature, because it might be a debatable question whether the proposed tax would promote the corporate welfare or not," that a tax for a corporate purpose is a "Tax to be expended in a manner which shall promote the general prosperity and welfare of the community which levies it; that every individual tax payer shall have a direct interest in the object for which the tax is levied, or be directly benefited by the expenditure, is unattainable in the very nature of things. General results are all that can be expected; and if it appears that a tax has been voted and levied with an honest purpose to promote the general well-being of the municipality, and was not designed merely for the benefit of individuals or a class, its collection should not be stayed by the courts."

In Taylor v. Thompson [supra], the court, by way of illustrating the doctrine there laid down, said: "The creation of a police force, the establishment of a reform school for juvenile offenders or a hospital for persons ill with contagious disease, would not directly benefit a non-resident taxed for their support; and yet no person would deny that these are proper ends of municipal taxation, and justly included in the phrase 'corporate purposes.'"

This analysis of the decisions of the Supreme Court of Illinois sufficiently indicates what was, at the time these bonds were issued, the established authoritative exposition of the phrase "corporate purposes." It is to be observed that when these bonds, by the joint action of the county and state authorities, were transmitted to the State of Pennsylvania for sale to its citizens, there was, in the published decisions of the state court, the broad declaration that "The establishment of a reform school for juvenile offenders" was, beyond question, a proper object of municipal taxation, and was a corporate purpose within the meaning of the Constitution.

It is necessary that we should now trace the course of decisions subsequently rendered by that court.

In R. R. Co. v. Smith, already cited, it was ruled that a township donation, made under legislative authority, and with the sanction of a popular vote, was a corporate purpose for which a tax could be assessed by the proper authorities of such township. The court there said: "It is contended that the appropriation was not for a corporate purpose. If it was for a public purpose, for the benefit of the inhabitants of the municipality, then it would be for a corporate purpose. The latter cannot be distinguished from the former; and all that we have said in relation to the public purpose of the tax will apply with equal force to a corporate purpose. * * * In Taylor v. Thompson, 42 Ill., 9, this court defined a corporate purpose to mean 'a tax to be expended in a manner which shall promote the general prosperity and welfare of the municipality which levies it.' We accept this definition," etc. R. R. Co. v. Pinckney, 74 Ill., 277; Middleport v. Ins. Co., 82 Ill., 562; Lippincott v. Pana, decided October, 1879 [92 Ill., 24].

We come now to a case which, with entire respect for the very able and enlightened tribunal by which it was determined, we are constrained to say, does not seem to be in line with its previous decisions, or with subsequent decisions to which we shall presently refer. We allude to Livingston Co. v. Weide, 64 Ill., 427, decided more than three years after the bonds and coupons in suit were issued under legislative authority, and their proceeds received and used by the State. That was a suit in chancery, commenced in the state court by the Board of Supervisors of Livingston County against the County Treasurer, to enjoin the latter from paying out money which had been collected to meet the interest upon the identical bonds whose validity is here questioned. None of the holders of the bonds were made parties to the suit. No attempt was made to bring them before the court in any form. It is not, therefore, binding upon them as a final adjudication of the questions now before us. Brooklyn v. Ins. Co. [ante, 416]; Pennoyer v. Jeff, 95 U. S., 714 [XXIV., 565]; Empire v. Darling decided at the present Term [ante, 878].

It was held in Livingston Co. v. Weide, not to be a corporate purpose, in the constitutional sense, to provide a location for a state institution. After stating it to be the duty of the Legislature to determine for the whole people the necessity for a state reform school, and that it was degrading to the State, and reflected no honor upon it to accept a donation from a particular locality to secure the location of a state institution, the court proceeds: "What peculiar interest have the tax payers of Livingston County, or non-residents owning property therein, in such an institution being located in their midst? What corporate purpose does it specially promote by such location? What is a reform school? It is a penitentiary on a small scale, as is evident from the statute cited. How can it be a corporate purpose to establish what all admit is a necessary evil, a state reform school, in any town? It is a state, not a corporate purpose."

Upon these grounds the bonds issued by the county were held to be null and void, by whomsoever owned. It is to be observed that the court, in that case, refers, but without disapproval, to the definition of corporate purposes as given in Taylor v. Thompson and, recognizing the inherent difficulty of laying down any precise rule applicable to every case, says: "The true doctrine is, such purposes, and such only (are corporate purposes) as are germane to the objects of the creation of the municipality, at least such as have a legitimate connection with those objects, and a manifest relation thereto."

The binding authority of that case is disputed by defendant in error upon the ground that his rights accrued long prior to its decision, and under a settled construction of the State Constitution favorable to the validity of the Acts of 1867 and 1869. He further contends that the rule announced in Livingston County v. Weide was substantially abrogated, if not entirely overthrown, by subsequent decisions of the same court, particularly those in Burr v. Carbondale, 76 Ill., 455, and Hensley v. People, 84 Ill., 544.

In Burr v. Carbondale the question presented was whether a tax, levied by a city under legislative authority, to pay interest on city bonds, issued to secure the location, within its limits, of a state institution, called the Southern Normal University was or not a corporate purpose within the meaning of the Constitution of 1848. The court held that it was. And if we do not misapprehend altogether the grounds upon which the decision rests, they were: 1. That the university was, in the judgment of the court, an actual benefit to the community in which it was located. 2. That the bonds were issued after a vote of the people who were to be taxed for their payment. That case was distinguished from Livingston Co. v. Weide in these respects: that a state reform school was, in the judgment of the court, an undoubted injury, not an advantage, to the community in which it was located and, therefore, to aid it by municipal taxation was not a corporate purpose; and further, that the bonds, in that case, were issued without a vote of the people.

As to the objection that the bonds, under the State Reform School Act, were issued without taking the sense of the people, it is sufficient to say that the Board of Supervisors were the corporate authorities of the County, and that the Supreme Court of Illinois had decided, under the Constitution of 1848, as early as Keithsburg v. Frick, 34 Ill., 405, and again in Marshall v. Silliman, 61 Ill., 218, and, finally, in 1870, in R. R. Co. v. Morris, 84 Ill., 411, that it was "By no means a necessary element in these (municipal) subscriptions that there should be a vote of the inhabitants of a town or city authorizing them. It is competent for the Legislature to bestow the power directly" upon those who, in legal contemplation, were the corporate authorities of the municipality. Roberts v. Bolles, decided at the present Term [ante, 880].

In Hensley v. People [supra], it was held, upon the authority of Burr v. Carbondale, that a county tax levied in payment of bonds issued, under legislative authority, to secure the location, within that county, of a state industrial university, was a tax for a corporate purpose.

Upon this review of the decisions of the Supreme Court of Illinois, our conclusion is that, testing the validity of these bonds by the decisions of that tribunal, rendered prior to and unmodified at the date of their issue, we would be obliged to hold they were issued for a corporate purpose. And, while the doctrines announced in Livingston Co. v. Weide, if applied here, would establish their invalidity, the principles enunciated in previous cases, and in the subsequent cases of Burr v. Carbondale and Hensley v. People, seem quite as clearly to sustain their validity. If, as adjudged by the Supreme Court of Illinois, it was, within the true meaning of the Constitution of 1848, a corporate purpose to impose taxes to pay bounties to those who enlisted or were drafted in the Army of the United States, or to secure the location of a state normal or state industrial university, or to pay municipal bonds issued, by way of donation, to aid in the construction of a railroad; if taxation, in the constitutional sense, was for a corporate purpose whenever imposed for a public purpose; we do not perceive upon what just ground it can be held not to be a corporate purpose for a municipality to make, under express legislative authority, a donation to secure the location within its limits of a state reform school, wherein juvenile offenders and vagrants may receive such care, discipline, education and employment as, while effecting or contributing to their reformation, will protect the community in which they live from the evils and dangers which confessedly result from idleness and vagrancy among the young.

Had the Acts, under which these bonds were issued, provided for the establishment of a reform school in Livingston County, for the discipline, education, employment and reformation of juvenile offenders and vagrants within its limits, it would not be claimed, in view of the course of decisions in the state court, that the Legislature has transcended its constitutional power. That the school established was a state institution, to be maintained after being established at the expense of the State, but in the benefits of which the County where it was located could participate, does not, it seems to us, affect the question of legislative power. It is a matter rather of public policy or expediency, the determination of which, the power existing, belongs to the Legislative Department. It was well said by the Supreme Court of Illinois, that, "In the enactment of laws the Legislature must exercise its judgment and discretion. As to questions of pure policy and expediency, no express or necessarily implied constitutional provision intervening, it is the sole judge. It has also the undoubted right to take a comprehensive view in determining the necessity of a law, and the character of the purpose to be accomplished by it. A court, with any propriety, cannot arrogate to itself all power and wisdom in such matters; and if there be grave doubt as to the nature of the purpose, the doubt must always be solved in favor of the action of the Legislature." R. R. Co. v. Smith, 62 Ill., 273. In a previous case the court had said that "A proper respect for the Legislative Department requires us to regard its Acts as prima facie constitutional." Taylor v. Thompson, 42 Ill., 14.

We express no opinion as to what, in our judgment, is the true exposition of those parts of the Illinois Constitution to which reference has been made, or as to the wisdom or propriety of such legislation as that under examination.

Our purpose has been to ascertain what was the law of the State as expounded by its highest judicial tribunal. And while, perhaps, the judgment of the circuit court might, in view of our own decisions, be sustained upon other grounds, it is sufficient for the disposition of this case to say, that the adjudications of the state court do not show any such settled or uniform construction of the State Constitution upon the questions here involved as would justify us, with proper respect to the Legislative Department of Illinois, in holding that it had transgressed the fundamental law of the State.

The judgment is affirmed.

[No. 156.]

Submitted Jan. 16, 1880. Decided Apr. 19, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. Edward Salomon, for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. Edwin B. Smith, Asst. Atty-Gen., for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 25th of November, 1871, the defendants executed to the United States a bond in the penal sum of $20,000, conditioned that Bock, Schneider & Co. should account and pay for the stamps therein mentioned as therein prescribed, and should do the other things therein required to be done, then the bond to be void, otherwise to be in force. The declaration (which is upon this bond) avers that thereafter the United States delivered to Bock, Schneider & Co. such stamps of the value of $5,500, and that they had refused and neglected to pay for a portion of them of the value of $4,400.

The defendants pleaded non est factum, performance and the non-delivery of the stamps.

The case was tried by a jury, and a verdict and judgment were rendered for the United States.

Upon the trial, the United States offered in evidence a certified copy of the bond and certified copies of the receipts of Bock, Schneider & Co. for the stamps, both from the Treasury Department, and a treasury transcript of the account of Bock, Schneider & Co., showing a balance of $4,400 against them. The defendants objected to this evidence being received, and asked the court to instruct the jury to find in their favor. The court admitted the evidence, and refused the instruction. The defendants excepted as to both points.

"The defendants then asked the court to charge the jury and direct that the defendants were entitled to have deducted from the balance shown to be due by the treasury accounts ten per cent commission on the same, as allowed by the Act of Congress of June 30, 1864, 13 Stat. at L., 294, amended in 1870, and incorporated in the Revised Statutes under section 3425, page 677.

The court, after argument, denied the motion, and the defendants excepted.

The court thereupon directed the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiffs for the sum of $4,400, principal, with interest from October —, 1872, to the date of said trial, at seven per cent per annum, being the sum of $1,052.30, making a total of $5,452.30; to which direction the defendants excepted.

The jury rendered a verdict as directed."

The brief of the counsel for the plaintiffs in error is confined to two points:

1. The admission of the documentary evidence from the Treasury Department; and,

2. The refusal of the court to instruct the jury to allow the deduction of ten per cent claimed by the defendants.

Our remarks will be confined to these subjects. We shall consider them in the order in which we have named them.

The suit was commenced and put at issue by the pleadings, and the copies and transcript from the Treasury bear date more than two years before the Revised Statutes were enacted, but their enactment was prior to the trial. They were approved by the President on the 22d January, 1874, and then took effect.

The repealing section, 5596, included the Act of March 3, 1797, ch. 20, 1 Stat. at L., 512; but section 5597 saved all rights which had accrued under any of the Acts thus abrogated. It declared that all such rights "Shall continue and be enforced in the same manner as if said repeal had not been made." Section 886 of the Revised Statutes, relied upon by the counsel for the plaintiffs in error, is not, therefore, the statutory provision by which the rights of the parties as to the point here in question are to be determined. They are governed by the 2d section of the Act of 1797, before mentioned, upon which section 886 of the later enactment is founded. They are materially different, and the latter is narrower than the former.

The Act of 1797 was the first regulation upon the subject made by Congress. The 2d section declares that "In every case of delinquency where a suit has been or shall be instituted, a transcript from the books and proceedings of the Treasury, certified," etc., "shall be admitted in evidence, and the court trying the cause shall be thereupon authorized to grant judgment and award execution accordingly; and all copies of bonds," etc., "relating to or connected with the settlement of any account between the United States and an individual, when certified," etc., "may be annexed to such transcripts, and shall have equal validity and be entitled to the same degree of credit which would be due to the original papers if produced and authenticated in court."

This section clearly comprehends the case before us.

The 1st section directs suit to be brought against "Any revenue officer or other person accountable for public money" who shall become a defaulter. If it be said that the 2d section is limited by the 1st to the classes of persons named, in the 1st, there are several answers.

It will be observed that the language of the 2d section contained no such restriction. It is general. Its terms are "in every case of delinquency," and again, "the settlement of an account between the United States and an individual." The Act contains seven sections. The 4th, 5th, 6th and 7th apply indisputably to all debtors of the United States, without discrimination.

The 3d section, fairly considered, must be regarded as no less comprehensive.

The 2d section, being remedial in its character and relating to the law of procedure, is to be liberally construed with reference to the purpose of its enactment. Sedgwick, Statutory and Const. L., pp. 311, 315, and n.

This precise question came before the circuit court in U. S. v. Lent, 1 Paine, 417. Mr. Justice Thompson there said:

"The construction contended for on the part of the plaintiffs in error, that this provision, as to the admission of authenticated copies, is restricted to certain cases, where suits are commenced under authority given by the 1st section of the Act, cannot be sustained, although it is not perceived why the present is not such a case. But the provision is general, and applies to all cases where the evidence is required, and is founded upon a proper precaution to guard against the loss of the original."

See, also, U. S. v. Lee, 2 Cranch (C. C.), 462.

As the Act of 1797 has been repealed, we forbear to pursue the subject further.

A few words will be sufficient to dispose of the other point.

It arises under the Act of June 30, 1864, ch. 173, sec. 161. 13 Stat. at L., 294; R. S., sec. 3425. The deduction claimed of ten per cent is allowed by the statute to a purchaser "who furnishes his own die," etc. The defendants declined to give any evidence to the jury, and it certainly does not appear by the record that any was adduced on this point. But it is said it was treated by the Government at the trial as a conceded fact. There is no such admission here by the counsel of the United States.

We cannot look beyond the record, and that is silent upon the subject.

It is said, further, that the transcript shows the deduction from a charge for stamps of $1,100, not here in controversy. It would be a long stride in dialectics, and one we are not prepared to take, from this fact to the inference, that the purchaser also furnished the die when the stamps in question were bought. The conclusion claimed from such premises would be a palpable non sequitur.

It is rather to be inferred that the allowance was made in one case because the die was furnished, and refused in the other because it was not.

Error must be affirmatively shown. It is not to be presumed.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

v.

ISABELLA P. STEWART.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 797-810.)

Locality of land, question of fact—first title to Mexican grant—confirmation.

1. Whether the locality of a tract, as described in a Mexican grant, can be ascertained or not, is a question of fact to be found by a jury. Where evidence in respect to that issue was introduced by both parties, and it was properly submitted to the jury, their verdict is not open to revision in this court.

2. Where two titles to the same land depend exclusively for their validity upon the action of Congress, he who first obtains the title, and not he who first applied for it, has the better right.

3. If the title of the original donee was complete when the province was ceded to the United States, it is the superior title, and is protected by the Treaty of Cession.

4. Where Congress has confirmed the concession See 11 OTTO. U. S., Book 25.

to the donee as one derived from a former sovereign of the province, its genuineness and authenticity are established.

[No. 254.]

Argued Apr. 9, 1880. Decided Apr. 19, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Alabama.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. P. Phillips and W. Hallett Phillips, for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. J. T. Morgan and Thos. H. Herndon, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Claims to land, when the Province of Louisiana was ceded to the United States, were, in many instances, incomplete, arising largely from the fact that the Governor of the Province, during Spanish rule, never had authority to issue a patent. Laws were, accordingly, passed by Congress very early after the jurisdiction was transferred, making provision for the adjustment of such inchoate claims, which in one form or another have been continued in force even to the present time.

Concessions of the kind having never received the sanction of the supreme power of the Province, they did not have the effect to segregate the tract conceded from the mass of the public lands, from which it followed that when the jurisdiction of the Province was transferred by the Treaty the legal title to all such tracts vested in the new sovereign until confirmed.

Complete titles, of which there were a few, mostly derived during the dominion of the French, needed no confirmation, as they were fully protected by the Treaty.

Sufficient appears, to show that the plaintiffs derive their title from Nicholas Baudin, an old French claimant, whose title, as the plaintiffs allege, was confirmed by an Act of Congress. 4 Stat. at L., 240. They rely upon the action of the commissioners appointed under that Act of Congress, and the proceedings of the commissioners shown in the State Papers, and the confirmation of the same by the subsequent Act of Congress relating to the same subject-matter. 4 Stat. at L., 358; 3 Am. St. Papers, pp. 19, 20; 5 Am. St. Papers, 180.

Evidence was given by both parties, as is fully set forth in the transcript and in the report of the case as prepared in the court of original jurisdiction. Stewart v. Trenier, 49 Ala., 492.

None of the other proceedings in the cause, prior to the bill of exceptions and the final judgment, removed here for re-examination, are material in this investigation, and they are omitted, with the remark that the parties will find them all fully set forth in the statement of the reported case.

Service was made, and the defendants having appeared pleaded the general issue. Both parties gave evidence, and the verdict and judgment were in favor of the plaintiffs. Exceptions were filed by the defendants, and they appealed to the Supreme Court of the State, where the judgment was affirmed. Still dissatisfied, the defendants sued out the present writ of error, and removed the cause into this court.

Since the cause was entered here, the defendants have assigned three errors, as follows: (1)

That the circuit court erred in holding that the concession under which the plaintiffs claim is a complete title. (2) That the circuit court erred in holding that the title derived under that concession, accompanied by the statutory confirmation referred to, is superior to that of the defendants as confirmed by the Act of Congress of an earlier date, and the patent issued to the party. (3) That the circuit court erred in treating the question of boundary as one to be determined by the court and jury, though the uncontradicted evidence showed that the tract could not be located by the description given in the concession.

Applicants for a concession in Louisiana as well as in California usually addressed a petition to the Governor for the land, and it seldom or never appears that any survey was had before the concession was issued. Surveys frequently followed the concession or grant; and where the proceeding is regular, it affords strong evidence to support the title of the claimant.

Regular concessions or grants were usually made in one of three ways: (1) Grants by specific boundaries, where, of course, the donee is entitled to the entire tract within the described monuments. (2) Concessions or grants by quantity, as of one or more leagues of land within a larger tract described by what are called out-boundaries, where the donee is entitled to the quantity specified and no more, to be located by the public authority, usually in a manner to include the improvements of the occupant, and with due respect to any descriptive recitals in the instrument. (3) Grants or concessions of a place or rancho by some particular name, either with or without specific boundaries, where the donee is entitled to the tract known by the name specified according to the boundaries, if boundaries are given, and if not, then according to the known extent and limits of the tract or rancho as shown by the proofs, including evidence of possession and the settlement and cultivation of the occupant. Higuera v. U. S., 5 Wall., 827-834 [72 U. S., XVIII., 469-471].

Fee simple title is claimed by the plaintiffs as purchasers from the heirs of the original donee to whom the concession was made, November 21, 1710, by the authorized agents of the Sovereign of the Province as universally admitted. Full proof is also exhibited that the concession of the donee was confirmed September 15, 1713, by the Governor of the Province. Support to the theory that the concession is genuine and authentic is also derived from a document appended to it, showing that the widow of the donee, at a very early period, presented the same at the office of the Council of the Province, in order that it might be duly enrolled in the minutes of that tribunal.

Unimportant preliminary recitals in the concession will be omitted, as it is not controverted that it emanated from competent authority. It is addressed to the grantee, and purports to concede to him "The land of Grosse Pointe, to begin at and run along the course of Fowl River till it reaches the Oyster Pass which separates Massacre Island from the mainland." Enough appears, to warrant the conclusion that the land was regarded as suitable for grazing, and the express declaration is that the entire cession and transfer were made in the name of His Majesty, "with its circumstances and dependencies," in order that the donee, his children, heirs and assigns may enjoy and use it forever, without being troubled or disturbed in the peaceable possession thereof. 3 Am. St. Papers, 20.

When the claim was first presented to the commissioners they described it as follows: the claim of the heirs of Nicholas Baudin to an island in Fowl River, being ten or twelve miles in length and from two to three miles wide, and they refer to the concession and the documents as the foundation of the claim.

Commissioners, with fuller powers, were subsequently appointed for the adjustment of land claims in the State where this tract is situated, and the plaintiffs gave in evidence their report upon the subject, entitled Special Report, No 2, as follows: Claim of the heirs of Nicholas Baudin to an island in Fowl River, called Grosse Pointe, or Isle Mon Louis, estimated to contain about fourteen thousand three hundred and sixty arpents. 5 Am. St. Papers, 130.

Extended report was made by those commissioners in favor of the claim, and it was declared valid pursuant to the 1st section of the Act confirming the reports of the register and receiver of the land-office for the district therein described. 4 Stat. at L., 358.

Proof of mesne conveyance to the plaintiffs was also introduced by them, and that the defendants were in possession of the premises. Documentary evidence was also introduced by the defendants in support of their title, as heirs of Henry Francois, for which purpose they read the entries in the third volume of the State Papers relating to the claim, as contained in the report of the register of the local land-office. They then read in evidence the supplementary Act of Congress providing for the confirmation of land titles in that State. 3 Stat. at L., 707. Also an abstract of locations from the records of the local land-office by the register, which was made a part of the bill of exceptions, and a duplicate copy of the patent certificate, with proof that it was correctly copied from the original. Evidence was also introduced by the defendants to authenticate the record of the survey and tract which they claim, and the same was read to the jury. Oral testimony was also introduced by the defendants, proving that the plat and field notes of the survey and location were correct, and they also read in evidence the patent to them from the United States, a copy of which is attached to the transcript. Both sides examined witnesses, whose testimony is duly reported; but it is not deemed necessary to reproduce it, as it is fully reported in the transcript and in the report of the case when first tried in the court of original jurisdiction. Full report was then made of the evidence, and the same was sent up to the Supreme Court of the State. 49 Ala., 442.

Matters of fact are determined by the verdict of the jury; and, inasmuch as the assignment of errors does not call in question any ruling of the court in admitting or excluding evidence, the re-examination of the record will be confined to the instructions of the court given to the jury, and the exceptions of the defendants to the rulings of the court in refusing the requests for instruction which they presented.

Exceptions, of a general character, to the entire charge of the court are not entitled to much favor, as they fail to inform the presiding justice what the matters are to which the objections apply, and frequently give rise to embarrassment in the appellate court for the same reason. Objections to the charge should be specifically pointed out before the jury retire, in order that the justice presiding may know what the supposed errors are, and have an opportunity to make any corrections that the circumstances may require, to enable the jury to determine the issue between the parties according to law and the evidence.

Six separate propositions were submitted by the court of original jurisdiction to the jury, in substance and effect as follows:

1. That the concession under which the plaintiffs claim is a complete grant, and that it vested in the donee a perfect title to the tract therein described as being in Fowl River, ten or twelve miles in length, and from two to three miles wide, and called Grosse Pointe; that if the jury believe from the evidence that the land of Grosse Pointe and Mon Louis Island are the same land, having the same boundaries and description, then the grant to the donee conveyed to him a complete title to the whole of the island, subject to the right of eminent domain, and that it is protected by the Treaty of Cession.

2. That the grant to the donee being perfect and complete, the land covered by it continued to be private property, the title to which is complete, unaffected and unimpaired by any of the subsequent changes in the sovereignty of the Province.

3. That the title of the donee was complete when the jurisdiction was ceded to the United States; which is sufficient to show that neither the Act of Congress referred to nor the patent could convey any title to the other donee.

4. That the right and title of the original donee were superior to the claim of the other donee, and that, if the jury believed from the evidence that the land in controversy is embraced in that concession, and that the plaintiffs derived their title to the same from that donee, then they are entitled to recover in this action.

5. That hearsay and reputation among those who may be supposed to have been acquainted with the facts as handed down from one to another, is competent evidence of pedigree and heirship to be submitted to the jury, who are the judges of its weight and sufficiency.

6. That the title to real property may be acquired by virtue of adverse possession and enjoyment, when taken under color of title and held in good faith openly, notoriously and continuously; that if the jury believe, from the evidence, that the plaintiffs had such possession of the premises for ten years before the entry of the defendants, then the plaintiffs are entitled to recover.

Exceptions were noted as having been taken to the charge of the court and to each and every part of it. Such an exception in the circuit court could not be regarded as sufficient; but, inasmuch as the case was reviewed and the judgment affirmed in the Supreme Court of the State, we are inclined to re-examine the errors assigned.

Suppose the matters set forth in the concession as descriptive of its location, extent and boundaries existed there, as it must be presumed they did, when the grant was made, no one, it is supposed, would deny that they would be sufficient to give validity to the title of the plaintiffs. Conceded or not, it must be so, as they show a compliance with two if not all of the modes in which such grants were made under the prior sovereigns of the Province.

Grants made by Mexican Governors, says Mr. Justice Field, were usually made in one of three ways: (1) Grants by specific boundaries, where the donee is entitled to the entire tract. (2) Grants by quantity, as of one or more leagues of land situated in a larger tract described by out-boundaries, where the donee is entitled only to the quantity specified. (3) Grants of a certain place or rancho by some particular name; which rule is well exemplified by the grant exhibited in the transcript as the grant of an island of a specified name in a particular river. Alviso v. U. S., 8 Wall., 337-339 [75 U. S., XIX., 305].

Grant all that; and still it is insisted that the name of the tract is not remembered by the witnesses, and that such changes in the surroundings of the alleged locality have taken place that neither the locality of the concession nor its extent can be ascertained.

Two answers to that suggestion are made, both of which are entitled to great weight: (1) Whether the locality of the tract as described in the concession can be ascertained or not, presents a question of fact to be ascertained by a jury. Evidence in respect to that issue was introduced by both parties, which was properly submitted to the jury, whose verdict is not open to revision in this court. (2) Possession under claim of right and color of title was fully proved, and was plainly of a character to warrant the jury to find that it was adverse, uninterrupted, continuous, open and notorious for a period twice as long as was required by the rules of the common law to bar the writ of right.

Facts found by a jury under our system of jurisprudence can only be revised in one of two ways: (1) By a motion for a new trial in the court of original jurisdiction. (2) By writ of error in some appellate tribunal for the correction of errors. Parsons v. Bedford, 3 Pet., 433, 446.

Application for a new trial was made in the court below and was refused. Since then the cause has been removed here, where nothing is open to re-examination except the question of law presented in the assignment of errors.

Separate examination of the instructions given to the jury is not required, nor could it well be accomplished without extending the opinion to an unreasonable length. Suffice it to say, in that regard, that they have been read with care and that the court is of the opinion that they are correct; from which it follows that if any error has intervened it was the fault of the jury and not of the court, which cannot be remedied here, as it can only be corrected by a motion for a new trial.

Requests for instructions were made by the defendants, which were refused, and they excepted to the rulings of the court in refusing to instruct the jury as requested.

Two propositions arising out of the facts in the case cannot well be controverted: (1) That, if both titles depended exclusively for their validity upon the action of Congress, the defendants must prevail, the rule being that he who first obtains the title and not he who first applied for it has the better right. McCabe v. Worthington, 16 How., 86. (2) That, if the title of the original donee was complete when the Province was ceded to the United States, it is the superior title and is protected by the Treaty of Cession; to which a third proposition may be added: that, inasmuch as Congress has confirmed the concession to the donee as one derived from a former sovereign of the Province, its genuineness and authenticity is established.

Even grant that; and still it is contended by the defendants that the land claimed was never segregated from the public domain. Proof of possession for a century and a half would seem to be a sufficient answer to that objection, but the claim of the plaintiffs does not rest solely nor even chiefly upon that ground. Instead of that the evidence introduced tended strongly to show that Grosse Pointe was the appellation given to the land embraced in the island now called Mon Louis.

Time has, doubtless, made some change in the topography of the place, but the description of the tract as given in the concession is as follows: beginning at and running along Fowl River till it reaches the Oyster Pass, which separates Massacre Island from the mainland. From the subsequent survey it appears that Fowl River separates the Island of Mon Louis from the mainland, and that the other boundaries are the bay and the gulf.

Grosse Pointe, it seems, must have referred primarily to some point of land formed by the waters of the bay and gulf, such as Cedar Point or some other of less notoriety. Objects of the kind would naturally attract attention, and it appears that Grosse Pointe was not distant from Fowl River, which serves to explain that part of the description that describes the course after mentioning the initial point as running along the river from the Pointe to the Oyster Pass. Beyond doubt, the Oyster Pass led into the gulf, as there is no other stream than the river whose waters border upon the island.

Nothing adverse to the authenticity of the concession can be inferred from its extent, as it was customary at that day to make large grants. Its situation as an island made it admirably adapted to the purpose of grazing, for which it was sought and conceded. Its claimants went into possession of the tract nearly a hundred years before the Province came within our jurisdiction, and on every change of the Sovereign they produced their title papers and demanded a recognition of their rights.

Fifty years after the grant, the widow of the grantee presented the title papers to the proper officer for registry, and it appears that they were properly recorded. Twenty years later, when another change of jurisdiction was about to be effected, another assertion of title was made, nor were they ever interrupted until the United States acquired the jurisdiction. Their title was complete when the ratifications of the Treaty of Cession were exchanged, and of course their title is protected by the treaty.

Want of survey since the Treaty is suggested; but the grant was of the island whose boundaries are the waters which surround it, and which separate it as effectually from the public domain as could the most accurate official survey ever made.

Priority of recognition is claimed, in favor of the other donee; but the decisive answer to that suggestion is, that the Act of Congress making it reserves in terms the rights of others, and limits the operation of the Act to the relinquishment of any claim of the United States to the land.

Most of these views are much strengthened by historical researches of the court below, as exhibited in the opinion of the state court given in support of the judgment brought here by the present writ of error. Trenier v. Stewart, 55 Ala., 458.

Without entering further into the details of the case, it must suffice to say that we are all of the opinion that there is no error in the record.

Judgment affirmed.

v.

WILLIAM E. DESPER ET AL.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 332-337)

Patent, when infringed—claims of patent—equivalents.

1. A patent for a combination is not infringed if any of the material parts of the combination are omitted; but if any one of the parts is only formally omitted, and is supplied by a mechanical equivalent, performing the same office and producing the same result, the patent is infringed.

2. The law requires the patentee to specify particularly what he claims to be new; and if he claims a combination of certain elements or parts, this court cannot declare that any one of these elements is immaterial.

3. The court can only decide whether any part omitted by an alleged infringer is supplied by some other device or instrumentality which is its equivalent.

[No. 209.]

Argued Mar. 13, 19, 1880. Decided Apr. 26, 1880.

A PPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. Andrew McCullum, for appellant.

Mr. J. E. Maynadier, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a bill in equity filed by the appellant, the complainant below, to restrain the infringement of a patent and for an account of profits and damages. The letters patent alleged to be infringed are a re-issue of letters granted 23d November, 1870, to Phineas Ball and Benaiah Fitts for certain improvements in water-meters: the re-issue being made to the complainant as assignee, on the 24th of March, 1874. The defendants, by their answer, deny that the re-issued patent was for the same invention described in the original; aver that the invention claimed was covered by another patent granted 20th July, 1869, to the same patentees, Ball and Fitts; deny that they were the first and original inventors of the alleged improvement, specifying various older patents in which, as they allege, it was described, and divers persons who had known and used it; deny infringement; and aver that all water-meters made by the defendants are constructed according to a patent, granted 18th November, 1873, to Henry A. Desper, one of the defendants, except in the omission of a certain adjusting screw.

The water-meter, which is the subject of the patent, consists of two parallel horizontal cylinders, each traversed by two pistons, connected together by a connecting rod of such length that when one piston is at one end of the cylinder the other is at a sufficient distance from the other end to leave the requisite space to be filled with the quantity of water to be measured at each stroke. This water being discharged, the pistons are made to traverse the cylinder and allow the opposite end to be filled with water, and discharged in like manner. By this reciprocating motion of the pistons, regulated quantities of water are constantly received and discharged into and out of the two ends of the cylinder alternately. The pressure of the water from the source of supply, admitted by means of proper valves, gives to the pistons this reciprocating motion. The valve gear between the two parallel cylinders is so arranged as to cause the pistons in one cylinder to move in an opposite direction from those in the other. A rotary valve is used for both cylinders, situated between and below them, being circular, or funnel-shaped, having holes or ports in its side for the induction and eduction of the water into and out of the cylinders, and being crowned with a bevel gear to give it a circular motion. Across and over the valve, extending from one piston-rod to the other, is placed a shaft, having a crank at each end, and a bevel pinion near one of the cranks, meshing into the bevel gear of the valve; the two cranks are arranged at right angles with each other, and each has a crank-pin which is inserted in a slot made in the center of the piston-rod with which it is connected; the side of the cylinder being removed, or open, between the end portions that receive the water. The slot which receives the crank-pin is perpendicular and at right angles with the length of the piston-rod, and is wider than the diameter of the pin and enlarged in the middle, in order to give the pin room and allow the crank to turn freely over after the piston has been stopped. The pistons are prevented from coming into contact with the ends of the cylinders by means of adjusting stops, slightly projecting therefrom inside. Projecting stops for arresting the movement of the pistons, and much of the mechanical arrangement between the crank shaft and the slots in the piston-rods, used for giving the proper motion to the crank shaft, are to be found described in a patent granted to Mr. Ericsson in 1851 for a water-meter having slide valves instead of a rotary valve, but in which a rotary motion was communicated to the indicator.

The patent in question does not cover any of the separate parts of the meter, it being conceded that these were all known and used before the application for the patent. The claim relied on by the complainant is for a combination only, being the fourth claim in the re-issued patent, which is in the following words:

"4. The combination in a liquid meter of the following instrumentalities, to wit: a rotary valve, g, provided with suitable ports or openings, through which the liquid to be measured can be supplied to the meter and discharged therefrom; two cylinders, b and b', for the reception and measurement of the liquid; the double acting pistons, c and c', each carrying a rod, d, and each of these provided with a single cam slot, e, arranged as described, and of a width greater than the diameter of the wrist n of the crank shaft, so as to permit of the adjustment of the pistons, that they may discharge at each stroke, as nearly as possible, the exact quantity of water required of them, and so as to allow each of the crank wrists n freely to pass its dead center, after its own piston has ceased to act on it; adjusting stops, o, by means of which the adjustment of the length of the stroke of the pistons at either end is effected; and, lastly, a crank shaft, i, through which motion from the pistons is imparted to the valves, the whole operating in the manner substantially as described."

The combination here claimed consists of five parts or elements, viz.: 1, the rotary valve; 2, the two cylinders; 3, the double acting pistons, connected by a rod having a cam slot at right angles with the length of the rod; 4, the adjusting stops; 5, the crank shaft with its pinion, and cranks, by means of which rotary motion is imparted from the pistons to the valve. The rotary valve, and the combination of the cylinders, piston-rods, crank shaft and rotary valve, were the subjects of a previous patent granted to Ball and Fitts on the 20th of July, 1869. The only additional elements in the present patent are the adjusting stops and the rectangular position of the slots in the piston-rods.

It is a well known doctrine of patent law, that the claim of a combination is not infringed if any of the material parts of the combination are omitted. It is equally well known that if any one of the parts is only formally omitted, and is supplied by a mechanical equivalent, performing the same office and producing the same result, the patent is infringed.

The first question, therefore, is, whether the defendants infringe the claim referred to; whether they do, in fact, in their water-meters, use all the parts of the combination above specified.

The meter manufactured by the defendants is different in several respects from that described in the complainant's patent. It has a rotary valve like the latter, but without any bevel gear; it also has two cylinders, with an immaterial difference of position, being placed at right angles with each other instead of being parallel; each cylinder is likewise provided with two double acting pistons, connected by a piston-rod, the same as in the complainant's meter; the cylinder heads are also furnished with Ericsson's stops projecting inside for arresting the movement of the pistons, though these stops are fixed and not adjustable. But the meter of the defendants has no crank shaft, and no semblance of a crank shaft, for imparting motion from the pistons to the rotary valve; on the contrary, their valve is connected directly with the piston-rods in the following manner: the piston-rods cross each other at right angles, having transverse slots, and being halved together, one lying immediately on the other, so that the axes of the pistons are in the same plane. The valve below is connected directly with the piston-rods by a single crank which is keyed onto its upper solid stem, and has a crank pin which works in the two slots of the respective piston-rods. Thus arranged, the successive reciprocating movements of the two double pistons impart a circular motion to the valve, which, by duly arranged induction and eduction ports, alternately fills and empties the respective cylinders.

From this it appears that, in the construction of defendants' meter, the crank shaft, with its two cranks, pinion and gearing connection, which is an essential feature of the complainant's meter, is altogether dispensed with. The defendants effect the desired result of communicating rotary motion to the valve without any such shaft, or anything equivalent thereto. The entire part, with all its appurtenances, is thrown out of their machine. They use a crank, it is true; but it is attached directly to the rotary valve, and is a part of it. The use of a crank in converting reciprocating into rotary motion is an old device. It was applied to the steam-engine a century ago, and has been applied to hundreds of different machines since that time. Ball and Pitts had no claim to it, but only to the particular method and device by which they employed it, in combination with the various other parts of their meter. Instead of the crank shaft, had they in their patented combination claimed every method and all methods of communicating motion from the piston-rods to the rotary valve by means of a crank, the defendants' meter would have been an infringement. But such a claim might not have been valid. At all events, it was not allowed.

The specification was evidently drawn with great care, and it is to be presumed that the patentees claimed all that the Patent Office considered them entitled to. We cannot say that the crank shaft was an immaterial part of their combination. The patent, as it stands, occupies very narrow ground. It requires the presence of every one of the elements specified in the combination secured by it. We think that the defendants do not use all of these elements, but that they dispense with one of them at least which is material in the complainant's meter. Our conclusion, therefore, is, that they do not infringe the complainant's patent.

It may be observed, before concluding this opinion, that the courts of this country cannot always indulge the same latitude which is exercised by English judges in determining what parts of a machine are or are not material. Our law requires the patentee to specify particularly what he claims to be new, and if he claims a combination of certain elements or parts, we cannot declare that any one of these elements is immaterial. The patentee makes them all material by the restricted form of his claim. We can only decide whether any part omitted by an alleged infringer is supplied by some other device or instrumentality which is its equivalent. We think no such equivalent is supplied in this case. The general construction of the defendants' meter, and the arrangement of its parts, are so different from that described in the complainant's patent, and claimed therein, that the defendants are enabled to dispense with the entire part referred to.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

v.

EMORY CLAPP ET AL.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 551-555.)

Power of Federal Court over State Court.

The U. S. Circuit Court cannot, upon a bill filed therein for that purpose, set aside a decree of a State Court and a sale, in a case in which the State Court had jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter.

[No. 249.]

Argued Apr. 8, 1880. Decided Apr. 26, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Bentinck Egan and Enoch Totten, for appellant.

Mr. P. Phillips, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a bill in chancery, filed in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana, which was dismissed by the decree of that court for want of jurisdiction.

The bill, though very informal, sets out certain proceedings in the State Court of Louisiana for the Parish of St. John the Baptist, under which real property on which he held a large mortgage had been sold, which, if permitted to stand, cut off the lien of his mortgage. These proceedings were based ostensibly on notes and mortgages given by himself to one Emory Clapp for the purchase money of the property. The bill alleges, however, that Schexuayder Brothers, to whom plaintiff had sold the property, had assumed the payment of those notes as part of the consideration of the sale to them, and had given him a mortgage for over $14,000 in addition; that after said Schexuayder Brothers had, in fact, paid off said mortgage to Clapp, they entered into a fraudulent conspiracy with him to have the property sold under that mortgage for the purpose of cheating the complainant out of the $14,000 due him by defeating his lien on the land; that a suit was commenced in a parish of which the complainant was not a resident, of which he had no sufficient notice, though he was by the petition made a party; that in this proceeding a summary order of sale was had; that before the sale plaintiff applied to the Judge and obtained an order for injunction, which the clerk refused to issue, and the property was sold to said Clapp for the sum of $10,000. He charges that the refusal of the clerk to issue the writ of injunction was a part of the fraudulent conspiracy to cheat him out of his lien on the land, and that the whole proceeding is void. He also alleges that his loss or damage by this proceeding is $20,000, for which he prays a judgment or decree.

To this bill Emory Clapp filed what is called an exception to the jurisdiction, a demurrer and a plea. Both the exception and the demurrer are founded on the proposition that the bill being the equivalent of a proceeding in the State Courts to procure a declaration of nullity of a judgment, can only be had in the court which rendered the judgment. The plea sets up a proceeding in the State Court on a motion whereby, under the laws of Louisiana, after a judicial sale, certain proceedings in the nature of notice to all the world are had, and a judgment of confirmation of the sale is made.

The final decree of the court is thus set out in the record:

"PIERRE NOUGUÉ vs.
EMORY CLAPP. } No. 7,852.

This cause came on to be heard on the plea in bar, exception and demurrer to complainant's bill, and was argued by counsel.

On consideration whereof, it is ordered, adjudged and decreed that the exception to jurisdiction of the court and demurrer be sustained and complainant's bill dismissed with costs.

Decree rendered March 20, 1877.

Decree signed March 24, 1877.

(Signed) EDWARD C. BILLINGS, Judge."

It will thus be seen that the plea was not considered in the case, or, if considered, the decree was not founded on it. Indeed, this could not be so without error. The proper mode of treating a plea is to set it down for hearing as to its sufficiency to meet the bill, or so much of the bill as it purports to cover. If found to be sufficient, the complainant has a right to reply to it by denying the truth or otherwise putting it in issue. See Equity Rules, 32, 33 and 34, prescribed by this court. So, also, by these rules the charge of a fraudulent combination to cheat the complainant required that the plea should have been accompanied by an answer denying the fraud under oath. The plea may, therefore, be considered as out of the case.

The demurrer may be held to include the exception as one of its grounds, and thus the case stands on bill and demurrer, and the sole question is whether, though there may be things in the bill which, if specially demurred to, would be bad, it is a bill in which a court of equity could find relief.

As regards the claim to recover $20,000 damages, we see no reason for going into equity. If such a recovery can be had at all, it can be had as well at law. It is a proper case for a jury to determine whether there has been a combination to cheat and defraud plaintiff, and the amount he should recover for such fraud. It would seem, also, that to such a suit the Schexnayder Brothers, for whose benefit the fraud was committed and who were its principal instigators and whose actions were essential to its success, should be made parties. The charge is that they had assumed to pay the mortgage to Clapp, and had paid it and then conspired with him to have the property, which was in their possession and to which they had title, sold to defraud complainant out of his $14,000. However it may be at law, in chancery they are necessary parties to such a suit.

But the main purpose of this bill, perhaps its only real object, is, to have the proceedings in the State Court declared void.

That court had jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter of the controversy. Complainant in this bill entered his appearance in that suit at a proper stage of it, to enable him to contest the right of Clapp to have the property sold. The debt for which it was to be sold was complainant's debt to Clapp.

The usual mode in the courts of Louisiana of contesting the right to foreclose a mortgage is by obtaining an injunction, after which the rights of the parties are judicially determined by the court. Complainant appeared and obtained an order for such an injunction.

If this order was not obeyed, it was for that court, not this, to give remedy. If the court below refused to do it, there was an appeal to the Supreme Court of the State. After the sale, a motion to the court could have had the sale set aside; and that was the proper place for such a remedy.

The laws of Louisiana also provide a remedy by a special proceeding, to have a declaration of nullity of judgment in such cases as this in the court where the decree is entered. There is no allegation that the plaintiff sought any of these remedies.

We think that for this court, after all this has been done, to undertake to decree that what that court did is void, to sit in review on its judgment and reverse its decree and set aside its sale, in a case where its jurisdiction is undoubted, is unwarranted by the relations which subsist between the two courts. It would be an invasion of the powers belonging to that court, and such a doctrine would, upon the simple allegation of fraud practiced in the court, enable a party to retry in a Federal Court any case decided against him in a State Court.

We are not without precedent in such a case. In Randall v. Howard, 2 Black, 585 [67 U. S., XVII., 269], the owner of lands incumbered by a mortgage made a friendly arrangement with the mortgagee, by which the latter was to foreclose the mortgage and buy it in, ostensibly for his own use, but with an understanding that he was to hold it for the use of the mortgagor as if no sale had been made. Regular proceedings were had in the State Courts of Maryland, by which a decree of foreclosure and a sale were had, to all which the mortgagor made no defense. He afterwards filed his bill in chancery in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Maryland, charging that: by reason of this agreement, the mortgagee bought in the property for much less than its real value; that he now refuses to acknowledge any interest of complainant in the property and is trying to sell it, whereby it may come into the hands of innocent purchasers for value; that all this is in violation of his agreement and a fraud upon complainant's rights, and in furtherance of this fraudulent and oppressive course he has ejected complainant from the premises by a process of the State Court. He prays for an injunction to restrain the defendant from selling the property, for a sale of so much of the land as is necessary to pay the mortgage debt, and for a conveyance to complainant of the remainder, and for general relief. The bill was dismissed on demurrer.

The question whether that court had jurisdiction is answered in this language: "The bill in this case brings in review various matters passed on in the progress of the suit by the Cecil County Circuit Court, a court of general jurisdiction, having complete control of the parties and of the subject-matter of the controversy."

It seeks to annul a sale of lands made by virtue of a decree of the Cecil Court, sitting as a court of equity, in a cause depending between the same parties; to effect the distribution of the proceeds of the sale; to enjoin the defendant from making any disposition of the lands purchased by him; to disturb his possession, to invalidate his title, and to have the property resold.

This is a direct and positive interference with the rightful authority of the State Court. If there was error in the proceedings of the court, a review can be had in the appellate tribunals of the State. If, as is charged, the decree is sought to be perverted and made the medium of consummating a wrong, then the court on supplemental bill can prevent it."

These views, we think, dispose of the present case, and require an affirmance of the decree of the court below. It is so ordered.

Deed, as evidence—action to try title to land.

1. In an action to try title to land, a deed which did not convey, or purport to convey, the land in controversy, is irrelevant and inadmissible.

2. The plaintiff cannot avail himself in such action of a title acquired, or which did not subsist in him until, after he commenced suit. The title at the beginning of the action is the question to be tried.

[No. 217.]

Submitted Mar. 23, 1880. Decided Apr. 26, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Texas.

The action was commenced in the court below, by Hollingsworth, the plaintiff in error. Judgment having been rendered for the defendants, the plaintiff sued out this writ of error.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. P. Phillips, Bethel Coopwood, W. Hallett Phillips and W. P. Ballinger, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. A. W. Terrill, for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action in trespass to try the title to eleven leagues of land situated in the Counties of Bell, Milam and Williamson, State of Texas, on what was once called San Andres River, now known as Little River, a tributary of the Brazos.

In support of his claim the plaintiff read in evidence, without objection, certified copies from the General Land-Office in Texas, of numerous papers, constituting, together, a grant of the land in controversy to Miguel Davila, a native and resident of Leona Vacario, the Capital of the Department of Coahuila and Texas, as constituted in the year 1880. These papers, including the official survey made by the Surveyor General, show that the land embraced in that grant was "Located on the right or south bank of San Andres River, at the point where the creeks—Buffalo Creek and Donahoe's Creek—empty into said river." The limits, boundaries and corners of the land thus granted are given in detail.

The plaintiff then offered in evidence an original deed, in the Spanish language, purporting to have been executed by the grantee, Davila, to James Hewetson, at the City of Saltillo, on the 7th of May, 1839, before its acting mayor, and by which Davila sold and conveyed to Hewetson, for the consideration of $200, "Eleven leagues of land, obtained from the public domain by virtue of a permit issued for them to him by the Executive of the State of Coahuila and Texas, by order of July 13, 1830, which leagues are situated ten on the waters of the creek called Chocktau of the Red River, and the eleventh between Sulphur Fork Creek of Red River, and the south fork of said creek, distant about twenty miles west of the road leading from Nacogdoches to Kiamichi, of the same Red River, the survey of which is embodied in the patent issued at Angelina, jurisdiction of Nacogdoches, on the 30th of January, 1836, by Don Vicente Aldrete, Commissioner appointed for that purpose by the aforesaid Executive." That patent, the officer before whom the deed was executed certified he had seen, read and then passed and delivered to Hewetson.

In connection with the offer to read that deed the court, by request of the defendants, and without objection upon the part of the plaintiff, considered certain other papers, also certified from the General Land-Office in Texas, which, together, constituted the title or grant to Davila of eleven leagues of land in the Red River region, the locality and boundaries of which, as set forth in those papers, corresponds exactly with the foregoing description of the eleven leagues embraced in the deed to Hewetson.

The defendants then objected to the introduction of the Hewetson deed, upon the ground that it did not convey or purport to convey the land in controversy, and was, therefore, irrelevant and inadmissible. The objection was sustained, and the deed excluded, to which action of the court the plaintiff excepted.

1. This ruling of the court below is the subject of the first assignment of error. We are of opinion that the deed was properly excluded. The plaintiff's petition alleged title in himself to eleven leagues of land, granted to Miguel Davila, described as eleven leagues of land "Situate on the right or south bank of the San Andres River, at the place where Buffalo Creek and Donahoe's Creek empty into said river." The papers read in evidence by plaintiff, and constituting the final title, as shown upon the records of the General Land-Office, to the eleven leagues thus described, show that the survey of that body of land was made by Surveyor-General Johnson, and that the patent, based upon that survey, was issued October 18, 1833, by L. Lessassier, Mayor of the City of San Felipe de Austin. We have seen that the deed from Davila to Hewetson describes eleven leagues of land situated in a different part of the State, distant, as the court may judicially know, about two hundred miles from the land described in the petition and in the papers previously read in evidence as constituting the grant to Davila of the land in dispute. This is rendered absolutely certain by an examination of the several papers constituting the grant to Davila, of the eleven leagues of land on the waters of Red River.

From those papers it appears:

That, on the 10th of July, 1830, Davila made application for a grant by sale to him of eleven leagues of land of the public domain of the department of Coahuila and Texas;

That this application was granted on the 18th of July, 1830, with an order to the alcalde of the municipality to put Davila in possession after the land was located;

That, on the 17th of May, 1834, Davila executed to James Hewetson an irrevocable power of attorney, authorizing him to select out of the public domain of the State the eleven leagues of land conceded to Davila in the year 1830;

That, on the 5th of June, 1834, Hewetson executed to M. B. Menard, of Nacogdoches, a power of substitution, which, on the 24th of May, 1835, was revoked, and the authority which Hewetson had received from Davila was conferred upon one John Cameron;

That, on the 27th of July, 1835, George Aldrich, surveyor, under an order from the special commissioner, appointed by the Governor of the State, of date July 2, 1835, surveyed one of the eleven leagues "between Sulphur Fork of Red River and the south branch of said creek, about twenty miles west of the road leading from Nacogdoches to Kiamichi, of the Red River;" and on the 3d of November, 1835, he surveyed the remaining ten leagues "on the waters of the creek called Choctaw Bayou of Red River;"

That these surveys were transmitted to the special commissioner, who, by order of January 30, 1836, directed title to issue; and it was so issued on that day, the final paper describing the land exactly as set forth in the deed to Hewetson, and referring, by way of identification, to the field notes of the surveyor, Aldrich.

While the origin of the title of the eleven leagues on the San Andres River, as well as of the eleven leagues on the Red River, may have been an application of Davila on the 30th day of July, 1830, it is perfectly clear that there were, in fact, surveys of two distinct bodies of land, widely separated, resulting in grants to Davila of two different tracts of eleven leagues each. This is shown, partly, by the fact that the final document in the title for the eleven leagues on the San Andres River was executed by Lessassier on the 18th of October, 1833, at San Felipe de Austin, while that for the eleven leagues on Red River was executed by Special Commissioner Vicente Aldrete, at Angelina, and not until January 30, 1836. The former body of land was embraced in one survey, made by Surveyor-General Johnson, while the latter was surveyed by Aldrich, and was embraced in two surveys, one of which called for ten leagues, and the other for one league.

It thus appears that the plaintiff, in support of his title to eleven leagues of land on the San Andres River, offered to read a deed which upon its face clearly and, in connection with the papers relating to the Red River lands, incontestably showed that the land it purported to convey was not the land described in the petition, and the title to which was in dispute.

The contention of the plaintiff is that it was for the jury to say whether the land described in the Hewetson deed was the same land which, in the title papers read in evidence, was described as situated on San Andres River. No such conclusion could, however, have been fairly reached by the jury consistently with the evidence. The deed was unambiguous in its terms and, whether interpreted by its own language or in the light of the papers constituting the grant to the Red River lands, there was no ground whatever to infer that Davila, by the conveyance of lands on Red River, intended to convey the title to lands on San Andres River.

Whether the grant to Davila of the lands on Red River was void by reason of the prohibition against uniting more than eleven leagues in the same lands, or because of the declaration in the Texas Constitution of 1836, to the effect "That all surveys and locations made since the act of the late consultation closing the land-offices and all titles made since that time are null and void," it is not necessary to inquire. For, if that proposition be conceded, it is, nevertheless, manifest that the papers constituting the grant to the Red River lands, read without objection, were evidence in illustration or explanation of the excluded deed; and they utterly negative the idea that the grantor, by a conveyance of eleven leagues, situated on the Choctaw and Sulphur Creeks of the Red River (quoting from the deed), "The survey of which is embodied in the patent issued at Angelina, jurisdiction of Nacogdoches, on the 30th day of January, 1836, before Don Vicente Aldrete, commissioner, etc.," intended to pass the title to eleven leagues of land on San Andres River, the final title to which passed by patent issued October 18, 1833, at the City of San Felipe de Austin, by L. Lessassier, mayor of said city and its municipality.

It is scarcely necessary to cite the authority of text writers, or of adjudged cases in the Supreme Court of Texas or elsewhere, to prove that the deed was inadmissible as evidence in support of plaintiff's title to the land described in the petitions and in the papers read in evidence by him as constituting the original grant to Davila of eleven leagues on San Andres River. The deed conveys lands that were surveyed and located in the Red River region. It was, therefore, inadmissible for the plaintiff in this action, in any view which may be properly taken of the case.

2. The plaintiff then offered in evidence a deed from Inez, the legitimate daughter and only heir at law of Miguel Davila, and her husband, dated September 28, 1869. It was acknowledged by the wife on the 12th of September, 1876, upon privy examination before the Consul of the United States for Saltillo and its dependencies, and by the husband a few days thereafter. That deed recited that Miguel Davila had many years before sold to James Hewetson his concession of eleven leagues of land on the San Andres River, and had on May 7, 1869, by public act, conveyed the same to said Hewetson, "Describing said land by mistake as being situated in another part of Texas instead of where it was in fact situated." The deed ratifies and confirms the sale to Hewetson, and releases and conveys to him all the right, title and interest of the grantors.

That deed, upon the objection of defendants, was also excluded, which ruling constitutes the next error assigned by the plaintiff.

No error was committed in rejecting that deed as evidence in support of plaintiff's claim. This action was commenced in 1874. At that time the deed had not been acknowledged so as to pass the title, if any, which the female grantee had in the premises in controversy. Her interest in the land, if any she had, was her separate estate, of which she could not, under the laws of Texas, be divested, except by the conveyance of herself and husband, and after her privy examination before the proper officer. Such examination had not taken place when this action was commenced. The plaintiff could not avail himself in this action of a title acquired, or which did not subsist in him until, after he commenced suit. The title at the beginning of the action was the question to be tried.

8. The plaintiff finally offered to read in evidence a deed purporting to have been executed in 1873 by the heirs of James Hewetson to the plaintiff and another. This deed was very properly excluded upon the ground that the plaintiff had failed to connect himself with the sovereignty of the soil, and declined to state that he expected to show any other title than that previously offered.

The court thereupon instructed the jury, as was its duty to do, to find for the defendants.

The judgment is affirmed.

CHARLES JONES, Assignee of the NEW YORK KEROSENE OIL CO., Appt.,

v.

NEW YORK GUARANTY AND INDEMNITY COMPANY.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 622-633.)

Power of corporation to mortgage—ultra vires—lien of mortgage—contract by agent—parol evidence.

1. Where a New York corporation is authorized to secure the payment of its debts by mortgaging its real estate, it has the power to give a mortgage for future advances.

2. If the mortgage be ultra vires, no one but the State can take advantage of the defect of power involved.

3. Although a note secured by a mortgage be renewed or otherwise changed, the lien of the mortgage continues until the debt is paid.

4. Where a party has entered into a written contract, it may be shown that he did it as the agent of another, though the agency was concealed and the principal not disclosed, and the principal, in such case, may be held liable upon it.

5. Parol evidence is admissible to show that a mortgage, apparently given to secure the debt of an individual, was really given to secure the debt of a company.

[No. 264.]

Argued Apr. 15, 16, 1880. Decided Apr. 26, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of New York.

Charles Jones as assignee in bankruptcy of the New York Kerosene Oil Company, a bankrupt Corporation, filed a petition in the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of New York, Jan. 13, 1869, to enjoin the New York Guaranty and Indemnity Company from proceeding in an action commenced by it in the Supreme Court of New York for the foreclosure of a mortgage on the property of the bankrupt Corporation.

An order was made by the circuit court that said assignee have leave to amend his said petition so as to make the same a bill in equity.

Under that order the said assignee filed his complaint in said district court and the Guaranty and Indemnity Company filed its answer.

In January, 1875, a decree was entered in the district court, adjudging that the mortgage was not a lien upon the property of the bankrupt Corporation, and enjoining the Guaranty and Indemnity Company from proceeding to foreclose the same.

From that decree the defendant appealed to the circuit court, where in June, 1877, a decree was made and entered reversing the decree of the district court, and directing that the mortgaged property be sold, and the proceeds, with the rents, be applied to the payment of the debt due to the defendant, as found and determined by the court.

From this decree of the circuit court the assignee has appealed to this court.

The grounds of the illegality of the mortgage alleged in the bill are: that it is a mortgage prohibited by the laws of the State of New York; that it was not given to secure the payment of debts contracted by it in the business for which said Company was incorporated; that it was not made in the form and manner required by the laws; that it was not made with the consent of said bankrupt Corporation; that it was given to secure the bond of Abraham M. Cozzens, and that no money had been loaned or advanced on it to said bankrupt Corporation.

All these averments of the bill are denied by the answer, which alleges that the mortgage was given to secure the debt of the bankrupt Corporation, contracted in the business for which it was incorporated, and not for the debt of Cozzens.

The mortgage is substantially as follows:

This indenture, made between the New York Kerosene Oil Company, of the first part, and the New York Guaranty and Indemnity Company of the second part.

Whereas, at a meeting of the Board of Trustees of the said The New York Kerosene Oil Company, it was resolved that Abraham M. Cozzens, the President of said Company, be authorized to borrow a sum not to exceed $100,000 and, to secure the same, to execute a mortgage upon the factory and premises of the said Company at Newtown, Queens County, Long Island.

And whereas, the said Abraham M. Cozzens, has made and delivered to said parties of the second part, his certain bond bearing even date with these presents, to secure advances to be made by said parties of the second part, to the said Abraham M. Cozzens, in all not to exceed the sum of $100,000, and the consent of the stockholders of said party of the second part, having been first duly given and filed pursuant to law and recorded herewith: Now, this indenture witnesseth that the said parties of the first part, for the better securing the payment of the said sum of money mentioned in the condition of the said bond, with interest thereon, according to the true intent and meaning thereof, have granted unto the said party of the second part, and to their successors and assigns forever. (Here follows description of property and usual habendum in fee.) "Provided always, and these presents are upon the express condition, that if the said parties of the first part, their successors or assigns, shall well and truly pay to the said parties of the second part, their successors or assigns, the said sum of money mentioned in the condition of the said bond, and the interest thereon, then these presents and the estate hereby granted shall be void. And the said Abraham M. Cozzens, for himself, his heirs, executors and administrators, doth covenant and agree to pay unto the said party of the second part, their successors or assigns, the said sum of money, and interest." (Then follows the usual clause for entry and sale in case of default.)

The bond of A. M. Cozzens, bearing the same date as the mortgage, is as follows:

"Know all men by these presents that I, Abraham M. Cozzens, of the City of New York, am held and firmly bound unto the New York Guaranty and Indemnity Company in the sum of $100,000 lawful money of the United States of America, to be paid to the said New York Guaranty and Indemnity Co., their successors and assigns, for which payment well and truly to be made I bind myself, my heirs, executors and administrators, firmly by these presents, sealed with my seal, dated, etc.

This bond is to cover advances of money now or hereafter to be made by the said New York Guaranty and Indemnity Co. to the said Abraham M. Cozzens, for the sum of $100,000, or any less amount, upon the condition that whenever any sum shall be advanced on this bond by the said New York Guaranty and Indemnity Co. to the said Abraham M. Cozzens, the amount of such advance and the date of the same shall be indorsed on this instrument and signed by the said Abraham M. Cozzens; and when the same or any part thereof shall be paid, such payment shall be indorsed on or under such statement of advance; and the amount which shall at any time appear by said indorsements of advance and payment to be then due, shall be taken and considered as the true amount due on said bond and for which the premises which have this day been conveyed to the said N. Y. Guaranty and Indemnity Company by the New York Kerosene Oil Company, by indenture of mortgage bearing even date herewith, shall be held liable, and for no greater sum.

(Signed) A. M. COZZENS." (L. S.)

The following indorsements appeared on the bond:

"NEW YORK, May 11, 1867.

The New York Guaranty and Indemnity Company have this day advanced me $50,000 on the note of the New York Kerosene Oil Company, which amount is secured by this bond.

A. M. COZZENS."

"NEW YORK, May 18th, 1867.

The New York Guaranty and Indemnity Company have this day advanced me $25,000 on the note of the New York Kerosene Oil Company, which amount is secured by this bond.

A. M. COZZENS."

"NEW YORK, June 22d, 1867.

The New York Guaranty and Indemnity Company have this day advanced me $25,000 on oil, which amount is secured by this bond.

A. M. COZZENS."

It was insisted on the part of the complainant that the mortgage was void on its face, as in violation of the Statutes of New York, Act 1848, ch. 40, sec. 2, and Act of 1864, ch. 517, sec. 2.

Also that evidence extrinsic to the bond and mortgage was not admissible for the purpose of showing that the mortgage was intended to secure a debt of the bankrupt Corporation.

The principal facts extrinsic to the mortgage, shown by the evidence introduced, were as follows:

The N. Y. Kerosene Oil Co. was organized as a manufacturing Corporation under the Act of 1848, in the year 1860, with a capital stock of $500,000, of which $25,000 was paid in cash and $475,000 issued for property, including the real estate described in the mortgage.

Its business consisted of manufacturing kerosene oil and other products of petroleum, and disposing of them in the market.

At about the same time, the firm of Cozzens & Co. was formed, consisting of Abraham M. Cozzens, since deceased, and his son, Thomas M. Cozzens. Their business was buying and selling kerosene oil and other products of petroleum, and they became the business agents of the Corporation, attending to all its business affairs, buying petroleum, selling oil and managing generally its financial affairs. The business of the Corporation constituted a large part of the business of Cozzens & Co. Up to some time in 1864, the Corporation kept a bank account. In that year it was closed, and from that time on, Cozzens & Co. received all its moneys and paid all its bills and accounts.

Its receipts were mainly from the sales of oil, and included the earnings of a steam-tug and lighters owned by it, and proceeds of sales of barrels and other things which it procured in the course of its business.

Its disbursements were mainly for crude petroleum, labor and materials and repairs. Cozzens & Co. were allowed a guaranty and sales commission of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent on all sales, as compensation for their services. The mode of keeping the accounts between the Corporation and Cozzens & Co. was as follows:

Cozzens & Co. opened in their books an account with the Corporation, in which they credited the Corporation at the end of each month with the gross proceeds of the sales of oil during the month, and with all moneys received from other sources on account of the Corporation, and charged their $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent commission on all disbursements on account of the Corporation.

Large sums were required by Cozzens & Co. to carry on the business of the Corporation, and also in their other business. Moneys received by Cozzens & Co. on account of the Corporation went into Cozzens & Co.'s own bank account, being credited at the end of the month to the Corporation, as above stated.

The Corporation kept a separate set of books. Its accounts with Cozzens & Co. was a transcript of or made up from the account with the Corporation, in the books of Cozzens & Co.

For the better exhibition of its business several different accounts were opened, but these do not affect the relations between the Corporation and Cozzens & Co.

Abraham M. Cozzens was the principal and managing partner of Cozzens & Co. A. M. Cozzens was the largest stockholder of the Corporation, and for several years before the giving of the mortgage in question was its President. By the stock ledger, he was at the time the mortgage was given the holder of 3,590 shares out of 5,000.

During the year 1867, Cozzens & Co. were in advance to the Corporation, as appears by the accounts as follows: Jan. 1, '67, $158,201.80; Jan. 31, 1867, $91,000; Feb. 14, $95,973.85.

From Feb. 28, to June 30, it at all times exceeded $100,000.

The receipts and disbursements from Jan. to Aug., 1867, given by months. Excess of receipts over disbursements, interest and commissions from Jan. 1 to Aug. 31, was $71,136.92.

This being the relation between the Corporation and Cozzens & Co., A. M. Cozzens made application to the New York Guaranty and Indemnity Company for a loan.

The application was first made to Mr. Babcock, one of the directors, who testifies to certain representations made by Mr. Cozzens at the time of this application, afterwards repeated by him to Mr. Henry, President, and Mr. Wallace, Vice-President. Mr. Wallace also testifies to the representations and application of Mr. Cozzens, in substance as follows:

He stated that the Kerosene Oil Co. was indebted to Cozzens & Co. in $100,000. That the Company needed large advances to carry on the business; that he was the owner of nearly all the stock and virtually the owner of the concern, and had the sole management of its business; that he had a right to promise that the Corporation should give a mortgage to secure the advances. Mr. Wallace requested him to put the substance of his statement in writing, and he did so in the form of a letter, as follows:

"N. Y. Guaranty and Indemnity Co.,

Office No. 14 Broad Street,

February 15, 1867.

The N. Y. Guaranty and I Co.,

J. J. Henry, Esq., President:

DEAR SIR: It is understood that we will cause to be prepared a mortgage on the real estate of the Company on Newtown Creek, for the sum of $100,000, in your favor, and to be held by you for the loan of $50,000 made this day, and any future loan you may make to our Company. Your obedient servant,

A. M. COZZENS,

President of the N. Y. Kerosene Oil Co."

At the same interview, Cozzens produced a note of the Kerosene Oil Co., payable to the order of Cozzens & Co., and indorsed by Cozzens & Co., and stated that it represented a part of the debt of the Kerosene Oil Co. to Cozzens & Co., and asked to have it discounted; and promised that the Corporation should give a mortgage to secure this $50,000, and further advances to the amount in all of not more than $100,000.

After this interview, on the same day, Feb. 15, 1867, the defendant advanced $50,000.

They took at the time of the advance a contract similar to that required by them on all loans which was signed either by A. M. Cozzens or by Cozzens & Co., probably by Cozzens & Co. The original contract is not found, but the renewal contract is.

These contracts, signed by Cozzens, acknowledge the receipt of the advance of money upon the note of the N. Y. Kerosene Oil Co., and promise to repay the same with interest, and certain stipulated commissions for keeping the note, subject to conditions indorsed on the contract. The conditions indorsed provide for a sale of the note in case of default. The register kept by defendant shows that the contracts given in February upon the first and second advances were signed by Cozzens & Co.

The counsel of the Guaranty and Indemnity Company required the formal consent of the stockholders to be prepared in conformity with the statute, and a recital of it to be inserted in the mortgage.

An account was made up of the interest due on the \$50,000 advance; a charge was made for commissions to May 11, at the same rate of $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent for 60 days, and these sums, together with discount and commissions for the next 60 days, amounting in all to \$1,943.06, were paid by Cozzens & Co., and a contract was signed by A. M. Cozzens to conform to the bond.

May 18, a further advance of $25,000 was made in a check to order of A. M. Cozzens on a similar contract signed by Cozzens. A similar contract and note were given. It was indorsed on the bond.

June 22, a further advance was made of $25,000 in check to order of A. M. Cozzens, indorsed on the bond. For this no note was given, but what purports to be a warehouse certificate for oil signed by Cozzens, Pres.

The checks for these three advances were deposited in Cozzens & Co.'s bank account, and from it they drew indiscriminately their checks on their own account, and to pay bills and disbursements of the Kerosene Oil Co. In fact, as shown by the check-book, most of the money went to repay other loans due from Cozzens & Co. to other parties.

No part of this money was directly credited by Cozzens & Co. to the Kerosene Oil Company on their own books, or on the books of the Kerosene Oil Co., nor were the payments for interest or commissions paid to the defendant, charged to or made matter of account with the Kerosene Oil Co. in the books of Cozzens & Co., or of the Corporation. Cozzens was shown to have signed notes, and to have accepted drafts and indorsed notes and drafts as President of the Corporation, at about the time of this transaction, and money raised on this paper went into the bank account of Cozzens & Co., and was not a subject of account with the Kerosene Oil Co. in their books, or in those of the Kerosene Oil Co. The particulars of the negotiation of such loans were not in evidence.

The bill for examining the title, etc., was made out against the Kerosene Oil Co., and was paid May 27, 1867, and charged as a debt to the Kerosene Oil Co. in Cozzens & Co.'s books, and from them carried to the credit of Cozzens & Co., into the books of the Kerosene Oil Co. So was the expense, $1.00, paid to the notary for taking the acknowledgment of the secretary to copy of resolution furnished to Mr. Butler.

Messrs. B. F. Tracy and Wm. G. Choate, for appellant:

The statute authorizing the formation of manufacturing companies, and under which the New York Kerosene Oil Company was organized and incorporated, originally prohibited it from mortgaging its real estate. It provided that the Company should, by its corporate name, be capable in law of purchasing, holding and conveying any real estate whatever which might be necessary to enable it to carry on its operations, and then these words followed: "But shall not mortgage the same or give any lien thereon."

Laws of N. Y., 1848, ch. 40, p. 54.

In 1864 this statute was amended, and it is therein provided that any corporation formed under the Act of 1848 "May secure the payment of any debt heretofore contracted, or which may be contracted by it in the business for which it was incorporated, by mortgaging all or any part of the real estate of such corporation;" and every mortgage so made shall be as valid, to all intents and purposes, as if executed by an individual owning such real estate; Provided, That the written assent of the stockholders owning at least two thirds of the capital stock of such corporations shall be first filed in the office of the clerk of the county where the mortgaged property is situated.

Laws of 1864, ch. 517, sec. 2.

I. The mortgage does not, in terms, secure or purport to secure any debt of the Kerosene Oil Company, but is given expressly to secure the payment of the money mentioned in the bond or obligation of Abraham M. Cozzens, created or to be created by him, individually; and no covenant to pay the $100,000 by the Kerosene Oil Company can be implied in the mortgage.

1 R. S., 738, sec. 139; 1 R. S., 738, sec. 140; Salisbury v. Phillips, 10 Johns., 57; Culver v. Sisson, 3 N. Y., 264.

The mortgage is given to secure future advances. It does not, and does not purport to secure an existing debt. Such a mortgage is not within the statute, and is void. The statute uses the word "debt," and that word has a well-settled meaning.

Newell v. People, 7 N. Y., 124; Denny v. Manhattan Co., 2 Hill, 223; Weston v. Syracuse, 17 N. Y., 110; Carpenter v. Black Hawk G. M. Co., 65 N. Y., 43.

That the mortgage, if it secured anything, was a security for future advances, is apparent.

Messrs. Wm. Allen Butler and Geo. F. Comstock, for appellee:

The mortgage of the Kerosene Company to the Guaranty Company was properly upheld by the circuit court, as having been given under the authority of the New York Statute, permitting a manufacturing company to mortgage its real estate and secure debts contracted in the business for which it was incorporated.

The mortgage shows upon its face that it was given in pursuance of the statutory authority.

The Statutes of New York applicable to the subject, are the general manufacturing Act, of Feb. 17, 1848, and the Act amendatory thereof, of May 2, 1864.

See, Laws of N. Y., 1848; ch. 40, p. 54, sec.

See 11 OTTO.

2; Laws of N. Y., 1864, ch. 517, p. 1154, sec. 2.

The Act of 1864, above cited, as judicially construed, removed the disability imposed by the Act of 1848, as to the mortgaging by manufacturing companies of their real estate, and granted to them a power which, in the absence of the previously existing statutory restriction, they might have exercised under their common law powers.

Carpenter v. Gold Mining Co. (1875), 65 N. Y. 43.

"Corporations, unless restrained by their charters, have the power to mortgage their property to secure borrowed money or their debts."

Ang. & Ames, Corp., 191; De Ruyter v. St. Peter's Church, 3 N. Y., 238; Barry v. Merchants Exchange Co., 1 Sandf. Ch., 280; King v. Same, 5 N. Y., 547; Richards v. R. R. Co., 44 N. H., 127; see, also, Greenpoint Sugar Co. v. Whitin, 69 N. Y., 328; Gold Mining Co. v. Platt, 3 Daly, 263.

The mortgage being executed by the New York Kerosene Oil Company, under its corporate seal, by its President and Secretary, is, presumptively, the deed of the Company, independently of any recital in the mortgage that it was made pursuant to an express direction of the Board of Trustees.

In the absence of all proof on the subject, it is to be presumed that the instrument had been regularly made, and that it had been signed by the President and Secretary, and the seal of the Corporation affixed thereto by the express authority of the trustees.

Jackson v. Campbell, 5 Wend., 572; Ang. & Ames, Corp., sec. 217; Lovett v. Steam Saw-Mill Assn., 6 Paige, 54; Bk. v. Warren, 7 Hill, 91.

"The mortgage had the corporate seal attached, and the presumption was that it was there rightfully."

Koehler v. Black River Falls Co., 2 Black, 715, 717 (67 U. S., XVII., 340).

The requisite statutory proof that the seal had been affixed to the mortgage by authority of the Board of Trustees, forms a part of the record of the mortgage, and the instrument itself contains a recital that such authority had been duly given. Independently, therefore, of any question of the records of the Company the mortgage is the corporate act of the Company, and is binding upon it and its estate in bankruptcy.

Tr. of St. Mary's Ch. v. Cagger, 6 Barb., 576; Cotton Mfg. Co. v. Adams, 10 Mass., 360; Melledge v. Iron Co., 5 Cush., 158; see pp. 161-171, 175-177, 179-181; Moss v. Averell, 10 N. Y., 454; R. R. Co. v. Cowdrey, 11 Wall., 459 (78 U. S., XX., 199).

The mortgage was, in fact, executed by express authority of the Board of Trustees of the New York Kerosene Oil Company, duly given by resolution passed at the meeting of Mar. 9, 1867, and the circuit court properly so found as a matter of fact.

If the record were that of a public corporation, parol evidence to impeach or contradict it would be wholly inadmissible.

The People v. Zeyst, 23 N. Y., 140.

The reason for the rule excluding parol evidence to contradict the record of a public corporation, is equally applicable to the record of a manufacturing corporation.

See, 3 Stark., Ev., part IV., p. 997, 3d Am. ed.;

also, Taylor v. Henry, 2 Pick., 397; Buckley v. Bentley, 48 Barb., 283; Schultz v. Halsey, 3 Sandf., 405.

The meeting was duly constituted; three members were a quorum. The resolution had the force of a by-law. Ang. & Ames, Corp., sec. 328; Bk. of Md. v. Ridgely, 1 Har. & G., 324.

The Board of Trustees could delegate its authority to a quorum composed of less than a majority of its members.

Hoyt v. Thompson, 19 N. Y., 207.

The attempt to contradict the record of the meeting of Mar. 9, 1867, was manifestly dishonest and utterly failed. The fact of the meeting, and of the passage of the resolution, is established by competent proof.

The requirement of the Act of 1864, in respect to the consent of stockholders, was also fully complied with. The written consent prescribed by the statute was first filed in the office of the clerk of the county where the mortgage premises were situated.

The mortgage was given to secure a debt contracted by the New York Kerosene Oil Company in the business for which it was incorporated. This was fully established by the evidence.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

The analysis in the reporter's statement of this case [court below, as reproduced above] has divested it of all extraneous considerations, and presents it in the nakedness and simplicity of its material facts.

The central and controlling questions to be determined are:

Whether the Oil Company had the power to give a mortgage for future advances; and,

Whether the mortgage here in question is, in the view of a court of equity, for the debt of the Oil Company or for the debt of Abraham M. Cozzens.

The oral arguments of the eminent counsel who appeared before us were addressed principally to these subjects. Numerous other points are made by the counsel for the appellant in his brief, and have been fully discussed in the printed arguments upon both sides. They are minor in their character, and we think involve no proposition that admits of doubt as to its proper solution. We are satisfied with the disposition made of them by the circuit court, and shall pass them by without further remark.

At the common law, every corporation had, as incident to its existence, the power to acquire, hold and convey real estate, except so far as it was restrained by its charter or by Act of Parliament. This comprehensive capacity included, also, personal effects of every kind.

The jus disponendi was without limit or qualification. It extended to mortgages given to secure the payment of debts. 1 Kyd, Corp., 69, 76, 78, 108; Ang. & A., sec. 145; 2 Kent, Com., 282; Reynolds v. Stark Co., 5 Ohio, 204; Cunial Co. v. Vallette, 21 How., 414 [62 U. S., XVI., 154].

A mortgage for future advances was recognized as valid by the common law. Gardner v. Graham, 7 Vin. Abr., 52, pl. 3; see, also, Brinkerhoff v. Marvin, 5 Johns. Ch., 320; Lawrence v. Tucker, 23 How., 14 [64 U. S., XVI., 474].

It is believed they are held valid throughout the United States, except where forbidden by the local law.

The statute under which the Oil Company came into existence made it "Capable in law of purchasing, holding and conveying any real and personal estate, whenever necessary to enable" it to carry on its business; but it was forbidden to "mortgage the same, or give any lien thereon." This disability was removed by the later Act of 1864, which expressly conferred the power before withheld. This change was remedial, and the clause which gave it is, therefore, to be construed liberally with reference to the ends in view.

The learned counsel for the appellant insisted that a mortgage could be competently given by the Oil Company only to secure a debt incurred in its business and already subsisting. This, we think, is too narrow a construction of the language of the law. A thing may be within a statute but not within its letter, or within the letter and yet not within the statute. The intent of the law-maker is the law. People v. Ins. Co., 15 Johns., 357; U. S. v. Babbitt, 1 Black, 55 [66 U. S., XVII., 94].

The view of the court in Thompson v. R. R. Co., 3 Sandf. Ch., 625, was sounder and better law. There the charter authorized the corporation to build a bridge. It found one already built that answered every purpose, and bought it. The purchase was held to be intra vires and valid. Here the object of the authorization is to enable the Company to procure the means to carry on its business. Why should it be required to go into debt, and then borrow, if it could, instead of borrowing in advance, and shaping its affairs accordingly? No sensible reason to the contrary can be given. If it may borrow and give a mortgage for a debt antecedently or contemporaneously created, why may it not thus provide for future advances as it may need them? This may be more economical and more beneficial than any other arrangement involving the security authorized to be given. In both these latter cases the ultimate result with respect to the security would be just the same as if the mortgage were given for a pre-existing debt in literal compliance with the statute. No one could be wronged or injured, while the corporation, whom it was the purpose of the law to aid, might be materially benefited. Is not such a departure within the meaning, if not the letter, of the statute? There would be no more danger of the abuse of the power conferred than if it were exercised in the manner insisted upon. The safeguard provided in the required assent of stockholders would apply with the same efficacy in all the cases. The object of the loan, the application of the money, and the restraints imposed by the charter in those particulars, would be the same, whether the transaction took one form or the other. According to our construction the Company could give no mortgage but one growing out of their business, and intended to aid them in carrying it on. In legal effect the difference between the two constructions is one merely of mode and manner, and not of substance.

Such securities are not contrary to the law or public policy of the State. Many cases are found in her reported adjudications where both judgments and mortgages for future advances have been sustained.

Our view is not without support from the language of the statute, that "Every mortgage so made shall be as valid, to all intents and purposes, as if executed by an individual owning such real estate." If this mortgage had been given by individuals, the question we are examining, doubtless, would not have been brought before us for consideration.

When a deed is fatally defective for the want of a sufficient consideration to support it, such a consideration subsequently arising may cure the defect and give the instrument validity. Sumner v. Hicks, 2 Black, 532 [67 U.S., XVII., 355]. It is not necessary to go through the form of executing a second deed to take the place of the first one. This principle applies to the mortgage after all the advances had been made, conceding that it had before been invalid for the reason insisted upon.

The Statute of 1864 neither expressly forbids, nor declares void, mortgages for future advances.

If the one here in question be ultra vires, no one can take advantage of the defect of power involved but the State. As to all other parties it must be held valid, and may be enforced accordingly. Bk. v. North, 4 Johns. Ch., 370; Bk. v. Matthews [ante, 188]. In the latter case this subject was fully examined.

A corporation can act only by its agents. If there were any such technical defect as is claimed touching the execution of this mortgage, it has been cured by acquiescence and ratification by the mortgagor.

No one else can raise the question. All other parties are concluded. Gordon v. Preston, 1 Watts, 385.

Where money had been obtained by a corporation upon its securities which were irregular and ultra vires, but the money was applied for the benefit of the company, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the shareholders, the company and the shareholders were estopped from denying the liability of the company to repay it. In Re Magdalena, S. N. Co., Johns. [V. C.], 691. And the same result follows where such securities are issued with the knowledge of the shareholders, so far as the money thus raised is applied for the benefit of the company. In re R. Co., L. R., 4 Ch., 748.

A court of equity abhors forfeitures, and will not lend its aid to enforce them. Marshall v. Vicksburg, 15 Wall., 146 [82 U. S., XXI., 121]. Nor will it give its aid in the assertion of a mere legal right, contrary to the clear equity and justice of the case. Lewis v. Lyons, 13 Ill., 117.

The second point to be considered is, whether the mortgage was for the debt of Cozzens or for the debt of the Oil Company.

Cozzens occupied a twofold relation to the latter. He owned all the stock but a trifle, and was the president of the Company. At the same time he was largely its creditor. When he applied to the Guaranty Company, he appeared in his official character, and proposed a present loan to the Oil Company of $50,000 upon its note, and further advances thereafter to the amount of $50,000, making in the aggregate the sum of $100,000, the whole to be secured by a mortgage from the Company upon all its real estate.

This offer was accepted. The proposition See 11 OTTO.

as to the mortgage was in writing, and signed by Cozzens as president. It mentioned a loan of $50,000 as already made to the Oil Company, and spoke of "any future loan you may make to our Company," as the liabilities to be secured.

Let us pause for a moment and consider the position of the parties at this point of time. So far, all that had been done and all that had been proposed and agreed to be done was in form and substance solely for the Oil Company. Nothing had been done or proposed for Cozzens individually. There is no ground for the allegation or suspicion that the transaction was in aught other-wise than as we have stated it. It is true, the Guaranty Company held the indorsement, not of Cozzens, but of Cozzens & Co., on the note of the Oil Company for $50,000. But the Oil Company was primarily liable. Cozzens & Co. were responsible as indorsers and sureties, and were liable to be called upon only in the event of the default of the principal debtor. Until that occurred, they could not be required to respond; and in that contingency they would have been liable as any other sureties are under the same circumstances. The Oil Company was the principal debtor.

When the agreement between the Oil Company and the Guaranty Company came to be carried out, the scrivener by whom the papers were prepared, without the request or knowledge of the Guaranty Company, described in the mortgage the penal bond of Cozzens as the thing to be secured, but the mortgage recited that the president had been authorized to make the loan and to execute the mortgage to secure its payment, and that the requisite consent of the stockholders had been given; and the condition of the mortgage was, that the Oil Company and not Cozzens should pay whatever might become due upon the bond. It is true that Cozzens covenanted personally in the mortgage to pay, while there was no such covenant on the part of the Company.

The first indorsement upon the bond was made upon the renewal of the Company's note of $50,000, held by the Guaranty Company. One of those of $25,000 was for that amount advanced upon the note of the Oil Company for the like sum. The remaining indorsement was for that amount advanced upon a warehouse receipt for oil given by the Company to Cozzens and by him transferred to the Guaranty Company.

All the moneys thus advanced were applied exclusively for the benefit of the Oil Company.

There can be no question as to the first indorsement on the bond of $50,000 being the debt of the mortgagor. It was the same debt which subsisted when the first note was delivered to the Guaranty Company, and the character of the debt was not changed by the renewal of the note and the indorsement on the bond then made.

If a note secured by a mortgage be renewed or otherwise changed, the lien of the mortgage continues until the debt is paid. Changes in the form of the instrument are immaterial. Equity regards only the substance of things, and deals with human affairs upon that principle. The same state of things, in effect, occurred with respect to each of the other sums advanced by the Guaranty Company. The note and warehouse receipt given for them were the note and receipt of the Oil Company, and it was responsible accordingly. Its needs were the motive, and were at the foundation of every loan that was made; and whether Cozzens acted as its agent in making them, or transferred the securities as a creditor acting for himself, is quite immaterial. The result is inevitably the same. In either case the Oil Company became directly liable upon the securities, and to that amount the principal debtor to the mortgagee.

The condition of the mortgage being that the Company should pay and not that Cozzens should, it could not be broken without the Company's default. Until that occurred, there could be no remedy upon it either by foreclosure or ejectment. If Cozzens made default, no such consequence would follow. He could be sued on his covenant, but the rights and remedies of the mortgagee with respect to the mortgaged premises would be neither more nor less on that account. The covenant of Cozzens was collateral to the liability of the Company. No such covenant was needed from the Oil Company, because the mortgage pledged its entire real estate, and the mortgagee held in addition a direct liability for each advance upon which a judgment at law could be taken. As before remarked, there could be no breach of the condition of the mortgage without the default of the Oil Company; and if it had paid the amount due that would have extinguished the collateral liability of Cozzens and of Cozzens & Co., and if the tender had been refused, it would have extinguished the mortgage, though not the debt. Kortright v. Cady, 21 N. Y., 343.

In all that Cozzens did, he acted as the agent of the Oil Company, and it would involve an utter perversion of the facts to hold that he and not that Company was the principal debtor to the Guaranty Company.

We are satisfied, beyond a doubt, that it was the debt of the Oil Company and not his debt that was intended to be secured and was secured by the mortgage.

In examining this point, it was proper to consider all the evidence in the record. This was objected to by the counsel for the appellant. He insisted that the scope of our view must be limited to the face of the mortgage and the obligation secured by it.

It is common learning in the law that parol evidence is admissible to show that a deed absolute on its face is a mortgage; to establish a resulting trust; to show that a written contract was without consideration; that it was void for fraud, illegality or the disability of a party; that it was modified as to the time, place or manner of performance or otherwise, or that it was mutually agreed to be abandoned; also to show the situation of the parties and the surrounding circumstances when it was entered into and to apply it to its subject, to show that a joint obligor or maker of a note was a surety, and that the acceptor or indorser of a bill or the maker or indorser of a note became such for the accommodation of the plaintiff. Where a party has entered into a written contract, it may be so shown that he did it as the agent of another, though the agency was concealed and the principal not disclosed, and the principal, in such case, may be held liable upon it. A mortgage or a judgment may be assigned by parol.

These are but a small part of the functions which such evidence is permitted to perform.

In no class of cases is it admitted with greater latitude and effect than in that to which the one here in hand belongs.

In Shirras v. Caig, 7 Cranch, 34, Chief Justice Marshall said: "It is true that the real transaction does not appear on the face of the mortgage. The deed purports to secure a debt of £30,000 sterling, due to all the mortgagees. It was really intended to secure different sums, due at the time to particular mortgagees, advances afterwards to be made and liabilities to be incurred to an uncertain amount."

After remarking that such an instrument was liable to suspicion, he proceeds:

"But if, on investigation, the real transaction shall appear to be fair, though somewhat variant from that which is described, it would seem to be unjust and unprecedented to deprive the person, claiming under the deed, of his real equitable rights, unless it be in favor of a person who has been in fact injured by the misrepresentation. That cannot have happened in the present case."

The decree of the court was that the mortgagees were entitled to have the mortgaged premises sold, "and to apply the proceeds of said sale to the payment of what remains unsatisfied of their respective debts," etc.

In Gordon v. Preston, supra, it appeared that the mortgage was for a greater amount than was owing to the mortgagee. Chief Justice Gibson said the mortgage was good "for the sum actually due." He said further: "But the mortgage was, in fact, given for the benefit of other creditors, whose debts are not disputed, and though the trust is not expressed in the instrument, evidence was proper to explain the true nature of the transaction and negative any imputation of actual fraud."

In Hurd v. Robinson, 11 Ohio St., 232, the condition of the mortgage was: "Provided always, and these presents are upon the condition that, whereas the said Robinson is indebted to said bank for money loaned, and for divers bills of exchange and promissory notes; now if the said Robinson shall discharge his said several liabilities in six months from this date, these presents shall be void; otherwise, to remain in full force and virtue." The condition was held to be sufficiently definite, and the mortgage was sustained. The opinion of the court is able and elaborate. Gill v. Pinney, 12 Ohio St., 38, is to the same effect.

Other like cases might be multiplied to an indefinite extent. It is unnecessary to incur this opinion with further references. The grounds upon which they proceed are, that a thing is to be regarded as certain which can be made certain; that evidence can be adduced to apply the contract to its subject; that there is enough to put those concerned upon inquiry, and that in such cases the means of knowledge and knowledge itself are, in legal effect, the same thing.

A multo fortiori was it proper to receive the evidence referred to in the present case.

See, in this connection, also, Chester v. Bk., 16 N. Y., 336, and Horn v. Keteltas, 46 N. Y., 605.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

TOWN OF SCIPIO, Plff. in Err.,v.
WILLIAM P. WRIGHT.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 665-677.)

New York Statute for aid to railroads—valid bonds—exchange for stock—bona fide holder.

1. The New York Statute of April 16, 1852, to authorize the towns of Cayuga County to aid in the construction of a railroad, did not require that the tax payers should designate the company by its name.

2. The bonds were not void, because the written assent of the required number of tax payers on the assessment roll of 1852 was obtained, and they were not issued until after Aug. 1, 1853, when the assessment roll for that year was by law required to be completed.

3. The fact that the bonds were not issued for borrowed money, but were exchanged for stock of the railroad company is, according to the New York decisions, a defense for the town against a holder who, when he purchased, had notice of the manner of their issue; which decisions this court follows in this case.

4. A bona fide holder, who had no knowledge that the railroad company had received the bonds in payment for the stock taken for the town, would not be liable to such a defense.

Argued Mar. 11, 1880. Decided Apr. 26, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of New York.

The case is fully stated by the court.

Messrs. S. E. Day and Geo. F. Comstock, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. David Wright, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

At the trial of this case in the circuit court, the extraordinary number of thirty-three exceptions were taken by the plaintiff in error, and signed by the Judge. It does not, however, always happen that the merits of a case brought in error are to be measured by the number of exceptions taken in the inferior court, or by the number of errors assigned. In this case, the real questions, the only ones that need particular attention, are few.

The plaintiff below brought suit upon twenty-five bonds, or rather notes, each for the sum of $1,000, which, as he alleged, had been issued by the Township in pursuance of and under authority of law. Of course, it was incumbent upon him to prove that the Town was authorized to create the instruments, and to dispose of them in the manner in which disposition of them was made. The authority relied upon was an Act of the Legislature passed on the 16th of April, 1852, entitled "An Act to Authorize any Town in the County of Cayuga to Borrow Money for Aiding in the Construction of a Railroad or Railroads from Lake Ontario to the New York and Erie or Susquehanna and Cayuga Railroad." The 1st section enacted as follows:

"It shall be lawful for the supervisor of any town in the County of Cayuga (the Town of Scipio being one), and the assessors of such town, who are appointed by this Act as commissioners to act in conjunction with the said supervisor in effecting and executing the purposes of this Act, to borrow, on the faith and credit of said town, such a sum of money as they may deem necessary, not to exceed $25,000, for a term of time not to exceed twenty years, with such rate of interest as may be agreed upon, not exceeding seven per cent per annum, and to execute therefor, under their official signatures, a bond or bonds on which the interest shall be made payable annually or semi-annually during the term said money may be borrowed. * * * All moneys borrowed under the authority of this Act shall be paid over to the president and directors of such railroad company (now organized, or such company as may be organized, according to the provisions of the general Railroad Law, passed April 2, 1850), as may be expressed by the written assent of two thirds of the resident tax payers of said Town, to be expended by such president and directors in grading, constructing and maintaining a railroad or railroads passing through the City of Auburn, and connecting Lake Ontario with the Susquehanna and Cayuga Railroad, or the New York and Erie Railroad; Provided always, That the said supervisor and commissioners shall have no power to do any of the Acts authorized by this Act, until a railroad company has been duly organized according to the requirements of the general Railroad Law for the purpose of constructing the aforesaid described railroad, and the written assent of two thirds of the resident persons taxed in said town, as appearing on the assessment roll of such town made next previous to the time such money may be borrowed, shall have been obtained by such supervisor and commissioners, or some one or more of them, and filed in the clerk's office of Cayuga County, together with the affidavit of such supervisor or commissioners, or any two of them, attached to such statement, to the effect that the persons whose written assents are there-to attached and filed as aforesaid comprise two thirds of all the resident tax payers of said Town on its assessment roll next previous thereto."

See 11 Otto.

U. S., Book 25.

The 2d section we also quote, as follows, so far as is needful:

"Section 2. It shall be lawful for the supervisor and commissioners of any town in said county, on obtaining and filing such assent, as provided in the 1st section, to subscribe for and take, in the name of and for said town, such a number of shares of the capital stock of such company as shall or may be organized for the purpose of constructing the aforesaid described railroad or railroads, as will be equal to the amount of the bonds executed under the authority of this Act."

The 10th section made it the duty of the electors of the town to elect, at the next annual town-meeting, two commissioners to act in conjunction with the town supervisor in carrying into effect the provisions of the Act.

At the time when this Act was passed, so far as it appears, there was no organized company in existence with power to build such a railroad as the Act described; but on the 23d of August next following, articles of association of such a company, organized under the general railroad laws of the State for the purpose of constructing a railroad from Lake Ontario to the Cayuga and Susquehanna Railroad, passing through Auburn and Scipio, were filed in the office of the Secretary of State. Subsequently to the formation of this company, the supervisors and assessors of the Town obtained a written assent of three hundred and one residents and taxables of the Town, appearing on the assessment roll for the year 1852, and on the 8th of December, 1852, two of the assessors made oath that the persons whose written assents were attached thereto comprised two thirds of all resident tax payers of the Town of Scipio on the assessment roll thereof for the year 1852. These assents and the affidavit indorsed thereon were filed in the clerk's office of Cayuga County on January 11, 1853. On the first of March, 1853, two railroad commissioners were duly elected for the Town, and on the 16th of May next following, they, together with the supervisor, in the name and for the Town, subscribed upon the books of the said railroad company for five hundred shares of $50 each of its capital stock. On the 20th of the same month they executed by their official signatures the twenty-five bonds in suit, payable to bearer. Eight of these bonds were sold by the commissioners to Slocum Howland at par; and the proceeds of the sale were paid to the railroad company on account of the stock subscription, the commissioners taking from the company for the Town a certificate for the five hundred shares of stocks, which, so far as it appears, the Town now holds. To this extent money was borrowed upon the bonds, and paid over in accordance with the statute. Howland also bought the remaining seventeen bonds from the railroad company, to which they had been delivered by the railroad commissioners under an arrangement we shall notice hereafter, and the company indorsed the certificate of stock as full paid. It is out of these facts that the principal questions involved in the case arise.

It is contended by the plaintiff in error that the bonds were unauthorized; because, as it is alleged, the written assent of the tax payers did not conform in substance or meaning to the requirement of the statute, in that it did not "Express the railroad corporation to which the moneys to be borrowed by the Town should be paid." We think this position is quite untenable. The identification of the company in the written assent is as perfect as it would have been had it been described by its corporate name. The statute did not require that the tax payers should "express," that is, designate, the company by its name. Any mode of description that designated it was sufficient. The assent authorized the commissioners to pay the money borrowed, for which the bonds were to be given, "To the president and directors of a railroad company organized according to the requirements of the general railroad laws for the purpose of constructing a railroad connecting Lake Ontario with the Susquehanna and Cayuga Railroad, and passing through the City of Auburn." This was in strict conformity with the description given in the statute. It fitted exactly the company organized in August, 1852, and there cannot be a doubt that the assent was intended to designate that company. There was no other company in existence to which the description could apply. Unless, therefore, the word "express," as used in the statute, was intended to convey some other meaning than "described" or "designated," which can be maintained with no show of reason, the assent in form was all that required, for authority to issue the bonds.

A second position taken by the plaintiff in error is, that all the bonds except three are void, because they were issued after the assents of the tax payers as appearing on the assessment roll of the Town for the year 1852 had spent their force and ceased to be authority. This is founded upon the phraseology of the statute, which requires as a prerequisite to any action by the commissioners, that the written assent of two thirds of the resident persons taxed in said Town, as appearing on the assessment roll made next previous to the time such money may be borrowed, shall be obtained, verified and filed in the clerk's office. Recalling the facts, heretofore stated, the written assent of the required number of tax payers on the assessment roll of 1852 was obtained and verified, and it was filed on the 11th of January, 1853. Then the authority to issue the bonds, borrow the money, subscribe for the stock and elect railroad commissioners became perfect. The Town did elect railroad commissioners on the first of March, 1853, the subscription for the stock of the company was made, a debt of $25,000 therefor was incurred, and the bonds or notes for an equal amount were executed, and at least some of them were sold at par and the proceeds of the sale were paid on account of the subscription, all before any new assessment roll could be completed and before the law required any to be made. For all this there was complete authority. Everything had been done which was required to authorize the creation of the indebtedness to the railway company. Did the Legislature intend that after the Town had lawfully created a debt and lawfully executed bonds with which to borrow the money necessary to pay it (bonds confessedly authorized at the time when they were made), the bonds should become void if the money could not be borrowed within two months and a half, or between May 20 and August 1, 1853? Did it intend thus to leave the debt in existence, and at the same time to take away the power to provide means for its payment? Such a construction of the Act would be most unreasonable. It would be standing upon the letter and ignoring the spirit of the statute. It would be closing our eyes to the only substantial reason for requiring the assent of two thirds of the resident tax payers before the commissioners could exert the power given to them by the Legislature. That was to ascertain whether the tax payers would consent to the creation of a town liability, not to ascertain how or when the debt, when incurred, should be evidenced. The substance of the power was the creation of a town debt. All the rest was formal. It may be admitted the Legislature did not intend that the power conferred upon the railroad commissioners should continue indefinitely. Hence the assent of two thirds of the resident taxables, as appearing on the assessment roll made next previous to the borrowing of the money, was required. But evidently by this was meant that the assent should be given by the tax payers appearing on the roll made next before any debt of the Township should be incurred. It was protection against a town debt that was intended, rather than protection against the form of the debt or the shape it might assume after it had been incurred or when the security for it should be given. Two distinct powers were given by the statute, each dependent for its exercise, though not for its creation, upon the prior consent of the taxables. The one was described by the 1st section. It was to borrow money and execute bonds therefor, paying over the money borrowed to a railroad company to be expended in grading, constructing and maintaining its road. This section made no reference to a subscription for the stock or to a debt directly to the railroad company.

But the 2d section authorized a subscription to the capital stock and the consequent assumption of a legal liability to the company, equal to the amount of the bonds issued, which might be discharged afterwards by levying a tax, or by borrowing money, giving bonds therefor, and paying it over. Nothing in the Act postponed a subscription for stock until the money to pay for it could be borrowed. This debt was incurred before the assessment roll of 1853 had any existence. The right to incur it when it was incurred was, therefore, complete. The exercise of the power was warranted by the written assent filed. For these reasons we think the instruments sued upon are not invalid, because they were not issued until after August 1, 1853, when the assessment roll for that year was, by law, required to be completed.

The only other question raised by the assignments of error, and by the numerous exceptions, is, whether the circuit erred in refusing to rule, as requested by the defendant, that the plaintiff could not recover for the last seventeen bonds, because, instead of having been issued for money borrowed, they were issued directly to the railroad company in exchange for its stock.

This objection has no application to the first eight bonds, numbered from 1 to 8 inclusive. They were sold at par, and the proceeds were paid over to the company. This was, as we have said, a substantial borrowing. The facts respecting the remaining seventeen, as they appear in the record, may be thus summarized:

On the 7th of January, 1854, the railroad company received from the "railroad commissioners" of the Town the seventeen bonds, nominally at par, and indorsed on the certificate of stock, which the Town had previously taken, and upon which $8,000, the proceeds of the first eight bonds, had been paid, "full paid." This arrangement was with an accompanying written understanding that the company might at any time within eight months from October 11, 1853, redeliver the bonds, or any part of them, to the Town, and reduce the amount of credit on the certificate accordingly; and that if the company should sell the bonds for more than par, it should account to the Town for the excess, but that the Town might, at any time within the said eight months and prior to the sale of the bonds by the company, have the right to demand the redelivery thereof on payment to the company of the par value. The bonds were never redelivered, nor were they demanded. Sometime after January 7, 1854, when does not exactly appear, Slocum Howland bought the seventeen bonds from the railroad company, with notice that money had not been borrowed upon them, but that they had been transferred by the town supervisor and railroad commissioners, or one or more of them, in the first instance to the company in exchange for its stock.

See 11 OTTO.

What Howland paid for them, whether the company obtained their full par value, is not proved.

Howland held the bonds until 1874, after they became due, when he sold them to the plaintiff, taking his note for the whole price, and that note remains unpaid. Neither Howland, therefore, nor Wright, the purchaser from him, stands in the position of a bona fide purchaser without notice of the exchange of the bonds for stock. Had either of them been such a purchaser, the plaintiff's right to recover could not be gainsaid. But the question now is, whether the fact that the bonds were not issued for borrowed money, but were exchanged for stock of the railroad company, is a defense for the Town against a holder who, when he purchased, had notice of the manner of their issue. Were the question an open one, it would seem that it ought not to be a defense. It might be regarded as a fair presumption that the bonds were sold to Howland for not less than their par value, and that the company received their full amount in money; or the transaction might be regarded as practically a borrowing of the money by the Town through the agency of the railroad company. So far as discharging the debt of the Town for its stock subscription is concerned, and so far as relates to obtaining a full paid certificate, the transaction is, in legal effect, the same as if the money had been borrowed by the Town directly and paid over to the company. And, if it had appeared affirmatively that Howland had paid the full face of the bonds and interest, without any discount, when he bought, every object which the statute could have had in view in enacting that it should be lawful for the town officers to borrow on the credit of the Town a limited amount of money and pay it over to the railroad company, executing town bonds therefor, would have been accomplished. In Gould v. Sterling, 23 N. Y., 456, it was said by Selden, J., when speaking of a transaction like that we have now under consideration, where there had been an exchange of town bonds for railroad stock: "If what was done was the same in effect as if the money had been borrowed and paid over to the railroad company, the difference in form would not be material." Such a case, however, is not presented by this record.

The statute prescribed the manner in which the power it conferred should be exercised. The Town was at liberty to subscribe for stock, but if bonds were used to pay for it, the mode of use was directed to be borrowing money with them and paying the money to the railroad company. It is quite conceivable that the purpose of such a direction, instead of allowing an exchange of the bonds for the stock taken, was that the railroad company might obtain an amount of money equal to the amount of the bonds. This was important to the company, to the Town as a stockholder, and to the public as interested in the projected railroad. If the bonds might be delivered directly to the company in payment of the stock, it might sell them at a discount. Thus it would fail to obtain the assistance in building its road which the Legislature contemplated it should have. Its stock would be practically sold for less than par, and it would not be worth as much to the Town as it would be had all the money for which the bonds were given come into the company's treasury. Whether such were the motives that induced the peculiar phraseology of the statute or not, the highest court of New York has repeatedly construed it as prescribing the manner in which the bonds might be used or issued, and as denying the power to exchange them directly with the railroad company for the stock taken by the Town. These decisions have been constructions of the identical statute we have now under consideration, and by which the bonds now in suit are alleged to have been issued. The construction given by the state court must, therefore, be our guide. Starin v. Genoa, 23 N. Y., 439, was a suit for interest upon town bonds made under the Act. They had been exchanged with a railroad company for capital stock taken for the town, and the exchange was accompanied by the same agreement as that made between the Town and company in the present case. The plaintiff was a purchaser from the railroad company, with knowledge that it had received the bonds in payment of stock. In these respects the case was exactly like the present. The Court of Appeals ruled that issuing the bonds by exchanging them for the company's stock was not an execution of the power and authority granted by the statute, but an appropriation of them in a manner not contemplated by the Legislature, or by the tax payer's assent. The court said: "It was evidently the intention of the Act that money should be raised and paid over to aid in the construction of a railroad, and no color is given to the idea or position that the credit merely of any town should be given, through and by which money might be raised." They, therefore, held that the bonds were issued without authority, and as the railroad company received them on a consideration not authorized, it was chargeable with a knowledge of their invalidity, and it never could have enforced them. It was further ruled that the plaintiff stood in no better position, that having purchased with notice of the manner in which they had been issued, he was not a bona fide holder. Gould v. Sterling, 23 N. Y., 456, is a similar case, and the ruling of the court was the same. In People v. Mead, 24 N. Y., 114, we find a re-assertion of the invalidity of bonds first negotiated by exchanging them for stock of the railroad company. The opinion was delivered by Denio, J. It was, however, said that a bona fide holder, who had no knowledge that the railroad company had received the bonds in payment for the stock taken for the Town, would not be liable to the defense which existed against the railroad company. Horton v. Thompson, 71 N. Y., 513, is another case in which the Court of Appeals gave the same construction to another similar statute, holding that bonds exchanged for stock were unlawfully issued, and that a purchaser, with knowledge that they had been thus issued, could not enforce them.

It thus appears to be the settled construction given by the courts of New York to the Act under which the bonds now in suit were issued, and to other similar Acts, that they do not authorize an exchange of bonds for shares of the capital stock of railroad companies, and that a purchaser who had notice at the time of his purchase that such a disposition of the bonds was made by the town officers or railroad commissioners, cannot recover in a suit brought upon them.

We find no decision of the Court of Appeals that is in conflict with what was ruled in the cases we have cited, or which weakens their authority, and as they are constructions of a state statute, we are constrained to follow them. Gould v. Oneonta, 71 N. Y., 298, to which we have been referred, presented an entirely different question. A statute enacted in 1859 had authorized the transfer of the bonds directly to the railroad company in payment of the stock.

Our conclusion, then, is that the circuit court erred in declining to instruct the jury, as requested, substantially, that upon the facts proven in the case, and not contradicted, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover upon any of the seventeen bonds, because the supervisor and commissioners did not issue them for borrowed money, but transferred them to the railroad company in payment of the stock subscription.

We find no other error in the record.

The judgment is reversed and the case is remanded for a new trial.

Dissenting, Mr. Justice Clifford and Mr. Justice Swayne.

ROBERT G. SHEDD, Deceased, Adpt.,

v.

ALBERT ORDWAY.

(See S. C., "Goddard v. Ordway," 11 Otto, 745-754.)

Dismissal of suit after appeal—vacating appeal.

1. The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia had authority to set aside an order affirming a decree made at the previous Term, and give a new decree dismissing the suit, after an appeal to this court was allowed; the motion to vacate the order, and for a reargument having been made to, and recognized by the court at the same term the order was entered, and having gone over as unfinished business.

2. The court had the power during the Term, at the request of the appellant, to set aside the order of allowance, and thus vacate the appeal which had been granted in his favor.

[No. 137.]

Argued Jan. 6, 7, 1880. Decided Apr. 26, 1880.

APPEAL from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Walter D. Davidge, E. L. Stanton and A. S. Worthington, for appellant.

Messrs. R. T. Merrick, Geo. F. Appleby and M. F. Morris, for appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

This appeal presents the following case:

During the summer of 1871, Albert Ordway, the appellee, was engaged in securing a contract with the government to furnish and cut the granite for the then proposed new building to be erected in Washington for the use of the State, War and Navy Departments. His bid for the work was put in on the 19th day of June, and formally accepted about the first of August. He resided at Richmond, Va., and late in July, 1871, negotiated with Robert G. Shedd, now deceased, for a loan, not exceeding $50,000, to be used in preparations for the execution of the contract. As security, Shedd was to be given, in some appropriate way, a lien on the contract, and he was to be repaid in installments out of the profits. Under this arrangement, loans were made at various times during the summer and fall of that year, amounting, in the aggregate, to $38,500, from moneys which Shedd had in his hands as trustee for others.

By the terms of the bid of Ordway, as accepted by the supervising architect, Ordway was to furnish the granite from either the James River or the Green & Westham quarries near Richmond, as the architect should direct. He was to be paid certain stipulated prices for the stone as measured before cutting, when delivered at the site of the building. He was also to furnish the labor, tools and materials necessary to cut, dress and box the granite at the quarry in such manner as should be required, and also shops and sheds sufficient to accommodate one hundred granite-cutters, with a proper proportion of other mechanics. For this he was to be paid "The full cost of the * * * labor, tools, shops, sheds and materials, and also the insurance on the granite, increased by fifteen per centum of the cost." At the time the bid was made and accepted, the erection of only that part of the building intended for the use of the State Department, being the south front, had been authorized, but Ordway was to furnish and cut, on the same terms and at the same prices, the granite for the whole building, as its construction should be provided for.

Ordway had control of the James River quarry, but not of the Green & Westham. The supervising architect required that the granite should be taken from the Green & Westham, which was owned by Andrews & Green. This made it necessary for Ordway to arrange, in some way, with Andrews & Green for the use of their quarry. The result was, that on the 7th of August these three persons entered into a copartnership under the name of Andrews, Ordway & Green, and Andrews & Green put into the business their quarry, on certain specified terms, and Ordway all his contract with the government except that part which related to the cutting, boxing, etc., for the south front, which, as between himself and the firm, he retained for his own use. The profits accruing to the firm from the execution of the contract were to be divided in the proportion of fourteen thirty-sixths to Ordway and eleven thirty-sixths to each of the other partners. All other profits and losses were to be shared equally.

On the 16th of November, 1871, the contract between Ordway and the government was executed in form by Ordway and the supervising architect. On the 25th of November, Ordway entered into what was called an agreement of copartnership with one Andrew Washburne, "For the purpose of cutting, dressing and boxing the stone to be furnished the United States under the contract of Ordway, dated November 16, 1871, for the new State Department," but which was, in reality, a transfer of that part of the contract from Ordway to Washburne. By the terms of the arrangement, Washburne was to furnish all the capital, do all the work and get all the pay. The transfer, however, was expressly confined to work for the State Department proper; that is to say, the south front of the building. This arrangement was assented to and recognized by the Secretary of State on the 12th of December.

Work was begun under the contract of Ordway in January, that being as soon as the necessary plans were furnished. From the beginning, Washburne received the moneys realized from the cutting and boxing part of the contract. This yielded a large profit, but the price paid for the granite in the rough was less than the cost of quarrying and delivery, and entailed a loss on Andrews, Ordway & Green. The supervising architect required that the cutting should be done near the place of shipment on the river. This increased somewhat the expenses for transportation, and deprived the firm of some incidental advantages anticipated from having the work done at the quarry. For this reason Washburne, in March, or about that time, gave up to the firm six fifteenths of the fifteen per cent paid him in addition to the cost of cutting, etc., but retained the rest until he afterwards, during the latter part of the spring or in the summer, transferred all his remaining interest in the contract to Andrews, one of the firm of Andrews, Ordway & Green. For this he was paid a consideration by Andrews individually.

The entire amount paid Washburne and Andrews on account of the percentage on the cost of cutting for the south front was about $94,000, and it nowhere appears that Ordway derived any advantage from this part of his contract with the government except indirectly through the six per cent given up to the firm of Andrews, Ordway & Green. The cutting for the south front was all finished in March, 1874, and the profits realized and paid over. The last payment on this account was made in February or March of that year.

On the 29th of May, 1872, Ordway entered into a written agreement with Shedd, by which, after reciting his contract with the United States for furnishing and cutting the granite for the State, Army and Navy Department building, and that he was then "filling said contract as rapidly as he can under government supervision, said contract being filled and performed with others, and especially with the firm of Andrews, Ordway & Green, of which he is a member," he conveyed to Shedd "three eighths of the profits that accrue to the said Ordway, either individually or as a partner in the firm of Andrews, Ordway & Green." He, also, in the same agreement, declared it to be his intention thereby, "From the income and profits of said government contract, to amply, fully and finally secure said Shedd, as said trustee, from any and all loss by reason of his said loan of $38,500." Full provision was made for an examination of accounts by Shedd and for payments by Ordway, from time to time, out of the profits as they accrued to him from the contract as it was fulfilled.

During the commercial crisis of 1873, the firm of Andrews, Ordway & Green became financially embarrassed, and borrowed a large amount of money from J. Condit Smith. At his suggestion, the Westham Granite Company was incorporated in March, 1874, and all the property of the firm, including the government contract, transferred to that company. Stock in the company was given to him for his debt, and to the firm for the estimated value of its property over what was owing him. The stock issued to the firm was held for the payment of outstanding debts, and then for distribution among the partners in proportion to their respective interests. The amount to which Ordway was entitled has never yet been ascertained. According to the evidence, that matter is still in the hands of a referee, mutually chosen by the parties, for adjustment.

On the 26th of July, 1874, Ordway was directed by the supervising architect to furnish and cut, under his contract, the granite required for the east wing of the building, an appropriation having been made by Congress for that purpose on the 23d of June previous. The Granite Company, as the successor of Andrews, Ordway & Green, immediately entered on the performance of this work.

On the 4th of January, 1875, Shedd, then in life, not having been paid anything by Ordway, commenced this suit for an account of the profits that had already been realized by Ordway from the contract, and for the appointment of a receiver to collect such moneys as should thereafter belong to him, Shedd, under his agreement. Upon the filing of the bill, Ordway was enjoined from making any further collections from the department. Various modifications of this injunction were made from time to time, and on the 7th of July, 1875, Ordway was permitted to collect all but three eighths of the fifteen per cent on the expenditures for labor, etc., under the cutting part of the contract, and a receiver was appointed to collect and hold this three eighths to await the result of the suit.

After answer and replication, proof was taken which established the foregoing facts. On the 24th of November, 1875, a decree was entered at Special Term declaring the right of Shedd to the moneys then in the hands of the receiver, and to three eighths of the fifteen per cent payable in the future progress of the work under the part of the contract which related to the cutting, until his debt was fully paid. The receiver was continued for the purpose of making future collections as the money from time to time fell due. From this decree an appeal was taken to the General Term. On the 18th of December, 1876, the death of Shedd was suggested on the record, and Goddard, the original appellant, his administrator, made complainant in his stead. On the same day a decree was entered affirming that made at the Special Term. Included in the same entry was an order of the court allowing an appeal to this court on the prayer of Ordway. No bond was ever executed, and nothing further was done under this allowance. On the 22d of December, and during the term, a notice was served on Goddard by Ordway to the effect that he would "Move that the order affirming the decree * * * be set aside, and the case reargued, on the ground that a motion for reargument heretofore made in open court had never been brought up in consultation, or determined by the court, at the time of making said order of affirmance, and that said order of affirmance ought not to have been made in the premises, but was irregularly and inconsiderately pronounced and entered." On the 30th of December an entry was made on the minutes of the court to the effect that the appeal which had been allowed was withdrawn by Ordway. On the same day the following entry appears on the journal of the court:

"And now comes the defendant, and by his counsel, R. T. Merrick, moves the court to vacate the judgment of affirmance heretofore made in the above entitled cause, and for leave to argue the same before a full Bench; and assigns as reason therefor, in addition to reasons heretofore filed, that said cause was heard before only three of the justices, and that the judgment was rendered by only two of the Justices, with whom the third did not concur."

After this entry was made, and before the motion was heard or disposed of, the court adjourned for the term. On the 6th of January, 1877, which was at the next Term of the court, it was ordered that the cause be reargued and placed on the calendar of that Term. Goddard afterwards moved to vacate this order, because at the time it was made the court had no jurisdiction of the suit or of the parties; and also because the rules of court were not complied with in respect to the form of the motion and the time of filing. On the 19th of February this motion was overruled, and on the 28th of March, the cause having been reargued, the decree of the Special Term was reversed, the bill dismissed, and an order made on the receiver to pay over the moneys in his hands, $24,931.72, to the defendant, Ordway, after deducting the receiver's commissions. From that decree Goddard, as administrator, appealed.

The first question presented for our consideration on the argument was as to the jurisdiction of the court below at its General Term in March, 1877, to set aside the order of affirmance made at the previous Term, and give a new decree dismissing the bill, the motion to vacate the order and for leave to reargue the cause not having been filed until after the affirmance had actually been entered and after an appeal to this court allowed. The objections urged to the jurisdiction were: 1, that a court cannot reverse or annul its final decrees or judgments for errors of fact or law after the term at which they were rendered; 2, that the motion was not either in form or substance such as is required by Equity Rule 88 of that court for a petition for rehearing; and, 3, that the appeal to this court allowed by the court below on the 18th of December, 1876, took from that court the power to proceed further with the cause, or to entertain a motion to vacate the decree appealed from.

So far as the first objection is concerned, it is sufficient to say that the motion to vacate the order of affirmance and grant a reargument was made to and recognized by the court at the same Term the order was entered, and before a final adjournment. This is evident from the fact that the motion was entered on the minutes of the doings of the court for the Term. A paper may be filed in the proper office and yet not brought to the attention of the court while sitting in judgment, but when what it calls for appears on the minutes of actual proceedings, it must be presumed that the court, in some form, gave it judicial attention, and that it was presented in some regular way. In the Supreme Court of the District, as we are advised, if any matter in hand is not disposed of at one term, it is deemed to have been continued to the next. Whatever parties are bound to take notice of at one term they must follow to the next, if they are not, in some appropriate form, dismissed from further attendance. In this case the motion to allow a reargument went over as unfinished business, and carried the parties with it. The proceeding was in all material respects like a motion for a new trial filed in time at one term and not disposed of until the next. Under such circumstances, a judgment or decree, although entered in form, does not discharge the parties from their attendance in the cause. They must remain until all questions as to the finality of what has been done are settled. The motion, when entertained, prolongs the suit, and keeps the parties in court until it is passed upon and disposed of in the regular course of proceeding.

The second objection is, as we think, equally untenable. The motion, as made, was nothing more than an application to the court to vacate a decree which had been entered at a former day in the Term, improvidently and without sufficient consideration. It was addressed entirely to the discretion of the court, and depended on facts within the knowledge of the justices. It was in no just sense a petition for rehearing, and even if it had been, we should not be inclined to reverse a decree because of what was, under the circumstances, an immaterial departure from technical rules. Allis v. Ins. Co., 97 U. S., 144 [XXIV., 1008]; Rice v. Edwards, not reported. [This ed., ante, 976]. The grounds of the application were sufficiently stated, and a verification under oath might well have been omitted, since the records of the court showed everything that was claimed. In reality the whole matter resolved itself into the simple question of who should appeal to this court. Ordway would have appealed if the original decree had stood, and Goddard has done so since it was set aside.

The allowance of the appeal to Ordway was a judicial act of the court in term time. The order was entered on the minutes as part of what was done in the cause by the court while in session. In Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall., 163 [85 U. S., XXI., 872,] we said that "The general power of the court over its own judgments, orders and decrees, in both civil and criminal cases, during the existence of the Term at which they are first made is undeniable." Bassett v. U. S., 9 Wall., 38 [76 U. S., XIX., 548]; Doss v. Tyack, 14 How., 297. As part of the "roll of that Term," they are deemed to be "in the breast of the court during the whole Term." Bac. Abr., tit. Amendment and Jeofail, A. Under this rule, we think it clear that the court had the power during the Term, at the request of Ordway, to set aside the order of allowance and thus vacate the appeal which had been granted in his favor. This was done before any adverse rights had intervened. We are unable to see how the allowance of an appeal differs in this respect from any other judicial order made in the cause. If the one is subject to revocation or amendment while the Term continues, so, as it seems to us, must be the other.

See 11 OTTO.

There is nothing in this which interferes with the rule that, where an appeal is allowed, all jurisdiction of the suit appealed is transferred to this court. Here the question is, whether an appeal was, in legal effect, allowed. It is true an order of allowance was granted and entered on the minutes of the court. So long as this order continued in operation it bound the parties; but as it remained subject to the judicial power of the court during the Term at which it was entered, its revocation vacated what had been done, and left the decree standing with no appeal allowed. Ex parte Roberts, 15 Wall., 885 [82 U. S., XXI., 132]. Neither one of the parties was finally discharged from the court until the Term ended, and each was bound to take notice of whatever was done affecting his interests in the suit until a final adjournment actually took place.

Under these circumstances, we think the case is now here on its merits. The last decree at the General Term was the final decree in the cause, and the appeal which has been taken from that decree opens the whole case for our consideration.

Upon the merits, the decree below was right. Whatever may have been the original understanding with Shedd as to the security he was to have, it is clear that in the end he got only three eighths of the profits that accrued to Ordway from his government contract, either individually or as a partner in the firm of Andrews, Ordway & Green. All previous arrangements were merged in that finally reduced to writing. If the fund in court, therefore, does not, in legal effect, belong to Ordway, that is to say, does not represent his share of the profits growing out of the contract, it cannot be given to the representative of Shedd.

The testimony shows, conclusively, that down to the time the decree below was rendered, neither Andrews, Ordway & Green, nor the Westham Granite Company had realized any profits that were properly divisible to Ordway. Confessedly, the partnership had made nothing, and was largely in debt when the Granite Company was formed and took an assignment of the contract from the firm. If the company had, in fact, made anything, the individual partners in the old firm had not, because the outstanding debts of the firm were to be paid before they could claim any distribution among themselves. The dividends on the stock held for the firm were liable to the payment of the debts before the partners individually were entitled to anything.

All the profits on the cutting for the south front went to Washburne and his assignee, and never belonged to Ordway. Upon this question the evidence leaves no doubt. But whether that be so or not, nothing growing out of that part of the contract ever came into the hands of the receiver. That work was completed and the profits all received and paid over nearly a year before this suit was commenced.

As Ordway reserved from his transfer to Andrews, Ordway & Green only that part of the contract for cutting which had reference to the south front, it follows that the cutting for the east wing passed with the rest of the contract to the firm and its successor, the Granite Company. The percentage payable on that part of the work all belonged to that company, and neither Ordway nor Shedd's representative could claim any part of it individually until it was due to Ordway as profits to be divided. The money collected by the receiver was three eighths of this percentage. As the contract for the work stood in the name of Ordway at the department, he alone was recognized by the government when payments were made; but in making the collections he acted as the agent of the Granite Company, and was bound to pay over at once to the proper representative of the company everything that came into his hands in this way. The receiver's title is no better than his would have been if the money had got into his hands. It follows that upon the case as it stands no decree can be rendered in favor of the present complainant for the money now in court.

Although Ordway is the only defendant in the suit, the controversy is about the fund in court. As he was the agent of the Granite Company authorized to make the collections from the government, he may defend the title of his principal. The suit is, in effect, the same as it would be if the money were now in his hands and the representative of Shedd was seeking to prevent his paying it over to the company. In such a case it is clear he could show that he was but a trustee, and so, we think, he can in this. If, when our mandate goes down, the court below shall deem it necessary, in order to insure the payment of the money in the hands of the receiver to the Granite Company or its proper representative, that some special order be made in that behalf, that court is hereby authorized to take such action therein as shall seem to be necessary. It is clear from the evidence that the fund does not belong to Ordway, and that its payment to the Granite Company or its successors or assigns should, in some form, be secured.

Decree affirmed.

Trust estate—duration of.

1. Whatever the language by which the trust estate is vested in the trustee, its nature and duration are governed by the requirements of the trust.

2. The language used in creating the estate will be limited and restrained to the purposes of its creation, and when they are satisfied, the estate of the trustee ceases to exist and his title becomes extinct.

[No. 257.]

Argued Apr. 13, 1880. Decided Apr. 26, 1880.

APPEAL from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. F. W. Jones and Enoch Totten, for appellant.

Messrs. Walter D. Davidge and R. Fen-dall, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

William A. Bradley, of Washington City, made his will August 7, 1866, and died a year after. The will was duly proved by William A. Bradley and A. Thomas Bradley, who by its terms were made trustees and executors. The decision of the case turns upon the construction of the powers conferred by this will on the trustees named in it. The last clause of it, except the nomination of his executors, reads thus:

"Item Second. I give and bestow upon my said trustees and the survivor of them, the largest powers and discretion in taking charge of and managing my estate, and authorize them and the survivor to have, hold, direct and control the aforesaid trust property, according to their or the survivor's best judgment, and to sell and dispose of the same, or any parts thereof, from time to time, subject only to the aforesaid trusts, and as freely as I myself could do if living; and also in all things to have the same powers, rights, privileges, benefits, advantages as I myself have or might have, if living, in all and any contracts, bargains, agreements, companies, or other compacts to which I am now, or may become, a party."

Under this clause of the will, A. Thomas Bradley, the other trustee being dead, undertook as surviving trustee, in June, 1871, to convey to appellant certain mill property in Georgetown, which is the subject of this controversy, and to recover which this bill in chancery was brought by the children of William A. Bradley, Jr., son of the testator.

The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, from whose decree this appeal is taken, held the conveyance void for want of power in the trustee to make it, and granted the relief prayed in complainant's bill.

As this question of power is the principal one in the case, a critical examination of the terms of the will as connected with the condition of the trust estate and of the cestuis que trust, at the time of the execution of the deed, becomes necessary.

The will begins by a declaration that the testator gives, devises and bequeaths all of his estate, real, personal and mixed, of whatever kind it may be and wherever situated, to William A. Bradley, Jr., his son, and A. Thomas Bradley, his cousin, and to the survivor and his heirs in trust. Then follows the distinct declaration of these trusts, the first of which is of the house in which he lived and its furniture, and one third of the net income of his estate besides, to his wife during her life. He next directs that the trustees shall divide all his estate immediately after his death into four equal parts, and allot them as follows: one part to his son, William, who shall receive his portion at once; one to the children then living or thereafter born to said William; one to Mrs. Linton, a married daughter; and one to Mrs. Edelin, another married daughter. The portions left to the two daughters were to include the homestead, for which each of them was to be charged $5,000 in dividing the property; "And the trustees or the survivor of my said trustees shall also take into possession the said household effects and other chattels, and make, according to his or their best judgments, an equal distribution of the same in kind as to the whole or in part as to some, and in proceeds of sales as to others, among the parties entitled to real estate under this will, and in the same proportions."

He next directed the trustees to hold the portions of his daughters in trust for their sole and separate use, free from the control of their husbands and from liability for their debts; and he provided for such disposition of their respective shares, on their death, that all the interest of both of them and, in fact, all the beneficial interests under the will, had vested in the children of William A. Bradley, Jr., at the time the deed to Young was made by A. Thomas Bradley. This resulted from the successive deaths of the two daughters childless, and the death of testator's wife and son.

By the unanimous request of the persons interested under the will, no division into four parts and no distribution of the estate was ever made. As we have already said, by reason of the deaths of all the beneficiaries under the will except the children of W. A. Bradley, Jr., and by the payment of all the debts of the testator, the entire interest in the estate of the testator had become vested in them; and, under these circumstances, the inquiry is: what authority had the surviving trustee to sell real estate?

The legal title, it is argued, is vested in him by the will. The power conferred by item second is as ample as language can make it, with the single limitation that it is subject to the trusts of the will. The estate vested in the trustees was designed to enable them to execute these trusts. It was not an estate to last forever. The things to be done by the trustees were defined, and in the nature of things were to have an end.

What were the purposes for which this trust was created, and what remained for a trustee to do in execution of them?

1. They were to hold for the benefit of the widow, during her life, and see that she received the one third of the annual income of his estate. She is long since dead, and that trust has ceased.

2. We may suppose that in making the partition and distribution, sales to equalize and conveyance to the distributees were necessary. The whole interest has become vested in one of the four distributees of the will, and nothing remains to be done under the trust in regard to that distribution.

3. The trustees were to hold the shares of the daughters as a protection against their husbands, and for the children of these daughters until the youngest of such children should attain the age of twenty-one years, unless, in the discretion of the trustees, it should appear best to terminate the trust earlier. There were no such children of the daughters, and the daughters are both dead.

There was no such control over the distributive shares of the children of W. A. Bradley, deceased, and as the whole of it has come to them, the trustees are not their trustees as they were of the widow, the daughters, and their children if there had been such.

These are all the trusts declared by the will. They were all performed, superseded or terminated before the deed to Young was made. The trustee in making that deed was discharging no trust reposed in him and no duty required of him by the will. It is not suggested anywhere that any such purpose was in view. It is said that the property was dilapidated and needed repair. But as it belonged to Mrs. Bradley and her children, and as the will did not confer on the trustees any guardianship or control over the property of Bradley's children after their share was allotted to them, the trustees had no power over it when it came to them by the other provisions of the will on the death of the other devisees.

The doctrine is well settled that, whatever the language by which the trust estate is vested in the trustee, its nature and duration are governed by the requirement of the trust. If that requires a fee simple estate in the trustee, it will be created, though the language be not apt for that purpose. If the language conveys to the trustee and his heirs forever, while the trust requires a more limited estate either in quantity or duration, only the latter will vest.

Mr. Perry, in his work on Trusts, supports, by a very full array of authorities, these two propositions in regard to the construction of instruments out of which trust estates arise: 1. "Whenever a trust is created, a legal estate sufficient for the purposes of the trust shall, if possible, be implied in the trustee, whatever may be the limitations in the instrument, whether to him and his heirs or not." 2. "Although a legal estate may be limited to a trustee to the fullest extent, as to him and his heirs, yet it shall not be carried further than the complete execution of the trust necessarily requires." Perry, Tr., sec. 312. Again he says: "In the United States, the distinction between deeds and wills in respect to the trustee's estate has not been kept up; and the general rule is, that whether words of inheritance in the trustee are or are not in the deed, the trustee will take an estate adequate in the execution of the trust, and no more nor less." Sec. 320.

The case of Noble v. Andrews, 37 Conn., 346, bears a strong analogy to the one before us in principle, where it was held that a gift to a person in trust for a wife during her life, and to her heirs forever, subject to her husband's curtesy, conveyed to the trustee only an estate for the life of the wife, and at her death the trust ceased.

This subject is considered and the authorities fully reviewed in the opinion of this court by Mr. Justice Swayne, in Doe v. Considine, 6 Wall., 458 [73 U. S., XVIII., 869]. "It is well settled," says he, "that where no intention to the contrary appears, the language used in creating the estate will be limited and restrained to the purposes of its creation. And when they are satisfied, the estate of the trustee ceases to exist and his title becomes extinct. The extent and duration of the estate are measured by the objects of its creation."

We are satisfied that, at the time A. Thomas Bradley undertook to sell to Mark Young the property in controversy, the trust estate created in him by the will of William A. Bradley, Sr., had become extinct, and that his conveyance was void because his powers as such trustee had ceased.

Two minor objections are taken to the decree which require notice:

1. It is said that the amount charged to Young for the use and occupation of the property is excessive. It is a sufficient answer to this to say that the matter was referred to an auditor, on whose report the decree in that respect was based, and that no exception was taken to his report.

2. It is alleged for error, also, that no provision is made by the decree to refund to Young the purchase money, amounting to about $10,000, paid by him under the contract. At first blush, this demand of Young to have his money or the property seems just.

The court below seemed to be impressed with this view of the matter, for in the order of reference to the auditor, who in that court performs the functions of a master in chancery, he was directed to report "How much, if any, of the money paid by said Mark Young, to A. Thomas Bradley went to the benefit and advantage of the complainants." And he reported that none of it did. To this branch of the report there was no exception, though an effort was made, after the time for it had passed, to except to other parts of the report. So that we are concluded by that report.

But in the view we have taken of the case the sale by Bradley was utterly void. The complainants are entitled to their property and compensation for its use, and the matter of the return of the money to Young is one solely between Bradley and him, with which these complainants have nothing to do. It is not the rescission of a valid contract, in which case the parties must be placed in statu quo, but the recovery of property held on a void deed with a declaration of its original nullity.

The decree of the court below affirmed.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of Dakota Territory.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Grant & Grant and S. W. Packard, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. M. H. Carpenter and Jas. Coleman, for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

By the Act to organize a Government for the Territory of Dakota, it was provided that no one session of the Legislative Assembly shall exceed forty days, 12 Stat. at L., 241, sec. 4; and in 1869 Congress provided that the sessions of all territorial Legislative Assemblies should be biennial, 15 Stat. at L., 300. The members of the Legislative Assembly of Dakota met on the 5th of December, 1870, and continued in regular session on all days except Sundays, until January 13, 1871, when they adjourned without day. The day of adjournment was called on the journals the fortieth day of the session, although there had been but thirty-five days of actual session for the transaction of business. On the 18th of April, 1871, the members of the Legislature, elected the preceding fall, again assembled at the call of the acting Governor of the Territory, and after organizing themselves as a Legislative Assembly, proceeded to legislate for the Territory, and among others, passed an Act entitled "An Act to Enable Organized Counties and Townships to Vote Aid to Any Railroad, and to Provide for the Payment of the Same." Under this Act, the voters of Yankton County, on the 2d of September, 1871, voted to donate the Dakota Southern Railroad Company $200,000 in the bonds of the County. All the proceedings under which this vote was taken were conducted strictly according to the requirements of the law.

On the 27th day of May, 1872, 17 Stat. at L., 162, the following Act of Congress was approved and went into effect, to wit:

*"An Act in relation to the Dakota Southern

Be it enacted By the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress Assembled, that the Act passed by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Dakota, and approved by the Governor on the Twenty-first day of April, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, entitled 'An Act to Enable Organized Counties and Townships to Vote Aid to Any Railroad, and to Provide for the Payment of the Same, be and the same is hereby disapproved and annulled, except in so far as is herein otherwise provided. But the passage of this Act shall not invalidate or impair the organization of the company heretofore organized for the construction of the Dakota Southern Railroad leading from Sioux City, Iowa, by way of Yankton, the Capital of said Territory, to the west line of Bon Homme County; or any vote that has been or may be given by the Counties of Union, Clay, Yankton and Bon Homme or any township granting aid to said railroad, or any subscription thereto, or anything authorized by and that may have been done in pursuance of the provisions of the aforesaid Act of the Legislative Assembly of said Territory towards the construction and completion of said railroad, and the said Dakota Southern Railroad Company, as organized under and in conformity to the Acts of the Legislative Assembly of said, Territory, is hereby recognized and declared to be a legal and valid corporation; and the provisions of the Act of the Legislative Assembly first aforesaid, so far as the same authorize, and for the purpose of validating any vote of aid and subscriptions to said company for the construction, completion and equipment of the main stem of said railroad, between the termini aforesaid, are hereby declared to be and remain in full force, but no further; and for no other purpose whatsoever.

Sec. 2. That, for the purpose of enabling the said Dakota Southern Railroad Company to construct its said road through the public lands between the termini aforesaid, the right of way through said public lands is hereby granted to said company to the extent of one hundred feet in width on each side of said road; Provided, That nothing in this Act shall relieve said Dakota Southern Railroad Company from constructing and completing said railroad in accordance with the conditions and stipulations under which the citizens of the counties therein named voted aid to said railroad in accordance with the laws of said Territory, approved April 21st, eighteen hundred and seventy-one: Provided further, That said Dakota Southern Railroad Company shall issue to the respective counties and townships voting aid to said railroad paid up certificates of stock in the same in amounts equal to the sums voted by the respective counties and townships."

Approved May 27, 1872.

After the passage of this Act, the bonds voted were delivered by the County Commissioners to the railroad company, and stock in the company for an equal amount issued to the County. The plaintiff in error is the bona fide holder and owner of ten of these bonds, amounting in the aggregate to $10,000. This suit was brought to recover three installments of interest. The defense was that there was no law authorizing the issue of the bonds and, as a consequence, that the County was not bound for the payment of either principal or interest. Upon the trial of the cause in the District Court of the Territory, the facts were found by the court substantially as already stated and a judgment given in favor of the County. This judgment was afterwards affirmed by the Supreme Court of the Territory, and thereupon the plaintiff below brought the case to this court by writ of error.

We do not consider it necessary to decide in this case whether the Governor of Dakota had authority to call an extra session of the Legislative Assembly, nor whether a law passed at such a session or after the limited term of forty days had expired would be valid, because, as we think, the Act of May 27, 1872, is equivalent to a grant of power direct from Congress to the County to issue the bonds in dispute. It is certainly now too late to doubt the power of Congress to govern the Territories. There have been some differences of opinion as to the particular clause of the Constitution from which the power comes, but that it exists has always been conceded. The Act to adapt the ordinance to provide for the government of the Territory northwest of the River Ohio to the requirements of the Constitution, 1 Stat. at L., 50, is chapter 8 of the first session of the first Congress, and the Ordinance itself was in force under the Confederation when the Constitution went into effect. All territory within the jurisdiction of the United States not included in any State must, necessarily, be governed by or under the authority of Congress. The Territories are but political subdivisions of the outlying dominion of the United States. They bear much the same relation to the General Government that counties do to the States, and Congress may legislate for them as States do for their respective municipal organizations. The organic law of a Territory takes the place of a constitution, as the fundamental law of the local government. It is obligatory on and binds the territorial authorities; but Congress is supreme and, for the purposes of this department of its governmental authority, has all the powers of the People of the United States, except such as have been expressly or by implication reserved in the prohibitions of the Constitution.

In the organic Act of Dakota there was no express reservation of power in Congress to amend the Acts of the territorial Legislature, but none was necessary. Such a power is an incident of sovereignty, and continues until granted away. Congress may not only abrogate laws of the territorial Legislatures, but it may itself legislate directly for the local government. It may make a void Act of the territorial Legislature valid, and a valid Act void. In other words, it has full and complete legislative authority over the People of the Territories and all the departments of the territorial governments. It may do for the Territories what the People, under the Constitution of the United States, may do for the States.

Turning, then, to the particular Act of Congress now under consideration, we find that the attention of that body was in some way brought to the fact that the Legislative Assembly of Dakota had, on the 21st of April, 1871, passed an Act to enable organized counties and townships to vote aid to railroads. In addition to this, it was known that the Dakota Southern Railroad Company had been organized as a corporation under certain Acts of the territorial Legislative Assembly, and that votes had been taken under the Aid Act in some of the counties and townships granting aid to or authorizing subscriptions of stock in this corporation. It is clear that Congress disapproved the policy of the Aid Act, and was unwilling to have it go into general operation; but to the extent it could be made available for the construction and completion of the main stem of the Dakota Southern Railroad the contrary is distinctly manifested. The Act, as a whole, was "disapproved and annulled," but in substance reenacted by Congress "For the purpose of validating any vote of aid or subscription" to that company, but "for no other purpose whatever." A careful examination of the statute leaves no doubt in our minds on this subject. To make it sure that the organization of the company was complete, the "Dakota Southern Railroad Company, as organized under and in conformity to the Acts of the Legislative Assembly of said Territory," was "recognized and declared to be a legal and valid corporation." It is, then, in terms, enacted that the provisions of the Aid Act, "So far as the same authorize, and for the purpose of validating any vote of aid and subscriptions to said company, for the construction, completion and equipment of the main stem of said railroad, * * * are hereby declared to be and remain in full force." And again; "That said Dakota Southern Railroad Company shall issue to the respective counties and townships voting aid to said railroad, paid-up certificates of stock in the same in amounts equal to the sums voted by the respective counties and townships." In the light of these distinct and positive declarations and enactments of Congress, it is impossible to bring our minds to any other conclusion than that, when the bonds now in controversy were put out, there existed full and complete legislative authority to bind the people of the county for their payment. No complaint is made of any irregularity in the proceedings under the law. The question in the case is one of power only. As we think, the vote of the People of the County was "validated" by Congress, and express authority given to issue the bonds for the purposes originally intended. The only change which Congress saw fit to make was to require the company to give stock in return for the donation as voted.

The judgment of the Supreme Court of the Territory is reversed and the cause remanded, with instructions to reverse the judgment of the District Court, and direct a judgment for the plaintiff on the facts found for such amount as shall appear to be due on the coupons sued for.

v.

LEVI BLAKESLEE, LATE COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 174-181.)

Succession — tax upon — remainder — penalty — limitation.

1. Where an estate was devised to one for life, with remainder in fee to her children surviving her, the devolution of the property to such children on her death was a "succession" within the meaning of section 127 of the Internal Revenue Act.

2. Where a remainder is dependent upon a life estate in the land, it does not take effect as an estate in possession until the life estate is determined. Until then, it is a mere expectancy.

3. The fifty per cent added to the amount of the succession tax, and exacted by way of penalty for refusing to make a return, was erroneously imposed.

4. No written notice or protest is required of one paying illegal taxes under the Internal Revenue laws, in order to entitle him to recover them. A verbal protest is sufficient.

5. Under the Act of June 6, 1872, a cause of action to recover illegal taxes did not accrue until the commissioner's decision, and is not barred, by limitation, until two years thereafter.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of New York.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. Addison C. Miller, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. S. F. Phillips, Solicitor-Gen., for defendant in error.

1048

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action brought by B. Huntington Wright, the plaintiff in error, against the defendant, formerly Collector of Internal Revenue for the 21st Revenue District of New York, to recover the amount of a succession tax collected from the plaintiff and his sister in 1867, the latter having assigned her interest to the plaintiff.

A jury was waived, and the cause was tried by the court. From the findings the following facts appear: Henry Huntington, of Oneida County, New York, died in October, 1846, leaving a will, by which, amongst other things, he devised to his executors certain real estate, in trust, to receive the rents and profits, and apply the same to the sole and separate use of his daughter Henrietta (if a feme covert at his death) during the term of her natural life, and at her decease, if she should leave issue surviving, the testator gave and devised the said real estate to such issue absolutely and in fee. When the testator died, his daughter Henrietta was the wife of one Benjamin H. Wright and had two children living, B. Huntington Wright (the plaintiff) and a daughter. Henrietta died in September, 1865, leaving her said two children and her husband surviving. In June, 1867, the plaintiff and his sister were notified by the assessor to make return, as required by the 14th section of the Internal Revenue Act of June 30, 1864 18 Stat. at L., 226; and they both refused and declined to make any return, or give any knowledge or information as to the quantity, location or value of the real estate, and thereupon they were summoned to appear before the assessor in relation thereto. They appeared accordingly, and claimed that the estate was not liable to assessment for a succession tax. The assessor decided against them, and assessed a tax of one per cent on the full value of the property, and added thereto a penalty of fifty per cent and expenses, making in all $595.59. In June, 1867, the assessor notified the parties of the tax imposed, the value of the property, and the penalty affixed. The assessment or tax, with the penalty, was placed upon the assessment roll, and delivered to the Collector (the defendant) for collection, and he notified the parties to pay the tax.

On the 31st of July, 1867, the parties paid the tax under protest, the tax paid amounting to $595.59, of which $389.56 was tax, $194.78 was penalty, and $11.25 was the expenses for making the assessment and valuation. The amount assessed upon each, viz.: B. Huntington Wright and Henrietta H. Wright, was $297.29.

On the 5th of October, 1872, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue wrote the parties that the claim to have the tax refunded had not been submitted to the department, and forwarded them a blank to be filled up and transmitted to the department, and they would then pass upon the case upon its merits.

About the 3d of January, 1873, the appeal was perfected and filed with the commissioner.

On the 3d of July, 1873, the commissioner rendered his decision upon the merits, rejecting the whole claim, and gave notice thereof.

On the 15th of June, 1875, Henrietta H. Wright, one of the parties against whom one half of the tax had been levied and collected, transferred her claim to the plaintiff.

On the same day a summons was delivered to the sheriff of New York to serve on defendant.

On the 24th of June, 1875, the summons was actually served on defendant. The action was originally brought in the state court, but was removed into the circuit court, upon proceedings had under the statute.

Upon these facts the court decided, as matter of law, that the tax and penalty were properly assessed and collected, and that the plaintiff ought not to recover.

The first and principal question in the case is whether the devolution of the property to the children of Henrietta Wright on her death in September, 1865, was a "succession," within the meaning of the 127th section of the Internal Revenue Act then in force. 13 Stat. at L., 287.

The language of that section is as follows:

"That every past or future disposition of real estate by will, deed, or laws of descent, by reason whereof any person shall become beneficially entitled, in possession or expectancy, to any real estate or the income thereof, upon the death of any person dying after the passing of this Act, shall be deemed to confer on the person entitled by reason of any such disposition a 'succession;' and the term 'successor' shall denote the person so entitled, and the term 'predecessor' shall denote the grantor, testator, ancestor or other person from whom the interest of the successor has been or shall be derived."

Comparing the terms of the devise of Henry Huntington with the language of this section, we do not see where there is any room for doubt. The will clearly gave to the trustees an estate for the life of Henrietta Wright, with remainder in fee to her children surviving her. At her death, in 1865, those children did "become beneficially entitled in possession," and every condition of the law was fulfilled. There was a "past" "disposition of real estate by will," "by reason whereof" the children of Henrietta Wright became "beneficially entitled in possession," to the property devised, "upon the death of [a] person dying after the passage of this Act." We think the case is directly within the terms and meaning of the Act. Up to the moment of Henrietta Wright's death, her children had no interest in the land except a bare contingent remainder expectant upon her death and their surviving her. At her death, it came to them as an estate in fee in possession absolute. We cannot imagine a plainer case of devolution, within the description of the law.

It is suggested that as the Act refers to the acquisition of estates "in possession or expectancy," it cannot mean to embrace estates which had already accrued as estates "in expectancy" before the Act was passed. But such an implication cannot be allowed to prevail against the express words of the Act, which include all estates to which a person should become beneficially entitled upon the death of any person dying after the passage of the Act. In the present case, the children of Henrietta Wright first became "beneficially entitled" to the property in question at their mother's death. They then became "beneficially entitled in possession."

It is also suggested that the case is more aptly described in the 128th section of that Act, which is as follows:

"That where any real estate shall, at or after the passage of this Act, be subject to any charge, estate or interest, determinable by the death of any person, or at any period ascertainable only by reference to death, the increase or benefit accruing to any person upon the extinction or determination of such charge, estate or interest shall be deemed to be a succession accruing to the person then entitled beneficially to the real estate or income thereof."

We do not assent to this view. This section is evidently intended to meet the cases of estates burdened by determinable incumbrances, such as rent charges, leases for years and qualified interests, which do not suspend the taking effect of the estate in the land, but only subject it to some burden. Where, however, a remainder is dependent upon a life estate in the land, it does not take effect as an estate in possession until the life estate is determined. Till then, it is a mere expectancy. The present case is one of this kind and, we think, clearly comes within the description of the 127th section.

Another point made by the plaintiff against the assessment relates to the fifty per cent added to the amount of the succession tax, and exacted by way of penalty for refusing to make a return as required by the statute. This penalty, we think, was erroneously imposed. The assessor evidently thought that he was authorized to impose the penalty prescribed by the 14th section of the Act of 1864, as amended by the Act of July 13, 1866, 14 Stat. at L., 98, which was, it is true, a penalty of fifty per cent of the tax for refusal or neglect to make a list or return. But an inspection of that section and of the context to which it belongs shows that it related to the annual and monthly lists and returns to be made by parties taxable under the law. So the 118th section, as amended by the Act of March 2, 1867, 13 Stat. at L., 471, which also imposed a penalty of fifty per cent for such neglect and refusal, and was relied on by the court below, related only to the income tax. But the penalty for failing to return and give notice of a succession tax is provided for in a distinct section, to wit: the 148th section of the Act of 1864, as amended by the Act of 1866, which is found in immediate collocation with the sections relating to the succession tax. This section declares that if any person required to give such notice (of a succession) should willfully neglect to do so within the time required by law, he should be liable to pay to the United States a sum equal to ten per centum upon the amount of tax payable by him. This is the specific penalty provided for the special case, and necessarily excludes any other. We are satisfied, therefore, that the penalty of fifty per cent which was actually imposed was wrong, and ought not to have been exacted. There is, therefore, no doubt of the plaintiff's right to recover the amount of this penalty, if, when paid the protest against its exaction was sufficient.

On this point it is to be observed that the case stands on a different ground from that of the illegal exaction of duties on imports. To recover these, the statute makes it necessary that the party interested should give notice, in writing to the collector, if dissatisfied with his decision, setting forth distinctly and specifically the grounds of his objection thereto. Act of June 30, 1864, sec. 14, 13 Stat. at L., 214; R. S., sec. 2931; Westray v. U. S., 18 Wall., 323 [85 U. S., XXI., 763]; Barney v. Watson, 92 U. S., 449 [XXIII., 730]; Davies v. Arthur, 96 U. S., 148 [XXIV., 758]. No such written notice or protest is required of a party paying illegal taxes under the internal revenue laws. He must pay under protest in some form, it is true, or his payment will be deemed voluntary. Philadelphia v. Collector, 5 Wall., 720 [72 U. S., XVIII., 614]; Collector v. Hubbard, 12 Wall., 1 [79 U. S., XX., 272]. But whilst a written protest would in all cases be most convenient, there is no statutory requirement that the protest shall be in writing. In the present case, the court merely finds that the payment of the tax and penalty was made under protest, which may have been either written or verbal. We think that this finding is sufficient to show that the payment was not voluntary. It is apparent from the findings, it is true, that the objection of the parties was particularly made against the legality of the tax, and not against the penalty as distinct therefrom. But, of course, the objection included the penalty as well as the tax; and as the latter was clearly illegal, we think that the plaintiff should have had judgment for the amount thereof, unless barred by the Statute of Limitations.

We think that the defense of the Statute of Limitations cannot be maintained. Under the 19th section of the Act of July 13, 1866, 14 Stat. at L., 152, no suit could be maintained for the recovery of a tax illegally collected until appeal should have been duly made to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and his decision had thereon. The Act contained other provisions not material to this case. In July, 1867, when the tax was paid, there was no statutory limitation of time for presenting claims for remission of taxes to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

On the 6th of June, 1872, an Act was passed, by the 44th section of which it was provided that all suits for the recovery of any internal tax alleged to have been erroneously assessed or collected, or any penalty claimed to have been collected without authority, should be brought within two years next after the cause of action accrued, and not after; and all claims for refunding any internal tax or penalty should be presented to the commissioner within two years next after the cause of action accrued, and not after; Provided, That actions for claims which had accrued prior to the passage of the Act should be commenced in the courts or presented to the commissioner within one year from the date of such passage. And provided further, That where a claim should be pending before the commissioner, the claimant might bring his action within one year after such decision, and not after. 17 Stat. at L., 257. When this Act was passed, the claim in the present case had not been formally presented to the commissioner, and so did not come within the last proviso; but, for the purpose of presentation to the commissioner, it was embraced in the first proviso. The parties, therefore, had by the Act one year to present their claim to the commissioner; and it was thus presented on the 3d day of January, 1873, within the time allowed for that purpose.

The commissioner rendered his decision on the 3d day of July, 1873, and then, for the first time, the parties had a right to bring suit against the Collector. Then their cause of action first accrued against him. It is manifest, therefore, that the cause of action against the Collector was not embraced within either the first or the second proviso of the section just cited; and that it stood upon the primary enactment of that section, requiring that suit should be brought within two years next after the cause of action accrued. This would give the plaintiff until the 3d of July, 1875, to bring his action. Thus the matter stood when the Revised Statutes went into effect on the 23d of June, 1874, and there is nothing in them to change the plaintiff's right. The 44th section of the Act of 1872 is substantially re-enacted in section 3227 of the Revised Statutes, which contains no modifications of phraseology that affect the present case. And as it appears from the findings of the court that this suit was commenced by delivery of the summons to the sheriff on the 15th of June, 1875, it is apparent that the defense of the Statute of Limitations cannot be maintained.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed and the case remanded, with instructions to enter judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the amount of the penalties exacted from the plaintiff and Henrietta H. Wright, with interest and costs.

Agent, liability of—contract of corporation.

1. Where the contract is made by an agent and the principal is disclosed, and the agent is known to be acting as such, the latter cannot be made personally liable, unless he agreed to be so.
2. Where a corporation, at the date of a contract, had not filed its articles of association, as required by the statute, but subsequently ratified the contract by recognizing and treating it as valid, this made it in all respects what it would have been if the requisite corporate power had existed when it was entered into.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Michigan.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. J. W. Champlin, for plaintiff in error:

When the body of the contract contains apt words to charge the agent, he will be personally responsible for its fulfillment, notwithstanding the addition of qualifying words to his signature, implying that he is acting in an official or representative capacity.

1. The obligatory words in the order of Feb.

1, 1869 are: "We now order from you," etc. It does not read that "The company now orders," nor is it in behalf of the company; and the company's name is not signed to the order, but the individual names of defendants, and adding thereafter, "Prudential Committee Grand Haven Fruit Basket Co." These words are merely descriptio personarum.

1 Am. L. Cas., 5th ed., 760, 761.

Messrs. Hughes, O'Brien and Smiley, for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought to recover the value of certain machinery manufactured by the plaintiff in error, which he alleged he had sold and delivered to the defendants.

The defendants insisted that they had contracted for and received the machinery in behalf of a corporation of which they were officers, and that hence they were not personally liable.

The plaintiff lived in Massachusetts and the defendants in Michigan.

The latter addressed a letter to the former, which was as follows:

"GRAND HAVEN, Feby. 1, 1869.

BAXTER WHITNEY, Esq., Winchenden, Mass.:

SIR: Our company being so far organized, by direction of the officers, we now order from you, manufactured and shipped, at as early date as possible—for the manufacture of the Mellish fruit basket—1 large rounding lathe, 1 quart do. do., 2 lathes for peach basket bottoms, 3 do. do. quart do. do., pint do. do. Also the necessary small fixtures for claspings, &c., of which Mr. Whitney is advised, and will give you more definite order.

CHARLES WYMAN,
EDWARD P. FERRY,
CARLTON L. STORRS,

Prudential Committee Grand Haven Fruit Basket Co."

To which the plaintiff replied:

"WINCHENDEN, MASS., Feb., 10, 1869.

GRAND HAVEN FRUIT BASKET COMPANY:

GENTLEMEN: Yours of the 1st inst. is received, in which you order machinery for fruit baskets, etc. I had already anticipated your order by commencing on the machinery on Mr. Whitney's verbal order, and I am now driving it with all the force I can get on it.

Yours respectfully,

BAXTER D. WHITNEY."

The plaintiff wrote further, as follows:

"WINCHENDEN, April 14, 1869.

MESSRS. C. E. WYMAN, E. P. FERRY, C. L. STORRS:

GENTS: I herewith send bill of machinery ordered by you Feb. 1st, and have drawn on you at sight for the amount, $6,375. The machinery was delayed two days in order to get into one of the Blue Line cars. It has gone from the depot now and I have to send to Fitchburg for through bill of lading, which I expect to-night, and will forward it as soon as I procure it.

Yours respectfully,

BAXTER D. WHITNEY."

The plaintiff charged the defendants individually on his books for the machinery. His draft was protested, and he thereupon wrote as follows:

See 11 OTTO.

"WINCHENDEN, MASS., May 14, 1869.

MESSRS. CHARLES E. WYMAN, EDWARD P. FERRY, CARLTON L. STORRS:

GENTS: I have just received notice of protest of my draft on you. Reason given, machinery not arrived. I doubt not the machinery has arrived before now, and if so, I hope you will forward me draft on New York at once. I need the money very much, from the fact that parties here on which I relied for money have been burned out and they are unable to pay me at present.

Yours respectfully,

BAXTER D. WHITNEY."

The last two letters were not answered.

The machinery was delivered at Grand Haven, and the freight was paid by Edward P. Ferry as the treasurer of the corporation. The draft of Baxter was protested, because it was addressed to the drawees individually. They claimed that he had no right so to draw on them.

The corporation was organized under a statute of Michigan which authorized mining and manufacturing companies to be created pursuant to its provisions. It took the name of The Grand Haven Fruit Basket Company.

On the 5th of Jan., 1869, thirty-two stockholders, including the defendants, subscribed the articles of association and acknowledged their execution before a notary public.

On the 21st of the same month there was a meeting of the stockholders, at which a code of by-laws was adopted. It provided for the election of seven directors, and of a president, secretary and treasurer; and that the directors should elect out of their number one who, with the president and treasurer, should be a prudential committee, and that the committee should be charged with such duties as might be devolved upon it by the Board of Directors. The defendants and four others were elected directors.

On the 25th of the same month the Board of Directors elected the defendant Storrs president; the defendant Ferry treasurer; and the defendant Wyman for the third member of the prudential committee.

The articles of association were filed with the Secretary of State on the 19th of February, 1869, and with the county clerk on the 12th of May following. The statute declares that they shall be so filed before the corporation shall commence business. The notary public who certified the acknowledgment of the articles was himself a subscriber, and his name is included in his certificate. It was proved, by parol evidence, that the directors authorized the prudential committee to contract for the machinery.

The corporation received the machinery, bought an engine to run it, manufactured baskets with it, and carried on the business until some time in the year 1870.

On the 8d of March, 1870, Lyman and Fairbanks, two of the directors, were authorized to settle with the plaintiff on the best terms they could obtain.

The court instructed the jury, in substance, that the letter of the prudential committee of February 1, 1870, bound the corporation and not the defendants, if there was then a corporation and the defendants were authorized by it to give the order, and that if the corporation had acted as such and exercised its franchises, then it was a corporation de facto, and that in such case any irregularity in its organization was immaterial.

The plaintiff excepted to these instructions, and took numerous other exceptions in the course of the trial, which are set forth in the record.

The jury found for the defendants.

Where the question of agency in making a contract arises, there is a broad line of distinction between instruments under seal and stipulations in writing not under seal, or by parol. In the former case the contract must be in the name of the principal, must be under seal, and must purport to be his deed and not the deed of the agent covenanting for him. Stanton v. Camp, 4 Barb., 274.

In the latter cases the question is always one of intent; and the court, being untrammelled by any other consideration, is bound to give it effect. As the meaning of the law-maker is the law, so the meaning of the contracting parties is the agreement. Words are merely the symbols they employ to manifest their purpose that it may be carried into execution. If the contract be unsealed and the meaning clear, it matters not how it is phrased nor how it is signed, whether by the agent for the principal or with the name of the principal by the agent or otherwise.

The intent developed is alone material, and when that is ascertained it is conclusive. Where the principal is disclosed, and the agent is known to be acting as such, the latter cannot be made personally liable unless he agreed to be so.

Looking at the letter of the defendants of the first of February, 1869, and the answer of the plaintiff of the 10th of that month, we cannot doubt as to the understanding and meaning of both parties with respect to the point in question.

The former advised the latter of the progress made in organizing the corporation; that the order was given by the direction of its officers, and the letter is signed by the writers as the "Prudential Committee of the Grand Haven Fruit Basket Co.," which was the name in full of the corporation. The plaintiff addressed his reply to the "Grand Haven Fruit Basket Co.," thus using the name of the corporation as the party with whom he knew he was dealing, and omitting the names of the defendants, and their designation as a committee, according to the style they gave themselves in their letter.

It seems to us entirely clear that both parties understood and meant that the contract was to be and, in fact, was with the corporation, and not with the defendants individually.

The agreement thus made could not be afterwards changed by either of the parties without the consent of the other. Uiley v. Donaldson, 94 U. S., 29 [XXIV., 54].

But it is said the corporation at the date of these letters was forbidden to do any business, not having then filed its articles of association, as required by the statute.

To this objection there are several answers.

The corporation subsequently ratified the contract by recognizing and treating it as valid.

This made it in all respects what it would have been if the requisite corporate power had existed when it was entered into. Ang. & A. Corp., sec. 804 and n.

The corporation having assumed, by entering into the contract with the plaintiff, to have the requisite power, both parties are estopped to deny it. Ang. & A., Corp., sec. 635 and n.

The restriction imposed by the statute is a simple inhibition. It did not declare that what was done should be void, nor was any penalty prescribed. No one, but the State could object. The contract is valid as to the plaintiff, and he has no right to raise the question of its invalidity. Bk. v. Matthews [ante, 188].

The instruction given by the court to the jury with respect to acts of user by the corporation in proof of its existence was correct. If there was any error, it was in favor of the plaintiff. Ang. & A., Corp., sec. 635.

The record shows clearly that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, and that the verdict and judgment are right. We, therefore, forbear to examine the other assignments of error. Conceding that all the exceptions to which they relate were well taken, the errors could have done him no harm. Barth v. Clise, 12 Wall., 400 [79 U. S., XX., 393].

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Lunatic's real estate—sale of—order of court—state decision.

1. As against a lunatic, a license to his guardian to sell his real estate is not invalid for insufficient publication of notice of the hearing, the same being required only for the protection of other parties interested in the estate.

2. The publication of notice of the hearing is not essential, in Wisconsin, to the jurisdiction of the county court to grant the license to sell.

3. The authority of the court existed to license the sale whenever it appeared that the personal estate of the lunatic was insufficient to pay his debts, and that a sale of his real property was necessary for that purpose.

4. This court adheres to the correctness of its decision in Grignon v. Astor, 2 How., 319, and declines to follow an apparently contradictory state decision on the same point.

This spirit of accord and deference has even manifested itself to the extent that when the state courts have settled the construction of their laws differently from what the Supreme Court of the United States in previous cases had considered to be their rule, still this court conformed its adjudication to the latest exposition of the local law.

Mr. S. U. Pinney, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action for the possession of certain land in the County of Walworth, in the State of Wisconsin. It was commenced in one of the state courts and, on the application of the plaintiff, was removed to the Circuit Court of the United States. It was there tried by the court, without the intervention of a jury, upon stipulation of the parties. The court was held by the Circuit and District Judges and, as they were opposed in opinion, the case is brought here upon a certificate of the points upon which they differed.

The facts out of which this division arose are briefly these: the plaintiff, Mohr, previously to the sale under which the defendant claims, was the owner of the premises in controversy. In 1869, he was, by legal proceedings in the County Court of Walworth, adjudged to be a lunatic incapable of taking care of himself and managing his property, and a guardian was appointed over him. In October, 1870, the guardian applied, by petition to the court, for license to sell the real estate of his ward for the purpose of paying his debts. The petition alleged that the goods, chattels, rights and credits of the lunatic in the hands of the guardian were insufficient to pay such debts and the charges of managing his estate. It set forth the amount of the debts and charges, the extent to which they exceeded the personal estate of the lunatic, and his opinion as to the necessity of using the whole or the greater part of the estate to pay the indebtedness, accompanied by a certificate of the supervisors of the town to the same effect; and it gave a description of the real property. Upon being filed, an order was made by the court requiring the next of kin of the lunatic, and all persons interested in his estate, to appear before the court on a day named, and show cause why a license should not be granted for the sale of the estate as prayed; and that notice be given by publication in a newspaper for four successive weeks prior to the day of hearing, and also by service upon certain persons named.

On the day appointed, January 2, 1871, there being no appearance adverse to the application, and no objection interposed, the court made an order granting a license to the guardian to sell the lands. The order recited that, pursuant to the order made on the 21st of November, 1870, the petition was heard and considered; that the affidavits of two persons, who were named, were filed, showing that the notice required had been duly published; that it appeared, after full examination, that it was necessary, in order to pay the debts of the lunatic; that all his real estate should be sold, and that the supervisors of the town had certified to the Judge of the court their approbation of the proposed sale, and that they deemed it necessary. The order required the guardian, before the sale, to execute to the Judge a bond in the sum of $15,000, conditioned that he would sell the property, and account for and dispose of the proceeds in the manner provided by law; also that he would take the oath required by statute; give notice of the terms and place of the sale, with a proper description of the property, by posting in three public places in the town where the property was situated, and by publication for three weeks in a weekly newspaper. It contained other directions not material to be mentioned, which were designed to secure a fair sale and a just price for the property; and it required the guardian to report his proceedings to the court. Under this license a sale was made and a deed executed to the purchaser, and a report thereof made to the court, which was confirmed. The defendant claims under the purchase at this sale.

Subsequently, the proceedings and commission in lunacy were superseded, and the plaintiff, Mohr, brought the present action to recover possession of the premises. After it was commenced, a party to whom he had transferred an undivided interest was joined with him as co-plaintiff.

The case turns upon the validity of the sale in question. The order of the County Court of Wisconsin, in granting the guardian license to sell the property, was assailed as having been made before notice of the time and place of hearing the petition of the guardian had been published for four successive weeks, as required by the court and the Statute of the State. It is insisted that such notice was in the nature of process to bring the parties before the court, and its constructive service by publication for the period mentioned was essential to give the court jurisdiction. The order recited, as already stated, that, by the affidavit of two persons named, the required publication was shown to have been made; but the Judges certify that it appeared from one of the affidavits that the notice was not thus published. It is to be regretted that the two affidavits are not embodied in the record. We might differ from the Judges in the conclusion reached by them. We might, perhaps, find that a publication was made once a week in four successive weeks, and hold that this was a sufficient compliance with the statute. Between the 21st of November, 1870, when the order for publication was made, and the 2d of January, 1871, when the petition was heard, more than four weeks had elapsed.

We shall assume, however, that the notice was not published for the full period prescribed, and the question for consideration is whether such omission, all other requisites of the statute having been complied with, rendered the order of the court invalid as against the plaintiff, Mohr,* the then lunatic; or, in other words, whether such publication was essential to the jurisdiction of the court to grant the license to sell. The Supreme Court of the State, in a case brought by this plaintiff, Mohr v. Tulip [40 Wis., 66], which came before it in 1876, affecting a part of the premises sold at the same guardian's sale, upon substantially the same proofs here presented, held that the sale was invalid for want of sufficient publication of such notice. On the other hand, the Supreme Court of the United States, in considering the validity of a sale of a decedent's estate under a statute in force in what was then the Territory of Wisconsin, requiring the county court, before passing upon the application for a license to sell, to order notice of its hearing to be given to all parties interested who did not signify their assent to the sale, had held, as far back as 1844, after deliberate consideration, that the absence of such notice from the record, or the fact that no such notice was given, did not affect the jurisdiction of the court, but was merely a matter of error, to be corrected by an appellate tribunal; and this decision has been repeatedly recognized as correctly marking the distinction between matters of error and matters of jurisdiction in proceedings for the sale of such estates. Grignon v. Astor, 2 How., 319.

Under these circumstances, the Circuit and the District Judge differed in opinion upon the following questions:

1. Whether the county court had jurisdiction to make the order granting the license to sell; or whether the order was invalid by reason of the alleged defect in the publication of notice; and,

2. Whether, in view of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States and the decision of the State Supreme Court in Mohr v. Tulip, the circuit court should follow the latter decision and hold the sale invalid.

The framers of the Constitution, in establishing the federal judiciary, assumed that it would be governed in the administration of justice by those settled principles then in force in the several States, and prevailing in the jurisprudence of the country from which our institutions were principally derived. Among them none were more important than those determining the manner in which the jurisdiction of the courts could be acquired. This necessarily depended upon the nature of the subject upon which the judicial power was called to act. If it was invoked against the person, to enforce a liability, the personal citation of the defendant or his voluntary appearance was required. If it was called into exercise with reference to real property by proceedings in rem, or of that nature, a different mode of procedure was usually necessary, such as a seizure of the property, with notice, by publication or otherwise, to parties having interests which might be affected. The rules governing this matter in these and other cases were a part of the general law of the land, established in our jurisprudence for the protection of rights of persons and property against oppression and spoliation. And when the courts of the United States were invested with juris-isdiction over controversies between citizens of different States, it was expected that these rules would be applied for the security and protection of the non-resident citizen. The constitutional provision owed its existence to the impression that state prejudices and attachments might sometimes affect injuriously the regular administration of justice in the state courts. And the law of Congress which was passed to give effect to the provision, made it optional with the non-resident citizen to require a suit against him, when commenced in a state court, to be transferred to a Federal Court. This power of removal would be of little value, and the constitutional provision would be practically defeated, if the ordinary rules established by the general law for acquiring jurisdiction in such cases could be thwarted by state legislation or the decision of the local courts. In some instances the States have provided for personal judgments against non-residents without personal citation, upon a mere constructive service of process by publication; but the Federal Courts have not hesitated to hold such judgments invalid. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S., 744 [XXIV., 576]. So, on the other hand, if the local courts should hold that certain conditions must be performed before jurisdiction is obtained, and thus defeat rights of non-resident citizens, acquired when a different ruling prevailed, the Federal Courts would be delinquent in duty if they followed the later decision.

If these views be applied to the present case, there will be little difficulty in answering the questions which appear to have embarrassed the Judges below. The Statute of Wisconsin provides for the sale of the real estate of a lunatic to pay his debts when his personal property is insufficient for that purpose, and points out the steps which his guardian must take to obtain a license to make the sale. It is admitted that these steps were taken for the sale in question, except that the order of the county court to show cause why the license to sell should not be granted, issued upon filing the petition, was not published for four successive weeks before the petition was heard and the license granted. The statute on this subject says, in its 4th section, that "Every such order to show cause shall be published at least four successive weeks in such newspaper as the court shall order, and a copy thereof shall be served personally on all persons interested in the estate and residing in the county in which such application is made, at least fourteen days before the day therein appointed for showing cause; Provided, however, if all persons interested in the estate shall signify in writing their assent to such — sale the notice may be dispensed with." And the 6th section provides that "The Judge of the County Court, at the time and place appointed in said order, or at such other time as the hearing shall be adjourned to, upon proof of the due service or publication of a copy of the order, or upon filing the consent in writing to such sale, of all persons interested, shall proceed to the hearing of such petition, and if such consent be not filed, shall hear and examine the allegations and proofs of the petitioner and of all persons interested in the estate who shall think proper to oppose the application."

It is apparent, from these sections, that the publication of notice of the hearing is only intended for the protection of parties having adversary interests in the property, and is not essential to the jurisdiction of the court. It may be dispensed with if the parties having such interests consent to the sale. The consent could not be signed by the lunatic, for he, by his condition, would be incapable of giving a consent; and yet upon the others' consent, the court could proceed to act without notice to him.

Nor, indeed, was there any reason why publication of notice should be made for other parties than those who held adversary interests. The lunatic could not be affected by such publication any more than by his consent. The application of the guardian, to the county court, was required by the law only as a check against any improvident action by him. There was nothing in the nature of the proceedings which required a notice of any kind, so far as the rights of the lunatic were concerned. The law would have been free from objection had it simply authorized, upon the consent of the court, a sale of the lunatic's property for the payment of his debts. The authority of the court in that case, as in this, would have existed, to license the sale whenever it appeared that the personal estate of the lunatic was insufficient to pay his debts, and that a sale of his real property was necessary for that purpose.

There is no charge of fraud in the action of the guardian, nor is it suggested that the property sold did not bring a fair price. The simple question is, whether, as against the lunatic, the license to sell was invalid for insufficient publication of notice of the hearing, the same being, as already stated, required only for the protection of other parties interested in the estate. The decision of this court in Grignon v. Astor, to which we have already referred, would seem to be decisive on this point. Indeed, it goes beyond what is required for the affirmance of the judgment here. That was a case of an administrator's sale under a statute in force in the Territory of Wisconsin, which provided that the county court, previous to passing upon the presentation made by the petition of an executor, administrator or guardian, for license to sell the property in his hands belonging to the deceased or his ward, should order due notice to be given to all parties concerned or their guardians, who did not signify their assent to the sale, to show cause at such time and place as should be appointed why the license should not be granted. But, in the order granting the license, it did not appear that notice had been given as thus required, and various other omissions were mentioned as impairing its validity. This court, however, held that no other requisites to the jurisdiction of the county court were prescribed by the statute than the death of the intestate, the insufficiency of his personal estate to pay his debts, and a representation of these facts to the county court where he dwelt or his real estate was situated; that the decision of the county court upon the facts was the exercise of the jurisdiction which the representation conferred; that any irregularities or errors in the decision were matters to be corrected by an appellate court; and that the decision could not be collaterally attacked by reason of them. The court observed, in substance, that it was not necessary that the record should disclose the contents of all the papers before the county court, or its action in preliminary matters; that it was sufficient to call its powers into exercise that the petition stated the facts upon the existence of which the law authorized the sale; that the granting of the license was an adjudication that such facts existed; and that a purchaser was not bound to look beyond the decree. The doctrine thus stated has ever since been adhered to by this court in like cases, and in 1865, in Comstock v. Crawford, which arose upon a similar statute in the same Territory, that decision was followed. 3 Wall., 396 [70 U. S., XVIII., 34]. Its maintenance was held to be essential to the security of numerous estates in Wisconsin, where it is said many defects are found in the records of the proceedings of the probate courts in the early period of her history. It was adopted for many years by her courts, after she ceased to be a Territory and became a State of the Union. It was well fitted for the repose of titles. Whether the reasoning of this court in other cases would not lead to some modification of its doctrine it is unnecessary to consider. As already intimated, there is no occasion to go to the full extent of the doctrine for the disposition of the present case. Here no parties claiming interests adverse to those of the lunatic are objecting to the license to sell, granted on his behalf and at his request through his guardian.

In Mohr v. Tulip, the Supreme Court of Wisconsin overlooked the distinction between the position of the lunatic, who was, in fact, the applicant through his representative, and that of parties having adversary interests in the property. He can no more object to the sale of his property for want of notice to them, if the provisions of law intended for his protection were followed, than a plaintiff in a personal action could object to a sale upon his own judgment, on the ground that the latter was prematurely entered. The object of notice or citation in all legal proceedings is, to afford to parties having separate or adverse interests an opportunity to be heard. It is not required for the protection of the applicant or suitor.

The statute declared that, upon the existence of certain facts, the sale of the lunatic's estate might be made, and when these appeared in the petition of the guardian, the court had jurisdiction to act, so far as his rights were concerned, as fully so as if the statute had so declared in terms, whatever may be the effect of its proceedings upon the interests of parties not properly brought before the court. We see no reason, therefore, so far as his interests are affected, to depart from the doctrine of Grignon v. Astor.

Judgment affirmed.

Mortgagee's right to policy—equitable right—failure to assign policy.

1. The general rule is that a mortgagee has no right to the benefit of a policy taken by the mortgagor, unless it is assigned to him.

2. But if the mortgagor is bound to insure the mortgaged premises for the security of the mortgagee, the latter will have an equitable lien upon the money due on a policy taken out by the mortgagor, to the extent of the mortgagee's interest in the property destroyed.

3. And this equity exists, although the contract provides that in case of the mortgagor's failing to procure and assign such insurance, the mortgagee may procure it at the mortgagor's expense.

[No. 211.]

Submitted Mar. 19, 1880. Decided May 10, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. E. T. Merrick, G. W. Race and Foster, for appellants.

Mr. Thomas Hunton, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

Johnson & Goodrich, commission merchants of New Orleans, being creditors of John H. Green, a planter, for advances made, suggested to him that he should authorize them to effect insurance on his buildings, gin-house, machinery and cotton in the gin-house, for their better security. He accordingly wrote them a letter authorizing them to effect such insurance; and they procured, from The Factors and Traders' Insurance Company of New Orleans, insurance on an open policy in their own names for $5,500 on the buildings and machinery, and $2,000 on the cotton. This was in November, 1872, and the insurance was for sixty days. In January, 1873, this insurance was renewed for sixty days longer; and before its expiration, in March, 1873, the buildings, machinery and a small quantity of cotton were destroyed by fire. Johnson & Goodrich took measures to recover the insurance, and received $900 for the loss on the cotton, leaving a balance still due from Green of $3,450, for the payment of which, Green having become insolvent, they relied on the insurance upon the buildings and machinery, and presented to the Insurance Company the necessary proofs to collect the same.

At this point the appellants, Ezra Wheeler & Co. interposed, and set up a claim to have the insurance money on the buildings and machinery paid to them, and for this purpose filed the bill in this case against Johnson & Goodrich, the Insurance Company, and Green. The defendants severally answered, proofs were taken, and upon due hearing the court below made a decree dismissing the bill of complaint. From that decree the present appeal was taken.

The case, as developed by the pleadings and the evidence, appears to be substantially as follows: prior to the employment of Johnson & Goodrich by Green as his commission merchants, he had employed the firm of Foster & Gwyn, of New Orleans, in the same capacity, and had become largely indebted to them. In 1870 he had given them his note for $10,000; in 1871 another note for $3,723.61; and in March, 1872, a third note for $3,009.55. To secure the payment of each of these notes, with interest at eight per cent per annum, he gave successive mortgages on his plantation, buildings, machinery and stock, with an agreement in the last two mortgages to insure the buildings and machinery and to transfer the policies of insurance to the mortgagees for their better security, or, in default of doing this, that the mortgagees and all subsequent holders of the notes secured by those mortgages should have the right to effect such insurance at his expense. These mortgages were all given and recorded before Johnson & Goodrich procured the insurance now in question. Foster & Gwyn, in July, 1871, under the reserved right contained in the second mortgage, effected an insurance for one year upon the buildings and machinery, but did not renew the same. In the spring or summer of 1872, Foster & Gwyn being largely indebted to the appellants, transferred to them the three notes and mortgages of Green by way of collateral security, and the appellants rely on this security for making their claim against Foster & Gwyn.

Being thus the holders of the notes and mortgages of Green, the appellants claim the insurance money in question on two grounds: first, on the ground that although the insurance was effected in the name of Johnson & Goodrich, they acted merely as agents of Green, and the insurance was really taken out for his benefit; and he having agreed in and by the last two mortgages to insure the property for the benefit of the mortgagees and to transfer the insurance to them, the appellants as holders of the notes and mortgages are equitably entitled to the insurance money. Secondly, on the ground, as the appellants alleged, that when the insurance in question was about to be renewed in January, 1873, they were assured, by Green and by Johnson & Goodrich, that it was effected for the benefit of them, the mortgagees, or at least they were led to believe that this was so done.

An examination of the evidence in the case fails to convince us that the latter charge is true, at least so far as Johnson & Goodrich are concerned. About the time of the renewal, Foster, on behalf of the appellants, called on Green at his plantation, and testified that he requested Green to have the property insured, and that Green promised that he would write to Johnson & Goodrich to renew the insurance. The witness does not say, and Green in his answer denies, that he promised to have any insurance effected for the benefit of the mortgagees or the appellants; and the evidence is clear that Johnson & Goodrich had no such understanding. They regularly renewed their policy, and on the same day Gwyn called at their office and asked a clerk whether they had taken out a policy on the cotton-gin and buildings of Green, and the clerk answered that they had; and nothing more appears to have been said. Johnson & Goodrich both swear that they had no knowledge of the stipulation about insurance in the mortgages, or that Green was under any engagement to effect insurance, and that their only motive for effecting insurance on the property was to protect themselves. They charged the premiums to Green, it is true; but this they had a right to do under the circumstances, inasmuch as he authorized them to effect the insurance, and was entitled to any benefit to accrue therefrom after their claim against him was satisfied.

The appellants insist, however, that Johnson & Goodrich had no insurable interest in the buildings and machinery and, therefore, that they have no lawful claim to any part of the insurance in question. But it does not lie in the mouths of the appellants to make this argument. If it has any force which it is not necessary for us to decide, it can only be urged by the Insurance Company, and they do not urge it.

Since, therefore, there is no proof that Johnson & Goodrich did not act with entire fairness in the whole transaction, and without notice of Green's covenant to insure; and since there was no privity between them and the appellants, we do not see how the latter can sustain any claim at law or in equity against them.

But as the debt due to Johnson & Goodrich will not exhaust the whole amount of the insurance, and as the balance rightfully belongs to Green, the question arises, whether, as to that balance, the claim of the appellants is not maintainable. It is, undoubtedly, the general rule that a mortgagee has no right to the benefit of a policy taken by the mortgagor, unless it is assigned to him. Carter v. Rockett, 3 Paige, 437. But it is settled by many decisions in this country, that if the mortgagor is bound by covenant or otherwise to insure the mortgaged premises for the better security of the mortgagee, the latter will have an equitable lien upon the money due on a policy taken out by the mortgagor to the extent of the mortgagee's interest in the property destroyed. Thomas v. Vonkapff, 6 Gill & J., 372; n. to 3 Kent, Com., 376; Ang. F. and L. Ins., sec. 62; 2 Am. L. Cas., 834, 5th ed.; 1 Herman, Mortg., sec. 424, and cases there cited. And this equity exists, although the contract provides that in case of the mortgagor's failing to procure and assign such insurance, the mortgagee may procure it at the mortgagor's expense. Nichols v. Baxter, 5 R. I., 491. Of course, the mortgagee's equity will be governed by the scope and object of the agreement; as, if the agreement be to insure for a certain amount, the equity will not apply beyond that amount; and as its object is to afford better security for the payment of the debt, it will not be enforced further than is necessary for such security; if the debt is abundantly secured by the property which remains liable to the mortgage, a court of chancery would properly decline to enforce it. The present case, however, is not embarrassed by any questions of this sort. The appellants have proceeded to sell the immovable property mortgaged, which did not more than satisfy the first mortgage; and the amount of insurance money remaining after satisfying the claim of Johnson & Goodrich is less than the insurance stipulated for in the other mortgages.

The equitable doctrine upon which the appellants' claim is founded, undoubtedly obtains in Louisiana. It is derived from the principles of the civil law, which is the basis of the Civil Code of that State; and it is supported by the authorities cited from the Louisiana reports. See, Civil Code La., art. 1965; Williams v. Winchester, 7 Mart. (N. S.) 22; Citizens Bk. v. St. Bk. 5 La. Ann., 13; Braden v. Ins. Co., 1 La., 220.

Our conclusion is, that the decree of the Circuit Court should be reversed and the case remanded, with instructions to enter a decree in conformity with this opinion.

Decree reversed accordingly.

LOAN AND TRUST COMPANY ET

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 443-452.)

Mechanics' lien—judgment on—extent of.

1. In Iowa, a mechanics' lien has preference over a prior recorded mortgage.

2. A judgment establishing the lien against a railroad company is conclusive of the formality of the prior proceedings, in a subsequent action to foreclose a mortgage on the same property.

3. The entire road is subject to a lien for work done on one part of it, although the road was built in sections.

[No. 258.]

Argued Apr. 13, 14, 1880. Decided May 10, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Iowa.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Jas. Grant & Grant, for appellants.

Messrs. B. J. Hall and Hubbard & Clark, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellants here, who were plaintiffs below, are trustees in a mortgage made by the Burlington & Southwestern Railway Company on its road and other property to secure $1,800,000 of bonds put on the market and sold. They bring this suit in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Iowa, to foreclose that mortgage and in addition to the Railroad Company, they brought in, during the progress of the suit, other parties who were asserting mechanics' liens on the road. Of these parties, only the interest of O'Hara Brothers and Wells, French & Co., whose liens were by the court held to be paramount to that of complainants, remain to be considered in the appeal of the trustees from that decree.

The Railroad Company was organized under the laws of Iowa to build a road from Burlington, on the Mississippi River, in a southwestern direction, to some point on the Missouri River.

NOTE—Priority between mortgage and mechanics' lien.

The priority as between mechanics' liens and mortgages depends to a great extent on the statutes of the several States. Brooks v. Ry. Co., supra; Mass. Gen. Stat., c. 150; Cal. Code Civ. Pro., sec. 1186; Davis v. Bilsland, 85 U. S., 331, 969; Cheshire Prov. Inst. v. Stone, 52 N. H., 365; Shepardson v. Johnson, 60 Iowa, 239; Chadbourne v. Williams, 71 N. C., 450; Mellor v. Valentine, 3 Col., 258.

In some States the lien attaches from the commencement of the work, although the particular work for which the lien is claimed was done after the execution of the mortgage. Neilson v. Iowa, etc., R. R. Co., 44 Iowa, 71; Dubois v. Wilson, 21 Mo., 214; Brooks v. Lester, 36 Md., 65; Hall v. Hinckley, 32 Wis., 362; Davis v. Alvord, 94 U. S., 224, 283; Meyer v. Const. Co., 100 U. S., 224, 283.

From the initial point, at Burlington, to Viele, in Lee County, Iowa, they, by contract, used the track of a road already built between Burlington and Keokuk. From Viele to Bloomfield, in Davis County, they built and paid for their own track. From Bloomfield to Moulton, in Appanoose County, fourteen miles, they used the road of another company, already built, and from Moulton to Unionville, in Missouri, they built their own road. It is for the work and labor done and materials furnished in the latter piece of the road, that the lien of the appellees was allowed by the court on the road and right of way, stations, etc., of the Company from Viele Junction, in Lee County, to the South Iowa State line, in Appanoose County, in favor of O'Hara Brothers for $59,763.24, and in favor of Wells, French & Co., for $8,528.83.

It is a conceded fact in the case, that the work for which these liens were allowed was done for the Company by the parties claiming it, and no question is raised here as to the value of the work and the liability of the Company to pay for it. It is also an undisputed fact, that before any of this work was done or the contract, was made under which it was done, the mortgage of plaintiffs was executed and duly recorded.

It is also undisputed that both the appellees, whose claim is now contested, were subcontractors who had no direct contract with the Railroad Company. The contract which that Company made was with another organization, known as the Mississippi & Missouri Construction Company.

This was a purely artificial being, composed of the officers and some of the stockholders of the Railroad Company organized for the purpose of building this road, and belongs to a class whose operations have become well known of late years as instruments to enable the officers of railroad companies to make contracts with themselves to build the roads for their stockholders. In the present case, this instrument having sublet all the contract to one J. W. Barnes, very soon took itself out of the way, and by an agreement between it and the Railway Company, of which the following extract is found in the record, its existence ceases to be of any further significance in this contest:

"Contract between B. & S. W. Railway Company and the M. & M. Construction Company. Dated February 6th, 1873.

The Railway Company assumes all outstanding liabilities of the Construction Company, except officers' salaries. All previous contracts between the two Companies are annulled.

The Railway Company assumes the contract of J. W. Barnes for construction of portions of the main line and branch of the B. & S. W. Railway Company, and the payment of all estimates due and to become due thereon."

This leaves to be considered here the Railway Company, J. W. Barnes, the principal contractor for construction of the road, O'Hara and Brothers, and Wells, French & Co., subcontractors, and the trustees in this foreclosure suit. It is also to be observed that O'Hara & Co. and Wells, French & Co., had both commenced legal proceedings in the proper courts of the State to establish their liens before the present foreclosure suit was begun by appellants, and that in those courts, after a contest with the Railway Company, judgments were rendered establishing their liens, and it was after this that they were made defendants to the present foreclosure suit.

To these proceedings, Barnes, the principal contractor, and the Railway Company were parties, and we take it for granted that as against them the judgment of the state court establishes the validity of the lien. The appellants being no party to these proceedings are not bound by that judgment, and both the validity of the lien as against them, and whether the lien, if valid, is paramount to that of the mortgage, are the questions for consideration here. These questions must be determined by the statutes of Iowa, as construed in regard to the facts of this case.

By the law in force when these transactions took place, a mechanic has a lien for labor done or things furnished, on the entire land upon which the building, erection or improvement was made, which has been held to include railroads, shall be preferred to all other liens and incumbrances which shall be attached to or upon such building, erection or other improvement made subsequently to the commencement of said building, erection or other improvement. Revision of 1860, sec. 1853; Code of 1873, sec. 2139.

This provision, it will be observed, relates to the land on which the improvement is made and gives a paramount or preferred lien only as against other liens and incumbrances created subsequent to the beginning of the work of the mechanic. Those made prior to that time, are unaffected by it. But section 1855 of the Revision, now section 2141 of the Code, makes a different provision in regard to the lien of the mechanic on the building, erection and improvement for which the lien is claimed. It reads thus:

"The lien for the things aforesaid on work shall attach to the building, erections or improvements for which they were furnished or

Under other statutes, without actual or constructive notice as prescribed, the mortgagee is not affected by the mechanics' lien, and his being at work on the building is not notice. Gere v. Cushing, 5 Bush, 304; Foushee v. Grigsby, 12 Bush, 75.

Under the Massachusetts Statute, the lien relates back to the time of the making the contract for the labor or materials. Mortgages subsequent to the contract are subject to the lien. Dunklee v. Crane, 103 Mass., 470; Batchelder v. Rand, 117 Mass., 176; Manchester v. Crane, 121 Mass., 418.

A mechanics' lien for materials for improving or enlarging a building does not take priority over an existing mortgage. Jessup v. Stone, 13 Wis., 466; Getchell v. Allen, 34 Iowa, 559; Equitable L. Ins. Co. v. Slye, 45 Iowa, 615; Norris' Appeal, 30 Pa. St., 122.

A purchase money mortgage is prior to a mechanics' lien, although given subsequent to the commencement of the building. Campbell's Appeal, 36 Pa. St., 247; Rees v. Luddington, 73 Wis., 276; Clark v. Butler, 32 N. J. Eq., 664.

A mechanics' lien on a building is subordinate to the lien of a mortgage upon the land, executed before the building was commenced. Hershey v. Hershey, 15 Iowa, 185; Hazard Powder Co. v. Loomis, 2 Disn., 544; Jessup v. Stone, 13 Wis., 466.

Under statutes providing that lien shall attach from the commencement of the building, the commencement of the building is the first labor done on the ground which is made the foundation of the building, such as beginning to dig the foundation. Pennock v. Hoover, 5 Rawle, 291; Dunklee v. Crane, 103 Mass., 470; Conrad v. Starr, 50 Iowa, 481; Brooks v. Lester, 36 Md., 65.

done, in preference to any prior lien or incumbrance or mortgage upon the land upon which the same is erected or put, and any person enforcing such lien may have such building, erection or other improvement sold under execution, and the purchaser may remove the same within a reasonable time thereafter."

The mechanic, therefore, has a lien upon the land paramount to all rights accruing after the commencement of his work, and upon what he puts upon the land paramount to all other claims, whether created prior or subsequent to that time. The decisions of the courts of Iowa are to this effect and the proposition is not disputed in argument here.

Have the appellees taken the necessary steps to establish their lien?

What is required to initiate the lien as to all other persons but subcontractors is to be found in section 1851 of the Revision of 1860.

"Section 1851. It shall be the duty of every person, except as has been provided for subcontractors, who wishes to avail himself of the provisions of this chapter, to file with the clerk of the district court of the county in which the building, erection or other improvement to be charged with the lien is situated, and within ninety days after all the things aforesaid shall have been furnished, or work or labor done or performed, a just and true account of the demand due or owing to him after allowing all credits, and containing a correct description of the property to be charged with said lien and verified by affidavit."

This section was subsequently modified by the following statute:

"An Act to Amend Section 1851 of Revision of 1860 relating to Mechanics' Liens."

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, That the following words are hereby added to section eighteen hundred and fifty-one of Revision of 1860, to wit: 'But the failure to file the claim, account, settlement or demand, in the time named in this section and in section 1847, shall not operate to defeat the claim or demand, nor the lien of the person supplying the labor or material, as against the owner, nor the contractor, nor as against anyone except purchasers or incumbrancers, without notice, whose rights accrued after the ninety days and before the account, or settlement, or claim, or lien is filed.'

Approved April 7, 1862."

The statute, however, makes provision that a subcontractor who shall do the work which his principal had contracted to do shall, by proper proceeding, secure to himself the lien which arises from the work done or materials furnished. In such case there is a more complex affair. There are, here, the owner of the property, the principal contractor and the subcontractor, who have rights to be affected, as well as prior and subsequent incumbrancers or lien holders. It may generally be supposed that the principal contractor has sublet his contract so as to leave a profit to himself. He is entitled, therefore, to see that his subcontractor does not take this profit. The owner is not bound for more than he agreed to pay the principal contractor. In view of these interests, section 1847 of the Revision, section 2131 of the Code of 1873, enacts that every subcontractor wishing to avail himself of the benefit of the Act, shall give notice to the owner of the land, before or at the time he furnishes any of the materials or performs any of the labor, of his intention to perform or furnish the same, and afterwards he shall settle with the contractor therefor, and having made the settlement in writing, the same, signed by the contractor and certified by him to be just, shall be presented to the owner. He is also required, within thirty days from the time the things shall have been furnished or the labor performed, to file with the clerk of the district court of the county in which the building is situated a copy of said settlement, and a correct description of the property to be charged with the lien, the correctness of which shall be verified by oath. As we have already seen, the Act of 1862 declares a failure to file this settlement shall not operate to defeat the lien as against everyone except purchasers or incumbrancers without notice, whose rights accrued after ninety days, and before the account or settlement or lien claim is filed.

Appellants are not within this exception.

The record shows that there was filed in the office of the clerk of the District Court of Appanoose County, on the 31st of October, 1872, a statement by O'Hara and Brothers of a claim against J. W. Barnes, the principal contractor, and against the Railroad Company, of a mechanics' lien on their line of said road, from Viele, in Lee County, through Van Buren, Davis and Appanoose Counties, in the State of Iowa, for work and labor done and to be done and materials furnished under Barnes' contract, in which they said they had already done work to the amount of $265,000, of which $130,000 had been paid. This was verified by the oath of O'Hara. An agreed statement of facts in the present suit states that, in filing their respective claims for mechanics' liens, settlements had been made between the subcontractors and Barnes, and that the amounts claimed had been agreed to by Barnes in these several settlements.

It is now urged by appellants, against the validity of these liens, that the notice of the lien to the Railway Company, which the statute required from the subcontractor, was never given, and if any direct written notice was necessary to the establishment of the lien in this suit, it must be admitted that it is not proved.

But we think there are two sufficient answers to this objection:

1. It is obvious that this notice to the owner of the property is for the purpose of enabling him to protect himself in his dealings with the principal contractor, so that he shall neither overpay the amount of the contract with the subcontractor, nor embarrass himself by having to deal with two contractors. This dealing with two contractors instead of one being an obligation which the law imposes on him for the benefit of the subcontractor, this notice is required for his protection. It can have nothing to do with the validity of the lien beyond ascertaining the amount of it to which the subcontractor is entitled as between those three. With prior liens it has nothing to do, and can have no effect on the rights of the holders of them. The initial proceeding for the establishment of the lien, on which all others rest, is the claim filed in the clerk's office of the proper court. In the case of Bundy v. R. Co., 49 Iowa, 207, the Supreme Court of the State held that the paper thus filed by a subcontractor imparted notice, to the owner and principal contractor of the condition of the account between the parties.

2. Since this notice is designed for the protection of the owner, and was to be given to him, the judgment of the State Court of Iowa establishing this lien against the Railroad Company is conclusive on that subject, and with that question the complainants in this court have nothing to do.

The next objection, very strongly urged by counsel for appellants, is thus stated in the assignment of errors: the court erred in decreeing a lien on the property in Davis, Van Buren and Lee, the first division of the road, for work done in Appanoose County, the next division, on a contract which was dated and work begun after recording the mortgage in Appanoose County.

As we understand this objection, it is founded on the idea that while, if the whole road had been uninterruptedly built under one contract, the lien of the contractors and subcontractors would have been good against the whole road, though they had contributed only to the building of a limited portion of it, yet because these subcontractors were only employed on one division of the road, after another had been finished, and under a distinct contract with the Company made after that completion, the lien can only attach to the last section of the road, and even this is subordinate to the mortgage of the appellants.

One branch of the question here raised was very fully considered in the case of Neilson v. R. Co., 44 Iowa, 71. That was a case where, after the building of a railroad had been commenced, a mortgage was executed on its whole line, both where work had been done and where none had been done. After this the building of the road was continued under new contracts by persons who did work on the other parts of the road, and the question was, whether they had any lien prior to that of the mortgage, and if so, whether it extended to all the road or only to that part built under the new contracts.

The court, after mature deliberation, decided both these questions in favor of the contractors. It held that the road was an entire improvement, within the meaning of the Act, and that the continuance of it was a matter to be taken into the calculation of the mortgages when the mortgage was made, and the lien for that work was, by the statute, given on the road as one improvement. The court, speaking of the policy of the statute, said "It is not desirable that the execution of a mortgage upon land on which a building or other improvement is in process of construction should arrest the work and prevent its completion. Both mortgagor and mortgagee are interested in its completion. Without it the money already expended must ordinarily to a great extent be lost. Take the present case as illustrative. The interveners are holders of mortgage bonds upon a road, sixteen miles of which had been graded at the time the mortgage was made. The value of their security depended upon the further construction of the work. They foresaw that work and materials must be furnished by somebody, or nothing could be realized from what had been done."

But the argument most confidently urged here is, that the road was built in sections and that there was such a separation in space and time in the construction of these sections that they cannot be considered as one improvement within the meaning of the statute. The argument is that the road from Veleo to Bloomfield is one road; that then it is interrupted, and the track of another company is used from Bloomfield to Moulton; that there another road begins which was constructed under another contract, and that no lien for work done here can attach to the road between Veleo and Bloomfield.

The argument seems to us extremely technical, and at war with the principle in which liens are allowed for work done subsequently to the creation of a mortgage. That doctrine, or rather the statute giving a permanent lien under such circumstances, and the construction of it by the courts were in existence when the mortgage of the appellants was made. It entered into and became a part of their contract. They knew that the road was yet to be built, and that while such building would add to the value of their security, the law gave to the men whose labor and money built it a lien superior to that of the mortgage. Now that the venture in which both embarked is to end in loss to one or the other of them, there is no judicial propriety in straining the law to limit the rights of one party rather than the other. If that law, by its fair construction, gives the mechanic a lien for a few thousand dollars on the whole road, instead of a part of it, the law should prevail.

In every respect, except this one of its construction, the road is a unit, an entirety. Its route is selected and surveyed as one road. It is owned and built and run by one corporation. Its trains run over it all. The mortgage of appellants can have no lien on any of the road beyond the first few miles upon any other theory, for its descriptive language refers to the road as to one and not as several subdivisions. It is not easy to see how it can be held to be one road for the purposes of the mortgage, and two or three pieces of road for the purposes of the mechanics' lien. This continuation of the road beyond Bloomfield was as useful to the security of that mortgage as the part between Veleo and Bloomfield. Though the work was done from Moulton under another contract, there was never any suspension of the work on the whole road beyond what is usual in roads built with limited means. There was never any permanent arrest of the work, nor any intention to cease work on the road. The intersection of fourteen miles of another road between Bloomfield and Moulton does not destroy the identity of the improvement, nor convert it into two railroads.

The case of the Canal Co. v. Gordon, 6 Wall., 561 [73 U. S., XVIII., 894], is much relied on by appellants, and in one of its features—that now under consideration—it bears some analogy to the one before us. In that case, however, the part of the canal first finished, and which was held not to be subject to a lien for work done on that constructed afterwards was not only finished but in full operation for some time. How long this was finished and in use before work was begun on the new part is not stated in the report of the case. It may have been long enough to justify the belief that for a time the further prosecution of the work was abandoned, and its resumption an afterthought.

In the case before us, the purpose of discontinuing the road was never for a moment entertained, and the actual work was resumed in a few months after its completion to Bloomfield. In that case the decision depended on the construction of a Statute of California which used the word "structure" where the Iowa Statute uses the word "improvement."

In that case, as was said in the opinion, we had no aid from any decision of the courts of the State. In the one before us we have several decisions of the Iowa court. Neilson v. R. Co., 44 Iowa, 71; Ins. Co. v. Slye, 45 Iowa, 615.

"A mechanic's lien," says the court in the latter case, "can, it is true, become paramount to a mortgage executed upon a partially erected building, provided the work be done or materials furnished for the purpose of completing the building. This is the plain provision of the Statute and, to our mind, it is not unreasonable. Whoever takes a mortgage upon a building in the process of erection, should assume that the mechanics' work is to go forward, and he may form some estimate of the amount that will be required. The same is not true in regard to repairs or enlargements."

If the case of the Canal Co. v. Gordon is at variance with the decision of the courts of Iowa construing her own statute, we must follow the latter. They also meet our approval.

Without examining other objections to the decree, or those to the lien of Wells, French & Co., we think what we have said covers the case, and the decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Territorial courts—damages.

1. The territorial courts of Washington Territory have such jurisdiction in admiralty causes as is vested in the Federal, District and Circuit Courts.

2. In a suit brought for personal injuries, the damages must be left to the good sense and deliberate judgment of the jury.

[No. 266.]

Argued Apr. 16, 19, 1880. Decided May 10, 1880.

APPEAL from the Supreme Court of Washington Territory.

The case is stated by the court.

The following were the assignments of error:

1. The court erred in holding that it had admiralty and maritime jurisdiction.

2. The court erred in holding that the Acts of Congress and the rules of the Supreme Court of the United States, governing the Circuit and District Courts of the United States in admiralty practice, were in force in the courts of the Territory, and regulated the practice therein.

See 11 OTTO.

3. The court erred in overruling the motion for, and denying the appellants' trial by jury.

4. The court erred in holding that the damages caused by the alleged tort constituted a lien upon the ship, City of Panama.

5. The court erred in holding that a contract to carry Mary Phelps was proven.

6. The court erred in holding that Mary Phelps was not guilty of contributory negligence, and that she was entitled to recover damages from the appellants.

7. The district court erred in allowing $5,000, and the Supreme Court in allowing $15,000, because both are excessive, and more specifically in allowing $3,000 for injury to libelant's ability to labor and earn money, and $2,000 for inconvenience and disfigurement resulting from the injury.

8. The court erred in overruling appellants' motion for leave to withdraw paper designated as libelants' notice of appeal, and in ruling that the libelants had appealed from the decree of the district court to the Supreme Court of the Territory.

9. The court erred in ruling that libelants could look into appellants' bill of exceptions for the purpose of furthering libelants' cause and in increasing the damages.

10. The court erred in overruling the exceptions and points contained in appellants' bill of exceptions.

11. The district court erred in ruling that the libelants were entitled to recover $5,000 damages, or any damages, and the Supreme Court erred in holding that the libelants were entitled to recover $15,000 damages, or any damages.

Mr. Austen G. Fox, Jas. McNaught and Andrew Boardman, for appellants.

Mr. P. Phillips, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Judicial power as well as legislative is conferred upon the territorial government by the organic Act establishing the territory, the provision being that the judicial power shall be vested in a Supreme Court, District Courts, Probate Courts, and in Justices of the Peace. Appellate jurisdiction from the district courts to the Supreme Court is also given, and with that view the provision is that writs of error, bills of exception, and appeals shall be allowed under such regulations as may be prescribed by law, from which it plainly follows that the District Courts created by the Organic Act are and were intended to be courts of general original jurisdiction.

Provision is also made for writs of error and appeals from the territorial Supreme Court to the Supreme Court of the United States, in the same manner and under the same regulations as are required to remove here the judgment or decree of the Federal Circuit Court for re-examination, where the value of the property or the amount in controversy exceeds $2,000, or where the Constitution of the United States or an Act of Congress or a treaty is brought in question.

Express power is also given to the District Courts of the Territory to have and exercise the same jurisdiction in all cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States as is vested in the Circuit and District Courts of the United States, and also of all cases arising under the laws of the Territory. 10 Stat. at L., 175; R. S., secs. 1910, 1911.

Matters of fact of a preliminary nature, disconnected with the question of jurisdiction, are not controverted; as, for example, it is not disputed that the steamship is owned by the respondent Steamship Company, and that she is one of the line they employ in the transportation of passengers and freight between the Port of Seattle, one of the ports of Puget Sound, and the Port of San Francisco, in the State of California; nor is it denied that the complaining party purchased a ticket as a cabin passenger for a passage, at the time alleged, from the former to the latter port; nor that she went on board for that purpose, and that a stateroom was assigned to her for use during the voyage by the proper officer or agent in charge.

None of these matters are denied in the argument here, and the injured party alleges that, while she had stepped into her stateroom for a few minutes, a portion of a concealed hatchway in the floor of the cabin near the door of her stateroom was uncovered by some of the officers, agents or employés of the Company, and was, by their gross carelessness and negligence, left open and unguarded, in consequence of which and without fault she, in returning from her stateroom to the cabin, fell through the hatchway down into the hold of the steamship, a distance of about twenty feet, whereby she broke and crushed the bones of her right arm and received other grievous injuries, which, as she believes, will disable her for life.

Compensation for her injuries being refused by the Company, she, her husband joining with her, instituted the present suit in rem against the steamship in the proper District Court of the Territory to recover such redress as the law affords in such cases. Service was made and the respondents appeared and demurred to the libel for several causes, of which the following are the most material in this investigation: (1) That the District Court had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter alleged in the libel. (2) That neither the Acts of Congress nor the admiralty rules of practice promulgated by the Supreme Court apply in the courts of the Territory.

Hearing was had and the District Court overruled the demurrer, and the respondents excepted. Other proceedings took place before the respondents answered the libel, but they are omitted as now unimportant. Brief reference to the answer of the respondents will be sufficient, as the question of jurisdiction is the one chiefly discussed in this court. Apart from that, the material matters of defense set forth in the libel consisted of a denial that the allegations of the fourth and fifth articles were true, and the respondents expressly denied that the injuries of the complaining party were, in any respect, caused by the carelessness or negligence of the officers or employés of the steamship. Testimony was taken, hearing had, and the District Court having made a finding of facts, entered a decree in favor of the libelants for the sum of $5,000. Both parties appealed to the territorial Supreme Court, where they were allowed to adduce evidence in open court. All of the testimony introduced was taken down by the order of the court and is reported in a document called a bill of exceptions. Certain motions were made by the respective parties which are not deemed material, and the parties having been again fully heard, the Supreme Court entered a decree in favor of the libelants in the sum of $15,000, from which the respondents appealed to this court. Since the cause was entered here the respondents have filed the assignment of errors set forth in their brief, numbered from one to eleven inclusive, of which the first two call in question the jurisdiction of the territorial courts.

Jurisdiction of the territorial Supreme Court cannot be successfully denied if it be established that the original jurisdiction of the cause was vested in the District Court, as the organic Act provides that writs of error, bills of exception and appeals shall be allowed in all cases from the final decisions of said District Court to the Supreme Court, under such regulations as may be prescribed by law; from which it follows that the present investigation is necessarily limited to the inquiry whether the District Court had jurisdiction to hear and determine the controversy.

Chancery, as well as common law jurisdiction, is, in terms, vested both in the Supreme and District Courts, and the same section provides that the District Courts shall have and exercise the same jurisdiction under the Constitution and laws of the United States as is invested in the Circuit and District Courts of the United States, which is a plain reference to the enactments of Congress defining the original jurisdiction of those courts. Appellate jurisdiction is in some cases exercised by the Federal Circuit Courts, but, inasmuch as the entire appellate judicial jurisdiction of the Territory had previously been given to the Supreme Court by the same section of the Organic Act, it is obvious that it is original and not appellate jurisdiction that is there conferred by that clause.

Cognizance of an original character was given to the District Courts, concurrent with the Circuit Courts, by the 9th section of the Judiciary Act as amended, long prior to the passage of the Organic Act in question, of all crimes and offenses against the authority of the United States, the punishment of which is not capital, whether committed in their respective districts or upon the high seas. 1 Stat. at L., 76; 5 Stat. at L., 517.

Admiralty and maritime cognizance, original and exclusive, was also vested in those courts of all civil causes of the kind, including all seizures under laws of impost, navigation, or trade, where the seizures are made on waters navigable from the sea by vessels of ten or more tons burden. R. S., sec. 563.

Original cognizance in certain cases, concurrent with the courts of the several States, was given to the Circuit Courts, in suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity, and of all crimes and offenses cognizable under the federal authority, except where that Act otherwise provides, and concurrent jurisdiction of the crimes and offenses cognizable in the District Courts. 1 Stat. at L., 88; R. S., sec. 629.

Such jurisdiction of the territorial District Courts within the respective districts is made co-extensive with both the Federal Circuit and District Courts, for reasons which will be obvious to anyone who will compare the two sections, one with the other, in their practical operation. Two classes of courts are created in the federal system for the exercise of the necessary original jurisdiction, but in the Territory, as provided in the Organic Act, there is but one class of courts created for that purpose. Had Congress limited the jurisdiction of the territorial District Courts to that exercised by the Federal District Courts, then those courts could not have taken cognizance of controversies in patent cases nor of crimes or offenses against the authority of the United States, where the punishment is death, and if their jurisdiction had been limited to that exercised by the Circuit Courts, then those courts would have had no cognizance whatever of admiralty and maritime causes, or of seizures on water where the proceeding is according to the course of the admiralty law.

Power to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the public territory is vested in Congress, and in the frequent exercise of that power the usual form for an Organic Act in such a case has become a very complete and well digested preparatory system of government. Two examples of courts having such jurisdiction are found in the 10th section of the Judiciary Act, where the Federal District Courts in two districts were empowered to exercise jurisdiction in addition to what was conferred by the 9th section of the Judiciary Act of all other causes, except appeals and writs of error, made cognizable in a Circuit Court, and with authority to proceed therein in the same manner as a Circuit Court.

Argument to show that jurisdiction in admiralty cases is properly exercised by the Federal District Courts under the 9th section of that Act, is quite unnecessary, as everyone knows that jurisdiction in such cases has been exercised by those courts under that provision from the passage of the Act to the present time, with the sanction of every Federal Court organized pursuant to the Constitution and the laws of Congress. Doubt at one time was suggested whether those courts could properly exercise judicial cognizance in prize cases, inasmuch as the section does not in terms confer such jurisdiction; but the Supreme Court held that prize was a branch of the admiralty, and that as such, jurisdiction was vested in the District Courts by the 9th section of the Judiciary Act. The Admiral, 3 Wall., 609, 612 [70 U. S., XVIII., 58]; Glass v. The Betsey, 3 Dall., 16.

Prior to the Act of the 3d of March, 1863, the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction in prize cases, except when the same were removed here from the Circuit Courts, but the Act of Congress referred to provides that the decrees in such case may be appealed from the District Court directly to the Supreme Court, which leaves the Circuit Courts without jurisdiction in prize cases. Beyond all question, admiralty jurisdiction, including jurisdiction in prize cases, was vested in the territorial District Courts by the 9th section of the Organic Act, the explicit language of the Act being that the District Courts of the Territory shall have and exercise the same jurisdiction in all cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, as is vested in the Circuit and District Courts of the United States, and also of all cases arising under the laws of the Territory.

Earnest effort is made in argument to show that, inasmuch as a case in admiralty does not strictly arise under the Constitution and laws of the United States, that the clause of the Organic Act referred to does not vest jurisdiction to hear and determine such cases in the territorial District Courts, for which proposition they refer to one of the decisions of this court. Ins. Co. v. Canter, 1 Pet., 511, 546.

Select passages of the opinion in that case, when detached from the context, may appear to support the theory of the respondents, but the actual decision of the court is explicitly and undeniably the other way.

Cotton, in bales, to a large amount was shipped at New Orleans for transportation to Havre de Grace, and it appears that the ship was wrecked off Florida, from which the cotton was saved and was carried to Key West, where it was sold by order of the Territorial Court to satisfy a claim for salvage amounting to seventy-six per cent of the property saved. Prior to the loss the shippers had effected insurance, and they abandoned the same to the underwriters. Part of the cotton subsequently arrived at Charleston, when the underwriters libeled the same as their property by virtue of the abandonment. Hearing was had and the District Court pronounced the proceeding of the Territorial Court at Key West a nullity, and ordered the property to be restored to the libelants, subject to a certain deduction for salvage. Both parties appealed to the Circuit Court, where the decree of the District Court was reversed and a decree entered restoring the cotton to the claimant, when the libelants appealed to the Supreme Court.

State Courts have no jurisdiction in admiralty cases, nor can courts within the States exercise such jurisdiction, except such as are established in pursuance of the 3d article of the Constitution; but this court in that case, Marshall, Ch. J., giving the opinion, decided expressly that the same limitation does not extend to the Territories; that in legislating for the Territories, Congress exercises the unlimited powers of the General and of a State Government, which is a complete confirmation of the proposition that the construction given to the 9th section of the Organic Act by the Supreme Court of the Territory is correct.

Confirmation of that view is also derived from other remarks made by the Chief Justice in that same case. We think, then, he said, that the Act of the Territorial Legislature creating the court, by whose decree the cargo of the wrecked ship was sold, is not "inconsistent with the laws and Constitution of the United States," and that it is valid. Consequently, the sale made in pursuance of it changed the property, and the decree of the circuit court, awarding restitution of the property to the claimant, ought to be affirmed.

Admiralty jurisdiction in that case had been exercised by a court created by a territorial statute, but the court whose jurisdiction is called in question in this case was created by the Organic Act passed by Congress to establish the Territory. Conk. Tr., 5th ed., 290.

Existing territories are all organized under Organic Acts containing similar provisions, and in most or all the federal power is vested in a Supreme Court, District Courts, Probate Courts and Justices of the Peace; and the Organic Act of each describes the jurisdiction of the District Courts in substantially the same language, which is also found in the Organic Acts of former Territories since admitted as States.

Our Constitution, in its operation, is co-extensive with our political jurisdiction and, wherever navigable waters exist within the limits of the United States, it is competent for Congress to make provision for the exercise of admiralty jurisdiction, either within or outside of the States; and in organizing Territories Congress may establish tribunals for the exercise of such jurisdiction, or they may leave it to the Legislature of the Territory to create such tribunals. Courts of the kind, whether created by an Act of Congress or by a territorial statute, are not, in strictness, courts of the United States; or, in other words, the jurisdiction with which they are invested is not a part of the judicial power defined by the 3d article of the Constitution, but is conferred by Congress in the execution of the general power which the Legislative Department possesses to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the public territory and other public property.

Six days of every term of such District Courts, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, are required by the Act of Congress to be appropriated to the trial of causes arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, which of itself is sufficient to show that, in the view of Congress, their jurisdiction extends to all such matters of controversy.

Cases arising under the Constitution, as contradistinguished from those arising under the laws of the United States, are such as arise from the powers conferred or privileges granted or rights claimed or protection secured or prohibitions contained in the Constitution itself, independent of any particular statutory enactment. Examples of the kind are given by Judge Story in his Commentaries, which fully illustrate what is meant by that constitutional phrase. On the other hand, it is equally plain that cases arising under the laws of the United States, are such as grow out of the legislation of Congress within the scope of their constitutional authority, whether they constitute the right, privilege, claim, protection or defense of the party, in whole or in part, by whom they are asserted or invoked. 2 Story, Const., sec. 1647.

Instances where such jurisdiction has been exercised by the territorial District Courts under such Acts are numerous, and they extend from the time our territorial system was organized to the present time, and the power has always been exercised without challenge from any quarter and without the least doubt of their constitutional or legal authority. Were the meaning of the Act doubtful, which cannot be admitted, the rule is universal that the contemporaneous construction of such a statute is entitled to great respect, especially where it appears that the construction has prevailed for a long period, and that a different interpretation would impair vested rights; Contemporanea expositio est fortissima in lege. Sedgw. Stats., 2d ed., 213.

Maritime cases, in every form of admiralty proceeding, have been heard and determined in the territorial District Courts, and by appeal in the Supreme Courts of the Territories. Cutler v. The Columbia, 1 Oreg., 101; Price v. Frankel, 1 Wash. T., 43; Meigs v. The Northerner, 1 Wash. T., 91; Griffin v. Nichols, 1 Wash. T., 375; Phelps v. The Panama, 1 Wash. T., 320.

Two cases, being cross suits, were appealed to this court from decrees rendered by the Supreme Court of the Territory for re-examination as admiralty appeals. Nobody questioned the jurisdiction either of the subordinate courts or of this court, and the parties were fully heard in both cases. Both decrees were reversed, and the causes remanded with directions to dismiss the libel in the cross suit, and in the other to enter a decree in favor of the libelants for the amount of the damage. The Northerner v. The Resolute, Dec. Term, 1863, not reported. [This ed., as Meigs v. Steamship Co. 68 U. S., XVII., 496].

Judges of long experience heard and decided those cases, no one of whom ever intimated any doubt that the territorial courts had such jurisdiction in admiralty causes as is vested in the Federal, District and Circuit Courts. For these reasons we are all of the opinion that the objection to the jurisdiction of the courts below must be overruled.

Prior to the recent Act of Congress no provision was ever enacted for a trial by jury in an admiralty cause, and it is so clear that the existing provision does not afford any countenance to the complaint of the respondents, in view of the facts disclosed in the record, that it is not deemed necessary to give the subject any further consideration. 18 Stat. at L., 315.

Injuries of the kind alleged give the party a claim for compensation, and the cause of action may be prosecuted by a libel in rem against the ship; and the rule is universal that if the libel is sustained, the decree may be enforced in rem, as in other cases where a maritime lien arises. These principles are so well known and so universally acknowledged that argument in their support is unnecessary.

Owners of vessels, engaged in carrying passengers, assume obligations somewhat different from those whose vessels are employed as common carriers of merchandise. Obligations of the kind in the former case are, in some few respects, less extensive and more qualified than in the latter, as the owners of the vessel carrying passengers are not insurers of the lives of their passengers, nor even of their safety; but in most other respects the obligations assumed are equally comprehensive and even more stringent. Carriers of passengers by land, it was said in one of the early cases, are not liable for injuries happening to passengers from unforeseen accident or misfortune, where there has been no negligence or default; but it was held in the same case that the smallest negligence would render the carrier liable, and that the question of negligence was for the jury. Ashton v. Heaven, 2 Esp., 533.

Passengers must take the risk incident to the mode of travel which they select, but those risks in the legal sense are only such as the utmost care, skill and caution of the carrier, in the preparation and management of the means of conveyance, are unable to avert. Hegeman v. R. R. Co., 13 N. Y., 9.

When carriers undertake to convey persons by the powerful but dangerous agency of steam, public policy and safety require that they be held to the greatest possible care and diligence, the true requirement being that the personal safety of the passengers shall not be left to the sport of chance or the negligence of careless agents. R. R. Co. v. Derby, 14 How., 468, 486.

Persons transported in such conveyances contract with the proprietors or owners of the conveyance and not with their agents as principals, and the question of the liability of the proprietor or owner is wholly unaffected by the fact that the defective ship, car, engine or other apparatus was purchased of another, if the defect is one that might have been discovered by any known means.

Mistakes sometimes occur, in the investigation of such a case, by overlooking the fact that it is the carrier, whether ship-owner, corporation or individual that assumes the obligation, for a breach of which a right of action accrues to the passenger. Proof of a formal contract is not required, as the obligation of the carrier is implied from his undertaking to transport the passenger.

Tested by these considerations, it is clear that the rulings and decision of the court below are correct, and that the fourth and fifth assignments of error must be overruled. Pendleton v. Kinsley, 3 Cliff., 416, 421; Stokes v. Saltonstall, 13 Pet., 181.

Comment upon the sixth assignment of error is unnecessary, as there was no satisfactory evidence introduced by the respondents to show that the libelant was guilty of any negligence whatever.

Complaint is also made that the amount allowed for injuries received is excessive, which makes it necessary to refer to the finding of facts exhibited in the transcript, from which it appears that the libelant was wholly unaware of the hatchway, and that in coming from her stateroom she, without fault on her part, fell through it into the hold of the ship, whereby her arm was broken, and she was greatly bruised and permanently injured, as is more fully set forth in the findings and evidence.

Exceptions were filed in the District Court setting forth the evidence, which was sent up to the Supreme Court with the transcript. Due appeal having been taken by each party, the cause was heard in the Supreme Court upon the findings and evidence made and given in the court of original jurisdiction, and sent up with the transcript, together with the evidence adduced in the appellate court. Application for a rehearing was made in the Supreme Court, which was denied, and the Supreme Court made an extended finding of facts as showing the basis of their judgment. Without entering into those details, it must suffice to say that it shows conclusively that the complaint of the respondents, that the amount allowed is excessive, is not well founded, and is, therefore, overruled.

Other minor objections are taken to the proceedings in the Supreme Court, all of which may be sufficiently answered by referring to that part of the Organic Act which allows an appeal from the District Court to the Territorial Supreme Court, and from the final judgment of the latter court to this court, in the same manner and under the same regulations as from the Federal Circuit Courts. 10 Stat., at L., 176.

Damages, in such a case, must depend very much upon the facts and circumstances proved at the trial. When the suit is brought by the party for personal injuries, there cannot be any fixed measure of compensation for the pain and anguish of body and mind, nor for the permanent injury to health and constitution, but the result must be left to turn mainly upon the good sense and deliberate judgment of the tribunal assigned by law to ascertain what is a just compensation for the injuries inflicted. Railroad v. Barron, 5 Wall., 90, 105 [72 U. S., XVIII., 591, 594]; Curtis v. R. R. Co., 18 N. Y., 534, 543.

Viewed in the light of these suggestions, we see no just ground to conclude that the amount allowed by the Supreme Court is excessive, and accordingly overrule the remaining assignment of errors. Wood, Maine, 73; Wright v. Comp ton, 53 Ind., 337.

Decree affirmed.

SANFORD BAKER, Appt.,

v.

GEORGE H. HUMPHREY ET AL.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 494-503.)

Estoppel as to title—quitclaim deed—purchase by attorney.

1. A conveyed lands to B, and took from him a mortgage upon the same and assigned the mortgage to C, who took possession of the lands, claiming title, and conveyed, with warranty to D. B took no possession and never claimed any title himself, but subsequently drew deeds of the premises from others claiming under A, and, as a justice of the peace or notary public, took the acknowledgment of such deeds, and upon these occasions was silent as to any defect in the title; held, that B and one to whom he gave a quitclaim deed, are estopped from claiming any title to the premises.

2. No one taking a quitclaim deed can stand in the relation of a bona fide purchaser.

3. An attorney can in no case, without the client's consent, buy and hold otherwise than in trust, any adverse title or interest touching the thing to which his employment relates.

[No. 267.]

Argued Apr. 19, 20, 1880. Decided May 10, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Michigan.

The case appears in the opinion of the court.
Mr. Theo. Romeyn, for appellant.

Messrs. Geo. W. Dyer and John Atkinson, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal in equity. A brief statement of the case, as made by the bill, will be sufficient for the purposes of this opinion.

On the 27th of February, 1851, one William Scott conveyed the premises in controversy to Bela Chapman, taking from him a mortgage for the amount of the purchase money, which was $3,500.

Both the deed and mortgage were properly recorded. Chapman did not take possession of the premises. On the 29th of November, 1851, Scott assigned the mortgage to Jacob Sammons.

The assignment was duly recorded on the 19th of March, 1852. Sammons conveyed the premises with warranty to Wm. M. Belote.

NOTE.—Estoppel in pais. See note to Stowe v. U. S., 86 U. S., XXII., 146.

From him there is a regular sequence of conveyances down to the complainant, Baker. Chapman lived near the property for years, and knew that Sammons and others were in adverse possession and claimed title, but never claimed or intimated that he had any title himself. He drew deeds of warranty and quitclaim of the premises from others claiming under Scott, and as a justice of the peace or notary public, took the acknowledgment of such deeds. Upon these occasions also he was silent as to any defect in the title.

The complainant entered into a contract with the defendants, Hurd & Smith, to sell and convey the premises to them for the sum of $8,000.

He employed Wells S. Humphrey, a reputable attorney, who, for a long time, had been employed by the complainant when he had any legal business to do, to draw the contract. Humphrey accordingly drew the agreement and witnessed its execution. Hurd & Smith thereupon took possession and held it when the bill was filed. They employed Humphrey to procure an abstract of title. In examining the title he found there was no deed from Chapman.

He thereupon sought out Chapman, and by representing to him that the object was to protect the title of clients, procured Chapman to execute a quitclaim deed of the premises to George P. Humphrey, the brother of the attorney, for the sum of $25. The deed bears date the 10th of June, 1872. George knew nothing of the transaction until some time afterwards. An action of ejectment was instituted in his name to recover the property. Baker tendered to him $25, the amount he had paid for the deed; offered to pay any expenses incurred in his procuring it, and demanded a release. He declined to accept or convey.

The prayer of the bill is, that the deed to George P. Humphrey be decreed to be fraudulent, and to stand for the benefit of the complainant; that the grantee be directed to convey to Baker, upon such terms as may be deemed equitable, and for general relief.

Such is the complainant's case, according to the averments of the bill.

The testimony leaves no room for doubt as to the material facts of the case.

The direction for drawing the contract between Hurd & Smith and Baker, was given to the attorney by Robling, the agent of Baker. Baker resided in Canada. Hurd & Smith directed the attorney to procure the abstract of title. With this, Baker and Robling had nothing to do. The attorney disclosed the state of the title to Hurd & Smith, but carefully concealed it from Robling. Hurd & Smith, being assured by the attorney that whatever they might pay Baker could be recovered back if his title failed, executed the contract with Baker, and declined to buy the Chapman title, but gave the attorney their permission to buy it for himself. There is evidence in the record tending strongly to show that there was a secret agreement between them and the attorney, that if the Chapman title were sustained they should have the property for $5,000, which was $3,000 less than they had agreed to pay Baker. This would effect to them a saving of $3,000 in the cost. They refused to file this bill, and declined to have anything to do with the litigation. It thus appears that, though unwilling to join in the battle, they were willing to share in the spoils with the adversary if the victory should be on that side.

There is in the record a bill for professional services rendered by the attorney against Baker. It contains a charge of $2 for drawing the contract with Hurd & Smith. The aggregate amount of the bill is $43. The first item is dated July 5, 1871, and the last July 12, 1872. The latter is the charge for drawing the contract. There is also a like bill against Baker and Smith of $45, and one against Baker and Mears of $6. These accounts throw light on the relation of client and counsel as it subsisted between the attorney and Baker.

With respect to Chapman we shall let the record speak for itself. Vincent testifies: "I asked him: How is it, Chapman? I thought you owned that property" (referring to the premises in controversy). "He said: 'No; I never paid anything on it.' He said: 'Sammons has a right to rent. It is his property.' * * * 'I asked him how he came with the deed from Scott,' and he said: 'It was only to shield Sammons; that afterwards Michael Dansmon paid the debt and the property went back to Sammons.' * * * 'When I met Bela Chapman, and he asked for Sammons and wife, he said he had drawn a deed from Sammons and wife to Belote for the premises and wanted them to sign it.'"

Francis Sammons, a son of Sammons, the grantor to Belote, says: "A part of a house situated on that lot three was leased by my father to Bela Chapman, in 1851, for the purpose of storing goods, and he afterwards lived in it a while. I collected the rent. I think he occupied it with his goods and family about three months. He never occupied or had possession of the premises at any other time, to my knowledge. He came from Mackinac when he put the goods in that house. He remained here four or five years after he came from Mackinac. He lived in Mackinac until his death. He came over to Cheboygan several times after he went to reside at Mackinac. Sometimes he would stay a week or two, visiting. At the time he lived here he was a notary public, justice of the peace and postmaster. I know he was in the habit of drawing deeds and mortgages for any one that called on him. I don't think there was anyone else here during the year 1852 and 1853 who drew deeds and mortgages but Bela Chapman in this village. My father sold the premises to William S. M. Belote. My father was in possession of the premises from 1846 until he sold to Belote."

Medard Metivier says: "I hold the office of County Clerk and Register of Deeds for Cheboygan County; have held these offices since 1872. * * * I am in my sixtieth year. I came to live in this village in 1851. Lived here ever since, except about six years when I lived in Mackinac and Chicago during the war. I know Jacob Sammons and Bela Chapman; they are both dead. I remember being at the house of Jacob Sammons when a deed was executed by Sammons and wife to Belote. I witnessed the deed. That deed was witnessed by and acknowledged before Bela Chapman, as notary public. I think there was another deed executed by Sammons and wife to Belote, which I witnessed when Bela Chapman was present. I remember the circumstances, distinctly, of one deed being executed, witnessed by myself and Chapman, from the fact that the room was very dark, owing to Mrs. Sammons having very sore eyes, and we had to raise the curtain for more light. There was not any other full-grown person there, unless Mr. Belote was there, about which I cannot state positively, than Mr. and Mrs. Sammons, Mr. Chapman and myself. A part of the deed which I witnessed was in print. It was an old-fashioned form of printed deed. Mr. Chapman brought the form from Mackinac or somewhere. He only had them here. I know the premises described in the bill in this cause, and Chapman was never in possession of them to my knowledge. I know Mr. Chapman's handwriting very well, and I remember particularly that the deeds witnessed by myself and Mr. Chapman and acknowledged before him were in his (Chapman's) handwriting, and that he drew both of them. I know one of the deeds then executed by Sammons and wife to Belote conveyed the premises in question and other property; cannot tell all of the other property."

These witnesses are unimpeached and are to be presumed unimpeachable. Their testimony is conclusive as to Chapman's relation to the property. If there could be any doubt on the point, it is removed by the fact that for $25 he conveyed property about to be sold and which was sold by Baker to responsible parties for $8,000. This fact alone is decisive as to the character of the transaction with respect to both parties. No honest mind can contemplate for a moment the conduct of the attorney without the strongest sense of disapprobation.

Chapman conveyed by a deed of quitclaim to the attorney's brother. The attorney procured the deed to be so made. It was the same thing in the view of the law as if it had been made to the attorney himself. Neither of them was in any sense a bona fide purchaser. No one taking a quitclaim deed can stand in that relation. May v. LeClaire, 11 Wall., 217 [78 U. S., XX., 50].

There are other obvious considerations which point to the same conclusion as a matter of fact. It is unnecessary to specify them, and we prefer not to do so.

The admissions of Chapman while he held the legal title, being contrary to his interest, are competent evidence against him and those claiming under him. He said the object of the conveyance to him was to protect the property against a creditor of Sammons. If such were the fact, the deed was declared void by the Statute of Michigan against fraudulent conveyances, 2 Comp. L., of Mich., 146; and it was made so by the common law. The aid of the statute was not necessary to this result. Clements v. Moore, 6 Wall., 299 [73 U. S., XVIII., 786]. Nothing, therefore, passed by the deed to Chapman's grantee.

Chapman's connection with the deed from Sammons to Belote would bar him, if living from setting up any claim at law or in equity to the premises. The facts make a complete case of estoppel in pais. This subject was fully examined in Dickerson v. Colgrove, not yet reported [ante, 618]. We need not go over the same ground again. See, also, Cincinnati v. White, 6 Pet., 431; Doe v. Rosser, 3 East., 15; and Brown v. Wheeler, 17 Conn., 353.

See 11 OTTO.

If Chapman had nothing to convey, his grantee could take nothing by the deed.

The latter is in exactly the situation the former would occupy if he were living and were a party to this litigation. The estoppel was conclusive in favor of Belote and those claiming under him, and this complainant has a right to insist upon it.

But there is another and a higher ground upon which our judgment may be rested.

The relation of client and counsel subsisted between the attorney and Baker. The employment to draw the contract with Hurd & Smith was not a solitary instance of professional service which the latter was called upon to render to the former. The bills of the attorney found in the record show the duration of the connection and the extent and variety of the items charged and paid for. They indicate a continuous understanding and consequent employment. Undoubtedly, either party had the right to terminate the connection at any time; and if it were done, the other would have had no right to complain. But, until this occurred, the confidence manifested by the client gave him the right to expect a corresponding return of zeal, diligence and good faith on the part of the attorney.

The employment to draw the contract was sufficient alone to put the parties in this relation to each other. Galbraith v. Elder, 8 Watts, 81; Smith v. Brotherline, 62 Pa., 461. But whether the relation subsisted previously or was created only for the purpose of the particular transaction in question, it carried with it the same consequences. Williamson v. Moriarty, 19 Week. Rep., 818.

It is the duty of an attorney to advise the client promptly whenever he has any information to give which it is important the client should receive. Hoopes v. Burnett, 26 Miss., 428; Jett v. Hempstead, 25 Ark., 462; Fox v. Cooper, 2 Q. B., 827, 937; [See, S. C., 6 Jur., 128].

In Taylor v. Blacklow, 3 Bing. (N. C.), 235, an attorney, employed to raise money on a mortgage, learned the existence of certain defects in his client's title and disclosed them to another person. As a consequence his client was subjected to litigation and otherwise injured. It was held that an action would lie against the attorney and that the client was entitled to recover.

In Com. Dig., tit. "Action Upon the Case for a Deceit, A, 5," it is said that such an action lies "If a man, being intrusted in his profession, deceive him who intrusted him; as if a man retained of counsel became afterwards of counsel with the other party in the same cause, or discover evidence or secrets of the cause. So if an attorney act deceptive to the prejudice of his client, as if by collusion with the demandant he make default in a real action whereby the land is lost."

It has been held that if counsel be retained to defend a particular title to real estate he can never thereafter, unless his client consent, buy the opposing title without holding it in trust for those then having the title he was employed to sustain. Henry v. Raiman, 25 Pa., 354. Without expressing any opinion as to the soundness of this case with respect to the extent to which the principle of trusteeship is asserted, it may be laid down as a general rule that an attorney can, in no case, without the client's consent, buy and hold otherwise than in trust, any adverse title or interest touching the thing to which his employment relates. He cannot in such a way put himself in an adversary position without this result. The cases to this effect are very numerous and they are all in harmony. We refer to a few of them. Smith v. Brotherline, 62 Pa., 461; Davis v. Smith, 43 Vt., 269; Wheeler v. Willard, 44 Vt., 641; Giddings v. Eastman, 5 Paige, 561; Moore v. Bracken, 27 Ill., 23; Harper v. Perry, 28 Wis., 57; Hockenbury v. Carlisle, 5 Watts & S., 348; Hobday v. Peters, 6 Jur. (N. S.), pt. 1, 1,794; Jett v. Hempstead, 25 Ark., 462; Case v. Carroll, 35 N. Y., 385; Lewis v. Hillman, 3 H. L. Cas., 607.

The same principle is applied in cases other than those of attorney and client.

Where there are several joint lessees and one of them procures a renewal of the lease to himself; the renewal inures equally to the benefit of all the original lessees. Burrell v. Bull, 3 Sandf. Ch., 15.

Where there are two joint devisees and one of them buys up a paramount outstanding title, he holds it in trust for the other to the extent of his interest in the property, the cestui que trust refunding his proportion of the purchase money. Van Horne v. Fonda, 5 Johns. Ch., 388.

Where a surety takes up the obligation of himself and principal, he can enforce it only to the extent of what he paid and interest. Reed v. Norris, 2 Myl. & C., 361.

Where a lessee had made valuable improvements pursuant to the requirements of his lease, and procured an adverse title intending to hold the premises in his own right, it was held that he was a trustee and entitled only to be paid what the title cost him. Cleavinger v. Reimar, 3 Watts & S., 486.

The case in hand is peculiarly a fit one for the application of the principle we have been considering. It is always dangerous for counsel to undertake to act, in regard to the same thing, for parties whose interests are diverse. Such a case requires care and circumspection on his part. Here there could be no objection, there being no apparent conflict of interests, but upon discovering that the title was imperfect it was the duty of the attorney promptly to report the result to Baker as well as to Hurd & Smith, and to advise with the former, if it were desired, as to the best mode of curing the defect. Instead of doing this, he carefully concealed the facts from Baker, gave Hurd & Smith the choice of buying and, upon their declining, bought the property for himself, and has since been engaged in a bitter litigation to wrest it from Baker. For his lapse at the outset there might be some excuse, but for his conduct subsequently there can be none. Both are condemned, alike by sound ethics and the law. They are the same upon the subject. Actual fraud in such cases is not necessary to give the client a right to redress. A breach of duty is "constructive fraud," and is sufficient. Story, Eq. Jur., secs. 258, 311.

The legal profession is found wherever Christian civilization exists. Without it, society could not well go on. But, like all other great instrumentalities, it may be potent for evil as well as for good. Hence the importance of keeping it on the high plane it ought to occupy. Its character depends upon the conduct of its members. They are officers of the law, as well as the agents of those by whom they are employed. Their fidelity is guaranteed by the highest considerations of honor and good faith, and to these is superadded the sanction of an oath. The slightest divergence from rectitude involves the breach of all these obligations. None are more honored or more deserving than those of the brotherhood who, uniting ability with integrity, prove faithful to their trusts and worthy of the confidence reposed in them. Courts of justice can best serve both the public and the profession by applying firmly upon all proper occasions the salutary rules which have been established for their government in doing the business of their clients.

We shall discharge that duty in this instance by reversing the decree of the Circuit Court and remanding the case, with directions to enter a decree whereby it shall be required that the complainant, Baker, deposit in the clerk's office for the use of the defendant, George P. Humphrey, the sum of $25, and that Humphrey thereupon convey to Baker the premises described in the bill, and that the deed contain a covenant against the grantor's own acts and against the demands of all other persons claiming under him; and it is so ordered.

v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 543-550.)

Claims of credit in suits by Government—tax on railroads—implied contract—tax on interest.

1. In suits brought by the United States against individuals, no claim for a credit shall be admitted upon trial, unless it has been presented to the accounting officers of the Treasury, and by them disallowed.

2. A railroad company is liable to the tax of two and a half per cent on the amount received by it for the transportation of mails between July 1, 1866, and Jan. 1, 1870.

3. Although no express contract for carrying the mails was proven, such contract will be presumed.

4. Taxes are payable by such company on interest falling due on its bonds Aug. 1, 1870, at the rate of five per cent.

5. Such company is not liable to a tax on interest due and paid on its bonded debt Feb. 1, 1872.

[No. 287.]

Argued Apr. 29, 1880. Decided May 10, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Wisconsin.

This action was brought in the court below, by the United States, to recover certain internal revenue taxes, alleged to have accrued from Aug. 1, 1862, to Dec. 31, 1871. The Circuit Judge made the following findings:

That the gross receipts of the said defendant, for passengers, from and after Aug. 1, 1862, until July 1, 1864, amounted to the sum of $190,862.68, and that the said plaintiff was entitled to a tax of 3 per cent thereon, amounting to the sum of $5,725.91;

That the entire gross receipts of said Company, from and after July 1, 1864, until Aug. 1, 1866, amounted to the sum of \$1,427,685.36, and that said plaintiff was entitled to a tax thereon of $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, amounting to the sum of \$35,692.13;

That the gross receipts of said defendant from the fares of passengers from Aug. 1, 1866, until Jan. 1, 1870, amounted to the sum of $544,094.98, and that the gross receipts for transportation of the mails during the same time amounted to the sum of $61,676.61, together making the sum of $605,770.09;

That there was no evidence that said mail was carried upon a contract dated prior to Aug. 1, 1866, or upon any express contract; but from the fact that it was carried and compensation paid therefor, it is found that there was an implied contract, and therefore that said plaintiff was entitled to a tax of $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent upon said sum of \$605,770.09, amounting to \$15,144.20;

That, on or after Aug. 1, 1870, said defendant paid $61,495, interest on its bonded debt, which became payable Aug. 1, 1870, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a tax of 5 per cent on that amount, amounting to the sum of $3,074.75;

That, on or after Feb. 1, 1871, said defendant paid \$53,767.65 interest on its bonded debt which became payable Feb. 1, 1871, upon which amount the plaintiff was entitled to a tax of $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, amounting to the sum of \$1,344.19;

That, on or after Aug. 1, 1871, the said defendant paid $52,929.37 interest upon its bonded debt, which became payable on said Aug. 1, 1871, upon which amount the plaintiff was entitled to a tax of $1,323.23.

And that, on or after Feb. 1, 1872, the said defendant paid $52,423.71 interest on its bonded debt, which became payable Feb. 1, 1872; and that said plaintiff was entitled to a tax on five sixths thereof, being the sum of $43,686.83, the tax thereon being $1,092.16;

That said taxes amount in all to the sum of $63,396.62; that said defendant has paid thereon the sum of $58,832.23, leaving a balance due the plaintiff of $4,564.39, and that the said plaintiff is entitled to interest on said last amount, from Mar. 1, 1872, at 6 per cent, being the sum of $1,369.31, making together the sum of $5,933.70, for which said plaintiff is entitled to judgment in this action.

And it is further found that said defendant made no net earning subject to tax in this suit, and that no interest was paid upon any of its bonds or the bonds of the Northern Illinois Railroad Company, except the sum of $2,360.62 prior to the year 1870, and that no tax became due or payable on account of such interest, except on the said sum of $2,360.62, but that $3,866.66 was paid to the plaintiff as a tax on account of such interest Nov. 7, 1865, by the Northern Illinois Railroad Company; that said last named company was, Jan. 1, 1866, consolidated with and became a part of defendant Company; and that said defendant Company became its successor and possessed of all its rights, interests, privileges and franchises, and subject to its liabilities; but that said defendant is not entitled to have the said sum of $3,866.66, nor any part thereof, allowed as a set-off against the claim of the plaintiff in this action.

See 11 OTTO.

U. S., BOOK 25.

Therefore, judgment is directed in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant in this action, for the sum of $5,933.70.

Mr. John W. Cary, for plaintiff in error, made the following assignment of errors:

1. The court erred in refusing to allow the sum of $3,866.66 paid Nov. 7, 1865, by the Northern Illinois Railroad Company, to be credited to the account of the defendant.

2. The court erred in ruling and deciding that a tax of $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent was due the plaintiff on the sum of \$61,676.61, received by the defendant for transportation of the mails from July 1, 1866, to Jan. 1, 1870.

3. The court erred in ruling that a tax of five per cent was due plaintiff upon the amount of $61,495 of interest, paid on the bonds of the Company on or after Aug. 1, 1870.

4. The court erred in admitting evidence to show that the sum of $52,423.71 became due and payable for interest on the bonds of the defendant, Feb. 1, 1872, and that the same was paid.

5. The court erred in ruling and deciding that a tax of $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent was due the plaintiff on five sixths of the amount of interest paid on its bonded debt Feb. 1, 1872.

Mr. S. F. Phillips, Solicitor-Gen., for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

The different assignments of error in this case will be considered in their order.

1. As to the claim for a credit of $3,866.66 on account of taxes erroneously assessed and collected, November 7, 1865.

Section 951 of the Revised Statutes provides that "In suits brought by the United States against individuals, no claim for a credit shall be admitted upon trial, except such as appear to have been presented to the accounting officers of the Treasury, for their examination, and to have been by them disallowed in whole or in part," save under certain circumstances not material to this case. Section 3220 of the Revised Statutes authorizes the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, "On appeal to him made, to remit, refund and pay back all taxes * * * that appear to be unjustly assessed, or excessive in amount, or in any manner wrongfully collected."

It does not appear that this claim was ever presented to the accounting officers of the Treasury for allowance, on appeal or otherwise, or that it has ever been disallowed. For this reason, notwithstanding its apparent equity, the credit was properly refused in this suit. Halliburton v. U. S., 13 Wall., 63 [80 U. S., XX., 533]; U. S. v. Giles, 9 Cranch, 212.

2. As to the tax of two and one half per cent on the amount received for the transportation of mails between July 1, 1866, and January 1, 1870:

By the Act of July 13, 1866, 14 Stat. at L., 135, sec. 103 of the Act of 1864 as amended, "Every * * * corporation owning * * * any railroad * * * engaged or employed in * * * transporting the mails of the United States upon contracts made prior to August 1, 1866, shall be subject to and pay a tax of two and one half per cent of the gross receipts" from such service.

No express contract for carrying the mails was proven, but since the service for which the compensation was paid began before August 1, and was continued without interruption for the whole term in question, the court below implied a contract prior to that time. This, we think, was right. Had payment been refused and suit brought against the United States in the Court of Claims, to recover for the service rendered, there could be no doubt about the right to recover, notwithstanding the jurisdiction of that court is confined to suits on contracts, Salomon v. U. S., 19 Wall., 17 [86 U. S., XXII., 46]; and this not alone because the service had been rendered, but because it is to be presumed that when the Company commenced the transportation it had been agreed that payment should be made for what was done.

3. As to whether taxes are payable on interest falling due August 1, 1870, at the rate of five per cent or two and one half per cent.

The ruling of the court below on this point was in accordance with our decisions in Stockdale v. Ins. Co., 20 Wall., 323 [87 U. S., XXII., 348], and R. R. Co. v. Rose, 95 U. S., 78 [XXIV., 376].

4. As to the tax on interest due and payable February 1, 1872.

The Act of 1870, 16 Stat. at L., 260, sec. 15, provided "That there shall be levied and collected for and during the year 1871 a tax of two and one half per centum on the amount of all interest or coupons paid on bonds or other evidences of debt issued and payable in one or more years after date, by any" railroad company, "and on the amount of all dividends of earnings, income or gains hereafter declared," "whenever and wherever the same shall be payable," "and on all undivided profits * * * which have accrued and been earned and added to any surplus, contingent or other fund."

The interest in this case was neither payable nor paid in 1871, and as the tax is not leviable or collectible until the interest is payable, we see no way in which the Company can be charged on this account. The tax is not on the interest as it accrues, but when it is paid. No provision is made for a pro rata distribution of the burden over the time the interest is accumulating, and as the tax can only be levied for and during the year 1871, we think, if the interest is in good faith not payable in that year, the tax is not demandable, either in whole or in part.

There is no question here of earnings, for the finding is not as to what was earned by the Company during the year 1871, but as to what was paid in 1872 on account of interest then for the first time falling due. We are aware that at the present Term we held, in R. R. Co. v. Collector [ante, 647], that the tax levied under the Act now in question was essentially a tax on the business of the corporation, and that in order to secure its payment it was laid on the subjects to which the earnings were to be applied in the usual course of business; but as this tax could not be levied until 1872, and there is no finding of any earnings in 1871, we see nothing to be taxed under that rule. In Barnes v. R. R. Co., 17 Wall., 309 [84 U. S., XXI., 548], it appeared expressly that the dividends were declared out of the earnings of 1869.

It follows that, to the extent of $1,092.16 and the interest thereon, the judgment below was wrong, but in all other respects right. Consequently, the judgment below is reversed and the cause remanded, with instructions to enter a judgment against the Railroad Company for County liability—suit by tax payers.

1. The Board of Chosen Freeholders, of Hudson County, New Jersey, cannot incur for the county any obligations beyond its income previously provided by taxation.

2. Resident tax payers can invoke the interposition of a court of equity, to prevent an illegal disposition of the moneys of the county, or the illegal creation of a debt which they, in common with other property holders of the county, may otherwise be compelled to pay.

[No. 1070.]

Submitted Jan. 23, 1880. Decided May 10, 1880.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of New Jersey.

This action was brought in the court below by the appellees, for the purpose of having certain bonds issued by the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Hudson, N. J., delivered up and canceled, and for the purpose of having the said Board reconvey to Crampton, the appellant, certain lands and premises which had been purchased by the Board from Crampton, and paid for by the issue of the bonds in question.

The issue of the bonds was claimed by the complainants, now appellees, to be void as contrary to section 5 of the Act of the New Jersey Legislature of February 26, 1874; and also to an Act of February 7, 1876. Section 5, of the Act of 1874, is as follows:

"And be it enacted, That the expenditures of the Board of Chosen Freeholders in any fiscal year shall not exceed the amount raised by tax for said year, unless by the spread of an epidemic or contagious disease, a greater expenditure shall be required for the protection of the public health, and the Board may fix the amount to be raised by tax for county purposes at any meeting of said Board held prior to July 15, in any year."

The Act of 1876 is as follows:

"Be it enacted, by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, that if any Board of chosen freeholders, or any township committee, or any Board of aldermen or common councilmen, or any Board of education or any Board of commissioners of any county, township, city, town or borough, in this State, or any committee or member of such Board or Commission, shall disburse, order or vote for the disbursement of public moneys in excess of the appropriation respectively to any such Board or Committee, or shall incur obligations in excess of the appropriation and limit of expenditure provided by law for the purposes respectively of any such Board or Committee, the members thereof and each member thereof thus disbursing, ordering or voting for the disbursement or expenditure of public moneys, or thus incurring obligations in excess of the amount appropriated and limit of expenditure, as now or hereafter appropriated and limited by law, shall be severally deemed guilty of malfeasance in office, and on being thereof convicted shall be punished by fine not exceeding $1,000, or imprisonment at hard labor for a term not exceeding three years, or both, at the discretion of the court."

The facts are further stated in the opinion of the court.

See, also, Seidler v. Hudson, 39 N. J. L., 632.

Messrs. Frederick T. Frelinghuysen, F. W. Hackett and Joseph D. Bedle, for the appellant:

The Act of 1874 is only an Act to regulate the actual expenditures of money within the fiscal year, and is not intended to operate upon the validity of the contract. The Act may operate upon the members of the Board, but not upon those who sell property to the county.

See, Weston v. Syracuse, 17 N. Y., 110; Memphis v. Brown, 20 Wall., 289 (87 U. S., XXII., 264); Hitchcock v. Galveston, 96 U. S., 341 (XXIV., 659).

The Act of 1876 must receive a strict construction. Its object was only to reach the members of certain Boards and Committees, and not to disturb disbursements made or obligations incurred. It was not intended to make the contract void. The Legislature may well shape its enactments so as to permit justice in the contract to be done, while the public official may be punished.

See, Harris v. Runnels, 12 How., 83; Moving & Reaping Co. v. Caldwell, Ind. Sup. Ct., 16 Am. Law Reg., 555, note; Pangborn v. Westlake, 36 Ia., 546; Lester v. Howard Bank, 23 Md., 558; Vining v. Bricker, 14 Ohio St., 331.

Messrs. Peter Bentley and J. H. Lippincott, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 14th of December, 1876, the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Hudson, in New Jersey, passed a resolution to purchase of the defendant, Crampton, certain real property in Jersey City, upon which to erect a court-house and other buildings for the county, at the price of $2,000 for every 2,500 square feet, the price at which he had previously offered to sell the same, and to issue to him in payment thereof bonds of the county, payable out of the amount appropriated and limited for the expenses of the next fiscal year, the bonds to run for one year and to draw interest at the rate of seven per cent per annum. The bonds were to be signed by the director at large and the collector of the county, and to be issued under its seal. On the 18th of December, Crampton executed and delivered to the Board a conveyance of the property, which was accepted and recorded in the office of the register of deeds; and thereupon three bonds were executed and delivered to him, two of which were for the sum of $75,000, and one was for $75,720. No provision was made by the Board for the payment of the bonds beyond the general declaration that they should be paid out of the amount appropriated and limited for the next fiscal year. By the law then in force, the fiscal year commenced on the first day of December of each year, and the expenditures of the Board were restricted to the amount raised by tax for that year, unless by the spread of an epidemic or a contagious disease a greater expenditure should be required; and the amount to be raised was to be determined at a meeting of the Board to be held prior to July 15th of each year. Some of the resident tax payers were dissatisfied with this issue of bonds without making definite provision for their payment by taxation, and accordingly obtained from the Supreme Court of the State a writ of certiorari to review the proceedings of the Board. The court adjudged the proceedings invalid, and set the same aside.

See 11 OTTO.

It does not appear that any attention was paid either by the Board or Crampton, to this judgment. The Board did not reconvey or offer to reconvey the land to Crampton; nor did the latter return or offer to return to the Board the bonds received by him. But, on the contrary, Crampton commenced an action in the Circuit Court of the United States to enforce their payment. The present suit, therefore, is brought by other tax payers of the county to compel the Board to reconvey the land and Crampton to return the bonds, and to enjoin the prosecution of the action to enforce their payment.

The facts here stated are not contradicted; they are substantially admitted; and upon them the court below very properly rendered a decree for the complainants. Indeed, upon the simple statement of the case, it would seem that there ought to be no question as to the invalidity of the proceedings of the Board. The object of the Statute of New Jersey defining and limiting its powers would be defeated if a debt could be contracted without present provision for its payment in advance of a tax levy, upon a simple declaration that out of the amount to be raised in a future fiscal year it should be paid. The law, in terms, limits the expenditures of the Board, with a single exception, to the amount to be raised by taxation actually levied, not by promised taxation in the future. And, as if this limitation was not sufficient, it makes it a misdemeanor in any member of the Board to incur obligations in excess of the amount thus provided. It would be difficult to express in a more emphatic way the will of the Legislature that the Board should not incur for the county any obligations beyond its income previously provided by taxation; in other words, that the expenses of the county should be based upon and never exceed moneys in its treasury, or taxes already levied and payable there.

Of the right of resident tax payers to invoke the interposition of a court of equity to prevent an illegal disposition of the moneys of the county or the illegal creation of a debt which they in common with other property holders of the county may otherwise be compelled to pay, there is at this day no serious question. The right has been recognized by the state courts in numerous cases; and from the nature of the powers exercised by municipal corporations, the great danger of their abuse and the necessity of prompt action to prevent irremediable injuries, it would seem eminently proper for courts of equity to interfere upon the application of the tax payers of a county to prevent the consummation of a wrong, when the officers of those corporations assume, in excess of their powers, to create burdens upon property holders. Certainly, in the absence of legislation restricting the right to interfere in such cases to public officers of the State or county, there would seem to be no substantial reason why a bill by or on behalf of individual tax payers should not be entertained to prevent the misuse of corporate powers. The courts may be safely trusted to prevent the abuse of process in such cases. Those who desire to consult the leading authorities on this subject will find them stated or referred to in Mr. Dillon's excellent treatise on the Law of Municipal Corporations.

WILLIAM BUCHTEL.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 633-637.)

False representation—defective report of referee.

1. Where one agreed to sell to another certain pine lands, a deed to be made upon the payment of the purchase price, and cutting of the timber was meanwhile prohibited unless written permission was given by the vendors, and the vendee assigned the contract to a third person, to whom the vendor gave permission to cut and remove the timber upon his guarantying the payment of the purchase price, he cannot be released from such guaranty upon any false and fraudulent representation made to him by the agent of the vendee, of the making of which the vendor was ignorant.

2. Where the report of the referee is defective in form, the defect should have been called to the attention of the court below, and a more definite finding required of the referee. It cannot be considered here for the first time.

[No. 273.]

Argued Apr. 21, 22, 1880. Decided May 10, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Michigan.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Emory A. Storrs and E. S. Eggleston, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Simonds & Fletcher and M. J. Smiley, for defendant in error:

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 23d of September, 1874, William Buchtel, the plaintiff in the court below, the defendant in error here, contracted to sell to the Big Rapids Improvement and Manufacturing Company, a corporation created under the laws of Michigan, several hundred acres of pine land in that State for the sum of $12,273.84, payable as follows: $3,068.46 on the first of the following January, and the balance in three equal annual installments, with interest. Nothing was paid by the company at the time, and the contract provided for the execution of a conveyance to it only upon the payment of the sums stipulated as they became due, and it prohibited in the meantime the cutting or removal of the timber without the written permission of the vendor.

Two days after its execution, the contract was assigned in writing by the Improvement and Manufacturing Company to the defendant, the Mason Lumber Company, also a Corporation of Michigan. To this assignment, the vendor assented and gave permission to the Lumber Company to enter upon the lands and cut and remove the timber; and in consideration of this permission, that Company guarantied the payments stipulated in the contract. In the negotiation which resulted in the execution of the guaranty, the Improvement and Manufacturing Company was represented by its Vice-President, Mr. Bronson; and the Lumber Company by its President, Mr. Mason.

The payment due on the first of January, 1875, not having been made, the present action was brought by the vendor, Buchtel, upon the guaranty, against the Lumber Company. The Company pleaded the general issue, and gave notice that it would give in evidence, and insist as a defense to the action, that it was induced to enter into the undertaking by the false and fraudulent representation of the plaintiff that the lands contained 5,700,000 feet of good merchantable pine timber; whereas, in fact, there were only 1,500,000 feet of such timber on the land, and that thereby it had sustained damages to the amount of $20,000, which it would recoup against the claim of the plaintiff and ask to have the balance certified in its favor.

By the law of Michigan, damages, whether liquidated or not, claimed by a defendant as arising out of the contract or transaction upon which an action is brought, may be set up by way of recoupment against the demand of the plaintiff; and, if found to exceed such demand, the defendant can have judgment for the balance. The case was, by stipulation of parties, tried before a referee, who reported in favor of the plaintiff for the amount claimed, with interest. He also found, as a matter of fact, that Bronson, who acted for the Improvement and Manufacturing Company in the transaction in which the assignment and guaranty were made exhibited at the time to Mason, who acted for the Lumber Company, a plat of the lands in the presence of the plaintiff, and represented that they contained 5,000,000 feet of good merchantable pine timber; whereas, as a matter of fact, they contained only 1,237,197 feet of such timber; but that there was a large quantity of additional timber which was poor, the defects of which could not be discovered until after it was cut. He further found that the plaintiff had never seen the lands, and that the Lumber Company was aware of the fact; and that all the knowledge he had of the quantity of the timber was derived from an estimate furnished to him by his grantor. The referee also states in his report that "he does not find" that the plaintiff's attention was called to the plat exhibited; or that he made any representations in relation to the quantity of timber on the land; or that he had any knowledge of the quantity at the time; or that the estimate furnished to him by his grantor was before him, or that he alluded to it; or that the representations of Bronson to Mason as to the quantity of the timber were made in his hearing. Exceptions were taken to the report, and overruled by the court below.

The only questions presented by the record which merit consideration are:

1. Whether the false and fraudulent representations, assuming that they were fraudulent as well as false, of the agent of the Improvement and Manufacturing Company to the agent of the Lumber Company, as to the quantity of timber on the lands purchased, in which representations the plaintiff did not participate, released the defendant from liability on its guaranty; and,

2. Whether the report of the referee is fatally defective because it finds certain facts inferentially and not directly.

Neither of the questions thus raised is at all difficult of solution. The contract of guaranty of the Lumber Company was executed to the plaintiff as a consideration for his permission to enter upon the land and cut and remove the timber in advance of the stipulated payments. The provision against the cutting or removal of the timber, without such consent, was a most important one to him. It secured him against a possible loss if the payments were not made. The granting of permission to the Lumber Company was releasing that security, and giving to the Company the principal value of the property in advance of payment. The guaranty was a reasonable exaction for it. The representations of the Improvement Company, through its officers, to the officers of the Lumber Company, as to the supposed amount of timber on the land, to induce the latter to execute the guaranty and thus obtain the permission of the plaintiff, cannot be allowed to mar or defeat the contract with him, as he knew nothing of their being made, and was ignorant of the subject to which they related. It was the same thing to him whether insufficient or adequate consideration passed between the two companies. He gave to the Lumber Company a valuable consideration for the guaranty, and has, therefore, a right to hold that Company to the liabilities it assumed.

The cases cited by counsel to show that a misrepresentation of material facts inducing a contract, though made in ignorance, may, in many cases, be the foundation of a suit for its cancellation or modification, have no bearing on the questions here presented. They apply only where the contract, of which a rescission or modification is sought, was obtained by the party claiming its benefit, and the misrepresentations related to the consideration given for it.

Thus, in the first case cited, that of Smith v. Richards, reported in the 13th Peters, 26, the misrepresentation related to land containing a gold mine, and was made by the owner to the vendee to induce its purchase by him. And so it will be found in all the other cases cited, that the misrepresentations came from the party holding the contract complained of and related to the consideration upon which it was executed.

In the case before us neither of these particulars exists. The misrepresentations alleged did not come from the plaintiff, the holder of the contract, nor relate to the permission given to cut and remove the timber. Neither as to the nature or value of his reserved right to withhold such permission were any representations made by him, nor could there have been any misapprehension of the nature and extent of the guaranty assumed. Whatever related to other matters which took place between the two companies was unknown to him and in no way concerned him.

The report of the referee is, undoubtedly, defective in the form in which the statement is made of the plaintiff's want of knowledge as to the misrepresentations of the officers of the Improvement Company. The findings should have the precision of a special verdict, and specify with distinctness the facts found, and not leave them to be inferred. "I do not find" that the plaintiff knew certain facts, is a defective statement, and ought not to be received as equivalent to a direct finding that the plaintiff did not know the facts mentioned; although it is probable that the referee intended it to have that meaning. But defects of this character in the finding should have been called to the attention of the court below, and a more definite finding required of the referee. They cannot be considered here for the first time. It was for the defendant to see that findings were had on all matters material to its defense, as it was for the plaintiff to see that findings were sufficient to support the judgment in his favor.

Judgment affirmed.

Referee's finding, effect of.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Michigan.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. E. S. Eggleston and E. A. Storrs, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. O. H. Simonds, N. A. Fletcher and M. J. Smiley, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

In the preceding case between these parties we affirmed the judgment of the court below, recovered for the first installment of money due upon the contract of purchase of certain timber lands in Michigan, the payment of which had been guarantied by the defendant below, the Lumber Company. The present action was for the remaining installments of the purchase money.

NOTE.—Conclusiveness of judgments. See note to Bk. of U. S. v. Beverly, 42 U. S. (1 How.), 134.
Estoppel by judgment. See note to Aspden v. Nixon, 45 U. S. (4 How.), 467.

To the first action the defendant set up that it was induced to make the contract of guaranty by certain false and fraudulent representations of the plaintiff as to the quantity of merchantable timber on the land. To the present action it sets up the same defense, and also that the representation made as to the quantity of timber, to induce the execution of the contract, amounted to a warranty, upon breach of which it was entitled to recoup the damages sustained. To meet these defenses, the plaintiff produced the judgment in the former case; and the question presented for determination is, whether that judgment was conclusive.

As to the first defense, there can be no doubt that such must be the effect of the judgment. The case was between the same parties for the first installment on the contract guarantied, and a recovery was there resisted upon precisely the same ground here urged.

The extent and effect of a former recovery between the same parties upon the same question raised in a new action have been so often considered and determined by this court, that it would be a waste of time to go over the argument and repeat our views on the subject. Our latest expression of opinion, made after deliberate consideration, is found in the case of Cromwell v. Sac Co., 94 U. S., 351 [XXIV., 195]. To the reasons there adduced we have nothing to add. And we are of opinion that the second defense is also concluded by the former adjudication. The finding of the referee, upon which the judgment was rendered—and this finding, like the verdict of a jury, constitutes an essential part of the record of the case—shows that no representations as to the quantity of timber on the land sold were made to the defendant by the plaintiff or in his hearing to induce the execution of the contract of guaranty. This finding, having gone into the judgment, is conclusive as to the facts found in all subsequent controversies between the parties on the contract. Every defense requiring the negation of this fact is met and overthrown by that adjudication.

Judgment affirmed.

Set off against Government.

Where the United States obtained a decree for the payment of money against a railroad company, the successor of the Railroad Co. representing its debts and assets, cannot be permitted to set off a debt due it from the United States, against such decree, nor apply such debt in payment thereof.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Middle District of Tennessee.

The case is stated by the court.

Mr. J. E. Bailey, for appellant.

1074

Messrs. Chas. Devens, Atty-Gen., and Edwin B. Smith, Asst. Atty-Gen., for appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 10th of November, 1871, the United States recovered a decree in an equity suit in the Circuit Court for the Middle District of Tennessee against the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad Company, for $1,000,000, to be paid one half in ten years, and one half in twenty years, with interest semi-annually at the rate of four per cent per annum. By an arrangement between the parties, bonds with coupons attached were issued by the Company to represent the amounts thus to be paid, and it was provided in the decree that if the Company should "Make default for the period of ninety days in the payment of any of the installments of interest or of principal of said debt, or any part thereof, after the same shall have become due and payable, according to the tenor and effect of said bonds and coupons, then the United States, on filing with the clerk of the court any of said coupons or bonds, past due and unpaid for ninety days, shall have the right to have issued an order for the execution of this decree to the extent of such default by the sale of the railroad," etc. Default having been made in the payment of fifty-seven coupons, of $100 each, representing a part of the semi-annual interest on the bonds so issued, the United States, on the 12th of June, 1876, filed the coupons in the clerk's office, and asked for execution of the decree to that extent. Thereupon the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railroad Company, the successor of the original defendant Company, and representing its debts and assets, appeared and, by petition, asked that a debt which the United States owed the petitioning Company for services performed in military transportation and carrying the mails since the date of the decree, might be applied to the payment and cancellation of the coupons in default and on file. From the petition itself it appears that the United States refused to make the application because of an alleged defense they had to the claim, and the evident purpose of the Company is to have the validity of that defense determined in this proceeding.

In our opinion, the court below properly declined to entertain the petition. The claim of the Railroad Company does not arise out of the decree. There is no connection between the demand of the United States on the one side and that of the Railroad Company on the other. The United States ask for no new decree, but execution because of default in the payment of an old one. Upon their application, the only question is, whether there has been default for the requisite time in the payment of the coupons filed. The Railroad Company admits the default, but insists, in effect, that the United States ought to apply the coupons to the payment of a debt they owe the Company, and thus cancel the default. This the United States decline to do, because they claim they do not owe the debt set up by the Company. Clearly, this dispute between the parties could not, even before final decree, be made the subject of a cross-bill, because it does not grow out of the original suit. A cross-bill cannot be used to bring in new and distinct matters. Ayers v. Chicago, not reported [ante, 838]; Rubber Co. v. Goodyear, 9 Wall., 788 [76 U. S., XIX., 566]; Cross v. De Valle, 1 Wall., 5 [68 U. S., XVII., 515]. Neither can the petition be treated as an original and independent suit, for the United States cannot be sued on contracts except in the Court of Claims. If the United States had sued the Railroad Company on the coupons, other questions might have arisen; but they did not do so. All they have done has been to file their coupons with the clerk in order to get execution on their old decree.

Executor's liability—admission of—objection to order—bill by creditor.

1. Where a bill is filed by a creditor against an executor for the discovery of assets and the application thereof to his debt, and the executor answers, admitting sufficient assets and alleging that he is ready and willing to pay such debt, but that he disputes the justice thereof, and upon the trial the proof showed that the executor had not sufficient assets to pay such debt which was proved to be valid, a decree against the executor for the amount of the debt was proper.

2. The executor's admission was a good ground for charging him with the liability, although he could not urge it as evidence in support of his plea. Such admission of assets renders the executor personally liable.

3. The objection, that the bill was not formally dismissed as to the devisees, cannot be raised here by the executor, who alone appealed from the decree.

4. A creditor of a deceased person has a right to go into a court of equity for a discovery of assets and the payment of his debt. When there, he will not be turned back to a court of law to establish the validity of his claim.

[No. 277.]

Argued Apr. 23, 1880. Decided May 10, 1880.

APPEAL from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. R. T. Merrick and M. F. Morris, for appellant.

Mr. Enoch Totten, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellees filed a bill in equity for themselves and other creditors against the appellant, as executor of James C. Kennedy, deceased, and against the devisees of his will, praying for an account of the personal estate of the testator, a discovery of his real estate and the application thereof to the payment of his debts. The bill stated that the complainants were the holders of a note of the testator for $12,000, with interest, which was due and not paid; that the defendant, Harvey Kennedy, as executor, had proved the testator's will, and entered upon the execution thereof; that the personal property was insufficient to pay the debts, and that the defendant was paying some debts in full and leaving others unsatisfied; and that the testator left a large amount of real estate, some of which is described and pointed out.

To this bill the defendants filed a plea, the material part of which is as follows:

"That the executor aforesaid has in his hands assets of the estate of the said James C. Kennedy, deceased, amply sufficient to pay and discharge the claims of the complainants and all other claims that have been brought to his notice, and that he is ready and willing to pay the said claim of the complainants whenever and as soon as the same shall have been proved and established by a tribunal of competent jurisdiction according to law; but the said executor disputes the said claim and denies the justice and validity thereof, and has for such cause rejected the same; and the said complainants have not sought in any manner to enforce the said claim against the said executor and the assets in his hands by proper proceedings at law.

Wherefore, these defendants aver and plead the premises in bar of the complainants' bill; and they pray that the complainants be required to enforce their claim against the said executor by proper proceedings at law; and they pray also the judgment of the court whether they (these defendants) should be compelled to make any further or other answer to the said bill, and that they be hence dismissed with their reasonable costs in this behalf wrongfully sustained."

To this plea the complainants filed a replication, and proceeded to prove the note held by them and its non-payment, and also produced in evidence the accounts filed by the executor in the office of the register of wills and the exceptions filed by the complainants thereto. In the executor's account he charged himself with assets to the amount of $31,794.62, and claimed credit for moneys paid and for commissions to the amount of $27,014.75, showing a balance in his hands of only $4,779.87. The defendants offered no testimony, and the court, on final hearing, made a decree that the executor should pay to the complainants the full amount of their claim. From this decree the executor has appealed.

The appellant insists that, according to the rules of equity pleading, the complainant, by taking issue on the plea, admitted its sufficiency; and as the decree was based upon the admission of assets contained in the plea, it was an affirmation of its truth; and, therefore, it should have been in favor of the defendants, and the bill should have been dismissed.

This argument is very ingenious, but it is not sound. The defendants not only failed to prove the truth of their plea, but, on the contrary, the complainants, by the executor's own sworn accounts, filed in the probate office, proved, so far as such proof could go, that the plea was untrue. These accounts show that the executor had not sufficient personal estate in his hands to pay one third of the complainants' claim alone: so that, according to the strictest rules of equity pleading, the complainants were entitled to a decree in their favor. The executor may have had sufficient assets in fact; but he did not see fit to disclose them, or prove that he had them.

His admission that he had assets may be taken against him for the purpose of charging him with a liability, but it cannot serve him as evidence to prove the truth of his plea. His mere allegation cannot be received as proof of its own truth where the fact is directly in issue, and the burden of proof is on him.

Since, then, the complainants were entitled to a decree, the question is, what decree? If a defendant plead a false plea, and it be so found, what is next to be done? Is it to be merely overruled, and an order made that he answer further, as in case of overruling a demurrer, or of overruling a plea for insufficiency? This is not the usual course. Having put the plaintiff to the trouble and delay of an issue, the defendant cannot, after it is found against him, claim the right to file an answer; although, if the complainant desires a discovery, which the plea sought to avoid, he may, undoubtedly, insist upon it. But that is the complainant's right, not the defendant's. Lord Hardwicke said: "All pleas must suggest a fact; it must go to a hearing; and if the party does not prove that fact which is necessary to support the plea, the plaintiff is not to lose the benefit of his discovery, but the court may direct an examination on interrogatories in order to supply that." Brownsword v. Edwards, 2 Ves., 243. This statement is adopted by Lord Redesdale and by Mr. Beames, and by all subsequent writers on equity pleading. Mitf., 4th ed., 302; Beames, Pleas in Eq., 318; Story, Eq. Pl., sec. 697. If the plea is found to be false, it would seem to be just and equitable that the case should stand as if the defendant had admitted the allegations of the plaintiff. Sir Thomas Plumer states the matter thus: "Supposing a plea to be correct in form, but proved false, it seems to be conceived that the course at the hearing is to take it up just as if there was no answer. That is not correct. Upon a plea found false the plaintiff is entitled to a decree; and if a discovery is wanted, the defendant is ordered to be examined upon interrogatories." Wood v. Strickland, 2 Ves. & B., 150. Chancellor Walworth, in a case before him, where the defendant produced no evidence to establish the truth of his plea, said: "Where a plea in bar to the whole bill is put in, if the complainant takes issue thereon he admits the sufficiency of the plea, and leaves nothing in question but the truth thereof. If, at the hearing, the plea is found to be true, the bill must be dismissed. But if the plea is untrue, the complainant will be entitled to a decree against the defendant in the same manner as if the several matters charged in the bill had been confessed or admitted. If a discovery is necessary to enable the complainant to obtain the relief sought for by his bill, the defendant cannot evade answering by putting in a plea which turns out to be false. In such a case, after the plea is overruled as false, the complainant may have an order that the defendant be examined on interrogatories before a master as to the several matters in relation to which a discovery was sought by the bill." Dows v. McMichael, 2 Paige, 345.

In the present case, the complainants did not see fit to insist on a further discovery. Being entitled to a decree pro confesso as to the principal charges of their bill, and the executor having admitted sufficient assets to pay the debts of the estate, they were content to take a decree against him for the amount of the debt. The executor's admission, as we have before said, was a good ground for charging him with the liability, though he could not urge it as evidence in support of his plea. And as an admission of assets renders the executor personally liable, a decree against him was proper. The usual decree on a creditor's bill is for an account; but, as said by Vice-Chancellor Wigram in a similar case: "The reason for and the principle of the usual form of decree have no application where assets are admitted, for the executor thereby makes himself liable to the payment of the debt. In such a case, the other creditors cannot be prejudiced by a decree for the payment of the plaintiff's debt; and the object of the special form of the decree in a creditor's suit fails. * * * I am satisfied that in this case there ought to be a decree for immediate payment." Woodgate v. Field, 2 Hare, 211; Story, Eq. Jur., sec. 548, a. Had it been contended or shown in this case that the estate of the testator was insolvent, so as to require a pro rata payment among all the creditors, there might have been room for the objection that the ordinary decree was not made. But no such point is made in the case, and we think that the decree was properly rendered for the debt of the complainants alone.

As to the objection that the bill was not formally dismissed as to the devisees, we do not think it can be raised here by the executor, who alone appealed from the decree.

The point taken by the appellant, that the court below, sitting as a court of equity, had no jurisdiction of the case, is not well taken. The authorities are abundant and well settled that a creditor of a deceased person has a right to go into a court of equity for a discovery of assets and the payment of his debt. When there, he will not be turned back to a court of law to establish the validity of his claim. The court being in rightful possession of the cause for a discovery and account, will proceed to a final decree upon all the merits. Thompson v. Brown, 4 Johns. Ch., 619; 1 Story, Eq. Jur., sec. 546; 2 Wms. Exrs., 1718, 1719. The allegations of the bill in this case were sufficient to give the court jurisdiction; and the accounts of the executor show that the complainants had reasonable cause for making those allegations. They went into the court for the discovery of assets; and the object of the bill was attained by the admission of the executor that he had sufficient assets. It would be strange, indeed, if that admission could be made a ground for depriving the court of its jurisdiction. If it could, the discovery, by proof of assets concealed by the executor, would have the same effect; and the result would be that a bill in equity could be defeated by proofs showing that there was good ground for filing it.

In conclusion, we will state that we have found nothing in the local law of the District of Columbia, or the jurisdiction of the Probate Court, that is, of the Supreme Court of the District acting as such, inconsistent with the views expressed.

The decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia is affirmed.

Case, when must be submitted to jury.

Where the evidence as to the truth of the statements in an application for insurance is conflicting or doubtful, it must be submitted to the jury, and the court cannot direct a verdict.

[No. 255.]

Argued Apr. 12, 1880. Decided May 10, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. James Parsons and F. Sheppard, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Henry Hazlehurst and Isaac Hazlehurst, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion of the court:

As the judgment which was entered by the circuit court was in accordance with the verdict, the only assignment of error which we have to consider is the first, namely: that the court erred in giving to the jury a binding charge to return a verdict for the defendants.

The policy upon which the suit was founded contained the following stipulation: "And it is hereby declared and agreed that if the representations and answers made to this Company in the application for this policy, upon the full faith of which it is issued, shall be found to be untrue in any respect, or that there has been any concealment of facts, then, and in such case, this policy shall be null and void." The application referred to contained the following interrogatories and answers, among others: "Seventh. Has the party (Louis Moulor, the person whose life was insured) ever been afflicted with any of the following diseases? Answer yes or no to each. Insanity? No. Gout? No. Rheumatism? No. Palsy? No. Scrofula? No. Convulsions? No. Dropsy? No. Small-pox? No. Yellow fever? Yes. Fistula? No? Rupture? No. Asthma? No. Spitting of blood? No. Consumption? No. Any diseases of the lungs or throat? No? Or of the heart? No. Or of the urinary organs? No."

Interrogatory twelfth. "How long since the party was attended by a physician? For what disease or diseases?" Answer. "Not since the year 1847, when he had the yellow fever."

After these answers the application contained the following: "It is hereby declared and warranted that the above are fair and true answers to the foregoing questions, and it is acknowledged and agreed by the undersigned (Louis Moulor) that this application shall form a part of the contract of insurance, and that if there be in any of the answers herein made any untrue or evasive statements, or any misrepresentations, or concealment of facts, then any policy granted upon this application shall be null and void."

The defense set up at the trial was that some of the answers to the interrogatories contained in the application were untrue, and this defense was attempted to be supported by the testimony of a single witness, Dr. Mathieu. He testified that he had been the family physician of Moulor since 1855 (the policy was issued June 17, 1872). He testified further, that in 1858 and 1859 he attended Moulor for chronic asthma, manifestations of the first stage of consumption, and also treated him for scrofula. The witness did not testify positively that Moulor had the diseases for which he treated him, but his testimony was that Moulor never learned from him or any other physician, and that he never suspected or had the remotest idea that he was affected with any such diseases; on the contrary, that he always boasted of himself as being a strong, healthy and robust man. The witness further testified that the asthma Moulor had was the dry, nervous asthma, attended by no expectoration; that there was nothing connected with it to make the patient believe he had it. As to the first stage of consumption, there was no softening of the tubercles and, therefore, no expectoration of the tuberculous matter. As to the scrofula, that his was very mild diathesis.

This was all the testimony adduced, and now relied upon to prove that the answers in the application were untrue.

There was, however, in evidence the statement of two medical examiners attending the application. They represented the assured as in perfect health, and as having never had any constitutional disease except yellow fever, and a curvature of the spine in his early youth, and as having no predisposition, either hereditary or acquired, to any constitutional disease.

We are of opinion that this evidence did not warrant a peremptory instruction to the jury to find a verdict in favor of the defendants. The testimony of Dr. Mathieu was parol. Its credibility as well as its effect was for the jury, especially as it was not positive and unqualified that Moulor had had the diseases for which the witness had treated him, and as the statements of the examining physicians which were in evidence tended in some degree to prove that he never had. The jury might, perhaps, have drawn the conclusion from Dr. Mathieu's testimony that there had been only predisposition to the diseases, and not the diseases themselves. He stated, in regard to the asthma for which he treated Moulor, that it was attended with no expectoration, and that there was nothing connected with it to make the patient believe he had it. In regard to the first stages of consumption, according to his statement, there was no expectoration of tuberculous matter. He does not state that there was any cough or pain in the chest. There were, then, no external symptoms of either of the three diseases mentioned. Had scrofula existed, it would seem probable the patient must have known it. Yet the doctor states he did not suspect, or have the remotest idea, that he was affected with either of the diseases. That he was treated for them is not conclusive that he had them. The most skillful treatment sometimes is given when the existence of a particular disease is only suspected, not known, and when afterwards it appears the physician was mistaken.

For these reasons we think the testimony was not such as to justify a withdrawal from the jury the inquiry whether the answer to the seventh interrogatory was untrue.

Nor was it sufficient to enable the court to conclude, without reference to the jury, that the answer to the twelfth interrogatory was untrue. The entire interrogatory should be considered as one. It was: "How long since the party was attended by a physician? For what disease or diseases?" To this the answer was: "Not since the year 1847, when he had the yellow fever." It may well be that the applicant understood the interrogatory as asking information respecting attendance for a particular disease or diseases and their description, especially as the thirteenth interrogatory sought information respecting the party's usual medical attendant, and the name of that attendant was truly given.

Upon the whole, therefore, we think the case should have been submitted to the jury on the evidence.

The judgment is reversed, and the case is remitted for a new trial.

Copy, foregoing opinion, duly authenticated by James H. McKenney, Esq., Clerk, Supreme Court, U. S.

Mechanics' lien, priority of—bondholders—lien on whole, for work on part of railroad.

1. That a contractor, who files a mechanics' lien for work on a railroad in Iowa, is a stockholder of a construction company which guarantied bonds and a mortgage to secure them, on the road, does not estop him from setting up that his lien is superior to that of the mortgage.

2. If the bondholders have suffered any loss for which the guaranty provides a remedy, the corporation is liable to suit for damages.

3. Where work is done upon part of a railroad, the lien attaches to the whole of it, and in Iowa takes precedence over a prior mortgage on the road.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Iowa.

The case is stated by the court.

Messrs. Joseph H. Choate, Grant & Grant, and John W. Cary, for appellants.

Mr. James T. Lane, for appellee.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Iowa. Appellants, as trustees in a railroad mortgage, brought suit to foreclose it, and made Hornby a defendant on account of a claim for a mechanics' lien which he set up and was allowed. The corporation which made the mortgage and owned the road was the Davenport and St. Paul Railroad Company, incorporated to build a road from Davenport, in Iowa, to St. Paul in Minnesota. The route was surveyed from Davenport to St. Paul, and work was commenced some three miles out from the City of Davenport and prosecuted in the direction of St. Paul, until about forty-eight miles were completed. The part of the road surveyed from Davenport to Pine Hill Cemetery, when this work was begun, included a difficult and expensive ascent from the river bottom, on which the town is mainly situated, to the prairie land above the bluff, and for this reason it was delayed, and a running arrangement made with another company for a while, by which the cars from the country came into the city. The work on that piece of road was, however, commenced on a contract with Hornby, of date of October 9, 1871, and finished prior to the first day of November, 1873. On the 28th of that month he filed his claim for a mechanics' lien in the proper court.

Two objections are taken to this lien. One of them is that Hornby himself was a stockholder in the Davenport Railway Construction Company, a corporation which placed the bonds secured by appellants' mortgage on the market, and which gave a guaranty that the local subscriptions and grants should be sufficient to prepare the road for the reception of the rails, and undertook to make good any deficiency in such local aid. Six gentlemen also signed an agreement to be personally bound to make good the guaranty of the construction company. Mr. Hornby was not one of them, and it is not charged that he ever made any personal representations on the subject to purchasers of the bonds or to any one else.

But it is argued, that because he was a stockholder of the construction company, he is now estopped to set up his lien for work and labor performed, to the detriment of these bondholders. It is difficult to see how any such claim can be sustained. It was the corporation, and not Mr. Hornby, who gave the guaranty. If the bondholders have suffered any loss for which that instrument provides a remedy, the corporation is liable to suit for damages. Even then it must be proved that there has been a loss, and that the loss was suffered because the local subscriptions and grants were not sufficient to prepare the whole of said line for the rails. Before Mr. Hornby can in any event be held liable, it must be shown that the construction company is liable and cannot respond to that liability.

Nothing of this kind is shown by the record. It might be otherwise if it were proved that Mr. Hornby used this guaranty fraudulently and with false statements to negotiate the bonds; but this is not alleged or proven. We see no place for an estoppel in the case.

The other error alleged concerns the fact that the part of the road on which Hornby did his work, namely: the three miles between Pine Hill Cemetery and the city, is a separate division and not a part of the principal road, and that no lien as against these mortgagees can be established for that reason.

We have considered this question so fully in the case of Brooks v. R. Co. [ante, 1057], that it is unnecessary to discuss it here. It is sufficient to say that, under the principle there laid down, that three miles is a part of the improvement, and the lien attaches to the whole of it. The fact that they consented that the court should limit it to the three miles can do appellants no harm.

The decree is affirmed.

2. The police power extends to all matters affecting the public health or the public morals. Lotteries are proper subjects for the exercise of this power.

Argued Mar. 4, 5, 1880. Decided May 10, 1880.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Mississippi.

This was an information filed in the Circuit Court of Warren County by the Attorney-General of Mississippi, in behalf of the State, against the plaintiffs in error, the defendants in that court, requiring them to show by what warrant or authority they exercised the franchise or privilege of issuing and vending lottery tickets in contravention of the laws of that State.

The defendants below, in their answer set up, by way of defense, an Act passed by the Legislature of Mississippi Jan. 16, 1867, entitled, "An Act Incorporating the Mississippi Agricultural, Educational and Manufacturing Aid Society," which, it is claimed, conceded to them the franchise of issuing and vending lottery tickets.

The answer goes on to admit that there is, in the Constitution of the State, adopted in Convention May 15, 1868, and ratified by the People December 1, 1869, a provision, Art. XII., sec. 15, "Which declares that the Legislature shall never authorize any lottery; nor shall the sale of lottery tickets be allowed; nor shall any lottery heretofore authorized be permitted to be drawn, or tickets therein to be sold." It further admits that the Legislature, by an Act entitled, an Act Enforcing the Provisions of the Constitution of the State of Mississippi Prohibiting All Kinds of Lotteries within Said State, approved July 9, 1870, it was made unlawful to conduct a lottery in the State of Mississippi.

They insist that they had complied with all the conditions imposed by the charter, and were conducting business in accordance with its provisions; that the terms of the Constitution and the legislative Act, above set forth, interfered with their vested rights and violated the Constitution of the United States, in attempting to impair the obligation of a contract.

The court decided against the respondents, and gave judgment of ouster. The case was then taken to the Supreme Court of the State, where the judgment was affirmed, and thence it comes, by writ of error, to this court.

Mr. P. Phillips, for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. A. M. Clayton and Van H. Manning, for defendants in error.

See 11 OTTO.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court:

It is now too late to contend that any contract which a State actually enters into when granting a charter to a private corporation, is not within the protection of the clause in the Constitution of the United States that prohibits States from passing laws impairing the obligation of contracts. Art. 1, sec. 10. The doctrines of the Dart. Coll. v. Woodward, 4 Wheat., 518, announced by this court more than sixty years ago, have become so imbedded in the jurisprudence of the United States as to make them, to all intents and purposes, a part of the Constitution itself. In this connection, however, it is to be kept in mind that it is not the charter which is protected, but only any contract the charter may contain. If there is no contract, there is nothing in the grant on which the Constitution can act. Consequently, the first inquiry in this class of cases always is, whether a contract has, in fact, been entered into, and if so, what its obligations are.

In the present case the question is, whether the State of Mississippi, in its sovereign capacity, did, by the charter now under consideration, bind itself irrevocably by a contract to permit "The Mississippi Agricultural, Educational and Manufacturing Aid Society," for twenty-five years, "to receive subscriptions, and sell and dispose of certificates of subscription which shall entitle the holders thereof to" "any lands, books, paintings, statues, antiques, scientific instruments or apparatus, or any other property or thing that may be ornamental, valuable or useful," "awarded to them" "by the casting of lots, or by lot, chance or otherwise." There can be no dispute but that, under this form of words, the Legislature of the State chartered a lottery company, having all the powers incident to such a corporation, for twenty-five years, and that, in consideration thereof, the company paid into the State Treasury $5,000 for the use of a university, and agreed to pay, and until the commencement of this suit did pay, an annual tax of $1,000 and "One half of one per cent on the amount of receipts derived from the sale of certificates or tickets." If the Legislature that granted this charter had the power to bind the people of the State and all succeeding Legislatures to allow the corporation to continue its corporate business during the whole term of its authorized existence, there is no doubt about the sufficiency of the language employed to effect that object, although there was an evident purpose to conceal the vice of the transaction by the phrases that were used. Whether the alleged contract exists therefore, or not, depends on the authority of the Legislature to bind the State and the people of the State in that way.

All agree that the Legislature cannot bargain away the police power of a State. "Irrevocable grants of property and franchises may be made if they do not impair the supreme authority to make laws for the right government of the State; but no Legislature can curtail the power of its successors to make such laws as they may deem proper in matters of police." Metropolitan Bd. of Excise v. Barrie, 34 N. Y., 657; Boyd v. Alabama, 94 U. S., 645 [XXIV., 302]. Many attempts have been made in this court and elsewhere to define the police power, but never with entire success. It is always easier to determine whether a particular case comes within the general scope of the power, than to give an abstract definition of the power itself which will be in all respects accurate. No one denies, however, that it extends to all matters affecting the public health or the public morals. Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S., 25 [XXIV., 989]; Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U. S., 501 [XXIV., 1115]. Neither can it be denied that lotteries are proper subjects for the exercise of this power. We are aware that formerly, when the sources of public revenue were fewer than now, they were used in some or all of the States, and even in the District of Columbia, to raise money for the erection of public buildings, making public improvements, and not unfrequently for educational and religious purposes; but this court said, more than thirty years ago, speaking through Mr. Justice Grier, in Phalen v. Virginia, 8 How., 163, 168, that "Experience has shown that the common forms of gambling are comparatively innocuous when placed in contrast with the wide-spread pestilence of lotteries. The former are confined to a few persons and places, but the latter infests the whole community; it enters every dwelling; it reaches every class; it preys upon the hard earnings of the poor; and it plunders the ignorant and simple." Happily, under the influence of restrictive legislation, the evils are not so apparent now; but we very much fear that, with the same opportunities of indulgence, the same results would be manifested.

If lotteries are to be tolerated at all, it is, no doubt, better that they should be regulated by law, so that the people may be protected as far as possible against the inherent vices of the system; but that they are demoralizing in their effects, no matter how carefully regulated, cannot admit of a doubt. When the government is untrammelled by any claim of vested rights or chartered privileges, no one has ever supposed that lotteries could not lawfully be suppressed, and those who manage them punished severely as violators of the rules of social morality. From 1822 to 1867, without any constitutional requirement, they were prohibited by law in Mississippi, and those who conducted them punished as a kind of gamblers. During the Provisional Government of that State, in 1867, at the close of the late civil war, the present Act of incorporation, with more of like character, was passed. The next year, 1868, the people, in adopting a new Constitution with a view to the resumption of their political rights as one of the United States, provided that "The Legislature shall never authorize any lottery, nor shall the sale of lottery tickets be allowed, nor shall any lottery heretofore authorized be permitted to be drawn, or tickets therein to be sold." Art. 12, sec. 15. There is now scarcely a State in the Union where lotteries are tolerated, and Congress has enacted a special statute, the object of which is to close the mails against them. R. S., sec. 3894; 19 Stat. at L., 90, sec. 2.

The question is, therefore, directly presented, whether, in view of these facts, the Legislature of a State can, by the charter of a lottery company, defeat the will of the People, authoritatively expressed, in relation to the further continuance of such business in their midst. We think it cannot. No Legislature can bargain away the public health or the public morals. The People themselves cannot do it, much less their servants. The supervision of both these subjects of governmental power is continuing in its nature, and they are to be dealt with as the special exigencies of the moment may require. Government is organized with a view to their preservation, and cannot divest itself of the power to provide for them. For this purpose, the largest legislative discretion is allowed, and the discretion cannot be parted with any more than the power itself. Beer Co. v. Massachusetts [supra].

In Dart. Coll. v. Woodward [supra], it was argued that the contract clause of the Constitution, if given the effect contended for in respect to corporate franchises, "Would be an unprofitable and vexatious interference with the internal concerns of a State, would, unnecessarily and unwisely, embarrass its legislation, and render immutable those civil institutions which are established for the purpose of internal government, and which to subserve those purposes, ought to vary with varying circumstances" (p. 628); but Chief Justice Marshall, when he announced the opinion of the court, was careful to say (p. 629), "That the framers of the Constitution did not intend to restrain States in the regulation of their civil institutions, adopted for internal government, and that the instrument they have given us is not to be so construed." The present case, we think, comes within this limitation. We have held, not, however, without strong opposition at times, that this clause protected a corporation in its charter exemptions from taxation. While taxation is, in general, necessary for the support of government, it is not part of the government itself. Government was not organized for the purposes of taxation, but taxation may be necessary for the purposes of government. As such, taxation becomes an incident to the exercise of the legitimate functions of government, but nothing more. No government, dependent on taxation for support, can bargain away its whole power of taxation, for that would be substantially abdication. All that has been determined thus far is, that for a consideration it may, in the exercise of a reasonable discretion, and for the public good, surrender a part of its powers in this particular.

But the power of governing is a trust committed by the People to the government, no part of which can be granted away. The People, in their sovereign capacity, have established their agencies for the preservation of the public health and the public morals, and the protection of public and private rights. These several agencies can govern according to their discretion, if within the scope of their general authority, while in power; but they cannot give away nor sell the discretion of those that are to come after them, in respect to matters the government of which, from the very nature of things, must "vary with varying circumstances." They may create corporations, and give them, so to speak, a limited citizenship; but as citizens, limited in their privileges, or otherwise, these creatures of the government creation are subject to such rules and regulations as may from time to time be ordained and established for the preservation of health and morality.

The contracts which the Constitution protects are those that relate to property rights, not governmental. It is not always easy to tell on which side of the line which separates governmental from property rights a particular case is to be put; but in respect to lotteries there can be no difficulty. They are not, in the legal acceptance of the term, mala in se, but as we have just seen, may properly be made mala prohibita. They are a species of gambling, and wrong in their influences. They disturb the checks and balances of a well ordered community. Society built on such a foundation would almost of necessity bring forth a population of speculators and gamblers, living on the expectation of what, "by the casting of lots, or by lot, chance or otherwise," might be "awarded" to them from the accumulations of others. Certainly the right to stop them is governmental, to be exercised at all times by those in power, at their discretion. Anyone, therefore, who accepts a lottery charter, does so with the implied understanding that the People, in their sovereign capacity and through their properly constituted agencies, may resume it at any time when the public good shall require, and this whether it be paid for or not. All that one can get by such a charter is a suspension of certain governmental rights in his favor, subject to withdrawal at will. He has, in legal effect, nothing more than a license to continue on the terms named for the specified time, unless sooner abrogated by the sovereign power of the State. It is a permit, good as against existing laws, but subject to future legislative and constitutional control or withdrawal.

On the whole, we find no error in the record and the judgment is, consequently, affirmed.

CHARLES HOWARD, Plff. in Err.,

v.

MILWAUKEE AND SAINT PAUL RAILWAY COMPANY ET AL.

(See S. C., 11 Otto, 837-850.)

Evidence in ejectment—priority of lien—effect of sale—second lien.

1. In ejectment, evidence is admissible to show the title of the defendants, the creation of the liens, the transfers of the titles, or regularity of the proceedings by which the title was acquired or transmitted from one party to another.

2. Priority of lien gives priority of legal right.

3. A sale of property by one having only a subsequent lien, will not supersede or displace a prior lien held by another, and a sale in equity under a prior lien will not impair any rights which belong to the holder of the subsequent lien, if the latter duly asserts his rights in proper season.

4. Subsequent incumbrancers, when not made parties to a bill for foreclosure or sale, are not bound by the decree.

5. A decree of sale in equity is not void because a second incumbrancer is not made a party to the proceeding, and his lien remains in full force, notwithstanding a decree of sale entered pursuant to such proceeding.

[No. 288.]

Argued Apr. 29, 1880. Decided May 10, 1880.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Wisconsin.

This was an action of ejectment, brought in See 11 OTTO.

the court below by Howard, the plaintiff in error, to recover certain lots and blocks in the City of Milwaukee, occupied by the defendant Corporation.

The case is fully stated in the opinion.

Mr. H. M. Finch, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. John W. Cary, for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court:

Possession of the lands in controversy was held by the defendants at the time laid in the declaration, as the road-bed, depot site and other structures of their railroad, at the described locality, and the plaintiff brought ejectment to recover the premises, claiming title to the same by purchase at a sheriff's sale by virtue of a seizure to satisfy a judgment recovered in the name of Sebre Howard against the original Company owning and operating the railroad and under which both parties claim title.

Sufficient appears, to show that the Company became indebted to the judgment creditor in the sum of $25,000, and gave him their promissory note for that amount. Payment being refused, he sued the same, and on May 1, 1858, recovered judgment for the amount. Execution in due form issued on the judgment, and the sheriff, by virtue thereof, seized and sold the property to the plaintiff, October 29, 1859, of the same year, as appears by the deed given in evidence.

Such a deed, it is claimed by the plaintiff, is, by the law of the State, made prima facie evidence that the title of the person, against whom the judgment was rendered and by virtue of which the sale and deed purport to have been made, in the lands and real estate described in the deed, passed to and vested in the grantee in such deed, and this without making other proof, either of the judgment or sale, than that furnished by the deed. Laws, Wis., 1869, 39; Ehle v. Brown, 31 Wis., 405, 412.

Title to the lands in controversy is also claimed by the defendants through a purchase pursuant to a prior lien made by a creditor of the Company, under whom they claim, at a sheriff's sale of a subsequent date, by virtue of an execution issued on a judgment docketed October 7, 1857, and the lawful deed of the sheriff executed to the creditor in pursuance of such sale. Without entering into details, suffice it to say that the judgment was rendered against the Company in that case for $111,727.71, together with the costs of suit, and the evidence exhibited in the transcript shows that the title of the judgment in due form of law passed to the defendants by certain operative mesne assignments.

Suppose the law of the State to be such as is contended by the plaintiff; it is plain that it is as applicable to the purchase by the creditor under whom the defendants claim as to that under which plaintiff claims title.

Service was made, and the defendants appeared and filed an answer, denying each and every allegation in the complaint or declaration. Preliminary matters being settled, the parties went to trial, and the verdict and judgment were in favor of the defendants. Exceptions were filed by the plaintiff, and he sued out the present writ of error and removed the cause into this court for re-examination,

Since the cause was entered here, the plaintiff has assigned errors pursuant to the rule making that requirement: (1) Five of the assignments call in question the rulings of the circuit court in admitting evidence offered by the defendants. (2) Then follows the sixth assignment of error, which calls in question the ruling of the court that the title of the lands in controversy is in the defendants, and that the verdict of the jury should be in their favor. (3) Thirty-three requests for instruction were presented by the plaintiff, and he calls in question the ruling of the court in refusing each one of those requests.

When the plaintiff made the purchase under which he claims title, there were subsisting liens upon the property prior in date to the judgment for the satisfaction of which the sale was made, to wit: a mortgage dated August 17, 1857, executed by the original company to Bronson and Soutter to secure the payment of $1,000,000, and a judgment in favor of Newcomb Cleveland, dated October 7, 1857, for the amount before described, and which was docketed on the day it was rendered.

Bonds to the amount of $2,000,000 were issued by the Company, and June 21 of the next year they executed a mortgage upon its railroad and property to William Barnes as trustee, to secure the payment of those securities, and on the 11th of the next month they executed a supplemental mortgage to the same party for the same purpose. Interest having fallen due, which was not paid, the mortgage was foreclosed by advertisement, and on the 21st of May of the next year all the property, franchises and rights of the mortgagor were sold under the mortgage, and were bid off by the mortgagee in trust for the bondholders. By virtue of that sale, the bondholders and the mortgagee became the owners of the property, franchises and rights of the mortgagor; and they united two days later in organizing a corporation under the statutes of the State, which received the name of the Milwaukee and Minnesota Railroad Company, to which they transferred all the rights and interests they acquired by that purchase.

Enough appears, to show that the Bronson and Soutter mortgage covered the line of the road from Milwaukee to Portage City, and it appears that the mortgagees, December 9, 1859, filed a bill in the district court for the district to foreclose that mortgage, in which they made both the old Corporation and the new Company, together with Sebre Howard and the plaintiff in the present action, parties defendant in the suit. Somewhat protracted litigation followed, but it will be sufficient to say that it culminated in a decree of sale, with an order that if the successor Company should, before sale, pay into court certain sums of money, they should be let into possession of the road, rolling stock, and other property of the old Company from Milwaukee to Portage City, subject to prior liens. Pursuant to that order the new Company paid the specified sums into court, and on the same day took possession of the property and managed and operated it from that time until the same was sold to the defendants.

Other judgment creditors of the old Company, including Frederick P. James, on the 22d of April, 1863, filed a bill in the circuit court against the successor Company, joining the old Company and Selah Chamberlain as parties respondent in the suit. What the bill prayed was that the sale to the new Company might be decreed fraudulent, and that the Company should be enjoined from exercising any control over the property and franchises mentioned in the mortgage. Hearing was had, and the bill was dismissed in the circuit court; but, on appeal to the Supreme Court, the decree of the circuit court was reversed, and the cause remanded for a decree in favor of the complainants.

It appears from the mandate that it was decreed that the foreclosure and sale of the mortgage be set aside and annulled as fraudulent, and that the new Company was perpetually enjoined from setting up any right or title under it to the railroad and other property sold under the mortgage, and that the mortgage remain only as security for bonds issued under it in the hands of bona fide holders without notice. Besides that, an order of sale was contained in the decree, but no sale of the railroad or property was ever made under that decree.

James became the assignee of the judgment rendered October 7, 1857, in favor of Cleveland, and on the 18th of April, 1866, he, the assignee, filed his bill in the circuit court against the successor Company to enforce the lien of that judgment, and to have the property covered by the lien sold to pay the judgment debt. Among other things, he set out the judgment, the mortgage, and the organization of the new Company, and alleged that the mortgage was fraudulent, and that the new Company was holding the property in fraud of the creditors of the original Company, and prayed that the property might be sold to satisfy the judgment, subject to certain prior liens and incumbrances.

Due process was served, and the respondent appeared and filed an answer. Litigation followed, which resulted in a decree that there was due to the complainant, as such assignee, $98,801.51, and that the same was a lien and incumbrance as of the date of October 7, 1857, upon all the right, title and interest which the original Company had in and to the property situated between Milwaukee and Portage City. Provision was also made in the decree for the sale of all that portion of the railroad, the same being then in the possession of the successor Company, and that that Company and all persons claiming under it be barred from all equity of redemption. Explicit recitals were contained in the decree that the original Company had ceased to exist as a corporation, and that the new Company had succeeded to its property, subject to subsisting liens and incumbrances.

On the 2d of March, 1867, pursuant to that decree, a sale was made of the property, by the marshal, to the defendants for the sum specified in the transcript, and three days later the sale was confirmed by the circuit court, when the defendants received their deed of the premises, duly executed by the marshal. Demand of possession was made by the purchasers on the following day, which was duly surrendered by the occupants, and the defendants have continued to operate the road to the present time.

Separate exception was taken to the introduction of each of the documents offered by the defendants to prove the facts set forth in the preceding statement, and those exceptions constitute the basis of the first five assignments of error. Without entering into details, suffice it to say in that regard, that the court is of the opinion that those assignments of error must be overruled, as it is clear that the entire evidence to which they relate was admissible either to show the title of the defendants, or to explain the changes made in the name of the Corporation, or the regularity of the judgments, or the creation of the liens, or the transfers of the titles, or regularity of the proceedings by which the title was acquired or transmitted from one party to another.

Suppose that is so; still it is insisted by the plaintiff that the circuit court erred in directing the jury to return a verdict for the defendants, as specified in the sixth assignment of error.

None of the facts were in dispute, nor was there any conflict of testimony. Nothing of the kind is pretended, as all the material facts were exhibited in the documents given in evidence, consisting of judicial proceedings, mesne conveyances, judicial sales and written assignments or conveyances, leaving nothing as an issue of fact to be determined by the jury.

Judges are forbidden to submit a question to the jury where there is no evidence to sustain the theory of the party making the request, nor are they any longer required to do so even when there is some evidence to support the theory, unless the evidence is of such a character that it would warrant the jury in finding a verdict in favor of the party presenting the request. Imp. Co. v. Munson, 14 Wall., 442, 448 [81 U. S., XX., 867, 872]; Ryder v. Wombwell, L. R. 4 Ex., 32.

Both parties set up a lien as the foundation of their title, and it is undeniable that the judgment, upon which the defendants rest their claim of title, was rendered and docketed so as to become a lien upon the premises in controversy more than six months earlier than that which constitutes the basis of the title claimed by the plaintiff. Nor can it benefit the plaintiff in this litigation that he first took the necessary steps to enforce his lien, unless he can show that by some means the prior lien of the defendants has been displaced or has become inoperative, which is not pretended. Priority of lien certainly gave priority of legal right, just as in the case of a first and second mortgage. Either may proceed in the case of mortgage, where the condition is broken, to foreclose; but if the second mortgagee proceeds first, his decree of foreclosure does not supersede or impair the rights of the first mortgagee, nor did the proceedings of the plaintiff to enforce the lien of his judgment have any effect whatever to supersede or displace the prior lien under which the defendants claim.

Concede that the judgment under which the defendants claim is prior in time and legal effect; still it is suggested by the plaintiff that it should have been enforced by seizure and sale instead of by a proceeding in equity.

Pending that litigation, the decree declaring the lien was appealed to this court, and this court, Mr. Justice Nelson giving the opinion, decided that judgments, by the law of the State, are liens on real estate, and that the judgment, being the one now in question, became a lien on the road from the time of its rendition, and that a sale under a decree in chancery and a conveyance in pursuance thereof, confirmed by the court, passed the whole of the interest of the Company, existing at the time of its rendition, to the purchaser. R. R. Co. v. James, 6 Wall., 750 [73 U. S., XVIII., 854].

Weighed in view of that decision, it is clear that the suggestion of the plaintiff cannot be adopted.

Failing in that, his next suggestion is that he is not bound by the decree, inasmuch as he was not made a party to the suit which resulted in the decree, to which several answers may be given: (1) That he was not a necessary party, even if within the jurisdiction. (2) That he was not within the jurisdiction, and did not ask to be made a party. (3) That the decree in the case, being a decree in equity, did not supersede or displace his lien. (4) That the decree left him still the right, as second lienholder, to redeem, which he may still do if his right is not lost by laches or lapse of time.

Much discussion of the mortgage to the trustee to secure the two millions of bonds is unnecessary, as it was subsequent to the judgment of the plaintiff. Nor is it necessary to add to what has already been remarked in respect to the foreclosure of the mortgage, as it left the judgment under which the sale to the plaintiff was enforced wholly unaffected as to priority and as to any rights accruing from priority. Evidence in that regard was not material to aid the alleged title of the defendants in any respect, except to show the origin of the new Company and the transfer of the property from the old Company to its successor.

Regular proceedings to foreclose the one million mortgage was also instituted; but there was no sale under that decree, the only result affected by it being to vest in the new Company the possession of the railroad and its appurtenances. By paying the amount ascertained as allowed by the court, the new Company acquired both the right of possession and the actual possession of the mortgaged property, and to that extent at least it stepped into the place of the old Company as mortgagor, and became by the decision of the court the owner of the equity of redemption.

Beyond doubt, such was the prima facie effect of the proceeding, but the possession and interest acquired by the new Company were, during all the time, subordinate and subject to subsisting prior liens and incumbrances, among which was the judgment of the plaintiff as enforced by the prior sale. Prior liens and incumbrances were not affected by that proceeding, nor is it of much materiality in the present controversy, except to show the relation which the new Company bears to the railroad and property in question.

Questions of various kinds arise in the case, but the main question throughout is: who holds the paramount legal title to the property which the plaintiff seeks to recover by his action of ejectment? and in determining that question it is evident that the controlling inquiry is: who has the prior lien? as it is clear that the sale of the property by one having only a subsequent lien will not supersede or displace a prior lien held by another; and it is equally clear that a sale in equity under a prior lien will not impair any rights which belong to the holder of the subsequent lien, if the latter duly asserts his rights in proper season. Such propositions cannot be successfully controverted; but the plaintiff contends that, inasmuch as the new Company was enjoined from asserting any right or title to the property on account of the fraudulent character of the proceeding and, inasmuch as the plaintiff was not a party to the proceeding to enforce the prior judgment against the old Company, that the defendants did not acquire any superior legal rights by the sale under that decree.

Other suggestions of various kinds are made, to show that the sale under that decree is ineffectual to give effect to the lien secured by the judgment; but the principal one is, that the plaintiff was not made a party to the proceeding and has not had his day in court, in opposition to the final decision which ordered the sale. Mere equities are not involved in the controversy, but the court is required to deal with the strict legal rights of the parties.

Frequent reference is made in argument to the fact that the proceeding for the foreclosure of the larger mortgage was subsequently adjudged fraudulent, and to the injunction which followed; but it is, nevertheless, true that the new Company was duly organized, and that its actual existence as a corporation has been recognized in repeated instances by the courts in litigations of great importance. It was recognized as such in the proceeding to foreclose the smaller mortgage, and in the decree or order of the court in letting the new Company as such into the possession of the railroad and its property, and throughout the period, exceeding fourteen months, that its directors and agents possessed, controlled, managed and operated the railroad and all its fixtures and appurtenances. Public acts of the kind cannot be overlooked, and it was recognized in the proceeding to enforce the lien of the judgment under which the defendants claim title, both by the circuit court and the Supreme Court in three appeals here, as evidenced by the reported decisions of this court. R. R. Co. v. Chamberlain, 6 Wall., 748 [73 U. S., XVIII., 859]; R. R. Co. v. James [supra]; James v. R. R. Co., 6 Wall., 752 [73 U. S., XVIII., 885].

Judicial recognitions of the kind are repugnant to the theory of the plaintiff, to which it may be added that it was the new Company that was in possession of the property when the proceeding was commenced to enforce the lien of the judgment under which the defendants claim title, and they were still in actual possession of the same when the first decree was entered.

Complaint is made by the plaintiff that he was not made a party to the proceeding, but the omission to make him a party did not displace any lien he had upon the property, nor did it give him any new or enlarged interest in the same. Coming to the question of priority of legal title, the court must look at the judgments from which the respective titles flow. In settling legal rights, the court must give the party superiority whose lien was first acquired and perfected by an appropriate proceeding.

By omitting to make the plaintiff a party to the equity proceeding to enforce their lien, the defendants did not deprive the plaintiff of any legal right, nor was he cut off from any equitable rights which under the law had accrued to him in his position as a subsequent judgment creditor. Had the plaintiff been in possession of the premises when the decree was rendered and when the sale was made, he could not have been dispossessed by any process issued in the equity suit; the rule being that the writ of assistance cannot go against a stranger in a suit for foreclosure, and that the remedy of the party in such a case is ejectment.

Grant all that; and still it is suggested that the plaintiff lost his right to redeem which he could have exercised if the sale had been made at law; but it is not admitted that the suggestion as to loss of remedy is well founded, as it is clear that he might have had a remedy in equity after the sale as well as before. Equity in such a case is a convenient remedy, and it is obvious that the plaintiff could have filed his bill, and if there had been no other difficulty than priority of lien the court of equity would have granted him the right to redeem.

Subsequent incumbrancers, when not made parties to a bill for foreclosure or sale, are not bound by the decree; nor is that rule violated, in the least degree, when it is held that the title of the defendants is paramount, as that consequence flows from the fact that the lien of the judgment under which the defendants claim is prior to that under which the plaintiff claims his title. Whatever rights the plaintiff had prior to the sale in equity which gives the defendants the paramount title, he still has, wholly unimpeached by that sale or by any other cause, unless they are barred by lapse of time or laches.

Process against the plaintiff under that decree could not affect his rights, as he was not a party to the proceeding; consequently, the lien of his judgment still remained in full force. Even if the plaintiff had been made a party to that proceeding, the only effect would have been to cut off his equity of redemption; and as he was not made a party, his equity of redemption is not extinguished.

Authorities are scarcely needed to support these propositions, it being universally admitted that writs of assistance can only issue against parties affected by the decree, which is only saying that the execution cannot exceed the decree which it enforces; the rule being that the owner of property mortgaged which is directed to be sold can only be barred when he has had notice of the proceedings for its sale, if he acquired his interest prior to their institution. Terrell v. Allison, 21 Wall., 289, 292 [88 U. S., XXII., 634, 635].

Everybody admits the correctness of that rule; but it by no means follows that the decree of sale in equity is void because a second incumbrancer is not made a party to the proceeding, as it is clear that his lien remains in full force, notwithstanding the decree of sale entered pursuant to such a proceeding.

Tested by these considerations, it follows that the sixth assignment of error must be overruled.

Most of the material matters involved in the seventh assignment of errors have already been sufficiently examined. Many of the assignments of error under this number aimed to show that the circuit court erred in refusing to adopt the theory of the plaintiff, that certain portions of the premises in controversy occupied by the defendants for railroad tracks or as sites for their depot and other structures are not necessary for the purposes suggested, or that the title to the same did not pass to the defendants. Careful efforts to examine these matters to the extent of the means exhibited in the transcript have been made, and it must suffice to say in that regard that the court is unable to perceive that it is shown that the circuit court erred materially in any of those matters to the prejudice of the plaintiff.

Remarks already made cover all the other grounds of complaint, and are sufficient to show that there is no error in the record.

Judgment affirmed.

Appeal and error.—Notice is necessary to perfect writ of error or appeal, unless appeal allowed in open court, p. 11.

Appeal and error.—Appeal bond, duly executed, is valid though omitting sureties' names in introduction, p. 13.

Cited in 38 Am. St. Rep. 704, note.

Appeal and error.—Affirmance of judgment fixes liability of sureties to appeal, without execution against principal, pp. 13, 14, 15.

Approved and followed in Third Nat. Bank v. Gordon, 53 Fed. 472, allowing execution against sureties on supersedeas, without suit; Gordon v. Third Nat. Bank, 56 Fed. 792, 796, 13 U. S. App. 554, sustaining motion for execution against sureties to appeal, and collecting cases; Davis v. Patrick, 57 Fed. 911, 912, 12 U. S. App. 629, where lower court failed to order execution of affirming judgment; M'Claskey v. Barr, 79 Fed. 419, reviewing cases, granting judgment against sureties, though principal's property but partly exhausted; Trent v. Rhomberg, 66 Tex. 254, 18 S. W. 512, construing prosecution of appeal "with effect" to mean "successfully;" Bingham v. Mears, 4 N. Dak. 451, 61 N. W. 813, 27 L. R. A. 263, where principal secured judgment by mortgage notes. See note in 38 Am. St. Rep. 714, 719.

Appeal and error.—As to obligee all obligors on appeal bond are principals, though not between themselves, pp. 14, 15.

Approved and followed in Gordon v. Third Nat. Bank, 56 Fed. 792, 796, 13 U. S. App. 554, sustaining motion for execution against sureties to appeal, and collecting cases; Fuller v. Aylesworth, 75 Fed. 703, 43 U. S. App. 657, where county was principal, obligee not bound to await tax levy; M'Claskey v. Barr, 79 Fed. 419, granting judgment against sureties where principal's property only partly exhausted; Trent v. Rhomberg, 66 Tex. 254, 18 S. W. 512, holding courts will do justice between two sets of sureties. Cited in Fuller v. Aylesworth, 75 Fed. 702, 43 U. S. App. 657, arguendo.

Appeal and error.—Sureties on appeal are not discharged by new bond for further appeal, pp. 13, 14.

Cited in 38 Am. St. Rep. 707, note, collecting cases.

Distinguished in Nofsinger v. Hartnett, 84 Mo. 558, where intermediate court, specifically named in bond, reversed, and Supreme court affirmed original judgment.

Appeal and error.—Nothing but reversal will discharge sureties on appeal bond, p. 13.

Followed in Gordon v. Third Nat. Bank, 56 Fed. 792, 796, 13 U. S. App. 554.

Appeal and error.—Sureties on appeal from special to general term are not liable for costs on further appeal, pp. 13, 14.

Cited in 38 Am. St. Rep. 716, note.

Appeal and error.—Sureties on appeal to court of appeals are alone responsible for costs thereof, p. 14.

Courts.—Appellant from District to Circuit Court must give new bond on appeal to Supreme Court, p. 15.

101 U. S. 16-22, 25 L. 980, BOWDITCH v. BOSTON.

Trial.—Whenever, in civil cases, evidence is insufficient to support verdict, judge should direct finding accordingly, p. 18.

E. 518, upholding medical license statute exempting certain classes of physicians; Brown's case, 173 Mass. 499, 53 N. E. 998, upholding law providing for commitment for contempt in certain districts. Cited and approved in State v. Pennoyer, 65 N. H. 115, 18 Atl. 880, 5 L. R. A. 711, holding unconstitutional, medical license law exempting certain physicians for mere length of residence; South, etc., Alabama R. R. v. Morris, 65 Ala. 201, holding unconstitutional, law providing attorney's fee only when claimant wins appeal against railroad; Railroad Tax Case, 8 Sawy. 302, 13 Fed. 773, invalidating statute providing for deduction of mortgage from assessed value of all property except railroads; Caldwell v. Wilson, 121 N. C. 459, 28 S. E. 558, where railroad commissioner was suspended by governor, reviewing authorities as to meaning of "due process of law;" Sturtevant v. Armsby Co., 66 N. H. 559, 49 Am. St. Rep. 628, 23 Atl. 368, extending Illinois plaintiff judicial protection enjoyed by New Hampshire litigants; Apex, etc., Co. v. Garbade, 32 Or. 589, 54 Pac. 367, construing "equal protection of the law" as referring to legislative rather than judicial action; dissenting opinion in Carleton v. Rugg, 149 Mass. 563, 22 N. E. 59, 5 L. R. A. 199, majority upholding law authorizing abatement as nuisance, of illicit liquor shop upon petition of ten voters. Cited in 23 Am. St. Rep. 27, note, and 25 Am. St. Rep. 884, note.

101 U. S. 34-37, 25 L. 948, ARTHUR v. DODGE.

Statutes.—Revised statutes are legislative declaration of what statute law was December 1, 1873, and, when clear, are final, p. 36.

Followed in Viotor v. Arthur, 104 U. S. 499, 26 L. 634, where certain dutiable goods were clearly classified by revised statutes; Sixty-Five Terra Cotta Vases, etc., 21 Blatchf. 514, 18 Fed. 510, reconciling apparently conflicting statutory clauses to give effect to each.

Customs duties.—Tin-plates are dutiable as manufactures of metals within meaning of section 2503, revised statutes, p. 36.

Customs duties.—"Percussion caps, watches and jewelry, and other articles of ornament, made of metal," are manufactures of metal, within sections 2503, 2504, revised statutes, p. 36.

Customs duties.—Protest against payment of duties must be sufficiently specific to apprise collector of true nature of objection, p. 37.

Approved in Heinze v. Arthur, 144 U. S. 34, 36 L. 335, 12 S. Ct. 606, as to sufficiency of description of goods mentioned in protest; Herman v. Schell, 18 Fed. 892, where "prospective protest" was signed by H. H. and goods imported by H. H. & Co.; In re Collector of Customs, 55 Fed. 277, 14 U. S. App. 145, holding that board of appraisers cannot reverse collector on grounds not stated in protest.

Distinguished in Shaw Stocking Co. v. Mack, 21 Blatchf. 6, 8 12 Fed. 711, 713, protecting arbitrary combination of numerals used to distinguish manufacture, and Lawrence Mfg. Co. v. Lowell, etc., Mills, 129 Mass. 326, 37 Am. Rep. 363, protecting arbitrary combination of numerals in connection with other devices. Qualified in American, etc., Button Co. v. Anthony, 15 R. I. 340, 2 Am. St. Rep. 900, 5 Atl. 628, protecting numerals with no acquired meaning, arbitrarily appropriated to indicate styles.

Trademarks and tradenames.—Equity will not intervene to protect trademark where similarity alleged is not calculated to deceive, p. 56.

Approved in Pratt Mfg. Co. v. Astral, etc., Co., 27 Fed. 495, denying exclusive right to "Astral Oil;" Richter v. Anchor Remedy Co., 52 Fed. 459, holding black anchor not infringement of red one, other marks being dissimilar; Dennison Mfg. Co. v. Thomas Mfg. Co., 94 Fed. 656, holding essence of wrong, sale of goods as those of another; Ball v. Siegel, 116 Ill. 146, 56 Am. Rep. 769, 4 N. E. 670, declining to interfere where ordinary attention distinguishes difference.

Trademark is acquired by original application to some product of device not already used to designate such product, priority of adoption conferring exclusive right as to particular class of products to which it is applied, per Clifford, J., dissenting, p. 57.

Cited, arguendo, in Schneider v. Williams, 44 N. J. Eq. 394, 14 Atl. 814.

Trademarks and tradenames.—Phrases, or even words or letters in common use, may be adopted if not already employed by another to designate similar articles, per Clifford, J., dissenting, p. 59.

Approved in Shaw Stocking Co. v. Mack, 21 Blatchf. 7, 12 Fed. 712, protecting arbitrary combination of numerals.

Trademarks and tradenames.—Equity will relieve against infringement of trademark without proof of actual deception if resemblance be likely to deceive, per Clifford, J., dissenting, p. 63.

Followed in Vulcan v. Myers, 139 N. Y. 368, 34 N. E. 905, protecting "Vulcan Paraffin Matches," and Liggett, etc., Tobacco Co. v. Reed, etc., Co., 104 Mo. 60, 24 Am. St. Rep. 315, 15 S. W. 844, both holding "Buzz Saw" tobacco tag so resembled "Star."

Trademarks and tradenames.—To infringe trademark, similarity of marks need not be such as to deceive when side by side, per Clifford, J., dissenting, p. 64.

Approved in Liggett, etc., Tobacco Co. v. Hynes, 20 Fed. 884, protecting star and device affixed to plug tobacco; Avery v. Meikle, 81 Ky. 109, both granting relief where indicia accompanying trademark were fraudulently imitated. See 47 Am. Dec. 296, note.

Trademark is infringed by copy of substantial portion thereof, per Clifford, J., dissenting, p. 65.

Followed in Harper v. Holman, 84 Fed. 225, restraining use of certain title to book.

101 U. S. 68-71, 25 L. 876, TRUST CO. v. NATIONAL BANK.

Banks and banking.—Defense exists to note given bank to secure credit as depositor, to extent of deposit on hand, p. 69.

Bills and notes.—Guaranty of bill or note does not constitute commercial negotiation thereof, p. 70.

Followed in Omaha Nat. Bank v. Walker, 2 McCrary, 570, 5 Fed. 403, where note was "transferred and collection guaranteed." and Eastern, etc., Bank v. St. Johnsbury, etc., R. Co., 40 Fed. 426, holding guaranty of interest on negotiable bonds, not itself negotiable.

Distinguished in Louisville Trust Co. v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 75 Fed. 458, 43 U. S. App. 550, where negotiable bonds were payable to bearer; Cover v. Myers, 75 Md. 424, 32 Am. St. Rep. 402, 23 Atl. 853, holding separate guaranty of note does not affect indorsement; Pattillo v. Alexander, 96 Ga. 72, 22 S. E. 651, 29 L. R. A. 620, holding payee who indorses guaranty of attorney's fees, entitled to notice as indorser.

A guaranty contract, if complete, raises no presumption of further contract, pp. 70, 71.

Denied in Dunham v. Peterson, 5 N. Dak. 419, 57 Am. St. Rep. 561, 67 N. W. 295, 36 L. R. A. 236, and n., holding signed guaranty on note constitutes indorsement. Questioned in Word v. Elwood, 90 Tex. 131, 37 S. W. 415, decided on statutory grounds.

Bills and notes.—Assignee takes only rights of assignor, but indorsement creates new contract, p. 71.

Followed in Omaha Nat. Bank v. Walker, 2 McCrary, 570, 5 Fed. 403, where note was "transferred," but not indorsed in regular form; Thomson-Houston Elec. Co. v. Capitol, etc., Co., 56 Fed. 854, holding transfer without indorsement is not negotiation; De Hass v. Roberts, 59 Fed. 856, holding "assignment and transfer," not negotiation; Spinning v. Sullivan, 48 Mich. 9, 11 N. W. 759, holding note not regularly indorsed open to defense if mistake in amount; Haydon v. Nicoletti, 18 Nev. 299, 3 Pac. 477, where note was indorsed by but one of two payees; Davis v. Sittig, 65 Tex. 501, admitting defense of fraud where lost note was assigned; Taliaferro v. First Nat. Bank, 71 Md. 209 17 Atl. 1037, where Virginia consols were hypothecated, with assignment and power of sale; Goshen Nat. Bank v. Bingham, 118 N. Y. 355, 16 Am. St. Rep. 767, 23 N. E. 181, 7 L. R. A. 598, and n., collecting cases, allowing defense of fraud, by maker, to unindorsed check; Pavey v. Stauffer, 45 La. Ann. 361, 12 So. 515, 19 L. R. A. 721, admitting defense to note transferred before, but indorsed after notice thereof; More v. Finger, — Cal. —, 58 Pac. 324, holding signed receipts indorsed on note by payee do not negotiate; Pickering v. Cording, 92 Ind. 309, 47 Am. Rep. 147, holding ineffectual mere delivery of note payable to maker with signed financial statement indorsed; Hatch v. Barrett, 34 Kan. 230, 8 Pac. 134, holding indorsement "assigning without recourse," not commercial indorsement.

101 U. S. 71-87, 25 L. 950, THOMAS v. RAILROAD CO.

Railroad charters authorizing contracts with other companies for transportation of goods or passengers, do not authorize sale or lease of entire road and franchises, p. 80.

Approved in Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman, etc., Co., 139 U. S. 43, 35 L. 62, 11 S. Ct. 482, where company with power to lease cars attempted lease of whole plant; Oregon Ry. v. Oregonian Ry., 130

U. S. 28, 32 L. 842, 9 S. Ct. 414, applied to general railroad incorporation law of Oregon in equally broad terms. Cited, arguendo, in *Taylor v. Philadelphia, etc., R. S. 263, 30 L. 178, 6 S. Ct. 1059, and Sacks v. Minneapolis, 75 Minn. 36, 77 N. W. 565, both holding corporation liable for tort; American Union Tel. Co. v. Union, etc., Ry., 1 McCrary, 196, 201, 1 Fed. 747, 753, holding equity will not relieve applicant from illegal contract while retaining consideration; Camden, etc., R. R. v. Mays Landing, etc., R. R., 48 N. J. L. 566, 7 Atl. 529, holding rule not authority for denial of rent after enjoyment of possession; Bath Gas-Light Co. v. Claffy, 151 N. Y. 33, 45 N. E. 392, 36 L. R. A. 667, enforcing lease of gas plant as to past-due rent. Limited in Maxwell v. Akin, 89 Fed. 181, to unexecuted contracts, as opposed to contracts executed upon one side.

Corporations.—It is duty of railroad company to rescind contract forbidden by public policy and ultra vires, such as unauthorized lease, and rescission cannot create liability, p. 86.

Approved in Pennsylvania Co. v. St. Louis, etc., R. R., 118 U. S. 317, 30 L. 94, 6 S. Ct. 1107, denying that such contract can, by reason of acquiescence, found right of action; Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman, etc., Co., 139 U. S. 54, 55, 35 L. 66, 67, 11 S. Ct. 486, where, upon repudiation, lessee sued for rent; McCormick v. Market Bank, 165 U. S. 550, 41 L. 821, 17 S. E. 621, where loan company repudiated unauthorized trade by which it assumed mortgage; Anthony v. Household, etc., Machine Co. 16 R. I. 572, 18 Atl. 176, 5 L. R. A. 576, holding money paid on unperformed ultra vires contract recoverable on disaffirmance; Mallory v. Oil Works, 86 Tenn. 608, 8 S. W. 400, where oil company repudiated unauthorized partnership agreement; Noel v. San Antonio, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 586, 33 S. W. 266, where city repudiated liability for improvement unlawfully contracted for; dissenting opinion in Union Pac. Ry. v. Chicago, etc., Ry., 163 U. S. 610, 41 L. 281, 16 S. Ct. 1191, majority distinguishing.

Railroads.—Twenty years' lease of railroad, with all appurtenances and franchises, unauthorized by charter, is void, and provision therein for damages upon resumption by lessor of possession cannot be enforced, p. 87.

Approved in St. Louis R. R. v. Terre Haute R. R., 145 U. S. 402, 36 L. 752, 12 S. Ct. 955, where lease was for ninety-nine years; Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman, etc., Co., 139 U. Qualified in Campbell v. Argenta Gold, etc., Co., 51 Fed. 4, holding that contract not ultra vires, but not made in prescribed mode, is voidable, not void.

101 U. S. 87-92, 25 L. 878, EMPIRE v. DARLINGTON.

Municipal corporations.— Under Illinois act of February 28, 1867, authorizing municipal subscription to railroad stock "in any sum not exceeding $250,000," subscription for part does not exhaust power and invalidate bonds for additional part, p. 90.

Followed in Brokaw v. Board of Commrs., 73 Ind. 548, allowing second exercise of power to subscribe 2 per cent. of taxables "in any one period of two years." Cited in 98 Am. Dec. 679, note.

Municipal corporations.— Under Illinois act of February 28, 1854, permitting railroad consolidation and transferring rights, municipal power to purchase stock follows consolidation, being, in essence, railroad's right, p. 91.

Approved in Tipton v. Locomotive Works, 103 U. S. 533, 26 L. 344, holding power of municipality to subscribe may be right of company; New Buffalo v. Iron Co., 105 U. S. 76, 26 L. 1025, where bonds voted to old company were delivered to consolidated company; Livingston v. Portsmouth Bank, 128 U. S. 122, 32 L. 366, 9 S. Ct. 25, a similar case. See 98 Am. Dec. 671, note, collecting cases.

Judgments.— State court decree enjoining municipal tax to liquidate bonds, and annulling same, does not conclude non-resident owners constructively served, p. 92.

Followed in Livingston v. Darlington, 101 U. S. 413, 25 L. 1018, denying authority of conflicting decision where interested parties were not in court; Pana v. Bowler, 107 U. S. 545, 27 L. 430, 2 S. Ct. 718, holding Illinois decree annulling bonds, invalid as to non-resident constructively served as "unknown holder;" Smith v. Woolfolk, 115 U. S. 149, 29 L. 360, 5 S. Ct. 1180, holding service by mailing copy of order will not support personal decree; Enfield v. Jordan, 119 U. S. 693, 30 L. 529, 7 S. Ct. 365, holding pendency of action involving validity of negotiable paper not constructive notice to holders before maturity; Tregea v. Modesto, etc., Dist., 164 U. S. 187, 41 L. 398, 15 S. Ct. 65, doubting conclusiveness of decision affirming validity of proposed bond issue, as against anyone; Brooks v. Dun, 51 Fed. 146, disregarding service by publication under State law, of non-residents, in personal actions; Elsasser v. Haines, 52 N. J. L. 29, 18 Atl. 1102, as against international law and fourteenth amendment; National Bank v. Peabody & Co., 55 Vt. 497, 45 Am. Rep. 635, denying that judgment against non-residents, valid only in rem, merged personal cause of action.

101 U. S. 93-97, 25 L. 794, BAST v. BANK.

Pledges.— Where judgment is assigned as collateral, while collectible, with power of sale upon maturity of notes secured thereby, assignee need not issue execution sooner, though exigible property be, meantime, exhausted, p. 95.

Cited, arguendo, in Murphy v. Bartsch, 2 Idaho, 607, 23 Pac. 83.

Assignment.— Where judgment is assigned as collateral, salable on maturity of notes, assignor retains control of collection, p. 95.

Judgments.— Where judgment is assigned as collateral, salable on maturity of notes, assignor may call on assignee to enforce collection or to permit him, p. 95.

Evidence.— In Pennsylvania, parol evidence is inadmissible to change promise itself, without proof or even allegation of fraud or mistake, p. 97.

Approved in Shea v. Leisy, 85 Fed. 245, excluding collateral parol agreement to surrender bond on certain conditions.

Evidence.— In absence of fraud or mistake, proof of contemporaneous parol agreement is inadmissible to vary terms of written contract, p. 97.

Approved in Singer Mfg. Co. v. Hester, 2 McCrary, 420, 6 Fed. 807, rejecting parol evidence connecting two distinct contracts; Chandler v. Thompson, 30 Fed. 42, rejecting evidence of verbal representations concerning capacity of machinery sold; Consumers' Gas Co. v. American Electric, etc., Co., 50 Fed. 780, 3 U. S. Leisy*, 85 Fed. 245, excluding collateral parol agreement to surrender bond upon certain conditions; State v. Hoshaw, 98 Mo. 360, 11 S. W. 760, rejecting parol agreement not to force judgment assigned, as against certain persons; Shuey v. Adair, 18 Wash. 200, 63 Am. St. Rep. 888, 51 Pac. 392, 39 L. R. A. 477, rejecting parol agreement not to collect note from defendant; Michels v. Olmstead, 4 McCrary, 550, 14 Fed. 219, holding fraud will not be presumed. Cited, arguendo, in Standard Sewing-Machine Co. v. Leslie, 78 Fed. 328, 46 U. S. App. 680.

Qualified in Godkin v. Monahan, 83 Fed. 119, 53 U. S. App. 613, holding admissible, independent oral agreement not inconsistent with, nor varying writing.

Evidence.—Where judgment is assigned as collateral, with power to sell on maturity of notes, parol to prove agreement to issue execution before then, is inadmissible, p. 97.

Approved in Shuey v. Adair, 18 Wash. 202, 63 Am. St. Rep. 889, 51 Pac. 392, 39 L. R. A. 478, where defendant alleged parol agreement not to collect note from him.

Courts.—Where circuit judges disagree, opinion of presiding judge controls, p. 99.

Courts.—When judges below cannot agree on material question of law, it may be certified up for determination by United States Supreme Court, p. 99.

Courts.—Where question is certified up on ground of disagreement between judges of Circuit Court, and record indicates that the judges were not really opposed on any question of law, Supreme Court will presume no actual disagreement and refuse cognizance, p. 99.

Approved in United States v. Gleeson, 124 U. S. 260, 31 L. 423, 8 S. Ct. 504, declining jurisdiction, where judgment below was against United States, merely to give right of appeal; Columbus Watch Co. v. Robbins, 148 U. S. 269, 37 L. 446, 13 S. Ct. 595, declining jurisdiction where court below had definite opinion, though adverse to decision in another circuit.

A. 608, where railroad agreed to help another procure land grant, for share thereof; Oscanayan v. Arms Co., 103 U. S. 276, 26 L. 545, where company agreed to pay consul for inducing his government to purchase arms; West v. Camden, 135 U. S. 521, 34 L. 258, 10 S. Ct. 841, where director of corporation contracted to keep plaintiff in office as vice-president.

United States.—Contract for half counsel fee in consideration of procuring public appointment and assisting in litigation, is void against public policy, p. 112.

Approved in Murray v. Chicago, etc., Ry., 62 Fed. 41, where shipper sued railroad to recover excess above reasonable charges, others paying less. Cited in 66 Am. Dec. 509, and 21 Am. St. Rep. 26, notes.

101 U. S. 112-119. 25 L. 782, MARKET CO. v. HOFFMAN.

Appeal and error.—Where sworn pleadings show sale of market-stalls, enjoined in single decree by Supreme Court of District of Columbia, would have realized $60,000, appeal lies to United States Supreme Court, though interest of no single plaintiff is sufficient to support appeal, p. 113.

Approved in Estes v. Gunter, 121 U. S. 185, 30 L. 885, 7 S. Ct. 855, where applicant for injunction against sale, under $3,000 attachment, sought confirmation of assignment preferring him for $10,000; Texas, etc., Ry. v. Gentry, 163 U. S. 362, 41 L. 191, 16 S. Ct. 1107, where statute created single liability covering different interests; Herbert v. Rainey, 54 Fed. 252, where life tenant and remainderman joined to ask injunction against coke ovens in neighborhood; Gartside v. Gartside, 42 Mo. App. 515, where appellate court, doubting their jurisdiction, transferred case to Supreme Court; Home Ins. Co. v. Nobles, 63 Fed. 642, refusing injunction, but allowing amendment of application to show amount of damage. Cited, arguendo, in Mayor, etc. v. Postal Tel., etc., Co., 62 Fed. 502, and Fleshman v. Fleshman, 34 W. Va. 351, 12 S. E. 716.

Distinguished in Ex parte Baltimore, etc., R. R., 106 U. S. 6, 27

L. 78, 1 S. Ct. 36, where admiralty practice required separate decrees in joint suit; Henderson v. Wadsworth, 115 U. S. 276, 29 L. 379, 6 S. Ct. 43, where separate judgments were rendered against heirs upon note of ancestor; Gibson v. Shufeldt, 122 U. S. 34, 30 L. 1086, 7 S. Ct. 1069, where several creditors attacking assignment had separate claims of less than $5,000 each, reviewing cases; Clay v. Field, 138 U. S. 480, 34 L. 1050, 11 S. Ct. 425, where claimants of distinct estates in realty were joined; Wheless v. St. Louis, 96 Fed. 867, where several property-holders asked injunction against levying assessment exceeding in aggregate $2,000; Oswald, etc. v. Morris, etc., 92 Ky. 53, 17 S. W. 168, holding common interest not conclusively presumed where plaintiff sues for others.

Statutes.—Effect should be given to every word of statute, and every part thereof should be construed in connection with the whole, pp. 115, 116.

Approved in United States v. Debs, 64 Fed. 749, construing “conspiracy” with well-settled criminal significance.

Statutes.—Courts should ascertain legislative meaning from words and subject-matter of statute, and restrain its operation within narrower limits than words used import, where literal interpretation would extend to cases beyond legislative intention, p. 116.

Rule applied in Petri v. Commercial Bank, 142 U. S. 650, 35 L. 1146, 12 S. Ct. 326, construing grant of jurisdiction to Federal courts in national bank cases; United States v. American Bell Tel. Co., 159 U. S. 550, 40 L. 256, 16 S. Ct. 70, construing law regarding appeal to Supreme Court in patent cases.

101 U. S. 119-129, 25 L. 880, ROBERTS v. BOLLES.

Municipal corporations.—Illinois act of March 18, 1874, permitting transfer of municipal bonds payable to bearer, and allowing holder to sue in own name, applies to transfers made prior thereto, and hence to township railroad-aid bonds, pp. 121, 122, 123.

Followed in Ottawa v. National Bank, 105 U. S. 344, 345, 26 L. 1127, 1128. See 98 Am. Dec. 672, 683, note.

Municipal corporations.—Under Illinois statute of March 6, 1867, providing for municipal railroad-aid bonds and waiving certain possible irregularities, notice of election in ten instead of twenty days, upon application of twelve instead of twenty voters, does not invalidate bonds, pp. 124, 125, 126.

Municipal corporations.—Purchaser of municipal bonds, issued under statute waiving irregularities in election and issue, has right to rely thereon, if not unconstitutional, p. 125.

Approved in Lewis v. Comanche, 35 Fed. 347, to point that recital in bonds of compliance with statute estops county.

Municipal corporations.—By settled construction of Illinois Constitution in 1869, legislature could not compel municipal authorities to subscribe to stock of railroad, but could authorize such subscription by them without vote by people, p. 126.

Followed in Livingston v. Darlington, 101 U. S. 415, 25 L. 1019, upholding Illinois statute authorizing bond issue upon resolution of county supervisors.

Municipal corporations.—Legislature may prescribe mode of ascertaining sense of voters as to bond issues, and may waive in advance such formalities or preliminaries as need not have been prescribed and are not essential to people's right of election, pp. 126, 127.

Courts.—Supreme Court is not bound to reverse Circuit Court upon new point under State Constitution, which State Supreme Court has meantime decided adversely, p. 129.

Followed in Roberts v. Bolles, 154 U. S. 670, 38 L. 1093, 14 S. Ct. 1210.

101 U. S. 129-135, 25 L. 1046, NATIONAL BANK v. COUNTY OF YANKTON.

Territories.—All territory within jurisdiction of United States, not included in any State, must be governed by or under authority of Congress, p. 133.

Approved in Atlantic, etc., R. Co. v. United States, 76 Fed. 192, holding congressional control of railroad traffic charges in territories, similar to State's; Territory v. Scott, 3 Dak. 396, 20 N. W. 405 (see dissenting opinion, 3 Dak. 422, 20 N. W. 420), holding territorial legislature may delegate to commission power to relocate capital; dissenting opinion in Lincoln-Lucky, etc., Min. Co. v. District Court, 7 N. Mex. 516, 38 Pac. 590.

Territories.—Organic law of territory takes place of Constitution, but Congress is supreme and has all powers of people of United States, except those reserved by Constitution, p. 133.

Approved in Hepworth v. Gardner, 4 Utah, 443, 11 Pac. 567, upholding jurisdiction of District Court under organic act; Brereton v. Miller, 7 Utah, 430, 27 Pac. 82, holding territorial legislature cannot abridge jurisdiction conferred by Congress on territorial courts; Territory v. Scott, 3 Dak. 395, 20 N. W. 405, holding Congress may delegate legislative powers to territorial government; Higbee v. Higbee, 4 Utah, 27, 5 Pac. 695, holding legislative divorces not authorized by section 1851, revised statutes of United States; People v. Daniels, 6 Utah, 292, 22 Pac. 160, 5 L. R. A. 445, and n., holding powers of territory more strictly construed than those of States; dissenting opinion in Mackey v. Enzensperger, 11 Utah, 170, 171, 39 Pac. 546, majority holding verdict concurred in by nine jurors will support civil judgment. Cited, arguendo, in Territory v. Cox, 6 Dak. 506, Lincoln-Lucky, etc., Min. Co. v. District Court, 7 N. Mex. 516, 38 Pac. 590.

Territories.—Congressional power to annul, amend or validate acts of territorial legislature is incident of sovereignty and need not be reserved in organic law; hence, county bonds in aid of railroad, issued under territorial act passed at unauthorized session, were validated by saving clause of congressional statute annulling said act, pp. 133, 134.

Approved in Murphy v. Ramsey, 114 U. S. 45, 29 L. 57, 5 S. Ct. 764, where Congress disqualified polygamists from voting, after organic act; Mormon Church v. United States, 136 U. S. 43, 34 L. 491, 10 S. Ct. 803, affirming S. Ct., 5 Utah, 370, 15 Pac. 477, denying vested rights of Mormon Church in charter forfeited by Congress; United States v. McMillan, 165 U. S. 511, 41 L. 807, 17 S. Ct. 398, where Congress extended to territories act regulating fees of court officials; Utter v. Franklin, 172 U. S. 423, 19 S. Ct. 186, where bonds of doubtful validity under territorial laws were validated by Congress; Endleman v. United States, 86 Fed. 459, 57 U. S. App. 6, holding Congress has power to prohibit sale of liquor in territories; Stevenson v. Moody, 2 Idaho, 241, 12 Pac. 902, holding election of unauthorized assistant clerk by territorial legislature void; Northern Pac. R. R. v. Barnes, 2 N. Dak. 350, 51 N. W. 397, upholding territorial statute, not unauthorized or annulled, as act of Congress; Wenner v. Smith, 4 Utah, 244, 9 Pac. 297, upholding congressional act of August 7, 1882, vacating offices held by polygamists; Enright v. Grant, 5 Utah, 340, 15 Pac. 270, holding jurisdiction of courts under organic act cannot be abridged by legislature; Williams v. Clayton, 6 Utah, 91, 21 Pac. 400, holding absence of congressional disapproval does not validate territorial enactment; Chapman v. Handley, 7 Utah, 53, 24 Pac. 674, to point that right of disapproval need not be expressly reserved by Congress; Downes v. Parshall, 3 Wyo. 426, 26 Pac. 995, upholding congressional bankruptcy law for territory. Approved in Central Baptist Church v. Manchester, — R. I. —, 43 Atl. 845, where State legislature confirmed deed made to church before incorporation; dissenting opinion in United States v. Jones, 5 Utah, 566, 18 Pac. 241, majority upholding provision of territorial statute for separate trial on joint indictment for felony. Cited, arguendo, in Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 48, 38 L. 349, 14 S. Ct. 566, Thompson v. Utah, 170 U. S. 348, 42 L. 1066, 18 S. Ct. 622, In re Thomas Baldwin, 11 Sawy. 534, 27 Fed. 187, Dunton v. Muth, 45 Fed. 392, and Territory v. Cox, 6 Dak. Tr. 528; dissenting opinion in Lincoln-Lucky, etc., Min. Co. v. District Court, 7 N. Mex. 516, 517, 38 Pac. 590. See 64 Am. Dec. 429, note.

Cited, but not applied, in People v. District Court, 11 Colo. 151, 17 Pac. 300, holding that, upon admission of territory as State, congressional control ceases.

101 U. S. 135-143, 25 L. 807, WOOD v. CARPENTER.

Limitation of actions.—Sections of Indiana statute of limitations of 1876, requiring certain actions to be commenced within six years and suspending operation thereof when liability concealed, apply to actions for fraud, and statute begins to run when fraud is perpetrated, if not concealed, p. 138.

Approved in Pearsall v. Smith, 149 U. S. 233, 37 L. 716, 13 S. Ct. 834, holding that bar under State law is bar in Federal court.

Cited, arguendo, in Rose v. Dunklee, 12 Colo. App. 419, 56 Pac. 348.

Limitation of action.—Statutes of limitations are founded on public policy and favored in the law, p. 139.

Approved in Amy v. Watertown, 22 Fed. 420, holding that hiding to avoid service did not suspend statute; New York, etc., R. R. v. Siegfried, 7 Ohio C. C. 37, holding dismissal of action brought within statutory period does not suspend operation thereof; Shain v. Sresovich, 104 Cal. 406, 38 Pac. 53, where merchant by mistake overpaid defendant, who said nothing; Norrs v. Haggin, 12 Sawy. 53, 28 Fed. 280, St. Paul, etc., Ry. v. Sage, 49 Fed. 319, 4 U. S. App. 160, Morgan v. Morgan, 10 Wash. 104, 38 Pac. 1056, and Thompson v. Whitaker Iron Co., 41 W. Va. 584, 23 S. E. 798, arguendo.

Limitation of actions.—Provision of Indiana statute of 1876, suspending running of statute when liability is concealed, being imported from equity, equitable and legal decisions are alike pertinent, p. 139.

Approved in Jones v. Smith, 38 Fed. 381, holding courts of equity, in cases of concurrent jurisdiction, bound by statute; Kelley v. Boettcher, 85 Fed. 62, 56 U. S. App. 375, 376, holding courts of equity not bound by, though usually conforming to, statute.

Cited obiter in Etting v. Marx, 4 Hughes, 323, 4 Fed. 684.

Limitation of actions.—To suspend statute of limitations by concealment, fraud must be secret, not patent, p. 141.

Limitation of actions.—Fraud, which suspends operation of statute of limitations, may precede wrong, if wrong be designed and consummated, p. 143.

Approved in Jackson v. Jackson, 149 Ind. 245, 47 N. E. 965, where misrepresentations and request of secrecy preceded sale of bank stock.

Limitation of actions.—Concealment of fraud to postpone operation of statute of limitations must be more than mere silence, p. 143.

Approved in Felix v. Patrick, 145 U. S. 331, 36 L. 726, 12 S. Ct. 867, where scrip and power of attorney were obtained and land secretly located; Bates v. Preble, 151 U. S. 162, 38 L. 111, 14 S. Ct. 280, where broker wrongfully sold plaintiff's bonds at instance of her son; Foster v. Mansfield, etc., R. Co., 36 Fed. 637, dismissing bill to open foreclosure ten years afterwards, proceedings being public; Lant v. Manley, 71 Fed. 19, holding, where facts are of record, there must be some affirmative act of concealment; M'Kneely v. Terry, 61 Ark. 545, 33 S. W. 958, where grantor of interest in land secreted deed and kept profits; Wier v. Johns, 14 Colo. 498, 24 Pac. 263, where conveyance was taken of larger tract than grantor intended; De Mares v. Gilpin, 15 Colo. 84, 24 Pac. 571, where New Mexican had grant approved by surveyor-general and confirmed by Congress; Jackson v. Jackson, 149 Ind. 213, 47 N. E. 964, action for damages for misrepresenting value of bank stock; Shelby Co. v. Bragg, 135 Mo. 300, 36 S. W. 602, where former county clerk was sued for receipts in excess of fees; Eaton v. Cass, 11 Neb. 231, 9 N. W. 60, where tax-title purchaser sued county commissioners for money paid on redemption; Campbell v. Roe, 32 Neb. 349, 49 N. W. 453, where money was collected and retained by agent.

Ct. 159, both approving sufficiency of averment "that defendants kept concealed from plaintiff" fraud in question; Forbes v. Overby, 4 Hughes, 444, 445, F. C. 4,928a, asking discovery where circumstances were not known.

Limitation of actions.—Where judgment debtor fraudulently confessed judgments, mortgaged and transferred property, and swore he had nothing and had disposed of all his property in satisfaction of bona fide debts, and judgment creditor thereupon sold judgment to debtor's son-in-law at reduction, statute began to run from time of fraud, creditor not being reasonably diligent and concealment not being such as to suspend statute, p. 143.

101 U. S. 143-148, 25 L. 901, PELTON v. NATIONAL BANK.

Courts.—Question of constitutionality of State statute belongs to highest State court, and Federal courts will, where possible, avoid deciding in advance of it, p. 144.

Followed in Cummings v. National Bank, 101 U. S. 155, 25 L. 904, and Hills v. Exchange Bank, 105 U. S. 319, 26 L. 1052.

Rule applied in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Poe, 61 Fed. 469, where court delayed decision four months, hoping that State Supreme Court might decide question; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Poe, 64

Fed. 11, reversing its own ruling, made before final judgment upon determination of such question by State Supreme Court.

Taxation.—Any system of assessing taxes which exacts from owners of national bank shares more, in proportion to actual value, than from owners of other moneyed capital similarly valued, contravenes section 5219, revised statutes, and to extent of excess such tax is void, pp. 146, 148.

Approved in Puget Sound Nat. Bank v. King, 57 Fed. 433, overruling demurrer on this ground; Boyer v. Boyer, 113 U. S. 694, 28 L. 1090, 5 S. Ct. 709, where State law exempted from county tax certain securities not given by corporations; First Nat. Bank v. Treasurer, 25 Fed. 750, 751, where such shares were assessed over 60 per cent., unlike other property; Whitney Nat. Bank v. Parker, 41 Fed. 409, where law exempted certain securities in hands of individuals, but not of banks; First Nat. Bank v. Hungate, 62 Fed. 549, where such shares were assessed above actual value and other moneyed capital not at all; Rosenberg v. Weekes, 67 Tex. 584, 4 S. W. 900, and Wells v. Western Paving, etc., Co., 96 Wis. 126, 70 N. W. 1074, both holding party seeking relief must have paid what was just; Bank v. City Council, 86 Iowa, 38, 52 N. W. 337, where board of equalization cancelled deduction of debts from such shares; Peavey v. Greenfield, 64 N. H. 284, 9 Atl. 722, where selectmen refused to deduct indebtedness; Evansville Nat. Bank v. Britton, 10 Biss. 505, 8 Fed. 868, McAden v. Commissioners, 97 N. C. 359, 2 S. E. 672, and Ruggles v. Fond du Lac, 53 Wis. 440, 10 N. W. 566, all involving laws excepting such shares from rule deducting debts from assessment; Richards v. Incorporated Town, etc., 31 Fed. 508, holding mode of taxing immaterial, if not imposing greater burden; Richmond v. Crenshaw, 76 Va. 940, holding city not entitled to levy tax under invalid assessment; Trustees Cincinnati, etc., Ry. v. Guenther, 19 Fed. 399, where railroad was assessed above and other property below real value; Railroad, etc., Cos. v. Board of Equalizers, 85 Fed. 307, where railroad and telephone properties were unfairly assessed at full value; Chicago, etc., R. R. v. Commissioners, 54 Kan. 789, 39 Pac. 1040, where railroad was assessed at full value and other property at 25 per cent.; Walsh v. King, 74 Mich. 355, 41 N. Wayne*, 32 Neb. 836, 49 N. W. 787, 13 L. R. A. 615, and n., where Nebraska statute disallowed deduction of debts upon any bank shares; Lemly v. Commissioners, 85 N. C. 382, holding reduction of assessment of realty does not relieve such shareholder; Rosenberg v. Weekes, 67 Tex. 585, 4 S. W. 901, holding plaintiff asking relief because of law not allowing deduction of debts, must allege indebtedness.

Taxation.—National bank may enjoin collection from shareholders of illegal tax based on assessment intentionally much higher than on other personal property, including banking capital, it being in violation of section 5219, revised statutes, p. 148.

Approved in Hills v. Nat. Albany, etc., Bank, 12 Fed. 94, Covington City Nat. Bank v. Covington, 21 Fed. 491, and Pollock v. Farmers' Loan, etc., Co., 157 U. S. 554, 39 L. 810, 15 S. 101 U. S. 149-153, 25 L. 848, WORTHINGTON v. MASON.

Appeal and error.—There is no error when one of several instructions for jury presented, refused and excepted to as a whole, is rightfully rejected, p. 149.

Followed in United States v. Hough, 103 U. S. 73, 26 L. 306, Union Ins. Co. v. Smith, 124 U. S. 424, 31 L. 505, 8 S. Ct. 545, and Bogk v. Gassert, 149 U. S. 26, 37 L. 636, 13 S. Ct. 741. Rule applied in Cleveland, etc., Ry. v. Zider, 61 Fed. 909, 18 U. S. App. 699, where there was one request, one refusal and one exception to "each and all;" Vider v. O'Brien, 62 Fed. 327, 18 U. S. App. 711, where defendants "excepted to said charge in entirety, and to following portion thereof;" Pittsburgh, etc., Ry. v. Thompson, 82 Fed. 728, 54 U. S. App. 236, where exception was to refusal "to give separately all of the requests asked."

Appeal and error.—Where judge charged that in certain state of facts plaintiff became free woman, and bill of exceptions set forth no evidence introduced or offered at trial, it cannot be presumed, against verdict, that plaintiff ever was slave, p. 151.

Appeal and error.—On review by writ of error, such error must appear by ruling on pleadings, or state of facts shown by special verdict, agreed statement duly signed and submitted to court below, or bill of exceptions, p. 152.

101 U. S. 164-169, 25 L. 860, UNITED STATES v. LAWSON.

Customs duties.—Act of February 26, 1867, creating new collection district and providing salary for collector, does not deprive him of fees and allowances theretofore allowed in abolished district, pp. 164, 169.

Customs duties.—Revised statutes, section 2691, providing for payment into treasury of all custom dues in excess of $3,000, with certain exceptions, does not permit collectors to retain excess of storage rent over rent of building where other fees reach $3,000, p. 166.

Customs duties.—Collectors of customs are entitled to fees and allowances of office paid over to commissioner, if seasonably claimed or paid under protest, p. 168.

Approved in United States v. Badeau, 33 Fed. 579, where consular fees were paid over under mistake of intent of general order.

Customs duties.—Payments of official receipts by collectors to commissioner of customs upon peremptory order, are not irrecoverable as voluntary payments, p. 169.

Approved in United States v. Ellsworth, 101 U. S. 172, 25 L. 863, as to warehouse storage charges; Morton v. United States, 59 Fed. 352, where clerk of Circuit Court of Appeals paid in fees under compulsion and protest.

Distinguished in United States v. Wilson, 168 U. S. 276, 277, 42 L. 466, 18 S. Ct. 86, where consular fees were paid over without such demand or protest.

101 U. S. 170-174, 25 L. 862, UNITED STATES v. ELLSWORTH.

Customs duties.—Section 2647, revised statutes, allowing collectors of customs $2,000 out of rent and storage receipts, extends to collectors for non-enumerated ports, and storehouses under their control, used as such, are public storehouses, though not owned by United States, pp. 172, 173.

Customs duties.—Payments of storage rents by collectors for non-enumerated ports, upon peremptory order of commissioner of customs, are not irrecoverable as being voluntary, pp. 173, 174.

Distinguished in United States v. Wilson, 168 U. S. 277, 42 L. 466, 18 S. Ct. 86, where consul voluntarily charged himself with fees.

101 U. S. 174-181, 25 L. 1048, WRIGHT v. BLAKESLEE.

Internal revenue.—Devolution of contingent estate in remainder upon death of life tenant is a "succession" within section 127 of internal revenue act (13 Stat. 287), and subject to tax as such, pp. 176, 177.

Internal revenue.—Section 128 of internal revenue act (13 Stat. 287) applies not to estates in remainder, but to estates burdened by determinable incumbrances, such as rent charges, leases for years, and qualified interests, p. 177.

Internal revenue.—Penalty applicable to failure to return succession tax under internal revenue act of 1864 (as amended, 1866), is provided in section 148 of such amended act, exacting 10 per cent., and excludes all others, p. 178.

Internal revenue.—Protest necessary to recovery back illegal exaction under inland revenue laws need not be specific or even written, p. 179.

Followed in Stewart v. Barnes, 153 U. S. 459, 38 L. 784, 14 S. Ct. 85, where excessive collection was upon spirits withdrawn from bond without allowance for leakage.

Internal revenue.—Remainderman who came into possession in 1865, paid succession tax under protest on 31st July, 1867, perfected appeal to commissioner of internal revenue on January 3, 1873, and brought suit within two years after adverse decision, was not barred by statute of limitations (14 Stat. 152, and 17 Stat. 257), pp. 179, 180.

Cited in In re McPherson, 104 N. Y. 317, 58 Am. Rep. 504, 10 N. E. 686, to point that succession tax laws have been uniformly upheld. See 41 Am. St. Rep. 580, note.

Appeal and error.—Where facts were found by trial judge, Supreme Court, in reversing judgment for defendant, ordered entry of judgment for plaintiff, pp. 180, 181.

Approved in Fort Scott v. Hickman, 112 U. S. 165, 28 L. 641, 5 S. Ct. 64, holding correct practice, where facts are found, is to render judgment, not grant new trial.

101 U. S. 181-184, 25 L. 907, PEOPLE'S BANK v. NATIONAL BANK.

Banks and banking.—National banking act (R. S. 999, § 5136), conferring on directors or duly authorized agents incidental powers necessary to carry on business by discounting and negotiating notes, includes transferring and guaranteeing, p. 183.

Followed in Davenport v. Stone, 104 Mich. 527, 53 Am. St. Rep. 471, 62 N. W. 724; Auten v. United States Nat. Bank, 174 U. S.

148, 19 S. Ct. 637, affirming S. C., 79 Fed. 299, 49 U. S. App. 72, where president of discounting bank misappropriated proceeds; Thomas v. City Nat. Bank, 40 Neb. 505, 58 N. W. 944, 24 L. R. A. 265, where note secured by mortgage was assigned and guaranteed; Cochran, etc. v. United States, 157 U. S. 297, 39 L. 708, 15 S. Ct. 632, holding guaranteed note is liability required to be shown in national bank report; Irons v. Manufacturers' Nat. Bank, 27 Fed. 597, where bank president indorsed collateral to creditors after liquidation decided upon; Hawkins v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 150 Ind. 125, 49 N. E. 960, upholding rediscount by cashier effected by new note directly payable to second bank.

Distinguished in Nat. Bank v. Atkinson, 55 Fed. 474, where bank was mere accommodation indorser to knowledge of plaintiff; Farmers, etc., Nat. Bank v. Smith, 77 Fed. 135, 40 U. S. App. 690, where bank cashier guaranteed mortgage bond; Commercial Nat. Bank v. Pirie, 82 Fed. 802, 49 U. S. App. 601, and Thilmany v. Iowa, etc., Bag Co., 108 Iowa, 336, 79 N. W. 69, denying power of bank to guarantee payment for goods; Bowen v. Needles Nat. Bank, 94 Fed. 928, reversing (on other grounds), S. C., Bowen v. Needles Nat. Bank, 87 Fed. 438, 443, holding guaranty of cashier to pay checks, void, because ultra vires; Gray v. Farmers' Bank, 81 Md. 641, 32 Atl. 521, holding improper credit-entry by cashier did not constitute renewal of note and release surety; Norton v. Bank, 61 N. H. 592, 60 Am. Rep. 335, where bank guaranteed building contract.

Banks and banking.—Transfer and guaranty of notes by vice-president of national bank will be presumed to have been duly authorized, and bank is estopped to deny it, p. 183.

Followed in City Nat. Bank v. Thomas, 46 Neb. 866, 65 N. W. 896, upon second appeal of S. C., 40 Neb. 505, 58 N. W. 944, 24 L. R. A. 265, where note secured by mortgage was assigned and guaranteed.

Equity.—Where one of two innocent parties must suffer by wrongful act of another, it must be he who gave power to do the wrong, p. 183.

Banks and banking.—Doctrine of ultra vires has no application to irregular exercise by bank officer of lawful powers of bank, p. 183.

Followed in Thomas v. City Nat. Bank, 40 Neb. 505, 58 N. W. 944, 24 L. R. A. 265.

Banks and banking.—Where notes payable in one year were improperly transferred and guaranteed by vice-president of national bank to its correspondent, with notice that its account would be debited, the enjoyment of benefit of transaction and acquiescence till maturity, ratifies it, p. 183.

Approved in Thomas v. City Nat. Bank, 40 Neb. 505, 507, 58 N. W. 944, 945, 24 L. R. A. 265, 266, Eastern Townships Bank v. Vermont Nat. Bank, 22 Blatchf. 502, 22 Fed. 189, where president borrowed, giving his own railroad bonds as collateral and bank received proceeds; Blanchard v. Commercial Bank, 75 Fed. 253, 44 U. S. App. 556, where president borrowed of another bank and his bank received proceeds; Hawkins v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 150 Ind. 126, 49 N. E. 960, where rediscount being effected by new note to second bank, first bank received proceeds.

Miscellaneous.—Cited incidentally in Fort Scott v. Hickman, 112 U. S. 165, 28 L. 641, 5 S. Ct. 64.

101 U. S. 184-187, 25 L. 838, AYERS v. CHICAGO.

Removal of causes.—Where cause removed from State to Circuit Court is remanded, order remanding is appealable to Supreme Court, p. 187.

Equity.—Original bill and cross-bill constitute one suit, and cross-bill must grow out of original suit and can bring in no new matter, p. 187.

Followed in Railway v. United States, 101 U. S. 641, 25 L. 1075, denying right to file cross-bill to reduce judgment to extent of counter-demand; Winters v. Ethell, 132 U. S. 210, 33 L. 340, 10 S. Ct. 57, denying appeal on dismissal of cross-complaint where judgment on complaint not final; Maish v. Bird, 4 McCrary, 131, 48 Fed. 608, holding cross-bill alone cannot determine removal of cause for diverse citizenship. See 83 Am. Dec. 252, 253, note.

Removal of causes.—Where Illinois city sued G., citizen of Illinois, to enforce sale of real estate, and A., citizen of Alabama, was made a party and filed cross-bill to enforce a lien not disputed by G., interests of A. and G. were allied, and the suit, upon removal to Circuit Court, being indivisible and not wholly between citizens of different States, was properly remanded to State court, p. 187.

Followed in Graves v. Corbin, 132 U. S. 587, 33 L. 468, 10 S. Ct. 201, and Sweeney v. Grand Island, etc., R. Co., 61 Fed. 6, in each of which plaintiff and one defendant were of same citizenship, and the action indivisible; Merchants, etc., Press Co. v. Insurance Co., 151 U. S. 385, 38 L. 204, 14 S. Ct. 373, denying right of removal where citizens of same State and aliens were on each side of real controversy; Hazard v. Robinson, 21 Fed. 195, Long v. Buford, 24 Fed. 248, and Anderson v. Appleton, 32 Fed. 859, collecting cases, all remanded because controversy indivisible; Burke v. Flood, 6 Sawy. 222, note, remanded because citizens of same State on each side of real controversy; Broadway Nat. Bank v. Adams, 130 Mass. 434, holding all on one side must be of different citizenship from all on other;

Birdseye v. Shæffer, 37 Fed. 827, to point that upon remanding, jurisdiction of State court reverts. Cited, arguendo, in Young v. Parker, 132 U. S. 270, 33 L. 353, 10 S. Ct. 76.

101 U. S. 188-196, 25 L. 786, STEAM ENGINE CO. v. HUBBARD.

Statute of Connecticut, requiring semi-annual statements, by president, of affairs of corporations, and making him liable for its debts in case of intentional neglect, is penal and must be strictly construed, p. 191.

Rule applied in Chase v. Curtis, 113 U. S. 458, 28 L. 1040, 5 S. Ct. 556, holding judgment for tort; not a "debt" within such statute; Larsen v. James, 1 Colo. App. 317, 29 Pac. 185, and State Savings Bank v. Johnson, 18 Mont. 442, 56 Am. St. Rep. 592, 45 Pac. 662, 33 L. R. A. 553, both holding similar statute penal within statute of limitations; Mitchell v. Hotchkiss, 48 Conn. 18, 40 Am. Rep. 149, and Diversey v. Smith, 103 Ill. 398, 42 Am. Rep. 24, both holding such liability does not survive; Weidenger v. Spruance, 101 Ill. 285, holding statute making corporators of existing corporations liable till stock paid in, penal; Globe Pub. Co. v. State Bank, 41 Neb. 185, 59 N. W. 686, 27 L. R. A. 859, holding repeal of similar law abated action pending against stockholders. Cited, arguendo, in Day v. Vinson, 78 Wis. 200, 47 N. W. 270, 10 L. R. A. 206.

Distinguished in Gans v. Switzer, 9 Mont. 413, 24 Pac. 20, under statute expressly extending liability to prior debts.

Penalties.—Statutory liability for debts of corporation upon failure to report corporate affairs to the State, being penal, will not be enforced outside of State creating it, p. 192.

Qualified in Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 679, 36 L. 1132, 13 S. Ct. 232, reversing S. C., 70 Md. 202, 16 Atl. 655, 2 L. R. A. 783, and n., refusing to enforce in another State, judgment upon such penalty. Limited in Cuykendall v. Miles, 10 Fed. 344, to cases of corporation officers made liable for neglect of duty. Denied in Whitman v. Nat. Bank, 83 Fed. 292, 51 U. S. App. 543, enforcing in New York, Kansas judgment on stockholders' double liability. See 40 Am. Rep. 152, note, and 14 Am. St. Rep. 350, note.

Corporations.—Persons acting publicly as officers of corporation are ordinarily presumed to be rightfully in office, and are subject to liabilities of such officers, pp. 192, 193.

Approved in Teutonia Nat. Bank v. Wagner, 33 La. Ann. 733, holding sureties on bond of cashier, though bank non-existent when bond signed.

Penalties.—To hold president for debt of corporation under sections 404, 413, revised statutes Connecticut, neglect to file required statement must have been intentional, and debt contracted after default and during continuance thereof, pp. 194, 196.

Followed in State v. Cox, 88 Ind. 254, exempting officers from prosecution under similar criminal statute, for default of predecessors.

Distinguished in Gans v. Switzer, 9 Mont. 414, 24 Pac. 20, where statute made corporation trustees liable for prior debts.

101 U. S. 196-204, 25 L. 803, POMPTON v. COOPER UNION.

Municipal corporations.—Legislative ratification of municipal bonds is equivalent to original authority, p. 204.

Approved in Schneck v. Jeffersonville, 152 Ind. 217, 218, 220, 52 N. E. 216, 217, holding legislature has power to ratify city bonds for removal of county seat.

Statutes.—Clear implication of statute is equivalent to express statement. Hence, provision by New Jersey act of 1874, for interest payments on township bonds issued under prior statute, recognized authority of such township to issue bonds under such statute, and is legislative construction thereof, p. 202.

Approved in Denison v. Mayor, etc., 62 Fed. 776, holding legislative provision for payment of railroad aid bonds to original railroad's successor, is legislative construction of authorization; Hawthorn v. Board of Commrs., 5 Ind. App. 234, 30 N. E. 18, holding provision for payment by city of fines in certain cases, excluded liability in others; Chesapeake, etc., Tel. Co. v. Baltimore, 89 Md. 715, 43 Atl. 789, holding telephone franchise statute, providing that nothing therein should be deemed to modify provisions of ordinance regarding plaintiff company, recognized validity of ordinance.

Equity.—As between two innocent persons he who contributed to produce loss must bear burden thereof, p. 204.

Municipal corporations with power to issue bonds, which recite circumstances bringing them within such power, are estopped to deny truth of recitals as against bona fide holder, p. 204.

Followed in Ronede v. Jersey City, 20 Fed. Cas. 1152, Rouede v. Jersey City, 18 Fed. 719, Meyer v. Brown, 65 Cal. 591, 26 Pac. 284, Eminence v. Grasser, 81 Ky. 56, Bank v. Statesville, 84 N. C. 174. Approved in First Nat. Bank v. Walcott, 19 Blatchf. 371, 7 Fed. 892, construing "by virtue of" in bond recital. See 64 Am. Dec. 436, note, 98 Am. Dec. 688, note, and 51 Am. St. Rep. 823, note.

Municipal corporations.—Under New Jersey act of April 9, 1868, and supplementary act, authorizing commissioners for townships along route, or at termini of railroad, to issue bonds in aid thereof, such bonds were issuable before survey, commissioners being sole and final judges as to time, and were valid in hands of bona fide holders, notwithstanding subsequent change in proposed route, p. 204.

Approved in Eminence v. Grassner, 81 Ky. 56.

A. 792, and n., holding agreement to advance money on bonds not so enforceable. See 43 Am. Dec. 703, note.

101 U. S. 216-218, 25 L. 864, TERRY v. LITTLE.

Corporations.—Individual liability of stockholders for corporation debts is purely statutory, and language and object of statute must determine nature of liability and remedy, p. 217.

Approved in Fourth Nat. Bank v. Francklyn, 120 U. S. 756, 30 L. 829, 7 S. Ct. 762, where Rhode Island statute required bill in equity or preliminary judgment against corporation; United States v. Stanford, 161 U. S. 429, 40 L. 758, 16 S. Ct. 583, holding stockholders not individually liable on subsidy bonds in absence of statutory provision; Walton v. Coe, 110 N. Y. 111, 17 N. E. 676, where plaintiff sued stockholder, whose stock was unpaid, pending action against company; Hall v. Klinck, 25 S. C. 351, 60 Am. Rep. 507, where statute made each stockholder jointly and severally liable; Flenniken v. Marshall, 43 S. C. 83, 20 S. E. 789, 28 L. R. A. 403, enforcing liability of street railroad shareholders to pay judgment on tort; Brunswick, etc., Co. v. Nat. Bank, 88 Fed. 609, holding nature of remedy granted should determine whether action is legal or equitable. Approved in Wechselberg v. Flour City Nat. Bank, 64 Fed. 94, 24 U. S. App. 308, 26 L. R. A. 475, affirming S. C., 45 Fed. 551, upholding suit at law against corporators of company not completely organized; Tuttle v. Nat. Bank, 161 Ill. 506, 44 N. E. 987, 34 L. R. A. 754, New Haven, etc., Nail Co. v. Linden, etc., Co., 142 Mass. 353, 7 N. E. 773, and Crippen v. Loughton. — N. H. —, 44 Atl. 542, collecting cases, all refusing to enforce such statute extra-territorially. Cited, arguendo, in James H. Rice Co. v. Libbey, 85 Fed. 825, Kelly v. Clark, 21 Mont. 327, 69 Am. St. Rep. 682, 53 Pac. 966, 42 L. R. A. 630. See 43 Am. Dec. 703, note, and 3 Am. St. Rep. 835, note, collecting cases.

Distinguished in Cuykendall v. Miles, 10 Fed. 344, where State statute permits suit by one creditor against one stockholder; First Nat. Bank v. Peavey, 69 Fed. 457, holding pre-existing remedy proper one where statute merely redeclares law; Gilchrist v. Helena, etc., R. Co., 49 Fed. 523, and Hauser v. Thompson, 56 Mo. App. 89, both concerning stock subscription liability.

Corporations.—Bank charter providing for liability of each stockholder not exceeding twice amount of shares, creates separate proportionate liability of all stockholders to all the creditors. Hence, form of action to enforce payment should be adapted to protection of all, and suit at law by one creditor, for himself alone, is demurrable, pp. 217, 218.

Approved in Friedl v. Powers, 93 Ala. 116, 9 So. 393, holding all stockholders should be made parties under similar insurance statute; Zang v. Wyant, 25 Colo. 555, 560, 71 Am. St. Rep. 147, 152, 56 Pac. 566, 568, under similar Colorado statute; Marshall v. Sherman, 148 N. Y. 23, 27, 51 Am. St. Rep. 662, 665, 42 N. E. 422, 424, 34 L. R. A. 765, 766, under similar Kansas statute; Eads

v. Orcutt, 79 Mo. App. 518, extending rule to statutory liability of bank officers for deposits received after knowledge of insolvency; Hirshfeld v. Fitzgerald, 157 N. Y. 179, 51 N. E. 999, dismissing complaint where plaintiff, suing for all, sold his stock pendente lite, and purchaser released stockholders' liability. Approved in Jacobson v. Allen, 20 Blatchf. 527, 12 Fed. 456, and Steinke v. Loofbourow, 17 Utah, 256, 54 Pac. 120, both holding bank receiver not proper party to compel payment; Van Pelt v. Gardner, 54 Neb. 710, 75 N. W. 877, favoring view that all creditors and all stockholders should be made parties. Rule applied conversely in Nat. Park Bank v. Peavey, 64 Fed. 918, reviewing cases, where statute expressly gave action at law. See 31 Am. Rep. 88, note, and 3 Am. St. Rep. 855, note.

Corporations.—Where, under bank charter, double liability of stockholders is several, not joint, action at law by one creditor against two stockholders is demurrable, since stockholders separately liable must at law, though not in equity, be sued separately, p. 218.

Judgment on action in assumpsit by husband and wife on contract by carrier to carry wife safely, for injuries to her, bars similar action by husband alone, for same injuries, p. 224.

Approved in M'Connell v. Day, 61 Ark. 474. See 33 S. W. 734, holding wife barred by judgment in real action against husband, though not party; Henneger v. Lomas, 145 Ind. 291, 44 N. E. 463, 32 L. R. A. 849, arguendo.

Judgment in action of tort by husband and wife against carrier for breach of public duty resulting in injury to wife, does not bar action by husband alone for such injuries, unless statute permits husband to add his claims to those of wife, pp. 224, 225.

Approved in Central Trust Co. v. East Tennessee, etc., Ry., 70 Fed. 766, holding carrier liable in tort for negligence in carriage of goods. See 94 Am. Dec. 591, note.

101 U. S. 225-231, 25 L. 908, JONES v. CLIFTON.

Husband and wife.—Voluntary settlement on wife, child or parent, made in good faith, by direct conveyance or purchase, is valid if not affecting creditors' existing claims, pp. 227, 228.

Followed in Moore v. Page, 111 U. S. 118, 28 L. 373, 4 S. Ct. 388, and Bean v. Patterson, 122 U. S. 499, 30 L. 1127, 7 S. Ct. 1299. Cited, arguendo, in Waterman v. Distinguished in Wilson v. Spear, 68 Vt. 150, 34 Atl. 431, where conveyance to wife was made to defeat creditors. Qualified in First Nat. Bank v. Swan, 3 Wyo. 375, 23 Pac. 751, holding such settlement prima facie fraudulent, and onus of proving contrary on debtor.

Husband and wife.—Intervention of trustees is not necessary to effectual conveyance from husband to wife, p. 229.

Followed in Metropolitan Nat. Bank v. Rogers, 47 Fed. 151, Luhrs v. Hancock, — Ariz. —, 57 Pac. 606, and Ogden v. Ogden, 60 Ark. 73, 46 Am. St. Rep. 152, 28 S. W. 797. Rule applied in Corr's Appeal, 62 Conn. 409, 26 Atl. 479, enforcing deceased wife's agreement to pay husband for realty conveyed direct; Waterman v. Higgins, 28 Fla. 669, 10 So. 100, where heirs by first marriage attacked conveyance to second wife; Polson v. Stewart, 167 Mass. 215, 57 Am. St. Rep. 453, 45 N. E. 738, 36 L. R. A. 774, enforcing contract of husband to convey to wife; Chadbourne v. Gilman, 64 N. H. 354, 10 Atl. 702, upholding mortgage from husband to wife, in equity; Siple v. Wass, 49 N. J. Eq. 467, 24 Atl. 235, holding such conveyance void at law but good in equity; Barrows v. Keene, 15 R. I. 486, 8 Atl. 714, where husband gave wife diamonds in payment of separate debt; Miller v. Miller, 92 Va. 514, 23 S. E. 892, where father conveyed direct to married daughter; Albright v. Albright, 70 Wis. 534, 36 N. W. 256, where brothers of decedent attacked conveyance to his wife. Cited in 88 Am. Dec. 55, note, and 90 Am. Dec. 369, note.

Qualified in Miller v. Miller, 17 Or. 433, 21 Pac. 942, holding legal estate remained in husband, and refusing equitable intervention where wife attempted fraud.

Husband and wife.—Reservation of power of revocation and appointment will not defeat voluntary settlement upon wife as against subsequent creditors, p. 229.

Approved in President, etc. v. Merritt, 75 Fed. 484, upholding such conveyance to college as against grantor's heirs; Hill v. Cornwall, etc., 95 Ky. 526, 26 S. W. 543, upholding such conveyance of interest in factory property to daughter as against creditors.

Husband and wife.—Absence of power of revocation and appointment in family settlement may be badge of fraud, p. 230.

Husband and wife.—Upon revocation of settlement on wife under power reserved therein, property reverts to husband and is liable for his debts, p. 230.

Powers.—Exercise of power of appointment reserved in settlement renders estate liable in equity to settlor's debts, p. 230.

Power of revocation and appointment in family settlement is not an interest in property, which can be transferred, sold on execution or devised, p. 230.

Power of revocation and appointment is not a chose in action, p. 231.

Bankruptcy.—Power of revocation and new appointment reserved in voluntary settlement on wife, made in good faith while solvent, is not an asset which passes to assignee of bankrupt husband, p. 231.

Approved in Brandies v. Cochrane, 112 U. S. 353, 28 L. 764, 5 S. Ct. 198, where creditors sought to hold property appointed by debtor to himself after discharge.

101 U. S. 231-239, 25 L. 797, MAY v. SLOAN.

Appeal and error.—Supreme Court has jurisdiction where record shows party objecting paid $21,000 for land in question, and appellants' verified petition of appeal avers value more than $5,000, p. 232.

Frauds, statute of.—Parol agreement to convey land is not enforceable, p. 237.

Cited, arguendo, in Press Pub. Co. v. Falk, 59 Fed. 327.

Frauds, statute of.—Answer denying parol agreement to convey lands, is as effective as plea of statute of frauds, p. 237.

A. 829, collecting cases, Von Trotha v. Bamberger, 15 Colo. 14, 24 Pac. 888, and Ryan v. Dunphy, 4 Mont. 356, 1 Pac. 712.

Distinguished in M'Donald v. Yungbluth, 46 Fed. 837, where only part of contract was denied and performance of rest alleged.

Words and phrases.—"Trade" includes not only exchange by barter, but buying and selling for money, and commerce and traffic generally, p. 237.

Approved in State v. Worth, 116 N. C. 1010, 21 S. E. 205, holding power to tax trades includes ice manufacture; Betz v. Maier, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 220, 33 S. W. 711, holding iron safe of insurance agent exempt as tool or apparatus of trade.

Contracts.—Where B. and S., mortgagees, agreed with A., mortgagor, that S. would release separate parcel in his mortgage, and B. would pay off certain claims against it, and would buy in three tracts common to both mortgages, at face of his claim, but “not interfere with any trade” already effected by A. of one of such tracts, a prior agreement of A. to sell same to S. was “trade” enforceable against B., p. 239.

101 U. S. 240-247, 25 L. 850, BANK OF AMERICA v. BANKS.

Husband and wife.—Mississippi code, 1871, section 1780, binding separate estate of wife for plantation supplies, does not extend to plantation leased by her to husband, p. 245.

Followed in Rudd v. Peters, 41 Ark. 184, an almost identical case.

Husband and wife.—Under Mississippi code, 1871, married woman is not liable for family supplies and necessities unless she so agrees, or authorizes husband to buy them on her account, p. 246.

Frauds, statute of.—Under Mississippi code, 1871, section 2892, verbal leases not exceeding one year are valid, p. 247.

Husband and wife.—Married woman cannot, by her own contract or representations, enlarge capacity to convey or bind separate estate, pp. 246, 247.

Approved in Lackett v. Rumbaugh, 45 Fed. 38, where married woman consented to destruction of deed and mortgage, trustee not concurring; Jefferson v. Edrington, 53 Ark. 564, 14 S. W. 102, holding covenant in second mortgage does not estop widow from setting up title by purchase of prior mortgage; Levering v. Shockey, 100 Ind. 562, where wife mortgaged land to secure husband's debt, without capacity; Evans v. Beaver, 3 Ohio C. C. 58, and Orr v. White, 106 Ind. 345, 6 N. E. 911, both holding married woman incapable of suretyship, not bound as principal by recital in mortgage; Cook v. Walling, 117 Ind. 12, 10 Am. St. Rep. 20, 19 N. E. 533, 2 L. R. A. 770, and n., where married woman mortgaged without joinder of real husband, having remarried in his absence.

Evidence.—Recitals in instruments collateral to matter in suit are admissible against party making them, but not conclusive, p. 247.

Approved in Devries v. Hiss, 72 Md. 570, 20 Atl. 133, collecting cases; Hadley v. Bordo, 62 Vt. 290, 19 Atl. 478, where note recited that defendant was vendor of horse for which it was given; Bingham v. Walla Walla, 3 Wash. Ter. 85, 13 Pac. 414, where grantee of city continued to maintain title to strip excluded from grant. Cited in 43 Am. Dec. 428, note, and 57 Am. St. Rep. 174, note.

Deed.—To estop party to deed he must be sui juris competent to contract, p. 247.

Rule applied in Robinson v. Bailey, 26 Fed. 223, to prohibited conveyance by county; Smythe v. Henry, 41 Fed. 708, applied to prohibited conveyance by Indian. See 57 Am. St. Rep. 170, note.

Husband and wife.—Notes given by husband and wife in Mississippi to secure supplies for plantation leased by her to husband do not bind her, notwithstanding recitals in trust deed securing them, p. 247.

101 U. S. 247-256, 25 L. 826, WATT v. STARKE.

Equity.—Bill of exceptions cannot be taken on trial of feigned issue directed by court of equity, or, if taken, can only be used on motion for new trial, p. 250.

Approved in Wilson v. Riddle, 123 U. S. 615, 31 L. 283, 8 S. Ct. 259, declining to entertain formal exceptions to rulings.

Distinguished in Dorr v. Tremont Nat. Bank, 128 Mass. 354, on statutory grounds.

Equity.—On motion for new trial of feigned issue directed by court of equity, evidence or substance thereof should be made part of record for use on appeal, p. 250.

Equity.—Eighteenth Statute, part 3, 315, section 2, permitting trial of feigned issue in patent cases does not alter rule that evidence should be made part of record on motion for new trial, p. 250.

Equity.—When equity proceedings are suspended pending trial at law, new trial can be had only from court of law; but where trial of issue is directed, only from court of equity, p. 250.

Followed in Brown v. Cranberry Iron, etc., Co., 72 Fed. 99, 25 U. S. App. 679, reversing S. C., 65 Fed. 641, 25 U. S. App. 107, and Reed v. Axtell, etc., 84 Va. 236, 4 S. E. 589. Distinguished in Dillingham v. Hawk, 60 Fed. 496, 23 U. S. App. 273, 23 L. R. A. 519, holding judgment of State court against receiver conclusive of claim.

Equity.—On motion for new trial of feigned issue applicant must provide notes of proceedings and evidence, by having same reported with verdict or moving chancellor to send for notes of judge, p. 250.

Equity.—Court of equity unlike court of law will not grant new trial of issue for evidence improperly rejected or received, unless wrongful verdict results, p. 251.

Distinguished in Dorr v. Tremont Nat. Bank, 128 Mass. 357, on statutory grounds.

Equity.—Jury's verdict on feigned issue is advisory only, and not conclusive on court of equity, p. 252.

Followed in Clyde v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 72 Fed. 123, 25 U. S. App. 642, Flippin v. Kimball, 87 Fed. 259, 59 U. S. App. 5, and Fishburne v. Ferguson, 84 Va. 115, 4 S. E. 583. Approved in Learned v. Tillotson, 97 N. Y. 6, where question was submitted to jury in equity case under code; Idaho, etc., Land Co. v. Bradbury, 132 U. S. 516, 33 L. 437, 10 S. Ct. 179, holding finding of jury need not be formally set aside before adverse decree. Cited, arguendo, in Hammer v. Garfield Min. Co., 130 U. S. 301, 32 L. 968, 9 S. Ct. 552.

Equity.—Verdict on issue out of court of equity can be set aside only on motion for new trial based, not merely on errors of judge, but on review of whole case, p. 252.

101 U. S. 256-260, 25 L. 865, LEGGETT v. AVERY.

Patent of particular combination of parts is infringed only by use of all such parts in same combination, p. 257.

Followed in Huber v. Nelson Mfg. Co., 148 U. S. 292, 37 L. 454, 13 S. Ct. 611.

Patents.—It is error to allow, on reissue of patent, claim for device on plow, different from that in surrendered letters, and previously disclaimed by claimant, p. 259.

Patents.—Quere, whether reissue containing particular invention disclaimed in order to procure original patent is ever valid, p. 259.

Cited, arguendo, in Goodyear Dental, etc., Co. v. Davis, 102 U. S. 228, 26 L. 151, and Smith v. Merriam, 6 Fed. 719. Questioned in Kells v. McKenzie, 9 Fed. 291.

Patents.—Where, to obtain patent, applicant disclaims part of claim rejected, it cannot be mistake, and he is estopped from so claiming on applying for reissue, p. 260.

Followed in Dobson v. Lees, 137 U. S. 265, 34 L. 655, 11 S. Ct. 72, and Arnheim v. Finster, 26 Fed. 279. Cited in *Huber v. N. O. Nelson Mfg. Appeal and error.—Review of finding of fact cannot be had upon evidence brought up by bill of exceptions, p. 261.

Public lands.—Under section 7 (2 Stat. 76), purchase-money certificate is good defense to ejectment suit by patentee under subsequent purchase, p. 261.

Approved in Chamberlain v. Marshall, 8 Fed. 409, holding unauthorized patent void and legal title in United States; Horsky v. Moran, 21 Mont. 360, 53 Pac. 1069, holding right of such defendant must be prior; Stewart v. Altstock, 22 Or. 188, 29 Pac. 555, holding patent passes no title to lands not included in land-grant act; Weeks v. Milwaukee, etc., R. Co., 78 Wis. 519, 47 N. W. 742, holding issue of patent does not interfere with prior rights.

Public lands.—Under section 7, 2 Stat. 76, land-office certificate of purchase vests right to patent equivalent thereto, as regards government, issuance being ministerial, p. 261.

Approved in Stimson Land Co. v. Rawson, 62 Fed. 428, and Horskey v. Moran, 21 Mont. 361, 53 Pac. 1069, both holding execution and delivery of patent, ministerial acts; Dibble v. Bellingham, etc., Land Co., 163 U. S. 74, 41 L. 75, 16 S. Ct. 943, and Steele v. Boley, 6 Utah, 312, 22 Pac. 312, both holding statute of limitations runs from issue of final certificate; United States v. Freyberg, 32 Fed. 197, where purchaser procured final certificate pending suit against him for timber cut; Gilkerson-Sloss Co. v. Forbes, 54 Ark. 149, 26 Am. St. Rep. 30, 15 S. W. 191, holding owner of certificate may make valid mortgage; Godding v. Decker, 3 Colo. App. 204, 32 Pac. 834, holding possession of final receipt sufficient title to support agreement for sale. Cited, arguendo, in United States v. Des Moines, etc., R. Co., 84 Fed. 44, 55 U. S. App. 255.

Distinguished in United States v. Steenerson, 50 Fed. 507, 4 U. S. App. 332, and American Mtge. Co. v. Hopper, 64 Fed. 558, 29 U. S. App. 12, affirming S. C., 56 Fed. 70, where entry and certificate were procured by fraud; McSorley v. Hill, 2 Wash. 643, 27 Pac. 554, where question was whether right did vest. Qualified in Stimson Land Co. v. Rawson, 62 Fed. 428, holding United States may by proper proceeding annul patent unlawfully obtained.

Ejectment.—Defendant in ejectment may avail himself of weakness in plaintiff's title, without asserting his own, p. 262.

Appeal and error.—General finding of validity of certificate is equivalent to finding of due execution, pp. 262, 263.

Public lands.—Deed from entryman to final certificate holder is admissible in defense to ejectment to prove assignment, though not in form for registration, p. 263.

101 U. S. 263-273, 25 L. 809, WEST v. SMITH.

Removal of causes.—Under section 914, revised statutes, amendment of declaration by adding new counts after removal to Circuit Court, is permissible where allowed by State practice, pp. 265-267.

Approved in Deford v. Mehaffy, 13 Fed. 489, permitting amendment of imperfect removal bond; Hodges v. Kimball, 91 Fed. 849, 63 U. S. App. 695, allowing amendment showing taking out of ancillary letters; Hammond v. Buchanan, 68 Ga. 732, permitting amendment showing jurisdiction of Federal court at time of application for removal.

Distinguished in United States v. Train, 12 Fed. 853, and Hughey v. Sullivan, 80 Fed. 74, both holding practice of Federal courts as to granting new trials, not affected.

Evidence.—Where defendant claiming deduction from contract price of yarn for inferiority of grade, proved similar deduction from former month's invoice, plaintiff may testify whether he allowed such deduction by way of settlement or as admission of quality, pp. 268-273.

Evidence.—While construction of written instruments is for court, yet where collateral effect thereof depends partly on extrinsic circumstances, inference of fact is for jury and is open to explanation, p. 270.

Followed in M'Namee v. Hunt, 87 Fed. 301, 59 U. S. App. 14.

Evidence.—Admissions of parties or agents, in court or out, are admissible in evidence, and also circumstances, purpose and conditions thereof, pp. 270, 271.

Evidence.—Parol evidence is inadmissible to vary language of valid written instrument, but subject-matter and attendant circumstances may be shown, p. 271.

Approved in Standard, etc., Mach. Co. v. Leslie, 78 Fed. 328, 46 U. S. App. 680, rejecting parol evidence where language of contract was unambiguous; Knick v. Knick, 75 Va. 20, admitting evidence under obscure agreement as to ownership of real estate; dissenting opinion in Senger v. Senger, 81 Va. 704, majority excluding circumstances attending making of will.

Evidence.—Offers of compromise, though not expressly without prejudice, are generally inadmissible against makers, but, if admitted, are open to explanation, whether written or oral, p. 273.

Followed in Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Roberts, — Colo. —, 57 Pac. 1077, and Telegraph Co. v. Thomas, etc., Co., 7 Tex. Civ. App. 106, 26 S. W. 117. Rule applied in Moffitt-West Drug Co. v. Byrd, 92 Fed. 292, excluding unaccepted offer to confess judgment for part of claim; Thomas v. Carey, — Colo. —, 58 Pac. 1096, holding offer of compromise inadmissible as acknowledgment under statute of limitations; State v. Lavin, 80 Iowa, 558, 46 N. W. 554, admitting defendant's evidence in bastardy prosecution that money offered was by way of settlement; Melby v. Osborne & Co., 35 Minn. 388, 29 N. W. 58, rejecting proposition to adjust machine in controversy, as evidence of defect; Tennant v. Dudley, 144 N. Y. 507, 39 N. E. 645, where proposed settlement fixed liability at certain figure. Cited, arguendo, in Holmes v. Truman, 67 Fed. 546, 29 U. S. App. 572.

Distinguished in Smith v. Whittier, 95 Cal. 298, 30 Pac. 534, where statement is made to third party not connected with controversy.

Waters and water-courses.—Act of July 26, 1866, confirming rights in ditches and canals, locally recognized, was unequivocal grant of canal established in 1853, as against pre-emptor of August, 1866, p. 275.

Approved in Tynon v. Despain, 22 Colo. 247, 248, 43 Pac. 1041, where canal was constructed in 1874 upon lands filed against, but not patented.

Waters and water-courses.—Rights to developed mines and to mining or irrigating ditches on arid public lands, having been recognized and encouraged by government, were entitled to its protection, and act of July 26, 1866, was rather acknowledgment of pre-existing rights than original grant, p. 276.

Followed in Tynon v. Despain, 22 Colo. 247, 248, 43 Pac. 1041, Jones v. Adams, 19 Nev. 88, 3 Am. St. Rep. 796, 6 Pac. 448, Carson v. Gentner, 33 Or. 519, 52 Pac. 508, 43 L. R. A. 133. Rule applied in Glacier Mining Co. v. Willis, 127 U. S. 482, 32 L. 175, 8 S. Ct. 1217, upholding local mining-location regulation prior to congressional legislation; Northern Pac. R. R. v. Sanders, 166 U. S. 634, 41 L. 1144, 17 S. Ct. 676, excluding mineral lands filed against, from railroad grant; United States v. Krall, 174 U. S. 388, 19 S. Ct. 713, dismissing appeal of S. Ct., 79 Fed. 242, 243, 48 U. S. App. 360, 361, holding establishment of government reservation farther down stream does not alter rule; Osgood v. Water, etc., Co., 56 Cal. 580, postponing rights of pre-emptor as dating from patent, not settlement; De Ne-cochea v. Curtis, 80 Cal. 406, 20 Pac. 565, to point that act applies to antecedent appropriations; Wells v. Mantes, 99 Cal. 585, 34 Pac. 325, holding act confirmatory rather than prospective; Beaver Brook Co. v. St. Vrain Co., 6 Colo. App. 139, 40 Pac. 1069, holding act prospective; Coffin v. Left-Hand, etc., Co., 6 Colo. 447, 449, where patent was issued prior to act of 1866; Denver v. Mullen, 7 Colo. 363, 3 Pac. 703, holding city's power to declare nuisance cannot invalidate acquisition of ditch over public land; Jarvis v. State Bank, 22 Colo. 313, 55 Am. St. Rep. 132, 45 Pac. 507, and Garland v. Irrigation Co., 9 Utah, 361, 34 Pac. 370, both holding mechanic's lien attached as construction of canal proceeded; High-Line Canal Co. v. Moon, 22 Colo. 563, 564, 45 Pac. 438, under similar statute, where ditch crossed squatter's location on school section before he had title; Carson v. Gentner, 33 Or. 517, 519, 520, 52 Pac. 507, 508, 43 L. R. A. 132, 133, holding appropriation and use of abandoned ditch across school section carried right to enter and repair; Drake v. Earhart, 2 Idaho, 723, 23 Pac. 543, holding prior appropriation entitled to whole stream where needed, though no custom established; Reno Smelting Works v. Stevenson, 20 Nev. 275, 19 Am. St. Rep. 367, 21 Pac. 319, 4 L. R. A. 62, holding rule applicable in Nevada; Isaacs v. Barber, 10 Wash. 131, 45 Am. St. Rep. 777, 38 Pac. 874, 30 L. R. A. 675, and n., applied to millrace; dissenting opinion in Natoma Water, etc., Co. v. Hancock, 101 Cal. 66, 31 Pac. 114, majority holding subsequent appropriator may tap slack water above dam if owner's ditch supply still ample; dissenting opinion in Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 448, 449, majority distinguishing. Cited, arguendo, in Del Monte Min. Co. v. Last-Chance, etc., Co., 171 U. S. 62, 18 S. Ct. 898, Hewitt v. Story, 64 Fed. 515, 29 U. S. App. 155, 30 L. R. A. 270, and n., Union Mill, etc., Co. v. Dangberg, 81 Fed. 96, and Concord Co. v. Robertson, 66 N. H. 6, 25 Atl. 720, 18 L. R. A. 683. See 43 Am. Dec. 279, 280, note, and 60 Am. St. Rep. 800, note.

Distinguished in Sturr v. Beck, 133 U. S. 550, 33 L. 765, 10 S. Ct. 353, where homestead entry was filed prior to diversion of stream; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 351, 353, 10 Pac. 725, 726, 729, 730, reviewing cases, where appropriation of water was on State land after 1866; Jacob v. Lorenz, 98 Cal. 336, 33 Pac. 121, as to prospective operation of act; Platte Water Co. v. Northern Colorado, etc., Co., 12 Colo. 530, 532, 533, 21 Pac. 712, 713, where use of waters of stream were abandoned for years; dissenting opinion in Krall v. United States, 79 Fed. 245, 48 U. S. App. 364, majority applying rule. Limited in United States v. Rio Grande Irr. Co., 174 U. S. 704, 19 S. Ct. 775, holding statute did not authorize local law permitting destruction of navigability of stream.

Public lands.—Under section 4, Pacific railroad grant, July 2, 1864, reserving pre-emption or other lawful claim, or improvements of bona fide settler, canal established in 1853, was excluded, pp. 276, 277.

Cited, arguendo, in M'Laughlin v. Menotti, 105 Cal. 575, 38 Pac. 974. See 43 Am. Dec. 280, note.

Distinguished in Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 351, 353, 10 Pac. 725, 726, 729, 730, where appropriation of water was on State lands and after 1866.

Public lands.—Reservation in Pacific railroad grant of July 2, 1864, owing to diversified character of lands, must be freely construed on principle that impairment of pre-existing meritorious, though imperfect rights, was not intended, p. 277.

Public lands.—Under section 4, Pacific railroad grant, July 2, 1864, reservation of "any other lawful claim" means any honest claim evidenced by improvements or other acts of possession, p. 277.

Distinguished in Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 351, 353, 10 Pac. 725, 726, 729, 730. where appropriation of water was on State lands and after 1866.

101 U. S. 278-285, 25 L. 845, GREENLEAF v. GOODRICH.

Statutes.—Rule that statutes in pari materia should be construed with reference to each other, and words repeated in later act are presumed to bear meaning recognized in former, does not apply where language is altered, p. 281.

Customs duties.—Goods woven in colors with cotton warp and worsted weft are "goods of similar description" to delaines under section 9, tariff act of July 14, 1862, pp. 280-285.

Customs duties.—Under section 9, tariff act of July 14, 1862, goods "of similar description" to delaines, are not determined by process of manufacture alone, but also by general appearance and uses, pp. 282, 283.

Followed in Schmieder v. Barney, 113 U. S. 646, 647, 28 L. 1131, 5 S. Ct. 625, and White v. Barney, 43 Fed. 477. Rule applied in United States v. M'Creery, 91 Fed. 116, 62 U. S. App. 337, holding fabrics of silk and worsted intended for trimmings not "of similar description" to dress goods. Cited, arguendo, in Lloyd v. M'Williams, 31 Fed. 263.

Customs duties.—Commercial designation of articles, when clearly established, fixes character thereof under tariff laws, p. 284.

Approved in Schmieder v. Barney, 113 U. S. 648, 28 L. 1131, 5 S. Ct. 625, holding competent to inquire commercial meaning, if any, "of similar description;" In re Smith, 55 Fed. 478, admitting testimony of commercial designation, but rejecting opinion of witness as to classification.

Customs duties.—Under section 9, tariff act of July 14, 1862, phrase "of similar description" is not technical, commercial term, but of popular meaning, pp. 284, 285.

Followed in Schmieder v. Barney, 113 U. S. 646, 647, 28 L. 1131, 5 S. Ct. 624, 625, and White v. Barney, 43 Fed. 476. Rule applied in Forbes Litho. Mfg. Co. v. Worthington, 25 Fed. 900, holding "printed matter" does not include iron show-cards; Ullmann v. Hedden, 38 Fed. 96, holding fabric of cotton dutiable as "cotton cloth" though not commercially known as such; Bogle v. Magone, 40 Fed. 228, holding "pickles and sauces of all kinds" not technical; Postal Tel., etc., Co. v. Northern, etc., R. R., 88 Va. 925, 14 S. E. 805, holding authority to construct telegraph lines "along and parallel to railroad" does not mean upon right of way.

Distinguished in Cadwalader v. Zeh, 151 U. S. 177, 38 L. 118, 14 S. Ct. 290, where "toys" had well-understood trade signification.

101 U. S. 285-289, 25 L. 785, JEFFREY v. MORAN.

Judgment liens are creatures of positive law and subject to State statutes, pp. 287, 288.

Liens.—Where there is no lien at law upon property, there is none in equity on proceeds thereof, p. 288.

Judgment.—Under Ohio act of 1861, making a judgment for injuries by a railroad, a lien upon its property and giving it preference over subsequent mortgage liens, such a judgment, obtained after foreclosure sale, does not become lien, pp. 286-289.

Approved in Sloan v. Central Iowa Ry., 62 Iowa, 733, 16 N. W. 333, holding claim for injuries not lien upon railroad in receiver's hands; Brockert v. Iowa, etc., Ry., 93 Iowa, 136, 61 N. W. 406, holding judgment rendered against railroad and receiver, after title passed to new company, unenforceable.

Courts.—A consent decree in equity is appealable to Supreme Court, though errors waived by consent cannot be considered, p. 295.

Followed in Indianapolis, etc., Ry. v. Sands, 133 Ind. 438, 32 N. E. 723, and Board of Commrs. v. Scott, 19 Ind. App. 235, 49 N. E. 398. Rule applied in United States v. Babbitt, 104 U. S. 768, 26 L. 922, where consent judgment against United States was given to secure right of appeal; Eustis v. Henrietta, 74 Fed. 578, 41 U. S. App. 182, holding party removing case because value over $2,000, cannot deny jurisdiction because judgment less; McCafferty v. Celluloid Co., 61 U. S. App. 396, extended to interlocutory decree; Lackett v. Rumbaugh, 45 Fed. 31, holding appearance waives service, but not lack of jurisdiction.

Distinguished in Schmidt v. Oregon Min. Co., 28 Or. 25, 52 Am. St. Rep. 762, 40 Pac. 408, denying appeal under Oregon practice.

Appeal and error.—Solicitor may consent to whatever client authorizes, and record showing client's assent through solicitor amounts to finding by court of authority and is conclusive on appeal, p. 296.

Followed in Board of Commrs. v. Scott, 19 Ind. App. 235, 49 N. E. 398, and Schmidt v. Oregon Min. Co., 28 Or. 33, 52 Am. St. Rep. 767, 40 Pac. 1016, though decree provides fee for attorney.

Attorney and client.—Remedy for fraud or unauthorized consent of solicitor is in court where consent was acted on, p. 296.

Reaffirmed in Board of Commrs. v. Scott, 19 Ind. App. 235, 49 N. E. 398. Cited, arguendo, in Schmidt v. Oregon Min. Co., 28 Or. 33, 52 Am. St. Rep. 767, 40 Pac. 1016.

Distinguished, arguendo, in Kingsbury v. Buckner, 134 U. S. 670, 33 L. 1055, 10 S. Ct. 644.

Appeal and error.—Consent to judgment is admission of facts supporting it, and only question appeal raises is whether such facts can support it, p. 296.

Mortgages.—Parties to foreclosure suit may agree to decree of sale without finding of amount due or without day of payment, and also that on purchase by bondholders payment may be made by surrender of mortgage bonds, pp. 297, 298.

Cited, arguendo, in Ketchum v. St. Louis, 101 U. S. 311, 25 L. 1001, Brown v. Chesapeake, etc., Co., 73 Md. 599, and Schmidt v. Oregon Min. Co., 28 Or. 29, 52 Am. St. Rep. 764, 40 Pac. 1015.

Action.—Parties may agree as to subject-matter of litigation, and court will give effect to agreement if within general scope of pleadings, p. 297.

Followed in Schmidt v. Oregon Min. Co., 28 Or. 28, 52 Am. St. Rep. 764, 40 Pac. 1015. Approved in Bigley v. Watson, 98 Tenn. 357, 39 S. W. 526, 38 L. R. A. 680, holding consent decree not avoidable because broader than pleadings.

Appeal and error.—Effect of appeal by company from consent judgment is not altered because instigated by stockholders claiming consent was fraud by directors, p. 297.

Courts.—Under act of March 3, 1875, concerning diverse citizenship, as giving jurisdiction to Circuit Courts, parties may be arranged according to real interest in controversy, to see whether all on one side are of different States from all on other side, p. 298.

Followed in Ayres v. Wiswall, 112 U. S. 192, 28 L. 695, 5 S. Ct. 92, Evers v. Watson, 156 U. S. 532, 39 L. 522, 15 S. Ct. 432, Dormitzer v. Illinois, etc., Bridge Co., 6 Fed. 217, Saginaw Gas-Light Co. v. Saginaw, 28 Fed. 531, Covert v. Waldron, 33 Fed. 312, Pittsburgh, etc., Ry. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 61 Fed. 709, 22 U. S. App. 359, Shipp v. Williams, 62 Fed. 7, 22 U. S. App. 380, and First Nat. Bank v. Radford Trust Co., 80 Fed. 573, 47 U. S. App. 692. Approved in Pacific R. R. v. Missouri, etc., Ry., 111 U. S. 522, 28 L. 504, 4 S. Ct. 584, and Carey v. Houston, etc., Ry., 161 U. S. 132, 40 L. 644, 16 S. Ct. 543, both holding suit attacking decree for fraud within jurisdiction of decreeing court; M'Bee v. Marietta, etc., Ry., 48 Fed. 247, assuming jurisdiction of separate suit to prevent wrongful decree in suit within jurisdiction. Cited in 6 Sawy. 222, note.

Distinguished in Consolidated Water Co. v. Babcock, 76 Fed. 248, where addition of necessary party would give each side citizen of same State.

Courts.—Where no objection is made to jurisdiction of Circuit Court and judgment is consented to, it is sufficient that jurisdiction existed at time of judgment, p. 298.

Rule applied in First Nat. Bank v. Radford Trust Co., 80 Fed. 572, 47 U. S. App. 692, where court had jurisdiction when question first raised; separate opinion in Richardson v. Green, 61 Fed. 436, 15 U. S. App. 488, where answer established jurisdiction.

Distinguished in Baltimore Bldg., etc., Assn. v. Alderson, 90 Fed. 146, 61 U. S. App. 643, where, at time of decree, citizens of same State were on each side.

Courts.—Where plaintiff in foreclosure was of same State with undisputed prior mortgagees and trustees doubting power to foreclose, all defendants, but not hostile, and mortgagor was of another State, Circuit Court had jurisdiction, pp. 298, 299.

Rule applied in Barry v. Missouri, etc., Ry., 27 Fed. 2, where trust company denied duty of procuring payment of scrip in similar suit; Holly Mfg. Co. v. New Chester, etc., Co., 48 Fed. 890, retaining jurisdiction where parties of plaintiff's State were joined for form; Bowdoin College v. Merritt, 63 Fed. 216, where trustees, fearing fraud, refused to sue because limited to State court; First Nat. Bank v. Radford Trust Co., 80 Fed. 572, 47 U. S. App. 692, holding trustee refusing to sell or be made party, adverse.

Attorney and client.—Purchases in name of attorneys at judicial sales of clients' property, though jealously scrutinized, will be sustained, if not unjust to clients, p. 300.

Cited in 3 McCrary, 86, note.

Railroads.—Purchase of railroad at judicial sale by attorney of company, for bondholders, is valid in absence of fraud on company, p. 300.

Distinguished in Schroeder v. Young, 161 U. S. 340, 40 L. 725, 16 S. Ct. 514, where purchase price was grossly inadequate.

101 U. S. 301-306, 25 L. 954, FLEITAS v. COCKREM.

Appeal and error.—Where record declares jury waived in writing, it is conclusive, on appeal, nothing appearing to contrary, of agreement to waive, p. 302.

Attachment.—In Louisiana, fixing of amount by judge does not validate insufficient attachment bond, p. 304.

Approved in Griffith v. Harvester Co., 92 Iowa, 637, 54 Am. St. Rep. 575, 61 N. W. 244, holding lien not lost where defect cured by new bond.

Statutes.— Louisiana practice code, article 245, providing attachment bond must exceed "one-half" amount claimed, means "by one-half," being mistranslation, pp. 304, 305.

Judgment.— Personal judgment against non-resident who appears in suit is valid, pp. 305, 306.

101 U. S. 306-319, 25 L. 999, KETCHUM v. ST. LOUIS.

Lien.— Where, by concluded agreement, debtor sets apart to creditor specified amount of specific fund received, or to be received, by another, from designated source, and directs payment by that other, who assents, it is specific appropriation, binding on parties and subsequent claimants with notice, p. 307.

Rule applied in dissenting opinion in Tompkins v. Little Rock, etc., Ry., 21 Fed. 371, 372, see majority holding, below. Cited, without special application, in Central Trust Co. v. Florida Ry., etc., Co., 43 Fed. 758.

Distinguished in Tompkins v. Fort Smith Ry., 125 U. S. 122, 124, 125, 31 L. 622, 623, 8 S. Ct. 769, 770, 771, affirming S. C., 5 McCrary, 612, 18 Fed. 353, reversing S. C., 15 Fed. 13, holding right to sequester railroads' revenues operated as assignment; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 82 Fed. 369, 370, where stock subscribed by State guaranteed interest out of profits; Brown v. Chesapeake, etc., Co., 73 Md. 594, 597, holding priority of lien on canal tolls does not extend to proceeds of canal on sale thereof; dissenting opinion in The Canal Co.'s Case, 83 Md. 589, 590, 35 Atl. 168, majority extending time to trustees operating canal for creditors with lien on tolls, though mortgage on canal in arrears.

Assignment.— Missouri act of January 7, 1865, authorizing loan of county bonds to railroad, and providing for payment of interest out of earnings collected by State commissioner, waived priority of State's mortgage and operated as equitable assignment, upon railroad's acceptance of bonds, p. 315.

Statutes.— All acts of general nature, or which affect community at large, are public, and charge public with notice thereof, pp. 315, 316.

Approved in Tompkins v. Little Rock, etc., Ry., 15 Fed. 13, 18, and dissenting opinion in S. C., 21 Fed. 379, to point that statute creating lien on railroad is public.

Lien.— Where there is intention, and power, to create charge on real or personal property, equity will enforce same as against everyone charged with notice, pp. 316-318.

Approved in French v. Gapen, 105 U. S. 523, 26 L. 956, enforcing such lien on canal in favor of contractor as against State's lessee; Sheffield Furnace Co. v. Witherow, 149 U. S. 578, 37 L. 855, 13 S. Ct. 938, where parties agreed to extend mechanic's lien to adjoining land; Fourth St. Bank v. Yardley, 165 U. S. 644, 41 L. 862, 17 S. Ct. 440, where, by agreement of parties, deposit is charged therewith, check constitutes equitable lien; *Walker v. E. 177, holding bequest of yearly “proceeds of farm” vests interest in land; Gray v. Edwards, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 346, 22 S. W. 537, holding complaint for lumber “sold and disposed of” does not limit recovery to lumber sold. Approved in Trutch v. Bunnell, 11 Or. 63, 50 Am. Rep. 459, 4 Pac. 590, excluding mortgage from probate power “to order renting, sale or disposal;” Carr, Petitioner, 16 R. I. 648, 27 Am. St. Rep. 775, 19 Atl. 146, holding testamentary power to sell does not include partition. See 92 Am. Dec. 127, note.

Courts.—State decision of precise point in determining collateral matter, though not absolutely binding on Federal court, is very strong evidence of State law, pp. 382, 383.

Approved in Stearns v. Lawrence, 83 Fed. 745, 54 U. S. App. 547, affirming S. C., 79 Fed. 884, permitting examination of State court's decision to determine question of res judicata.

Partition by trustee with power is valid to pass title, though improperly exercised, p. 383.

101 U. S. 384-391, 25 L. 982, THE SABINE.

Salvage is compensation for voluntary assistance, whereby ship at sea or cargo, or both, are saved in whole or part from impending sea peril, or recovered from actual loss, as of wreck, derelict or capture, p. 384.

Salvage.—Valid salvage claim has three essentials: Marine peril, voluntary assistance, apart from duty or contract, and success, partial, complete, or contributory, p. 384.

Approved in The Strathnevis, 76 Fed. 862, where vessel contributed to rescue by towing till cable broke and tow was lost.

Salvage is not compensation as in quantum meruit case, or opere et labore, but reward for voluntary and successful perilous service, p. 384.

Salvage.—Suits for salvage may be in rem against property saved or proceeds, or in personam against party both requesting and benefiting by salvage, but libel cannot be maintained in rem against ship and in personam against consignee, pp. 386, 387.

Approved in The Steamship Zodiac, 5 Fed. 223, declining amendment joining libel in rem to one in personam; The Corsair, 145 U. S. 342, 36 L. 729, 12 S. Ct. 950, holding ship and owner cannot be joined in same libel under admiralty rules 12 to 20.

Distinguished in Atlantic Mut. Ins. Co. v. Alexandre, 16 Fed. 280, holding libel in rem does not bar subsequent libel in personam; The J. F. Warner, 22 Fed. 344, where libel was for breach of af-freightment contract; Providence, etc., Ins. Co. v. Wager, 35 Fed. 364, where separate libels were filed against ship and owner.

Salvors have maritime lien on ship or cargo saved, independent of possession, for salvage not exceeding value thereof, enforceable in rem, pp. 380, 391.

Distinguished in The Roanoke, 50 Fed. 576, where salvors were employed by contract.

Salvage may be enforced against proceeds of saved property sold in admiralty and paid into court, or one salvor may be made party to another's libel, pp. 386, 387.

Salvors employed by owners or insurers, may proceed in personam for compensation for services and use of vessel, even though unsuccessful, pp. 387, 390.

Approved in Wilmington, etc., Co. v. Old Kensington, 14 Sawy. 108, 39 Fed. 500, and The Elmbank, 69 Fed. 109, 29 U. S. App. 718, both holding certainty of compensation properly considered in reduction of award. Cited, but not applied, in The Roanoke, 50 Fed. 577, where suit was in rem; The Clatsop Chief, 7 Sawy. 277, 8 Fed. 165, approving libel in rem against ship and in personam against owner who is also master.

Admiralty rules were promulgated under congressional act, and have effect of law, p. 388.

Salvage.—Proper remedy of voluntary salvors is in rem against ship or cargo, but if destroyed without their fault, or fraudulently removed from jurisdiction, they may proceed in personam against owners, p. 390.

Rule applied in Hudson v. Whitmire, 77 Fed. 847, where property was replevined in State court.

Salvage.—Nothing short of contract to pay, irrespective of success, will bar libel in rem for salvage, p. 390.

101 U. S. 391-392, 25 L. 841, GAY v. PARPART.

Appeal and error.—Under section 1000, revised statutes, condition of bond on supersedeas, providing that appellants "shall prosecute appeal with effect and pay costs and damages rendered and to be rendered in case decree affirmed in Supreme Court," is sufficient, p. 392.

Approved in Gunn v. Black, 60 Fed. 160, 19 U. S. App. 489, holding bond operates as supersedeas per se.

101 U. S. 392-397, 25 L. 1050, WHITNEY v. WYMAN.

Principal and agent.—Agent is liable under sealed contract not made in principal's name, and as his deed, but intention of parties governs liability under unsealed or parol contracts, pp. 395, 396.

Approved in Ames v. Holderbaum, 44 Fed. 226, holding circumstances attending execution may be considered in determining liability; Anderson v. Timberlake, 114 Ala. 386, 62 Am. St. Rep. 107, 22 So. 433, holding question of credit, under verbal contract, for jury; Huffman v. Newman, 55 Neb. 716, 76 N. W. 410, denying agent's liability to payor for money withheld from principal.

Cited, but not applied, in Berwind v. Schultz, 25 Fed. 919, determined upon other grounds.

Principal and agent.—Contract binding principal only cannot be changed by either party without consent of other, p. 396.

Corporations.—Incipient corporation's contract, inhibited till articles filed, is ratified by subsequent recognition, p. 396.

Followed in Schreyer v. Turner, etc., Co., 29 Or. 16, 43 Pac. 723. Rule applied in Stanton v. New York, etc., R. R., 59 Conn. 285, 21 Am. St. Rep. 118, 22 Atl. 304, where promoters contracted with plaintiff to procure right of way; Bruner v. Brown, 139 Ind. 602, 38 N. E. 318, affirming right of corporation to promise promoters payment for services; Kelley v. Newburyport, etc., R. R., 141 Mass. 498, 6 N. E. 747, disallowing defense of incapacity because stock not paid up, where so certified; Burns v. Order of United Workmen, 153 Mass. 175, 26 N. E. 444, holding newly-organized grand lodge of beneficiary association, accepting old member's dues, liable on death; Sterling v. Bock, 40 Minn. 12, 41 N. W. 237, extending rule to ratification by firm, of partner's contract; Rogers v. New York, etc., Land Co., 134 N. Y. 210, 32 N. E. 32, where company took real estate and sought to avoid obligations. See 13 Am. St. Rep. 29, note.

Cited, but not applied, in St. Johns Mfg. Co. v. Munger, 106 Mich. 94, 58 Am. St. Rep. 472, 64 N. W. 4, 29 L. R. A. 65, denying shareholder's right to sue corporation for misrepresentation of organizing committee; Pitts v. Steele, etc., Co., 75 Mo. App. 230, reversed for error on another point.

Distinguished in McCormick v. Market Bank, 165 U. S. 552, 41 L. 822, 17 S. Ct. 437, where organization was never completed;

Davis, etc., Co. v. Hillsboro, etc., Co., 10 Ind. App. 44, 37 N. E. 550, where contract was neither primarily for company's benefit nor adopted, though benefits accepted.

Corporations.—Both parties to contract of incipient corporation assuming to have contractual power, are estopped to deny it, p. 397.

Rule applied in Snider's Sons' Co. v. Troy, 91 Ala. 230, 24 Am. St. Rep. 889, 8 So. 659, 11 L. R. A. 517, holding person dealing with company as corporation cannot hold members as partners; Cravens v. Eagle Cotton, etc., Co., 120 Ind. 15, 16 Am. St. Rep. 306, 21 N. E. 984, applied to stock-subscription contract; Staver, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Blake, 111 Mich. 289, 69 N. W. 511, 38 L. R. A. 804, declining to extend limited partnership's liability because of defect in organization.

Distinguished in Williams v. Hewitt, 47 La. Ann. 1084, 49 Am. St. Rep. 398, 17 So. 498, where depositor sued as partners unincorporated association assuming to be bank.

Corporations.—Under Michigan statute, inhibiting unorganized corporation contracts, but not expressly annulling them or prescribing penalty, they are not void and can be questioned only by State, p. 397.

Approved in Beekman v. Hudson River, etc., Ry., 35 Fed. 12, where defendants in foreclosure set up original mortgagor's defective organization; McClinch v. Sturgis, 72 Me. 295, 297, denying to stock purchaser right to question defective organization; Washburn Mill Co. v. Bartlett, 3 N. Dak. 146, 54 N. W. 546, applying principle to foreign corporations not complying with statutory condition; American, etc., Mach. Co. v. Moore, 2 Dak. 292, 8 N. W. 135, and Probst v. Trustees, etc., 3 N. Mex. 268, 5 Pac. 704, arguendo. See 29 Am. St. Rep. 601, 33 Am. St. Rep. 186, and 48 Am. St. Rep. 915, notes.

Distinguished in Wechselberg v. Flour City Nat. Bank, 64 Fed. 96, 24 U. S. App. 308, 26 L. R. A. 476, where statutory demand is of essence of incorporation.

Corporations.—Instruction by court that contract bound corporation as principal, and not its agent, if corporation, though unorganized, acted as such, is not erroneous, pp. 395, 397.

Principal and agent.—When principal is disclosed and agent known as such, latter cannot be held, however he sign; hence, order for goods signed by defendants as "Prudential Committee, G. H. F. B. Co.," accepted by letter to said company, does not bind agents, pp. 396, 397.

Rule applied in Post v. Pearson, 108 U. S. 422, 27 L. 775, 2 S. Ct. 801, holding partners liable under contract signed by "superintendent;" Carroll v. Walton, etc., Co., 48 Fed. 126, holding agents signing charter-party as such, not liable for ship's injury; Monticello Bank v. Bostwick, 71 Fed. 644, 646, where brokers, acting for another, innocently sold forged paper to bank; Goodenough v. Thayer, 132 Mass. 156, where T. signed "T., agent;" Cook v. Gray, 133 Mass. 111, where contract to build "for company on their land" was signed by "trustees for company;" Bleau v. Wright, 110 Mich. 185, 68 N. W. 115, where insurance agent's receipt promised premium's return if risk rejected; Huston v. Tyler, 140 Mo. 265, 36 S. W. 656, and rehearing S. C., 140 Mo. 268, 41 S. W. 795, where, unknown to agent, note sold by him was forged. Applied conversely in Shuey v. Adair, 18 Wash. 192, 63 Am. St. Rep. 882, 51 Pac. 390, 39 L. R. A. 475, holding agent liable on promissory note signed by him alone.

101 U. S. 397-403, 25 L. 1013, ALDRIDGE v. MUIRHEAD.

Bankruptcy.—Where, in bankruptcy suit to reach property in assignor's wife's name, both swear purchase made with her money exclusively, onus is on assignee to prove contrary, p. 401.

Bankruptcy.—Married women's property will not be disturbed long after acquisition, at suit of husband's assignee, for mere inability to trace exact history of investments, providing separate estate was sufficient to account for property, p. 402.

Approved in De Grauw v. Mechan, 48 N. J. Eq. 225, 21 Atl. 195, refusing donor's creditor relief against donee after delay and improvement of property; Coyne v. Sayre, 54 N. J. Eq. 709, 36 Atl. 98, denying creditor's right to question title of wife left in undisturbed possession eighteen years.

Bankruptcy.—Assignor's wife's property is not liable for his debts because managed by him, though bank account kept in his name and notes and mortgages executed jointly, if investments made and debts paid with her money exclusively, p. 403.

Approved in Tresch v. Wirtz, 34 N. J. Eq. 129, and Trapnell v. Conklyn, 37 W. Va. 252, 38 Am. St. Rep. 40, 16 S. E. 574, both extending rule to creditors' suits; Hyde v. Frey, 28 Fed. 823, holding husband cannot use wife's name as cover for his own business.

Distinguished in Johnson & Co. v. Christie, 79 Mo. App. 51, where business was really husband's, though in wife's name. Limited in Talcott v. Arnold, 54 N. J. Eq. 578, 35 Atl. 535, limiting husband's right to donate earning capacity, to cases of separate estate.

101 U. S. 403-407, 25 L. 866, BANK v. SHERMAN.

Bankruptcy.—Under revised statutes, section 5057, suits in bankruptcy to reach securities transferred by bankrupt must be brought within two years of assignee's appointment, p. 405.

Cited, arguendo, in M'Can v. Conery, 12 Fed. 319.

Bankruptcy.—Assignment relates back to filing of petition, and title to all bankrupt's property vests in assignee as of that date; hence, it covers securities transferred by assignor after petition for involuntary bankruptcy, but before amendment alleging exact act of bankruptcy supporting adjudication, pp. 405, 406.

Rule applied in Chapman v. Brewer, 114 U. S. 168, 29 L. 87, 5 S. Ct. 803, where petition was filed prior to attachment of bankrupt's property; Taylor v. Irwin, 20 Fed. 617, holding trustee's delay in asserting title may evidence waiver of claim; Taylor v. Robertson, 21 Fed. 215, holding notice of foreclosure given after petition, and before trustee's appointment, invalid; concurring opinion in Sheffield, etc., Ry. v. Newman, 77 Fed. 794, 41 U. S. App. 766, subjecting purchaser pendente lite to decree based upon amendments; Sullivan v. Rabb, 86 Ala. 441, 5 So. 750, holding assignee's purchaser takes realty free from attachment levied within four months of bankruptcy; Norris v. Ile, 152 Ill. 204, 43 Am. St. Rep. 243, 38 N. E. 766, referring lien of lis pendens, under amended pleading, back to original, which stated material grounds. Cited in 8 Biss. 376, note.

Statutes, when clear and imperative, cannot be qualified by courts, whose part it is to execute law as they find it, p. 406.

Bankruptcy.—Power of amendment is incident to all judicial administration; hence, petition may be amended by addition of further acts of bankruptcy, p. 406.

Rule applied in Adams v. Main, 3 Ind. App. 240, 50 Am. St. Rep. 272, 29 N. E. 795, denying error in amendment of pleadings, after trial begun, unless prejudicing opponent. Cited, arguendo, in In re Hovey, 5 Fed. 358.

Bankruptcy.—Filing of petition is, in effect, attachment and injunction, and persons dealing with bankrupt's property thereafter, and before final adjudication, do so at their peril, p. 406.

Rule applied in Conner v. Long, 104 U. S. 230, 26 L. 724, holding title to goods levied upon within four months preceding bankruptcy vests in assignee; Taylor v. Robertson, 21 Fed. 214, 215, 216, holding invalid, published notice of foreclosure under power, after petition and before trustee's appointment; In re Brooks, 91 Fed. 509, assuming jurisdiction of trustee's petition for order restoring bankrupt's foreclosed property; In re Nathan, 92 Fed. 592, extending rule to mortgage taken with notice of actual or intended bankruptcy petition. Cited, arguendo, in Williamson v. Selden, 53 Minn. 77, 54 N. W. 1056.

101 U. S. 407-417, 25 L. 1015, COUNTY OF LIVINGSTON v. DARLINGTON.

Constitutional law.—Courts will not declare law void under Constitution, unless its repugnancy thereto is clear, p. 410.

Reaffirmed in Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 685, 32 L. 256, 8 S. Ct. 996, upholding Pennsylvania statute regulating manufacture of oleomargarine; United States v. Boyer, 85 Fed. 430, holding congressional provision for inspection of slaughter-houses located in States, void; Territory v. O'Connor, 5 Dak. 413, 41 N. W. 752, 3 L. R. A. 361, upholding local option law (Laws 1887, chap. 70).

Municipal corporations.—By settled construction of section 5, article 9, Illinois Constitution, 1848, legislature could authorize municipal tax only for corporate purposes and only by municipal bodies enumerated, p. 411.

Reaffirmed in Harter v. Kernochan, 103 U. S. 570, 26 L. 414, under identical section, upholding act authorizing township donations to railroad. Approved in O'Brien v. Wheelock, 95 Fed. 894, applying similar restriction to section 9, article 9, Illinois Constitution, 1870; Wetherell v. Devine, 116 Ill. 635, 6 N. E. 25, holding conduct of election a corporate purpose.

Judgments.—Decree declaring municipal bonds void, in action to enjoin payment of interest by county treasurer, does not bar action by bondholders, not parties to former proceeding, upon same bonds, p. 413.

Cited in 94 Am. Dec. 769, and 85 Am. Dec. 363, notes.

Municipal corporations.—Under Illinois Constitution, 1848, vote of inhabitants was not necessary to validate municipal bond subscriptions, where legislature bestowed power directly upon municipal authorities, p. 415.

Constitutional law.—Legislature is sole judge on questions of pure policy or expediency, where no constitutional provision intervenes, pp. 416, 417.

Reaffirmed in Guthrie v. Territory, 1 Okl. 198, 37 Pac. 193, 21 L. R. A. 846, upholding territorial statute providing for payment by municipal corporations of debts contracted under provisional government; Mount v. State, 90 Ind. 29, 46 Am. Rep. 192, where legislature directed refunding by township of funds lost in bank failure and made good by trustee.

Municipal corporations.—Illinois act of 1867, as amended by act of 1869, authorizing municipal bond subscription to secure location of State reform school, is for "corporate purpose," within section 5, article 9, Illinois Constitution of 1848, p. 417.

Principle applied in Folsom v. Ninety-Six, 159 U. S. 628, 40 L. 284, 16 S. Ct. 179, and Coler v. Board of Commrs., 89 Fed. 265, both holding aid of railroad construction, public purpose; Board of Commrs. v. State, 147 Ind. 490, 46 N. E. 911, upholding law creating special taxing district to raise money for buildings upon relocation of county seat; Lund v. Chippewa, 93 Wis. 652, 67 N. W. 931, 34 L. R. A. 136, holding home for feeble-minded, public purpose. Principle approved conversely in Cole v. La Grange, 19 Fed. 873, holding acts in aid of private objects void. Cited, arguendo, in Holt v. Antrim, 64 N. H.

289, 9 Atl. 391. See 98 Am. Dec. 667, and 16 Am. St. Rep. 368, notes.

Distinguished in Cole v. La Grange, 113 U. S. 7, 28 L. 898, 5 S. Ct. 419, denying right of legislature to authorize municipal bonds in aid of private manufactory; Floyd v. Perrin, 30 S. C. 19, 8 S. E. 20, 2 L. R. A. 247, holding townships incorporated by railroad act, for single purpose of subscribing, are without corporate purposes. See 74 Am. Dec. 593, note.

101 U. S. 417-426, 25 L. 1052, MOHR v. MANIERRE.

Courts.—Federal courts, in administering justice, must observe settled principles which obtained in States when Constitution was made, including acquisition of jurisdiction by citation in personal actions, and in proceedings in rem by seizure of property and notice by publication or otherwise, pp. 421, 422.

Approved in Gates v. Bucki, 53 Fed. 967, 12 U. S. App. 69, refusing injunction against proceedings in State court which acquired jurisdiction in rem by attachment; Sloane v. Martin, 145 N. Y. 533, 45 Am. St. Rep. 635, 40 N. E. 219, 28 L. R. A. 360, holding service of infants interested not essential to proceedings in rem in Federal courts.

Judgments.—Personal judgments against non-residents of State, based on service by publication, are held invalid in Federal courts, p. 422.

Approved in Brooks v. Dun, 51 Fed. 147, denying validity of service on resident agent for non-resident partnership in personal action.

Insane persons.—Court's jurisdiction over lunatic's realty attaches upon filing of guardian's petition to sell, setting forth jurisdictional facts; and irregularities, such as want of due notice to parties interested, though appealable, are not open to collateral attack, pp. 424, 425.

Rule applied in Thaw v. Ritchie, 136 U. S. 548, 34 L. 538, 10 S. Ct. 1044, and Myers v. McGavock, 39 Neb. 862, 42 Am. St. Rep. 637, 58 N. W. 526, both extending rule to guardian's sale for education and maintenance of ward; Simmons v. Saul, 138 U. S. 455, 34 L. 1061, 11 S. Ct. 374, where administration was granted upon proper petition and land claim sold without notice; Holmes v. Oregon, etc., Ry., 6 Sawy. 285, 5 Fed. 534, affirmed by S. C., 7 Sawy. 388, 399, 9 Fed. 234, 243, holding petition for administration containing jurisdictional statement of petitioner's residence confers jurisdiction and is not subject to collateral attack; M'Arthur v. Allen, 3 Fed. 324, holding decree setting aside will, being in rem, cannot be collaterally impeached; Berrian v. Rogers, 43 Fed. 468, upholding sale by administrator where non-resident heir claimed insufficient notice; Elliott v. Shuler, 50 Fed. 456, extending rule to intestate's realty under special proceeding; Garrett v. Böeing, 68 Fed. 61, 37 U. S. App. 42, where petition for administration showed necessary facts; Graff v. Louis, 71 Fed. 595, denying right of collateral attack of attachment, based on irregular affidavit, after judgment; Ryan v. Staples, 76 Fed. 726, 40 U. S. App. 427, holding judicial sale to satisfy liens reviewable, but not void for inequitable distribution; Apel v. Kelsey, 47 Ark. 419, 2 S. W. 103, where decedent's lands were sold by court after notice in unauthorized newspaper; Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Barnard, 96 N. Y. 531, where petition showed bona fide indebtedness, though subsequent proceedings irregular. See 43 Am. St. Rep. 537, note.

Distinguished in Holmes v. Oregon, etc., R. R., 7 Sawy. 400, 9 Fed. 244, where some further act is required of court to obtain jurisdiction.

Cited, arguendo, in Woolridge v. McKenna, 8 Fed. 670.

Insane persons.—Petition of lunatic's representative for sale of realty is lunatic's petition, and latter cannot afterwards object to sale for want of notice, pp. 425, 426.

Followed in Scarf v. Aldrich, 97 Cal. 365, 33 Am. St. Rep. 193, 32 Pac. 326, Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Barnard, 96 N. Y. 532, and Mohr v. Porter, 51 Wis. 489, 497, 8 N. W. 365, 369.

Rule applied in Daughtry v. Thweatt, 105 Ala. 619, 53 Am. St. Rep. 149, 16 So. 921, in sale by guardian of ward's realty; Mitchell v. People's, etc., Bank, 20 R. I. 506, 40 Atl. 504, holding notice to non-resident ward unnecessary, where foreign guardian applies for removal of personality; Cody v. Cody, 98 Wis. 452, 74 N. W. 220, holding prospective heirs of lunatic not entitled to notice.

Distinguished in Weld v. Johnson Mfg. Co., 84 Wis. 542, 543, 54 N. W. 337, as to proceeding adversary to ward, such as guardian's bond.

Process.—Notice or citation in legal proceeding is for protection of separate or adverse interests, not petitioner's. Hence, want of due notice under Wisconsin statute, permitting judicial sale of lunatic's realty upon notice to persons interested, does not invalidate sale as to lunatic, p. 426.

Followed in Scarf v. Aldrich, 97 Cal. 365, 366, 33 Am. St. Rep. 193, 194, 32 Pac. 326, and Mohr v. Porter, 51 Wis. 489, 490, 494, 495, 8 N. W. 365, 367, 368.

Rule applied in Walker v. Goldsmith, 14 Or. 143, 12 Pac. 553, under section 8, general laws Oregon, requiring service of ward's next of kin; Cissell v. Pulaski, 3 McCrary. 447, 10 Fed. 892, holding statutory notice of court's order calling in county warrants for reissue may be waived by holders.

101 U. S. 426-432, 25 L. 985, GUNTON v. CARROLL.

Limitation of actions.—Agreement to convey interest in realty after partition cannot be enforced till partition, and, delay being that of owner, statute does not run till then, p. 429.

Equity.—Where, under agreement to partition land and convey his share, vendor neglects partition for twenty years, six years' delay thereafter by vendee in seeking specific performance is not fatal laches, p. 429.

Principle applied in Duke v. State, 56 Ark. 497, 20 S. W. 603, where defendant, by procuring dismissal of prior suit, contributed to delay; Townsend v. Vanderwerker, 160 U. S. 186, 40 L. 338, 16 S. Ct. 262, holding laches not determined by mere lapse of time, apart from circumstances.

Vendor and purchaser.—Equity usually treats contracts for sale of land as if specifically performed, vendee being treated as owner of land, and vendor as his trustee, especially where purchase money in vendor's possession, p. 431.

Specific performance of agreement to arbitrate price cannot usually be enforced; otherwise, where vendor has received consideration, and provision for arbitration fails without fault of parties, e. g., where land was to be applied on debt at arbitrated price and vendor dies without appointing arbitrator, p. 432.

Distinguished in Manning v. Ayers, 77 Fed. 698, 46 U. S. App. 537, denying specific performance of land at price to be fixed by parties.

101 U. S. 433-438, 25 L. 937, SOUTH CAROLINA v. GAILLARD.

Constitutional law.—He who brings suit under statute concedes its validity, p. 436.

Action.—Where statute giving special remedy is repealed without excepting pending suits, all suits thereunder must stop forthwith, p. 438.

Rule applied in Railway v. County Commrs., 88 Me. 227, 33 Atl. 988, superseding county commissioners' verdict requiring railroad flagman at certain point, after jurisdiction transferred; Burlington v. Traction Co., etc., 70 Vt. 495, 41 Atl. 515, extending rule to proceeding to settle terms of railroad's use of streets; Dulin's case, 91 Va. 725, 20 S. E. 823, applying rule to criminal actions. Applied conversely in Larkin v. Saffarans, 15 Fed. 153, holding enlargement of jurisdiction of Circuit Court applies to pending cases.

Distinguished in State v. Hicks, 48 Ark. 520, 3 S. W. 525, where statute provides for different proceeding "hereafter."

Constitutional law.—States may change remedy, providing no substantial contractual right is impaired. Hence, repeal of South Carolina act of 1877, providing special proceeding for enforcing acceptance of tax-receivable State bank bonds, is not unconstitutional, p. 438.

Rule applied in United Cos. v. Weldon, 47 N. J. L. 63, 54 Am. Rep. 116, applying rule to appeal from award of damages for condemned lands; Whaley v. Gaillard, 21 S. C. 569, holding statutory requirement of such proceeding does not impair contract.

101 U. S. 439-443, 25 L. 1055, WHEELER v. INSURANCE CO.

Insurance company alone can raise question of insurable interest, and not mortgagee claiming adversely. Hence, creditor insuring debtor's buildings is, in absence of bad faith, entitled to proceeds as against mortgagee, if without notice of mortgagor's covenant to insure for mortgagee, pp. 441, 442.

Cited in 54 Am. Dec. 699, note.

Insurance.—Mortgagee usually has no right to proceeds of mortgagor's policy not assigned to him, but equity gives him lien thereon where mortgagor agrees to secure him by insuring, even when mortgage permits him to insure upon mortgagor's neglect to procure and assign policy, p. 442.

Rule applied in Grange Mill Co. v. Western, etc., Co., 118 Ill. 400, 9 N. E. 275, extending rule to vendee under agreement to sell; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Thompson, 68 N. H. 21, 40 Atl. 396, as against mortgagor's assignee in insolvency; Ames v. Richardson, 29 Minn. 333, 13 N. W. 139, where mortgagor assigned policy to third party after adjustment of loss. Approved in Heller v. Marine Bank, 89 Md. 621, 43 Atl. 805, 45 L. R. A. 445, holding express agreement necessary to lien; Kirchgraber v. Park, 57 Mo. App. 40, upholding mortgagor's right to procure additional insurance not exceeding property's value; Nordyké, etc., Co. v. Gery, 112 Ind. 539, 2 Am. St. Rep. 223, 13 N. E. 684, holding lien does not attach to additional insurance because policies effected for mortgagee prove uncollectible. Cited, arguendo, in Lange v. Grabe, 11 Ohio C. C. 175. See 54 Am. Dec. 698, note, and 84 Am. Dec. 431, note.

Distinguished in Quarles v. Clayton, 87 Tenn. 318, 10 S. W. 508, 3 L. R. A. 174, and n., where widow claimed life estate in proceeds of policy payable to decedent's administrators. Qualified in Swearingen v. Insurance Co., 52 S. C. 316, 29 S. E. 723, where agreement to insure is made after mortgage and without new consideration.

Insurance.—Mortgagee's equitable lien on insurance moneys is limited by scope of mortgagor's promise to secure him thereby, and also by necessity thereof to protect him where there is additional security, p. 442.

Insurance.—Mortgagee's equity to lien on policy of mortgagor agreeing to protect him, attaches to balance of proceeds after satis-lying debt of creditor, who, by mortgagor's authority, procured policy, p. 442.

Approved in Ames v. Richardson, 29 Minn. 333, 334, 13 N. W. 139, holding lien attaches, though policy effected without mortgagee's knowledge, and not in pursuit of agreement.

101 U. S. 443-452, 25 L. 1057, BROOKS v. RAILWAY CO.

Mechanics' liens.—Sub-contractor's notice of lien, required by section 2131, Iowa code, 1873, is for protection of owner in settlement with principal contractor, and affects validity of lien only as to amount due; hence, prior mortgagee cannot question lien for want of such notice, p. 449.

Mechanics' liens.—Where notice of lien is required of sub-contractor for protection of owner, judgment establishing lien is conclusive on mortgagee, p. 449.

Mechanics' liens.—Under Iowa code, 1873, section 2139, granting preferred lien on entire land as against all other incumbrances made after commencement of work, sub-contractor's lien for work on one section extends to whole railroad and has priority over mortgage given after completion of separate, disconnected section, and before commencement of former section, p. 452.

Rule applied in Beach, etc. v. Wakefield, 107 Iowa, 581, 76 N. W. 692, where work was done on union depot; Oriental Hotel Co. v. Griffiths, 88 Tex. 584, 53 Am. St. Rep. 800, 33 S. W. 662, 30 L. R. A. 777, holding lien refers back, under Texas statute, to commencement of building. Approved in Pacific, etc., Co. v. Bear Valley, etc., Co., 120 Cal. 96, 100, 65 Am. St. Rep. 160, 164, 52 Pac. 137, 139, upholding lien filed against canal system without including pipe-line originally intended to be separately operated. See 54 Am. St. Rep. 423, note.

Distinguished in Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. J. E. Potts, etc., Co., 63 Fed. 15, 22 U. S. App. 537, denying validity of lien on railroad under Michigan statute; Greenwood, etc., Ry. v. Strang, 77 Fed. 500, same, under South Carolina statute.

Mechanics' liens.—Under Iowa code, 1873, section 2141, granting preferred lien on building, erection and improvement for which lien is claimed, as against prior incumbrances, lien of sub-contractor for improvement of one section extends to whole railroad, including disconnected section previously completed, p. 452.

A. 745, and n., both holding lien binds railroad as unit; Adams v. Grand Island, etc., R. Co., 10 S. Dak. 248, 72 N. W. 580, under exactly similar statute. Rule applied in Jarvis v. State Bank, 22 Colo. 315, 55 Am. St. Rep. 133, 45 Pac. 507, upholding builder's lien on flume as against prior mortgage of entire property; Steger v. Arctic, etc., Co., 89 Tenn. 458, 14 S. W. 1088, 11 L. R. A. 581, applied to refrigerating plant, under similar statute, including pipes under city streets. Approved in National Foundry, etc., Works v. Oconto Water Co., 52 Fed. 45, 46, 52, 53, holding act giving lien on machinery inapplicable to quasi-public corporations; Gilchrist v. Helena, etc., R. Co., 58 Fed. 714, and Church v. Smithea, 4 Colo. App. 177, 35 Pac. 268, in support of constitutionality of mechanic's lien acts conferring priority. Cited, arguendo, in Real Estate Inv. Co. v. Haseltine, 53 Mo. 101 U. S. 453-464, 25 L. 1061, THE CITY OF PANAMA.

Courts.—Washington organic act of 1853, giving territorial District Courts same jurisdiction as Federal Circuit and District Courts in Federal cases, confers admiralty jurisdiction; e. g., libel of ship for negligent injury to passenger, pp. 453-458.

Principle applied in In re Cooper, 143 U. S. 494, 36 L. 239, 12 S. Ct. 457, upholding Alaska District Court's admiralty jurisdiction; Braithwaite v. Jordan, 5 N. Dak. 210, 65 N. W. 704, 31 L. R. A. 245, under section 1910, revised statutes, in Dakota; Perea v. Barela, 6 N. Mex. 245, 27 Pac. 508, as to probate jurisdiction, under New Mexico organic act.

Distinguished, arguendo, in Braithwaite v. Jordan, 5 N. Dak. 246, 65 N. W. 718, 31 L. R. A. 257.

Admiralty.—Neither State courts, nor courts within States not established under article 3, Constitution, can have admiralty jurisdiction, but Congress has complete legislative control over public territory, including jurisdiction of courts, pp. 457-461.

Approved in Braithwaite v. Jordan, 5 N. Dak. 224, 65 N. W. 710, 31 L. R. A. 250, holding section 1910, revised statutes, valid.

Admiralty.—United States Constitution is co-extensive with political jurisdiction, and Congress may provide for admiralty jurisdiction wherever there are navigable waters, and may authorize territorial legislatures to create Admiralty Courts, p. 460.

Courts.—Territorial courts are not strictly United States courts, within article 3, Constitution, but derive jurisdiction from Congress, p. 460.

Rule applied in McAllister v. United States, 141 U. S. 184, 35 L. 696, 11 S. Ct. 952, holding section 1768, revised statutes, inapplicable to Alaska District Court; Steamer Coquitlam v. United States, 163 U. S. 351, 41 L. 186, 16 S. Ct. 1119, holding Alaska District Court not governed by article 3; Suesenbach v. Wagner, 41 Minn. 110, 42 N. W. 926, holding territorial court's records entitled to same credit as State court's. Cited, arguendo, in United States v. Beebe, 2 Dak. 303, 11 N. W. 510.

Admiralty.—Action for injuries to passenger may be by libel in rem against ship, and decree may be enforced as in other maritime lien cases, p. 462.

Followed in The Wasco, 53 Fed. 547. Principle applied in The A. Heaton, 43 Fed. 595, extending rule to seaman injured through master's neglect; The Marion Chilcott, 95 Fed. 689, holding ship liable for mate's continued ill-treatment of seaman; The Anaces, 93 Fed. 242, 243, extending rule to stevedore; The Willamette, 70 Fed. 879, 44 U. S. App. 26, 31 L. R. A. 720, where passenger was killed by collision and State law gave lien on offending ship.

Limited in The Egyptian Monarch, 36 Fed. 776, dismissing libel for injury on English ship in English waters, no maritime lien being given.

Shipping.— Vessel-owners are not insurers of passengers' lives or safety, as of merchandise accepted by them as common carriers, but are bound to use greatest possible care, p. 462.

Distinguished in The Anchoria, 83 Fed. 848, 51 U. S. App. 610, exculpating owner where drip from water-cooler caused steward to slip and injure passenger.

Damages.— Fixed measure of compensation for mental and physical suffering, and injury to health and constitution, is impossible, and each case must be left largely to judgment of trial court. Hence, verdict of supreme territorial court for $15,000, for fall through hatchway resulting in permanent injuries, will not justify reversal, p. 464.

Rule applied in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Engler, 75 Fed. 104, 44 U. S. App. 517, affirming S. S., 69 Fed. 187, 188, holding $15,000 not excessive for compound fracture of leg. Approved in Behrens v. The Furnessia, 35 Fed. 800, allowing $1,600 for fracture of leg without probable permanent injury.

101 U. S. 465-471, 25 L. 987, SILLIMAN v. UNITED STATES.

Shipping.— Government's refusal to pay agreed rate for barges in its use, or to return them, does not constitute duress upon barge-owner who thereupon signs new charter-party, pp. 470, 471.

Cited and applied in the following cases, denying existence of duress: White v. United States, 154 U. S. 663, 26 L. 179, 14 S. Ct. 1192, where owner paid for services on vessel in use of United States without its authority; Morton v. Morris, 72 Fed. 398, 36 U. S. App. 550, where creditor obtained security by threatening suit and receivership during panic, collecting cases; Menantic, etc., Co. v. Peirce, 88 Fed. 312, where shipowner allowed charterer to use cattle stalls for fruit under protest; McClair v. Wilson, 18 Colo. 84, 31 Pac. 503, and Dausch v. Crane, 109 Mo. 333, 19 S. W. 63, both holding threat of lawsuit not duress; W. W. Kimball Co. v. Raw, 7 Kan. App. 19, 51 Pac. 790, threat to remove piano under terms of note; Bent v. Weston, 167 Mass. 530, 46 N. E. 386, refusal to deliver horse till boarding charges paid; Hackley v. Headley, 45 Mich. 576, 8 N. W. 514, refusal to pay full amount of debt. Approved in Tucker v. Hart, 72 Ind. 245, holding surety cannot plead duress against principal.

Distinguished in Joannin v. Ogilvie, 49 Minn. 568, 32 Am. St. Rep. 584, 52 N. W. 218, 16 L. R. A. 378, holding payment of unfounded mechanic's lien, filed to defeat loan, made under duress; Ganz v. Weisenberger, 66 Mo. App. 116, where ignorant German farmer signed note under threat of eviction through United States marshal.

United States.— Owner of barges in government's use who, under protest, signed new charter-party at less rate, upon quartermaster's refusal to pay former rate or return barges, and afterwards received new rate and receipted "in full," forfeited rights to old rate, p. 471.

Courts.—Supreme Court insists upon counsel's strict observance of rules facilitating examination of causes, p. 472.

101 U. S. 473-479, 25 L. 800, MARQUEZ v. FRISBIE.

Quieting title.—Complaint asking that trust be declared and defendant compelled to convey lands, and showing that legal title is not in defendant, but in United States, is demurrable, p. 474.

Principle applied in Forbes v. Driscoll, 4 Dak. 353, 31 N. W. 642, where defendant offered to show contest pending in land department; McCord v. Hill, — Wis. —, 80 N. W. 736, where complaint failed to show title had passed from United States.

Public lands.—Courts will not interfere with disposition of public lands by government officers, either by injunction or mandamus, nor should State courts assume jurisdiction by reason of control of parties, to annul patent before its issue, though it may afterwards enforce equities, p. 475.

Rule applied in Casey v. Vassor, 4 McCrary, 129, 50 Fed. 259, refusing interference in like case; Forbes v. Driscoll, 4 Dak. 354, 31 N. W. 642, and Vantongeren v. Heffernan, 5 Dak. 207, 38 N. W. 65, where contest still pending before land department; Merriam v. Bachioni, 112 Cal. 196, 44 Pac. 482, holding judgment of court, pending contest in land department, is not binding; Bas-sick Min. Co. v. Davis, 11 Colo. 134, 17 Pac. 296, holding equity will treat patentee as trustee in favor of another in equity entitled; Widdicombe v. Childers, 124 U. S. 405, 31 L. 430, 8 S. Ct. 520, and Hedrick v. Atchison, etc., R. R., 167 U. S. 681, 42 L. 323, 17 S. W. 241, declining to adjudge right to land claimed under railroad grant till selection approved; Kimball v. McIntyre, 3 Utah, 81, 1 Pac. 168, where mineral patent failed to state respective interests of grantees; dissenting opinions in Chapman v. Quinn, 56

Cal. 285, majority refusing to recognize claim to patented lands of claimant whose declaratory statement land office declined to file; Sproat v. Durland, 2 Okl. 52, 35 Pac. 888, majority enjoining interference with possession of one homestead claimant by another. Applied conversely in In re Emblen, 161 U. S. 57, 40 L. 616, 16 S. Ct. 488, denying land department's further jurisdiction after patent issues. Approved, but not applied, in Thompson v. Ferry, — Ariz. —, 56 Pac. 743, where claimant failed to assert claim against cotenant obtaining patent till property changed hands. Cited, arguing, in Chapman v. Quinn, 56 Cal. 286, and Davis v. Magoun, — Iowa, —, 80 N. W. 428.

Public lands.— Courts may deal with possession of lands prior to patent, or enforce contracts concerning them, but cannot thus transfer title still in United States, p. 475.

Rule applied in Pappe v. Trout, 3 Okl. 264, 41 Pac. 399, between lessor and lessee; Reaves v. Oliver, 3 Okl. 68, 41 Pac. 355, and Wood v. Murray, 85 Iowa, 506, 52 N. W. 356, both protecting by adjunction possession of pre-emptor; Caldwell v. Bush, 6 Wyo. 353, 45 Pac. 490, holding purchaser of entryman's interest takes subject to land department's approval of proofs; dissenting opinion in McHenry v. Nygaard, 72 Minn. 13, 74 N. W. 1109, majority distinguishing. Approved in Woodruff v. Wallace, 3 Okl. 365, 41 Pac. 361, holding courts have jurisdiction to extent to which United States has parted with title.

Distinguished in McHenry v. Nygaard, 72 Minn. 11, 74 N. W. 1108, where claimant was out of possession.

Public lands.— Land department decisions on questions of title, within scope of authority, are, in general, everywhere conclusive except on appeal within department, and, as to facts involved, even in courts, in absence of fraud or mistake of law, p. 476.

Brygger*, 3 Wash. 350, 28 Pac. 657, holding decisions of secretary of interior under act of March 14, 1864, equally conclusive; dissenting opinion in South End, etc., Co. v. Tinney, 22 Nev. 44, 35 Pac. 97, majority holding that patent fraudulently obtained was not charged with trust in favor of stranger to application. Approved in Germania Iron Co. v. United States, 58 Fed. 336, 19 U. S. App. 10, on application of United States, vacating patent issued through inadvertence pending contest.

Distinguished in Craig v. Leitensdorfer, 123 U. S. 212, 31 L. 123, 8 S. Ct. 97, holding equity cannot interfere where complainant does not claim equitable title in disputed land; Sloan v. United States, 95 Fed. 194, under 28 Stat. 305, providing suit for Indian allotment claimant.

Public lands.—Though land department's decision is not conclusive on courts where mistake of law is clear on undisputed facts, yet upon questions of mixed law and fact not clearly separable it is conclusive. Hence facts and decision must appear in record, pp. 476, 477.

Followed in Durango Land, etc., Co. v. Evans, 80 Fed. 431, 49 U. S. App. 318, United States v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 95 Fed. 882, Green v. Hayes, 70 Cal. 281, 11 Pac. 719, and *Wiseman v. Patents.—Under section 35, act of 1870, abandonment prior to patent, or public use, or being on sale over two years before application, are pleadable to infringement action, pp. 483, 484.

Cited in 40 Am. Dec. 468, note.

Patents.—Abandonment may be express or implied and before or after application for patent, pp. 484, 485.

Cited, arguendo, in Western Electric Co. v. Sperry, etc., Co., 58 Fed. 191, 18 U. S. App. 177. See 47 Am. Dec. 443, note.

Patents.—In absence of extreme poverty or sickness, or like cause, abandonment is presumed from long neglect to renew application, e. g., where patent was obtained twenty-four years after rejection of first application, pp. 485, 486.

Rule applied in Rifle, etc., Co. v. Whitney, etc., Co., 118 U. S. 24, 30 L. 53, 6 S. Ct. 951, where applicant delayed renewing application eight years; Consolidated Fruit, etc., Co. v. Bellaire, etc., Co., 27 Fed. 382, where delay was fifteen years; Kittle v. Hall, 24 Blatchf. 192, 29 Fed. 514, where claim was enlarged four years after application. See 47 Am. Dec. 451, note.

Distinguished in American Bell Tel. Co. v. United States, 68 Fed. 552, 33 U. S. App. 236, where United States sought to cancel patent because of patent-office delay, prolonging monopoly.

Patents.—Revised statutes, section 4920, does not require notice to plaintiff of names of witnesses to prior invention or use, pp. 491, 492.

Followed in Allis v. Buckstaff, 13 Fed. 884, MacKnight v. M'Niece, 64 Fed. 117.

Witnesses.—Objection to examination of witnesses should be specific, in order to enable opposing party to remove it, if possible, p. 493.

Distinguished, arguendo, in MacKnight v. M'Niece, 64 Fed. 116.

Patents.—Woodbury patent 138,462, for improvement in planing machines, held void for abandonment, and because in common use before patent, pp. 480-494.

Cited in Pennsylvania R. R. v. Locomotive, etc., Co., 110 U. S. 494, 28 L. 223, 4 S. Ct. 222, and Union Gas-Engine Co. v. Doak, 88 Fed. 90, where old process was applied to analogous use; Peters v. Active Mfg. Co., 129 U. S. 537, 32 L. 741, 9 S. Ct. 392, affirming S. C., 21 Fed. 320, and Simonds Mfg. Co. v. E. C. Atkins & Co., 63 Fed. 587, all holding mere change of size not invention; Wilgus v. Germain, 72 Fed. 777, 44 U. S. App. 369, and Newton Mfg. Co. v. Wilgus, 90 Fed. 485, both holding change in sprinkler's size and application merely formal; Tod v. Wick Bros. & Co., 36 Ohio St. 393, holding formal differences do not prevent infringement.

101 U. S. 494-503, 25 L. 1065, BAKER v. HUMPHREY.

Witnesses unimpeached are presumed unimpeachable, p. 498.

Deeds.—Quitclaim grantee cannot take as bona fide purchaser, p. 499.

Reaffirmed in Runyon v. Smith, 18 Fed. 582, though grantor had purchased in good faith and for value; United States v. Sliney, 21 Fed. 895, though tenant in possession had attorned to grantor; Dunn v. Barnum, 51 Fed. 361, 10 U. S. App. 86, where grantee paid $100 for $30,000 property; Johnson v. Williams, 37 Kan. 181, 1 Am. St. Rep. 245, 14 Pac. 538, collecting authorities. Approved in McClung v. Steen, 32 Fed. 374, holding quitclaim of government patentee before patent, passed nothing; Beakley v. Robert, — Mich. —, 79 N. W. 193, under section 8998, Michigan compiled laws 1897, concerning priority over unrecorded deeds, and dissenting opinion in United States v. California, etc., Land Co., 49 Fed. 505, 7 U. S. App. 128, majority holding conveyance of present and future interest more than mere quitclaim.

Qualified in United States v. California, etc., Land Co., 148 U. S. 45, 37 L. 361, 13 S. Ct. 463, denying universality of rule; Knapp v. Bailey, 79 Me. 205, 1 Am. St. Rep. 300, 9 Atl. 124, and Bradley v. Merrill, 88 Me. 335, 34 Atl. 163, both holding quitclaim, in Maine, merely one circumstance bearing on question of notice.

Evidence.—Admissions against interest are admissible against maker of deed, and those claiming under him, e. g., grantee's statement that conveyance was made to defeat creditor, p. 499.

Followed in Henderson v. Wanamaker, 79 Fed. 738, 49 U. S. App. 178, holding grantor's admission of prior conveyance to another competent against grantee.

Estoppel.—Holder of legal title, out of possession, who draws up deed from mortgagee in possession to third party, and claims no interest for a long period of time, although cognizant of another's adverse possession, is afterwards estopped, and so is his grantee, p. 499.

Approved in dissenting opinion in Lake Superior Ship Canal, etc., Co. v. Cunningham, 44 Fed. 843, majority holding State cannot be estopped by agent's act, to claim land received for special purpose; Wehrman v. Conklin, 155 U. S. 327, 39 L. 174, 15 S. Ct. 134, arguendo. See 49 Am. Dec. 388, note.

Attorney and client.—Attorney cannot, without client's consent, buy and hold except in trust, adverse interest touching the subject-matter of his employment, whether in his own name or not, pp. 501-503.

Rule applied in Downard v. Hadley, 116 Ind. 135, 18 N. E. 459, following rule; Chaffin v. Hull, 49 Fed. 528, extending rule to confidential agent; Bergin v. Haight, 99 Cal. 56, 33 Pac. 761, holding administrator's attorney trustee for heir's assignees; Holmes v. Holmes, 106 Ga. 860, 33 S. E. 217, holding law implies trust in client's favor; Beedle v. Crane, 91 Mich. 431, 51 N. W. 1071, where attorney obtained release of father's interest in daughter's estate; Davis v. Kline, 96 Mo. 406, 9 S. W. 725, 2 L. R. A. 79, and note, holding employment to draw trust deed creates relationship of attorney; Eoff v. Irvine, 108 Mo. 383, 386, 32 Am. St. Rep. 611, 614, 18 S. W. 908, 909, though attorney has ceased to act for client, he is entitled to reimbursements for amount laid out; Yerkes v. Crum, 2 N. Dak. 77, 49 N. W. 423, decided adversely on point of practice; Humphrey v. Baker, 103 U. S. 736, 26 L. 456, arguendo. See 3 McCrary, 83, note.

101 U. S. 503-514, 25 L. 829, HALL v. RUSSELL.

Public lands.—During joint occupancy treaty, Oregon settlers acquired no title to soil, and Congress, on assuming undisputed dominion, had right to limit bounty as it chose, pp. 508, 509.

Reaffirmed in Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 51, 38 L. 350, 14 S. Ct. 567, as to tide-water lands.

Public lands.—There can be no present grant without present grantee, and congressional grant indicating future grantee takes effect in future, e. g., under section 4, Oregon "donation act," p. 509.

Rule applied in Spokane Falls, etc., Ry. v. Ziegler, 61 Fed. 393, 15 U. S. App. 472, applying rule to railroad grant under act March 3, 1875; Horsky v. Moran, 21 Mont. 362, 53 Pac. 1070, applying rule to mineral location.

Public lands.—Congressional grant is also law, and while words therein "shall be and is hereby granted" are appropriate to present grant, they must be construed to give effect to congressional intent. Hence, grant of section 4, Oregon "donation act," takes effect only on settler's compliance therewith, including for years' residence, pp. 509, 510.

Rule applied in Traver v. Tribou, 8 Sawy. 518, 520, 15 Fed. 30, 31, 32, holding settler and wife became qualified grantees upon approval of proof; Henry v. Lilliwaup, etc., Land Co., 83 Fed. 750, holding neglect of survey prevented vesting of title; New York Indians v. United States, 170 U. S. 18, 42 L. 933, 18 S. Ct. 534, holding treaty provision of June 15, 1838, for Kansas tract for New York Indians, present grant; dissenting opinion in Wineman v. Gastrell, 53 Fed. 705. 2 U. S. App. 449, majority holding Mississippi swamp-land grant of March 3, 1852, present guard. Cited, arguendo, in Hershberger v. Blewett, 55 Fed. 180.

Public lands.—Oregon territorial statutes providing for descent or devising of settlers' "donation act" rights as real estate, are in conflict with such act and inoperative, pp. 513, 514.

Approved in Hershberger v. Blewett, 55 Fed. 177, holding territorial legislature's construction of congressional grant invalid.

Public lands.—Settler's heirs under Oregon "donation act" take as donees from United States. Hence, interest of settler prior to four years' residence is not devisable, pp. 513-514.

Rule applied in Vance v. Burbank, 101 U. S. 520, 25 L. 931, holding both wife and children take as donees; Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 215, 31 L. 600, 8 S. Ct. 731, and Maynard v. Hill, 2 Wash. Ter. 327, 5 Pac. 719, both holding residence of divorced husband does not inure to benefit of wife; United States v. Tichenor, 8 Sawy. 149, 12 Fed. 421, holding married settler may abandon claim without wife's consent; Cutting v. Cutting, 6 Sawy. 399, 6 Fed. 262, holding widow and children take as donees free from decedent's debts; Hershberger v. Blewett, 55 Fed. 177, 178, holding donation claim patented to "heirs," not subject to administration; Stubblefield v. Menzies, 8 Sawy. 43, 11 Fed. 270, holding daughter took interest in father's claim as donee; Cooper v. Wilder, 111 Cal. 195, 196, 52 Am. St. Rep. 165, 166, 43 Pac. 592, applying rule to timber culture claim.

Distinguished in Brazee v. Schofield, 124 U. S. 502, 31 L. 489, 8 S. Ct. 607, where heir after long delay sought to set aside sale by guardian.

101 U. S. 514-521, 25 L. 929, VANCE v. BURBANK.

Public lands.—Land department officers are special tribunal to decide land patent questions; their decisions are judicial or quasi-judicial, and, in absence of fraud, conclusive on questions of fact, e. g., whether petitioner has complied with Oregon "donation act," including residence and cultivation, p. 519.

Followed in Steel v. Smelting Co., 106 U. S. 452, 27 L. 228, 1 S. Ct. 393. Rule applied in Noble v. Union River, etc., R. R., 147 U. S. 175, 37 L. 127, 13 S. Ct. 274, holding determination of railroad's qualification to receive grant not subject to collateral attack;

Bishop of Nesqually v. Gibbon, 158 U. S. 166, 39 L. 936, 15 S. Ct. 784, holding existence and occupancy of missionary station questions of fact; Pacific Coast Mining, etc., Co. v. Spargo, 8 Sawy. 647, 16 Fed. 349, Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Cannon, 54 Fed. 258, 7 U. S. App. 507, Carter v. Thompson, 65 Fed. 331, German Ins. Co. v. Hayden, 21 Colo. 136, 52 Am. St. Rep. 210, 40 Pac. 456, and Colburn v. Northern, etc., R. R., 13 Mont. 485, 34 Pac. 1019, all holding character of land question of fact; United States v. White, 9 Sawy. 128, 17 Fed. 563, where United States sued to annul patent; Shively v. Welch, 10 Sawy. 141, 20 Fed. 32, applying rule to Oregon tide-land commissioners; United States v. Hancock, 12 Sawy. 384, 30 Fed. 853, holding land commissioner's designation of boundaries of Mexican grant final; Hershberger v. Blewett, 55 Fed. 177, assuming patent to "heirs" amounted to finding that they took in own right; Golden Reward Mining Co. v. Buxton, etc., Co., 79 Fed. 874, where adverse claimant failed to contest application for mining patent; Illinois Steel Co. v. Budzisz, 82 Fed. 161, applying rule to patents issued under president's proclamation in 1835; Bishop Iron Co. v. Hyde, 66 Minn. 31, 68 N. W. 98, on question of qualification to pre-empt; Talbott v. King, 6 Mont. 106, holding mining patent conclusive of regular discovery and location; Horsky v. Moran, 21 Mont. 352, 53 Pac. 1066, upholding townsite patent where placer claimant failed to assert right at proper time; Knapp v. Thomas, 39 Ohio St. 387, 48 Am. Rep. 467, holding pardon of convict procured by false representations, not subject to collateral attack; Myers v. Berry, 3 Okl. 619, 41 Pac. 583, holding findings of townsite trustees conclusive in lot controversy, under act of May 14, 1890; Keane v. Brygger, 3 Wash. 350, 28 Pac. 657, holding decision of secretary of interior final, under act of March 14, 1864; Caldwell v. Bush, 6 Wyo. 353, 354, 45 Pac. 490, holding purchaser after final proofs takes sub judice, and cancelling desert-land entry after issue of final certificate and sale. Approved in Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 207, 40 L. 123, 16 S. Ct. 160, holding foreign judgment prima facie evidence, and, in absence of fraud or special ground, conclusive.

Distinguished in Silver Bow, etc., Co. v. Clark, 5 Mont. 424, 5 Pac. 581, holding limitation of surface rights in mining patent void.

Public lands.—To impeach land department decisions fraud must have been upon unsuccessful party, and have prevented presentation of real controversy, even perjury or forged documents being insufficient if disputed matter was presented, pp. 519, 520.

Followed in Steel v. Smelting Co., 106 U. S. 454, 27 L. 229, 1 S. Ct. 395. Rule applied in United States v. White, 9 Sawy. 129, 17 Fed. 563, 564, dismissing bill to vacate patent obtained by false affidavits; United States v. Rose, 11 Sawy. 84, 24 Fed. 196, holding patent issued ex parte on false evidence, voidable at suit of United States; Hilton v. Guyott, 42 Fed. 252, holding foreign judgment in personam not impeachable for false testimony; Reed v. Stanly, 89 Fed. 433, holding fraud presented in former suit will not support bill of review; Wiseman v. Eastman, 21 Wash. 170, 57 Pac. 400, where question of false testimony had been presented in land department; dissenting opinion in United States v. San Pedro, etc., Co., 4 N. Mex. 310, 17 Pac. 422, majority holding want of notice of contest and time for appeal, sufficient fraud. Approved in Sanford v. Sanford, 139 U. S. 648, 35 L. 292, 11 S. Ct. 667, holding complainant must show that but for fraud he would have succeeded; Kimberly v. Arms, 40 Fed. 558, holding perjury will not support bill of review unless determination controlled thereby; Durango Land, etc., Co. v. Evans, 80 Fed. 429, 49 U. S. App. 315, holding fraud must be shown to have caused incorrect decision; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Cannon, 46 Fed. 231, Scott v. Lockey Inv. Co., 60 Fed. 35, and Deweese v. Reinhard, 61 Fed. 781, 19 U. S. App. 698, all holding fraud perpetrated on United States available only at its instance. Cited, arguendo, in Plummer v. Brown, 70 Cal. 548, 12 Pac. 466.

Distinguished in Moffat v. United States, 112 U. S. 32, 28 L. 626, 5 S. Ct. 14, where patent was obtained by conspiracy of land-department officers; United States v. Minor, 114 U. S. 241, 243, 29 L. 113, 114, 5 S. Ct. 839, 840, reversing S. C., 26 Fed. 673, dismissing bill to vacate patent obtained ex parte by false affidavits. Approved, but not applied, in Craig v. Leitensdorfer, 123 U. S. 212, 31 L. 123, 8 S. Ct. 97, where plaintiff alleged no equitable title in disputed land.

Public lands.—Failure to present evidence before land department will not render decision inconclusive, in absence of fraud, where there is laches, e. g., where six years intervened between first appeal and final hearing by department, p. 520.

Rule applied in Manning v. San Jacinto, etc., Co., 7 Sawy. 433, 9 Fed. 738, holding ignorance of fraud will not excuse laches where facts are of public record; Norris v. Haggin, 12 Sawy. 61, 28 Fed. 285, where fifteen years elapsed between alleged incompetency and suit.

Public lands.—Oregon "donation act" grants to settlers possessory rights only in lands occupied, until compliance with requirements of act including residence and cultivation, p. 521.

Public lands.—Rights of wife and wife's heirs under Oregon "donation act" depend upon husband's compliance with requirements of act, and bar to him is bar to them, even if infants, p. 521.

Rule applied in Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 216, 31 L. 661, 8 S. Ct. 732, holding divorced wife took no interest; United States v. Tichenor, 12 Fed. 421, holding husband might abandon or dispose of rights without wife's consent (same act); Henry v. Lilliwaup, etc., Land Co., 83 Fed. 751, holding settler's neglect of survey defeated daughter's right to patent. Cited, arguendo, in Shively v. Welch, 10 Sawy. 144, 20 Fed. 34.

101 U. S. 522-528, 25 L. 792, CANAL CO v. RAY.

Contracts.—Party to contract who accepts or acquiesces in performance differing from specification, is bound thereby, and cannot afterwards claim acquiescence was merely temporary, pp. 524, 525.

Approved in Ballou v. Billings, 136 Mass. 309, holding repudiation of contract by one party entitles other to rescind; Carter v. Duncan, 84 N. C. 679, holding creditor's agreement with principal to extend time of payment after suit, released surety.

Evidence.—Contracts under seal may be varied by subsequent parol agreement, p. 527.

Reaffirmed in Brush-Swan Electric, etc., Co. v. Brush, etc., Co., 41 Fed. 169, where time of payment was extended; Platte Land Co. v. Hubbard, 12 Colo. App. 470, 56 Pac. 66, especially as to time and condition of payments; Herzog v. Sawyer, 61 Md. 354, either before or after breach; Day v. Mechanics, etc., Ins. Co., 88 Mo. 332, 57 Am. Rep. 420, though contract provide against waiver of rights thereunder; Kirchner v. Laughlin, 4 N. Mex. 221, 17 Pac. 135, where situation was altered by acting upon new contract. Approved in Doherty v. Doe, 18 Colo. 460, 33 Pac. 167, providing parol agreement be executed. See 56 Am. St. Rep. 670, note.

Contracts.—Where in water contract with mill, canal company reserved right to require change in water gauge's location to prevent interference with navigation, change cannot be enforced except for such purpose, p. 528.

101 U. S. 528-540, 25 L. 912, RAILWAY CO. v. PHILADELPHIA.

Constitutional law — Taxation.—Statutory tax exemption or limitation made for valuable consideration received by State, is contract protected from repeal or modification within Constitution, article 1, section 10; but such exemptions are strictly construed, p. 532.

Applied conversely in Railroad v. Alsbrook, 110 N. C. 162, 14 S. E. 658, where State received no consideration.

Street railroads.—Ordinance requiring $50 street-car license is valid police regulation, pp. 530, 535.

Approved in Allerton v. Chicago, 9 Biss. 557, reaffirming rule; Denver City Ry. v. Denver, 2 Colo. App. 40, 30 Pac. 1050, holding city empowered to impose license has large discretion as to amount.

Constitutional law.—Philadelphia street-railroad charter of April 8, 1864, requiring payment to city of "such license as is now paid by other companies," is not contract violable by subsequent act requiring higher license, p. 536.

Approved in State v. Hilbert, 72 Wis. 195, 39 N. W. 330, holding license fee alterable by ordinance under revised statutes, section 1862.

Taxation.—Statutory tax exemption being invidious, must be clear and unambiguous, and, if indirect, must be only consistent construction, and conclusive of legislative intention, p. 539.

Approved in Sioux City, etc., Ry. v. Sioux City, 138 U. S. 107, 108, 34 L. 901, 902, 11 S. Ct. 229, holding franchise ordinance requiring company to pave between tracks, did not prevent later requirement of additional foot outside; Springfield v. Smith, 138 Mo. 655, 60 Am. St. Rep. 574, 40 S. W. 759, 37 L. R. A. 448, 449, holding failure of franchise ordinance to require license does not exempt.

Constitutional law.—Acts of incorporation subsequent to Constitution are construed as if containing its provisions; hence, street-railroad charter subsequent to Pennsylvania Constitution, is alterable or revocable by legislature, p. 539.

Approved in Mayor v. Twenty-third St. Ry. Co., 113 N. Y. 318, 21 N. E. 62, upholding act of 1873, exacting percentage of receipts instead of license; and State v. Hilbert, 72 Wis. 193, 39 N. W. 329, holding irrevocable contract under similar Constitution, ultra vires of legislature.

Constitutional law.—Private-corporation charters, when accepted, are usually executed contracts, but provisions thereof are strictly construed in public favor, p. 540.

101 U. S. 541-543, 25 L. 944, LOVELL v. DAVIS.

Shipping.—Recital in charter-party of ship "now in harbor," is representation, not warranty, and immaterial if known to be untrue; hence, it will not support rescission for delay in presenting ship for cargo, p. 542.

Shipping.—Where charter-party of ship at sea fixes no time for receiving cargo, reasonable diligence, and only such, is necessary in reaching port, p. 542.

Appeal and error.—Exception to overruling of question asked is unavailing, when witness did not answer, p. 543.

Not cited.

101 U. S. 543-550, 25 L. 1068, RAILROAD CO. v. UNITED STATES.

Internal revenue.—Under revised statutes, section 951, credit for taxes erroneously assessed and collected cannot be allowed defendant in suit by United States, where not first presented to treasury as therein provided, pp. 548, 549.

Approved in Savings Inst. v. Blair, 116 U. S. 206, 29 L. 659, 6 S. Ct. 356, where claim was not presented within two years allowed; United States v. Wade, 75 Fed. 267, upon suit against former quartermaster for account; Yates v. United States, 90 Fed. 59, 61 U. S. App. 128, holding proof of presentation cannot be made by parol.

Internal revenue.— Under act of July 13, 1866, taxing receipts of mail-carrying contracts made before August 1, 1866, contract will be implied from payment of compensation commencing before such time, p. 549.

Internal revenue.— Railroad companies were liable for United States tax of 5 per cent. on bond interest paid August 1, 1870, p. 549.

Internal revenue.— Tax on bond interest under act of 1870, was not leviable or collectible in 1871 upon interest neither payable nor paid in that year, p. 550.

Approved in United States v. Indianapolis R. R., 113 U. S. 712, 28 L. 1140, 5 S. Ct. 716, where interest was earned in 1871, but payable in 1872; United States v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 33 Fed. 832, holding assumption of debts upon consolidation is not payment out of earnings.

101 U. S. 551-555, 25 L. 1026, NOUGUE v. CLAPP.

Courts.— Federal courts cannot annul judgments of State courts having jurisdiction, for fraud. Recourse must be to State courts, e. g., where clerk of State court refused to issue writ of injunction upon court's order, and property in question was foreclosed, p. 555.

Rule applied in Elder v. Richmond, etc., Min. Co., 58 Fed. 540, 19 U. S. App. 118, following rule; Central Trust Co. v. St. Louis, etc., Ry., 41 Fed. 555, applying rule to State judgment against Federal court receiver; Graham v. Boston, etc., R. R., 118 U. S. 177, 30 L. 204, 6 S. Ct. 1018, affirming S. C., 14 Fed. 760, where foreclosure still reviewable by State court; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Nat. Docks, etc., Ry., 58 Fed. 931, refusing relief against amendment in special proceeding, where State court had general jurisdiction; Furnald v. Glenn, 64 Fed. 54, 26 U. S. App. 202, affirming S. C., 56 Fed. 374, holding equity will not annul another court's proceedings for fraud where relief may be had therein; Jackson v. Gould, 74 Me. 574, holding action of review not removable to Federal court. Applied conversely in Central Trust Co. v. Western, etc., R. Co., 89 Fed. 27, restraining interference with Circuit Court judgment. Approved in M'Dermott v. Copeland, 9 Fed. 537, unless where founded on both fraud and collusion; Denton v. Baker, 93 Fed. 49, holding relief against judgment obtained by fraud, barred by laches; Edwards Mfg. Co. v. Sprague, 76 Me. 62, holding suit to enjoin action not removable, except in bankruptcy cases; Hendrickson v. Bradley, 85 Fed. 515, 55 U. S. App. 727, arguendo.

Distinguished in Marshall v. Holmes, 141 U. S. 600, 35 L. 874, 12 S. Ct. 65, where complaint alleged discovery of part proof of forgery after judgment; M'Neil v. M'Neil, 78 Fed. 835, holding Federal courts have equity jurisdiction to relieve against State judgments obtained by fraud.

101 U. S. 555-557, 25 L. 961, DURANT v. ESSEX CO.

Judgment, absolute in terms, dismissing bill on merits, is bar to further litigation, p. 556.

Cited in 85 Am. Dec. 689, note.

Appeal and error.—On mandate of Supreme Court, affirming decree, Circuit Court must execute, and not rescind or modify it, though not unanimously affirmed; e. g., absolute decree of dismissal, p. 557.

Rule applied in Kingsbury v. Buckner, 134 U. S. 670, 33 L. 1055, 10 S. Ct. 645, holding same matter cannot be reviewed again on second appeal; In re Washington, etc., R. R., 140 U. S. 96, 35 L. 341, 11 S. Ct. 674, denying inferior court's right to add interest not specifically allowed; Gaines v. Rugg, 148 U. S. 242, 243, 37 L. 437, 13 S. App. 411, both excepting interlocutory injunctions; Kolb v. Swann, 68 Md. 521, 13 Atl. 380, holding authority of judgment by equally-divided court, not binding in analogous cases; Gale v. Nickerson, 144 Mass. 418, 11 N. E. 716, holding, in Massachusetts, petition to revise probate decree should be heard below first. Distinguished in Cleveland v. Quilty, 128 Mass. 579, where appeal was dismissed because of appellant's incapacity to appeal.

Bills and notes.—Bona fide purchaser for value of lost or stolen bill or note, payable to bearer, or indorsed in blank, acquires good title, not as incident of negotiability, but because they circulate commercially as evidence of money, pp. 563, 564.

Rule applied in Saloy v. Bank, 39 La. Ann. 93, 1 So. 659, applying rule to purchase of negotiable bonds from bailee; Hynes v.

Winston, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 40 S. W. 1025, where notes were obtained by fraud. Approved in Atlas Nat. Bank v. Holm, 71 Fed. 492, 34 U. S. App. 472, holding willful avoidance of knowledge conclusive of bad faith; Fairex v. Bier, 37 La. Ann. 825, holding good faith presumed in purchaser of negotiable bonds before maturity; Buchanan v. Wren, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 572, 30 S. W. 1083, holding mala fides must be proven; Pugh v. Moore, etc., Co., 44 La. Ann. 245, 10 So. 723, and State v. Hart, 46 La. Ann. 51, 14 So. 511, both holding instrument originating in fraud utterly void.

Bills and notes, when overdue, are negotiable, but purchaser takes subject to defenses against prior holders, p. 563.

Approved in Allen v. O'Donald, 12 Sawy. 32, 28 Fed. 26, holding assignee of matured notes may sue in own name.

Carriers.— Sale of lost or stolen bill of lading, like goods thereby represented, does not vest title in bona fide purchaser for value, unless owner be estopped by carelessness in enabling thief or finder to occupy position of owner, pp. 564, 565.

Rule applied in Friedlander v. Texas, etc., Ry., 130 U. S. 424, 32 L. 994, 9 S. Ct. 572, holding railroad not liable for fraudulent bill issued by agents; Weyand v. Atchison, etc., Ry., 75 Iowa, 579, 9 Am. St. Rep. 509, 39 N. W. 902, 1 L. R. A. 653, and n., holding carrier liable who delivered goods to holder of bill not named therein; Knox v. Eden Musee Co., 148 N. Y. 456, 51 Am. St. Rep. 705, 42 N. E. 992, 31 L. R. A. 783, applying rule to lost or stolen stock certificate; O'Herron v. Gray, 168 Mass. 576, 60 Am. St. Rep. 413, 47 N. E. 430, 40 L. R. A. 500, to stock certificate fraudulently pledged by cashier; Scollans v. Rollins, 173 Mass. 279, 53 N. E. 864, to bond coupon, collecting authorities; The Serapis, 37 Fed. 438, holding bottomry bill only quasi-negotiable. Applied, conversely, in Clay, etc. v. Gage, etc., 1 Tex. Civ. App. 663, 20 S. W. 949, holding owner of lost cotton receipts not estopped to maintain title if not negligent. Approved in Montclair v. Ramsdell, 107 U. S. 158, 27 L. 435, 2 S. Ct. 399, holding good faith of bond purchaser presumed; Haas v. Kansas City, etc., R. R., 81 Ga. 796, 7 S. E. 630, holding assignor's knowledge of carrier's inability to deliver goods, binds assignee of bill. See 38 Am. Dec. 422, note.

Distinguished in Raleigh, etc., R. R. v. Lowe, 101 Ga. 330, 28 S. E. 868, holding owner not estopped where bill was stolen after delivery of goods by carrier.

Carriers.— Bill of lading is regarded as merchandise thereby represented, which may be sold or pledged by transfer of bill, but transfer of symbol can give no greater right than thing itself, pp. 564, 565.

Followed in Raleigh, etc., R. R. v. Lowe, 101 Ga. 329, 28 S. E. 868. Rule applied in Mill Co. v. Burlington, etc., R. R., 102 Iowa, 267, 71 N. W. 257, holding delivery of goods vests title as against subsequent assignment of bill; First Nat. Bank v. McAndrews, 5 Mont. 329, 51 Am. Rep. 53, 5 Pac. 881, holding transmission of bill delivery of goods.

Statutes in derogation of common law are strictly construed; hence Missouri statute making bills of lading negotiable in same manner as bills and notes, does not confer other characteristics than negotiability, p. 565.

Principle applied in construing strictly statutes referred to in following cases: Jasper Trust Co. v. Kansas City, etc., R. R., 99 Ala. 423, 42 Am. St. Rep. 79, 14 So. 549, section 1179, code of 1886; Lal-lande v. His Creditors, 42 La. Ann. 712, 7 So. 897, section 6, act 150, of 1868; Nat. Bank v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 44 Minn. 237, 20 Am. St. Rep. 577, 46 N. W. 560, 9 L. R. A. 269, general statutes of 1878, chapter 124, section 17, all similar statutes; Yarwood v. Happy, 18 Wash. 249, 51 Pac. 461, similar statute concerning warehouse receipts; Gwathmay v. Clisby, 24 Blatchf. 401, 31 Fed. 222, Alabama laws of 1828, page 37, regarding promissory notes; Harrington v. Herrick, 64 Fed. 471, 29 U. S. App. 103, sections 947-953, volume 2, Hill's Washington code, regarding administration of partners' estates; Commercial Bank v. Hurt, 99 Ala. 140, 42 Am. St. Rep. 45, 12 So. 571, 19 L. R. A. 704, section 1178, code of 1886, as to warehouse receipts; Commercial Bank v. Lee, 99 Ala. 496, 12 So. 574, same; Nelson v. Owen, 113 Ala. 382, 21 So. 78, section 1784, code of 1886, regarding pledges; Canadian Bank v. McCrea, 106 Ill. 294, section 24, act of 1871, regarding warehouse receipts; Lyon v. Lyon, 88 Me. 404, 34 Atl. 182, public laws of 1887, chapter 14, regarding rights of illegitimates; Starnes v. Hill, 112 N. C. 20, 16 S. E. 1017, 22 L. R. A. 604, applying strict construction to real estate statute. Approved in Steiger v. Third Nat. Bank, 2 McCrary, 499, 504, 6 Fed. 574, 579, limiting factor's power to pledge goods to charges and advances; Robinson v. Memphis, etc., R. Co., 9 Fed. 136, holding indorsee of bill may sue carrier for non-delivery under Tennessee code, section 1967; Munroe v. Philadelphia, etc., Co., 75 Fed. 546, holding Pennsylvania act of September 24, 1866, not limited to bills for goods in transit to warehousemen; First Nat. Bank v. Mt. Pleasant, etc., Co., 103 Iowa, 522, 72 N. W. 690, upholding title of bank which discounted draft accompanied by bill, but advanced no money till after creditor attached; Dymock v. Missouri, etc., Ry., 54 Mo. App. 410, holding assignor of bill is estopped to claim title as against assignee's innocent vendee; Nat. Bank v. Railway, 25 S. C. 223, holding bill of lading negotiable to extent of passing title to goods; Landa v. Lattin Bros., 19 Tex. Civ. App. 250, 46 S. W. 50, holding pledgee of bill of lading takes subject to warranty of goods. See 38 Am. Dec. 420, 423, and 100 Am. Dec. 244, notes.

Carriers.—Purchaser of stolen bill of lading, with reason to doubt vendor's title, cannot hold goods as against bank advancing money thereon, p. 566.

Approved in Allen v. St. Louis Bank, 120 U. S. 36, 38, 30 L. 577, 578, 7 S. Ct. 464, 466, applying rule to unauthorized pledge by factor; Estate of Littell, 50 La. Ann. 306, 307, 23 So. 317, where transferee has reason to believe note was wrongfully transferred; State v. Ransberger, 106 Mo. 140, 17 S. W. 292, arguendo.

Appeal and error.—Mistake in entering verdict, being amendable by trial court, does not, on appeal, invalidate properly-entered judgment, p. 567.

Approved in Gay v. Joplin, 4 McCrary, 463, 13 Fed. 653, holding informal verdict amendable under section 954, revised statutes; Bowden v. Burnham, 59 Fed. 755, 19 U. S. App. 448, holding jurisdictional amendment relates to suit's commencement. See 4 McCrary, 465, note, arguendo.

Perkins*, 76 Fed. 84, all holding delay must be shown consistent with proper diligence. Approved in Moore v. Boyd, 74 Cal. 171, 15 Pac. 672, arguendo. See 23 Am. St. Rep. 149, note.

Distinguished in Theroux v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 64 Fed. 88, 27 U. S. App. 508, denying motion for judgment because complaint shows bar, after answer failing to plead statute; Rosenthal v. Walker, 111 U. S. 190, 28 L. 397, 4 S. Ct. 385, as to action by assignee in bankruptcy under revised statutes, section 5057; Amy v. Watertown, 22 Fed. 420, arguendo.

Equity rule 29, of Supreme Court, does not apply where leave to amend bill is asked after demurrer is allowed, p. 568.

Equity.— Under equity rule 35, of Supreme Court, permission to amend is discretionary, and error must affirmatively appear, to justify review. Hence, record must show amendment asked, to secure review on appeal, p. 568.

101 U. S. 569-570, 25 L. 791, UNITED STATES v. DAWSON.

Appeal and error.— Circuit Court's finding of fact cannot be reviewed on error, p. 570.

Executors and administrators.— Final settlements of executors and administrators, when adjudicated, have force of judgment, but only as between parties thereto; hence, probate record showing mortgage note charged to executor is not conclusive of payment, in favor of defendant in foreclosure, p. 572.

Approved in Litchfield v. Goodnow, 123 U. S. 551, 31 L. 201, 8 S. Ct. 210, Johnson v. Richmond, etc., Imp. Co., 63 Fed. 496, and Farrell v. St. Paul, 62 Minn. 277, 54 Am. St. Rep. 645, 64 N. W. 811, 29 L. R. A. 781, all holding judgments conclusive only on parties and privies.

101 U. S. 572-576, 25 L. 923, COWDREY v. VANDENBURGH.

Assignments.— Purchaser of non-negotiable demand takes subject to owner's rights, unless latter estopped by own acts; e. g., street contractor's credit certificate for work done, pp. 574, 575.

Rule applied in Chase v. Whitmore, 68 Cal. 547, 9 Pac. 944, where depositary sold overdue note.

Estoppel — Property.— Where owner clothes another with apparent title, as by indorsement in blank, and delivery of non-negotiable demand, law protects purchaser for value; aliter, where consideration not proved, pp. 575, 576.

Followed in Cowdrey v. Vandeburgh, 154 U. S. 659, 38 L. 1093, 14 S. Ct. 1199. Rule applied in Looney v. District of Columbia, 113 U. S. 261, 28 L. 974, 5 S. Ct. 464, and Laughlin v. District of Columbia, 116 U. S. 489, 491, 29 L. 702, 703, 6 S. Ct. 474, both protecting district honoring demand in hands of such purchaser; Preston v. Witherspoon, 109 Ind. 464, 58 Am. Rep. 423, 9 N. E. 588, where wheat depositor knew warehouseman was selling from commingled stock; Hirsch v. Norton, 115 Ind. 343, 17 N. Trusts.—Implied trusts rest on intention of parties, or arise by operation of law, independent of intention, p. 577.

Approved in Lackett v. Rumbaugh, 45 Fed. 37, implying trust where trust deed for married woman was destroyed and replaced by another.

Reformation of instruments.—Equity will always relieve against written contracts or instruments where mistake of facts is admitted, and when clearly proved, reasons seem equally satisfactory, p. 583.

Cited in 65 Am. St. Rep. 481, note.

Reformation of instruments.—Where, by draftsman's mistake of fact or law, instrument fails to express prior agreement of parties, oral or written, equity will correct mistake, p. 583.

Rule applied in Norton v. Kellogg, 41 Fed. 454, where formal execution of deed was defective; Benson v. Markoe, 37 Minn. 34, 5 Am. St. Rep. 819, 33 N. W. 40, where mortgage was drawn to "successors" instead of "heirs;" Dennis v. Northern Pac. Ry., 20 Wash. 326, 55 Pac. 212, where grantor's agent, by mistake, used wrong form, omitting reservation of right of way. Approved in Adams v. Reed, 11 Utah, 503, 40 Pac. 724, treating warranty as executory contract where representation of title was innocent but untrue. See 65 Am. St. Rep. 482, 487, 488, note, collecting authorities.

Distinguished in Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Judy, 146 Ind. 340, 342, 43 N. E. 264, 265, where creditor procured mortgage of what he supposed all debtor's land.

Evidence.—In absence of fraud or mistake, parol evidence is inadmissible in equity as at law, to vary written contract, but equity admits proof of fraud or mistake in reducing it to writing, pp. 584, 585.

Cited in 65 Am. St. Rep. 492, note.

Reformation of instruments.—Trust deed, omitting certain beneficiaries by mistake, may be reformed, and conveyance directed thereunder, where evidently made under provision of former deed, and reformation asked harmonizes with mutual recognition of rights and division of expenses for many years, p. 586.

Reformation of instruments.—Laches are not imputed to beneficiary in possession who delays applying for reformation of trust deed pending ejectment action which, if defeated, might establish her title, p. 588.

Courts.—Federal jurisdiction depends on citizenship of real, not formal parties such as trustee's executors joined merely to execute conveyance asked, p. 589.

Rule applied in Delaware County v. Diebold, etc., Co., 133 U. S. 486, 33 L. 679, 10 S. Ct. 403, where assignor of contract sued on was brought in and disclaimed interest; Pond v. Sibley, 19 Blatchf. 197, 7 Fed. 135, where directors were unnecessary parties to suit against corporation; Patterson v. Mater, 26 Fed. 32, holding marshal in possession, formal party to replevin; Maynard v. Green, 30 Fed. 644, holding incomplete corporation formal party to suit between partners attempting incorporation; May v. St. John, 38 Fed. 771, holding municipal authorities formal parties to action to annul judgment against city; Dow v. Bradstreet Co., 46 Fed. 827, where sham party was joined to defeat jurisdiction. Applied, conversely, in Duchesse D'Auxy v. Porter, 41 Fed. 68, holding non-resident partners of defendant firm necessary parties; Deere, etc., Co. v. Chicago, etc., Ry., 85 Fed. 879, holding poverty does not make party formal; Popp v. Cincinnati, etc., Ry., 96 Fed. 467, holding foreign administrator suing for decedent's death, not nominal party. Cited, arguendo, in Excelsior Pebble, etc., Co. v. Brown, 74 Fed. 324, 42 U. S. App. 55.

Distinguished in Blackburn v. Portland, etc., Min. Co., 175 U. S. 575, where defendant alleged to have sold interest was applying for mining patent; *Chester v. 101 U. S. 591-596, 25 L. 1028, HOLLINGSWORTH v. FLINT.

Trespass to try title.—In action to try title, deed which does not purport to convey land in question, is inadmissible, pp. 593-595.

Trial.—Married woman's deed invalid to pass title until acknowledged, is not admissible to show title if acknowledged pending suit, p. 596.

Approved in Carn v. Haisley, 22 Fla. 320, following rule; Maryland Tube Works v. West End Imp. Co., 87 Md. 218, 39 Atl. 624, 39 L. R. A. 815, holding payment, pending suit, of tax essential to corporate existence, does not validate such suit; Dean v. Metropolitan, etc., Ry., 119 N. Y. 545, 23 N. E. 1055, conveyance during action of trespass does not defeat plaintiff's right to damages.

Trespass to try title.—Deed to plaintiff is inadmissible to prove title when plaintiff fails to show grantor's title, and declines to state that he expects to, p. 596.

101 U. S. 597-601, 25 L. 1019, BECHTEL v. UNITED STATES.

Statutes, remedial and relating to procedure, are liberally construed with reference to purpose thereof; hence, revised statutes, section 5597, preserves admissibility of transcripts from books of treasury, and of bond copies attached thereto under act of 1797, notwithstanding repeal thereof by section 5596, p. 600.

Approved in Smithmeyer v. United States, 147 U. S. 358, 37 L. 200, 13 S. Ct. 326, holding act of October, 1888, did not destroy general jurisdiction of Court of Claims.

Appeal and error.—Error must be affirmatively shown. Where deduction is claimed under revised statutes, section 3425, to purchaser of internal revenue stamps who furnishes die, and record fails to show such act or admission thereof, it cannot be assumed, pp. 600, 601.

101 U. S. 601-609, 25 L. 1070, CRAMPTON v. ZABRISKIE.

Municipal corporations.—Under New Jersey act of February 26, 1874, restricting county expenditures to amount raised by tax for same fiscal year, bonds issued to purchase courthouse land, payable in one year, no provision for payment by taxation being made, are void, p. 609.

Rule applied in Atlantic City Water Works v. Read, 50 N. J. L. 668, 15 Atl. 11, annulling ordinances and water contracts based thereon for similar reason; Howard v. Smith, 91 Tex. 15, 33 S. W. 16, holding similar street-paving contract void, though city's debt-contracting capacity ample when payment due. Applied, conversely, in Chapman v. Douglas, 107 U. S. 360, 27 L. 383, 2 S. Ct. 73, holding "poor farm" vendor may force reconveyance from county where purchase unauthorized. Approved in Marley v. State, 58 N. J. L. 211, 33 Atl. 210, holding freeholders not guilty of "attempt," where thing done was nullity.

Distinguished in Skirving v. Nat. Life Ins. Co., 59 Fed. 744, 19 U. S. App. 442, refusing to enjoin bona fide judgment creditor of school district, consideration being retained; Weber v. Spokane Nat. Bank, 64 Fed. 211, 29 U. S. App. 97, reversing S. C., 50 Fed. 737, as to national bank indebtedness beyond statutory limit.

Municipal corporations.—Resident taxpayers may maintain bill to prevent illegal expenditure, or creation of debt by county, p. 609.

Rule applied in following cases, upholding such right of taxpayer for purposes indicated: The Liberty Bell, 23 Fed. 845, to enjoin city appropriation for return of Liberty Bell to Philadelphia; Russell v. Tate, 52 Ark. 546, 20 Am. St. Rep. 195, 13 S. W. 132, 7 L. R. A. 183, and n., to prevent town council appropriating money for county courthouse; Winn v. Shaw, 87 Cal. 636, 25 Pac. 969, to enjoin warrant issue for land purchase, not founded on required notice; Bradford v. San Francisco, 112 Cal. 543, 44 Pac. 914, to enjoin tax to pay debt incurred exceeding city revenue; Catron v. Board of Commrs., 5 N. Mex. 234, 21 Pac. 68, to restrain warrant issue exceeding statutory debt limitation; Nelson v. Garfield, 6 Colo. App. 283, 40 Pac. 475, to restrain performance of county contract for bridge in incorporated town; Handy v. New Orleans, 39 La. Ann. 109, 1 So. 595, to annul ordinance and lease of wharves; Telle v. School Board, 44 La. Ann. 368, 10 So. 802, to annul improper sale of school section; Tukey v. Omaha, 54 Neb. 378, 69 Am. St. Rep. 716, 74 N. W. 615, to restrain construction of market-house in public park, vote authorizing purchase of site; Laughlin v. County Commrs., 3 N. Mex. 300, 5 Pac. 818, to prevent delivery of railroad bonds; Stratford v. Greensboro, 124 N. C. 134, 32 S. E. 396, to prevent opening of streets for private gain; Carman v. Woodruff, 10 Or. 135, to have county funds returned; Butler v. Ellerbe, 44 S. C. 283, 22 S. E. 437, to restrain State officers from paying salaries under unconstitutional election law; Graves v. Jasper School, etc., 2 S. Dak. 418, 50 N. W. 905, to restrain removal of schoolhouse; Krieschel v. County Commrs., 12 Wash. 438, 41 Pac. 189, to enjoin county seat's removal; Times Publishing Co. v. Everett, 9 Wash. 522, 43 Am. St. Rep. 868, 37 Pac. 696, to enjoin letting of contract to any but lowest bidder; Lynchburg, etc., Ry. v. Dameron, 95 Va. 546, 547, 28 S. E. 952, to enjoin levy of unauthorized tax; Nevill v. Clifford, 55 Wis. 172, 12 N. W. 424, to set aside collusive judgment against school district. Applied, also, in Miller v. Perris, etc., Dist., 92 Fed. 267, holding bill need not show return of consideration; Stevens v. St. Mary's, etc., School, 144 Ill. 348, 36 Am. St. Rep. 443, 32 N. E. 965, 18 L. R. A. 836, upholding taxpayer's right to apply for relief, independent of merits of case; City Item, etc., Co. v. City, 51 La. Ann. 716, 25 So. 315, holding taxpayer's standing in court not destroyed by payment of tax; Davenport v. Kleinschmidt, 6 Mont. 522, 13 Pac. 250, where city water contract was within debt-incurring limitation. Approved in State v. Commrs. White Pine Co., 22 Nev. 87, 35 Pac. 487, holding any taxpayer may oppose allowance of claim against county; Christie v. Malden, 23 W. Va. 671, holding equity has jurisdiction where tax is ultra vires, not merely erroneous. See 2 Am. St. Rep. 97, note, collecting cases.

Distinguished in Colorado Pav. Co. v. Murphy, 78 Fed. 30, 49 U. S. App. 20, 37 L. R. A. 634, denying that lowest bidder may enjoin city contract with others; Irvin v. Gregory, 86 Ga. 607, 13 S. E. 120, where most of applicants voted for and acquiesced in school establishment; Stevens v. St. Mary's, etc., School, 144 Ill. 351, 36 Am. St. Rep. 446, 32 N. E. 967, 18 L. R. A. 837, refusing to restrain municipal legislative functions; Hayes v. Davis, 23 Nev. 320, 46 Pac. 888, where legislature authorized issue of duplicate certificate of indebtedness, original being lost; Jones v. Reed, 3 Wash. 63, 64, 27 Pac. 1069, as to State officers; dissenting opinion in Davenport v. Kleinschmidt, 6 Mont. 555, 566, 13 Pac. 266, 272, holding mere laying of pipes under water contract not restrainable.

101 U. S. 610-612, 25 L. 847, BIBLE SOCIETY v. GROVE.

Courts.—Federal courts take suits neither by removal nor originally, unless jurisdictional facts appear of record, p. 611.

Rule applied in Mackaye v. Mallory, 19 Blatchf. 174, 6 Fed. 752, holding facts may be shown by State court pleadings and petition taken together; Woolridge v. M'Kenna, 8 Fed. 677, holding facts cannot be shown by State court pleadings alone; White v. Holt, 20 W. Va. 808, compelling trial by State court of case removed without necessary showing.

Removal of causes.—Under revised statutes, section 639, subdivision 3, applicants cannot remove case for prejudice or local influence unless opponents are shown to be citizens of State sued in, p. 612.

Rule applied in Young v. Parker, 132 U. S. 271, 33 L. 353, 10 S. Ct. 76, and Thouron v. East Tennessee, etc., Ry., 38 Fed. 678, both holding all on one side, and none on other, must be citizen of State sued in; Aldrich v. Crouch, 11 Biss. 183, 10 Fed. 307, remanding case removed at instance of resident of State sued in.

Removal of causes.—18 Stat. 470, has not changed revised statutes, section 639, subdivision 3, upon which removals for prejudice or local influence still depend, pp. 611, 612.

Approved and relied upon in Hanrick v. Hanrick, 153 U. S. 197, 38 L. 687, 14 S. Ct. 837, Sutherland v. Jersey City, etc., R. Co., 22 Fed. 357, and Stix & Co. v. Keith, 90 Ala. 125, 7 So. 424, all holding revised statutes, section 639, subdivision 3, not repealed by 18 Stat. 470; Baltimore, etc., R. R. v. Bates, 119 U. S. 467, 30 L. 438, 7 S. Ct. 286, and Melendy v. Currier, 22 Blatchf. 503, 22 Fed. 129, both holding cause pending for second trial removable thereunder; Bates v. Railroad, 39 Ohio St. 165, both upholding right of removal thereunder any time before trial; Stone v. Sargent, 129 Mass. 512, and Elliott v. Stocks & Bro., 67 Ala. 299, both holding case removable thereunder, though twice continued by consent. Cited in Jefferson v. Driver, 117 U. S. 274, 29 L. 897, 6 S. Ct. 730, holding separable controversy provision of subdivision 2, without application to subdivision 3.

Distinguished in Duncan v. Associated Press, 81 Fed. 421, under 1 Supp. revised statutes, pp. 611, 612.

Removal of causes.—Removal act of March 3, 1875, section 3, requiring petition to be filed in State court "before or at term at which cause could be first tried and before trial," as to suits pending meant first such term after passage thereof. Hence, case once tried thereafter, and then continued at two different terms was not removable, p. 612.

Relied upon in Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Walrath, 11 Biss. 436, 16 Fed. 163, remanding case once tried, commenced after act passed; Neudecker v. Rosenbaum, 19 Blatchf. 37, 6 Fed. 99, holding removal too late after new trial granted; Ex parte Jones, 66 Ala. 206, holding three continuances fatal to removal; Johnson v. Brewers' Fire Ins. Co., 51 Wis. 579, 9 N. W. 658, upholding petition at first term after passage of act; Jones v. Foster, 61 Wis. 28, 20 N. W. 786, holding above act means before any trial.

101 U. S. 612-621, 25 L. 895, GATES v. GOODLOE.

Bankruptcy.—Where, after discharge, bankrupts sue out writ of error and assignee applies to be, and is, substituted as plaintiff in error, writ is maintainable, p. 613.

Approved in Bowden v. Johnson, 107 U. S. 264, 27 L. 391, 2 S. Ct. 257, substituting new receiver for predecessor in whose name appeal was taken; United States v. Hopewell, 51 Fed. 800, 5 U. S. App. 137, allowing substitution of attorney-general as appellant instead of collector; Young v. Cardwell, 6 Lea, 197, sustaining bankrupt's appeal from decree in suit pending during bankruptcy proceeding. And see 91 Am. Dec. 280, note.

War.—It is citizen's duty to return if abroad upon war breaking out, or, if civil war, to leave rebellious section, p. 617.

War.—Military seizure of rents in Memphis by Union army to prevent same being sent within Confederate lines is proper military precaution, consistent with established rules of war, pp. 617, 618.

Contracts.—Lessee dispossessed by competent military authority is not liable to lessor for rent accruing during dispossession, and notes given for rent are discharged, p. 621.

Miscellaneous.—Cited in Insurance Oil, etc., Co. v. Scott, 33 La. Ann. 952, and Queen Ins. Co. v. Leonard, 9 Ohio C. C. 51, without application.

Corporations at common law might acquire, hold, convey and mortgage both personal and real estate unless restrained by charter or by Parliament, p. 625.

Approved in Central Trust Co. v. Columbus, etc., Ry., 87 Fed. 824, upholding railroad mortgage reasonably within scope of charter powers; Wright v. Hughes, 119 Ind. 328, 12 Am. St. Rep. 416, 21 N. E. 909, corporations with general power to engage in business may borrow as individuals.

Approved, but not applied, in Lowry Banking Co. v. Empire Co., 91 Ga. 627, 17 S. E. 969, where insolvent corporation attempted to secure director to prejudice of creditors.

Mortgages for future advances were valid at common law; hence, New York act of 1864, removing corporations' disability to mortgage, is liberally construed as remedial, and permits mortgages for future advances, p. 626.

Approved in Berry v. O'Connor, 33 Minn. 31, 21 N. W. 840, holding such mortgage not per se fraud on creditors; Coon v. Bosque, etc., Cattle Co., 8 N. Mex. 131, 42 Pac. 80, holding breach of covenant regarding future advance renders whole amount due.

Qualified in Lord v. Yonkers, etc., Gas Co., 99 N. Y. 554, 2 N. E. 912, holding above act does not authorize mortgage of franchise; West v. Klotz, 37 Ohio St. 427, holding subsequent mortgage takes priority over advances made after recording thereof; Nicklin v. Betts Spring Co., 11 Or. 412, 50 Am. Rep. 481, 5 Pac. 55, lien of chattel mortgage for future advances attaches from date of advance.

Statutes.—Lawmakers' intent is law, p. 626.

Approved in The Mamie, 5 Fed. 818, excluding rented pleasure yacht from revised statutes, section 4289, limiting owner's liability for loss of life, and Flint, etc., R. Co. v. Marine Ins. Co., 71 Fed. 215, holding revised statutes, section 4233, limiting steam vessel's speed in fog, applies to snowstorm.

Mortgages.—Deeds fatally defective for want of consideration are cured by subsequent existence thereof; so, also, mortgages for future advances, p. 627.

Corporations.—State alone can question mortgage ultra vires of corporation, p. 628.

Approved in Manhattan Hardware Co. v. Phalen, 128 Pa. St. 117, 18 Atl. 428, following rule; Fitts v. Palmer, 132 U. S. 293, 33 L. 321, 10 S. Ct. 96, holding grantor of unqualified foreign corporation cannot question its title; Brittan v. Oakland Bank, 124 Cal. 291 71 Am. St. Rep. 66, 57 Pac. 87, where bank director pledged stock for loan forbidden by civil code, section 578. See 70 Am. St. Rep. 178, note.

Limited in Franklin Bank v. Commercial Bank, 36 Ohio St. 357, 38 Am. Rep. 597, denying right of creditor bank to have shares of stock, collateral to loan, transferred on books of debtor bank.

Corporation's acquiescence in agent's mortgages cures defects in execution, p. 628.

Approved in Railway v. Gentry, 69 Tex. 632, 8 S. W. 102, where railroad received proceeds of promised mortgage, though not authorized by sufficient vote.

Equity enforces neither forfeitures nor mere legal rights opposed to equity, p. 628.

Approved in King v. Doane, 139 U. S. 172, 35 L. 87, 11 S. Ct. 467, holding renewal of note procured by fraud, is equally tainted, and Case v. Fant, 53 Fed. 44, 10 U. S. App. 415, holding acceptance by pledgee of renewal note relates back to original pledge.

Evidence.—Parol evidence is admissible to show party to contract is another's agent, and to negative fraud, e. g., to show that advances under corporation mortgage, which through clerical error secured president's individual bond, were applied to its use, p. 633.

Approved in George v. Tate, 102 U. S. 569, 26 L. 233, where bond assignment executed in firm's name was drawn in single partner's; Pascault v. Cochran, 34 Fed. 363, admitting parol evidence of actual date of mortgage as against recital; Brown v. Grove, 80 Fed. 567, admitting contemporaneous writings to explain trust deed; Hall v. Tay, 131 Mass. 195, where mortgage by husband and wife, securing future sales by partner, intended firm.

101 U. S. 633-637, 25 L. 1072, LUMBER CO. v. BUCHEL.

Contracts.—Misrepresentation as to quality of timber land made by B., vendee of the owner, in selling his purchase rights to C., are not available as defense against such innocent owner, suing C. on his guaranty of payment of purchase price, given to secure immediate right to timber, pp. 635, 636.

Cited in 63 Am. St. Rep. 328, note.

Contracts.—Right to rescind or modify contract for misrepresentations applies only where they relate to consideration, and are made by party claiming benefit of contract, pp. 636, 637.

Appeal and error.—Referee's findings should have precision of special verdict, but indefinite or inferential finding, e. g., "I do not find," etc., cannot be first questioned in Supreme Court, p. 637.

Cited, arguendo, in Heath v. Griswold, 18 Blatchf. 556, 5 Fed. 574.

101 U. S. 638-639, 25 L. 1073, LUMBER CO. v. BUTCHEL.

Judgment against one guaranteeing payment of purchase money for first installment is conclusive on same defense to second installment, p. 639.

Rule applied in Davis v. Hart, 66 Miss. 646, 6 So. 319, holding judgment on one note conclusive as to others based on same transaction.

Distinguished in Norton v. Jensen, 90 Fed. 421, 61 U. S. App. 358, where, after first suit for infringement, defendant obtained new patent.

Appeal and error.—Referee's finding, like verdict, is essential part of record, p. 639.

Distinguished in United States v. Choctaw, etc., R. Co., 3 Okl. 462, 464, 41 Pac. 749, holding finding must be properly presented by bill of exceptions.

Judgment, based on referee's finding, is conclusive of facts found, in subsequent controversies between same parties on same contract; hence findings against alleged representations charged as fraud are conclusive against them in suit alleging warranty, p. 639.

Rule applied in Wilson v. Deen, 121 U. S. 534, 30 L. 982, 7 S. Ct. 1007, holding correctness of prior judgment immaterial; Bissell v. Spring Valley Twp., 124 U. S. 231, 31 L. 412, 8 S. Ct. 498, where in former suit on other coupons same bonds were held invalid; Johnson Co. v. Wharton, 152 U. S. 258, 38 L. 433, 14 S. Ct. 610, though amount in first suit for royalties was insufficient to give Supreme Court jurisdiction; Dowell v. Applegate, 152 U. S. 344, 38 L. 469, 14 S. Ct. 618, where first defense failed to set up claim of title afterwards asserted; Last Chance Min. Co. v. Tyler Min. Co., 157 U. S. 688, 690, 39 L. 862, 863, 15 S. Ct. 735, 736, holding only questions actually determined are conclusive where same part of mining claim not in dispute; Forsyth v. Hammond, 166 U. S. 518, 41 L. 1100, 17 S. Ct. 670, where landowner seeking to avoid city tax was party to annexation contest; New Orleans v. Citizens' Bank, 167 U. S. 396, 397, 42 L. 211, 17 S. Ct. 913, 914, holding judgment establishing tax exemption under bank charter conclusive in suit for subsequent year; Southern Pac. R. R. v. United States, 168 U. S. 49, 51, 42 L. 377, 18 S. Ct. 27, 28, wherever rights, questions or facts are distinctly in issue and determined; David Bradley Mfg. Co. v. Eagle Mfg. Co., 57 Fed. 990, 991, 18 U. S. App. 349, distinguishing between judgment as bar to action and as conclusive of point involved; Empire State Nail Co. v. American, etc., Co., 74 Fed. 868, 33 U. S. App. 522, where answer in first suit for infringement attacked title, and in second patent's validity; Stearns v. Lawrence, 83 Fed. 744, 54 U. S. App. 544, holding finding in action against bank and president of knowledge of defect in note, is conclusive in receiver's suit against president; St. Joseph Union Depot v. Chicago, etc., Ry., 89 Fed. 653, 60 U. S. App. 684, holding judgment for depot rent-installment against railroad afterwards foreclosed concludes purchaser in suit on same lease; Newton Mfg. Co. v. Wilgus, 90 Fed. 488, holding judgment denying infringement because plaintiff's patent was mere adaptation is conclusive of infringement of defendant's patent; Church v. Kidd, 88 N. Y. 654, where first suit was to declare trust and second for damages; Grunert v. Spalding, — Wis. —, 78 N. W. 613, holding judgment against assignor conclusive on assignee of similar tax-sale certificate; dissenting opinion in Conery v. Water-Works Co., 41 La. Ann. 944, 7 So. 21, collecting authorities, majority holding judicial decree interpreting contract cannot prevent legislation authorizing alteration.

101 U. S. 639-641, 25 L. 1074, RAILWAY CO. v. UNITED STATES.

United States — Equity.— Cross-bill cannot be used to bring in new matter; hence successor of railroad company, against which United States has money decree, cannot, on motion for execution, set off disputed claim against United States, p. 641.

Not cited.

101 U. S. 641-646, 25 L. 1075, KENNEDY v. CRESWELL.

Creditors' suit.— On creditors' suit for disclosure, executors' admission of possession of sufficient assets to pay all decedent's debts, is admission of liability but not evidence defeating creditors' right to maintain bill, p. 643.

Equity.— If defendant plead false plea and it is so found he cannot answer over as in case of demurrer, p. 644.

Equity.— Upon plea found false, plaintiff is entitled to decree but need not have discovery against his will, as where executor's plea admits possession of assets, p. 644.

Equity.— Complainant, who takes issue on plea in bar to whole bill, admits plea's sufficiency but not its truth; and if plea be found true, bill will be dismissed, but if untrue, complainant may have decree as by confession, p. 644.

Approved in Lillenthal v. Washburn, 4 Woods, 68, 8 Fed. 709, where only point of infringement bill controverted by plea, was found false, and Earll v. Metropolitan, etc., Ry., 87 Fed. 529, holding decree limited accordingly where traversed plea found partly in defendant's favor.

Executor's admission of assets renders him personally liable, p. 645.

Appeal and error.— Where executor alone appeals from decree in creditor's suit, he cannot object that bill was not formally dismissed as to devisees, p. 645.

Creditors' suit.— Decedent's creditors may maintain bill for discovery of assets and payment of debt, and such right is not defeated by executor's admission of assets, p. 646.

Approved in Beverly v. Rhodes, 86 Va. 417, 10 S. E. 573, suit by single creditor; Houston v. Levy, 44 N. J. Eq. 8, 13 Atl. 672, where bill was against devisees by judgment creditor in tort; Dodson v. Sevars, 52 N. J. Eq. 618, 30 Atl. 480, where creditor's presentation of claim to executors was not within statutory time; Pullman v. Stebbins, 51 Fed. 12, sustaining bill of creditor at large against dissolved corporation. See 66 Am. St. Rep. 286, note.

S. Ct. 528), affirming S. C., 13 Fed. 316, dismissing bill supported by foreign probate decree to which all were not parties.

101 U. S. 647-664, 25 L. 945, IMHAEUSER v. BUERK.

Patents of new combinations of old elements, producing new and useful results, include known equivalents of such elements, performing same function in same combination, pp. 655, 656.

Approved in Campbell v. Bailey, 45 Fed. 565, Halloway v. Dow, 54 Fed. 517, Norton v. Jensen, 81 Fed. 498, and Beach v. Hobbs, 92 Fed. 150, 63 U. S. App. 647, reaffirming rule; Norton v. Jensen, 49 Fed. 868, 7 U. S. App. 103, even though substitute perform additional function; Gilbert v. Reinhardt, etc., Machine Co., 58 Fed. 976, where one element in defendant's machine is equivalent of two in patentees; conversely in Electric Signal Co. v. Hall, etc., Co., 114 U. S. 98, 29 L. 99, 5 S. Ct. 1076, where substitute was not known or in use when patent issues. See note in 10 Biss. 229.

Distinguished in Rowell v. Lindsay, 113 U. S. 102, 28 L. 908, 5 S. Ct. 510, holding use of one element singly does not infringe combination; Pacific Cable Ry. v. Butte City, etc., Ry., 58 Fed. 421, holding patent of double turntable does not include single.

Patents.—A weight substituted for a spring to produce pressure is mechanical equivalent; so also rod for endless chain, or lever for screw, where producing same results, p. 656.

Approved in Westinghouse v. Boyden, etc., Brake Co., 170 U. S. 567, 42 L. 1147, 18 S. Ct. 722, where poppet-valve was substituted for slide-valve.

Patents.—Infringement defense showing separate prior inventions of the various parts combined in patent in dispute, is insufficient, p. 660.

Followed in Rhodes v. Lincoln, etc., Co., 64 Fed. 219, and National Folding-Box, etc., Co. v. Elsas, 86 Fed. 919.

Patents.—Defendant, either at law or in equity, may deny that patentee was first inventor, but introduction of patent throws onus on him of showing prior invention or discovery in this country, pp. 660, 661.

Patents.—Introduction of patent in evidence relieves plaintiff of burden of showing new invention, but not infringement, p. 662.

Appeal and error.—Rulings of court on exceptions to master's report when not assigned for errors are not subject to re-examination, p. 664.

101 U. S. 665-677, 25 L. 1037, SCIPIO v. WRIGHT.

Municipal corporations.—Under New York act of 1852, requiring written assent of taxpayers to loan in aid of railroad construction between specified points, failure of assent to name railroad intended where the description of it is exclusively applicable to it, will not invalidate bonds, pp. 670, 671.

Approved in Knox v. Ninth Nat. Bank, 147 U. S. 100, 37 L. 96, 13 S. Ct. 271, holding designation of route sufficient; Lane v. Embden, 72 Me. 364, arguendo.

Municipal corporations.—Under New York railroad-aid act of 1852, making assent of two-thirds resident taxpayers appearing on assessment-roll next previous to loan, prerequisite to any action by commissioners, duly-authorized bonds following authorized stock subscription, are not avoided because not negotiated till after next assessment-roll, pp. 671, 672.

Approved in 98 Am. Dec. 674, note.

Courts.—Construction of State statute by highest State court is followed by Federal courts, p. 675.

Municipal corporations.—Under New York act of 1852, authorizing municipal loan in aid of railroad, and stock subscription, bonds issued to railroad in exchange for stock are void in hands of purchaser with notice; otherwise, if without notice, pp. 673-677.

Approved in Lewis v. Board of Commrs., 1 McCrary, 381, 2 McCrary, 467, 5 Fed. 273, holding statute authorizing loan to build courthouse does not authorize floating of bonds; Lewis v. Comanche, 35 Fed. 347, holding Kansas law authorizing county loans when deficit exists does not authorize anticipative issue; Coffin v. Indianapolis, 59 Fed. 228, holding illegality of part of bonds issued as series attaches to all; State v. School Dist., 16 Neb. 190, 20 N. W. 212, denying school district's right to issue bonds direct to school-house contractor; State v. Tomahawk, etc., Council, 96 Wis. 84, 71 N. W. 90, upholding State right to prescribe mode of municipal subscription to railroad stock.

Cited, but not applied, in Thompson v. Perrine, 103 U. S. 810, 26 L. 615, where defect cured by statute. Distinguished in Bernards Township v. Stebbins, 109 U. S. 352, 27 L. 960, 3 S. Ct. 260, and Comanche v. Lewis, 133 U. S. 207, 33 L. 608, 10 S. Ct. 290, both construing bond recitals literally in absence of strict State construction; Bank v. Stavesville, 84 N. C. 175, holding act requiring bond signature by town authorities merely directory.

101 U. S. 677-688, 25 L. 968, DOUGLASS v. COUNTY OF PIKE.

Elections.—Under Missouri Constitution, 1865, article 4, section 30, requiring vote by two-thirds of qualified voters to remove county seat, and subsequent statute using words "legally registered votes," two-thirds of votes cast are not sufficient, though general rule is otherwise, p. 681.

Approved in Citizens, etc. v. Williams, 49 La. Ann. 440, 21 So. 654, 37 L. R. A. 770, construing article 242 of Constitution.

Courts.—Federal courts usually treat highest State court's construction of statute as part thereof, but need not follow latest of conflicting decisions, if contract rights acquired under earlier decisions, either by citizens of that or other State, would be injuriously affected, p. 686.

Approved in Post v. Pulaski, 47 Fed. 285, and Braun v. Board of Commrs., 66 Fed. 479, both holding State construction of statute binding on Federal courts; Evansville v. Woodbury, 60 Fed. 720, 18 U. S. App. 514, applying State construction of similar statute; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Poe, 64 Fed. 13, following State decision upholding tax law, made pending suit in Circuit Court; German Bank v. Franklin, 128 U. S. 538, 32 L. 524, 9 S. Ct. 163, invalidating bonds marketed after adverse decision of Illinois Supreme Court; Anderson v. Santa Anna, 116 U. S. 361, 29 L. 635, 6 S. Ct. 416, Louisville Trust Co. v. Cincinnati, 76 Fed. 301, 47 U. S. App. 36, and Cesar v. Capell, 83 Fed. 427, all holding Federal courts need not apply State construction to antecedent contracts; Vermont, etc., R. R. v. Central Vermont R. R., 63 Vt. 23, 21 Atl. 267, 10 L. R. A. 565, upholding all acts done under existing law before annulment. See note in 98 Am. Dec. 682.

Courts.—Supreme Court applies change of judicial construction of State statute, like amendment thereto, prospectively, but not retrospectively; hence, county bonds issued in 1872, in aid of railroad, under Missouri act of 1868, are valid where State decisions then so held, p. 688.

Approved in Green v. Conness, 109 U. S. 105, 27 L. 872, 3 S. Ct. 69, Knox v. Ninth Nat. Bank, 147 U. S. 99, 37 L. 96, 13 S. Ct. 270, Harmon v. Auditor, 123 Ill. 136, 5 Am. St. Rep. 510, 13 N. 101 U. S. 688-692, 25 L. 1004, CASE v. BEAUREGARD.

Creditors' suit.—Equity will not relieve where adequate legal remedy exists; hence, creditors' bill must show that legal remedies are exhausted, p. 690.

Approved in Dahlman v. Jacobs, 5 McCrary, 132, 15 Fed. 864, where general creditor, without judgment, attacked debtor's conveyance; Baxter v. Moses, 77 Me. 476, 52 Am. Rep. 785, 1 Atl. 351, sustaining demurrer to bill for equitable execution, failing to allege judgment and return of execution.

Distinguished in Chadbourne v. Coe, 51 Fed. 482, 10 U. S. App. 78, arguendo.

Creditors' suit.—Exhausting of legal remedies or need of equitable relief may be shown otherwise than by averment of judgment and execution's return nulla bona, especially where trust or lien exists in creditor's favor, pp. 690-692.

Approved in Hickox v. Elliott, 11 Sawy. 646, 27 Fed. 845, where bill averred no property in debtor's name in State; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Farwell Co., 74 Fed. 765, where no special circumstances entitled creditor to neglect such steps; Robinson v. Springfield Co., 21 Fla. 237, holding bill attacking realty never in debtor's name must show more than deficiency judgment. Denied in Fairbanks v. Welsbaush, 55 Neb. 380, 384, 75 N. W. 871, 873, holding judgment necessary to creditor's bill by general rule.

Judgment.—Doctrine of res judicata is unaffected by correctness of judgment, p. 692.

Approved in Jenkins v. International Bank, 111 Ill. 471, Shumate v. Supervisors, 84 Va. 577, 5 S. E. 571, Tracey v. Shumate, 22 W. Va. 510, and Rogers v. Rogers, 37 W. Va. 419, 16 S. E. 638, all applying rule; Patterson v. Wold, 33 Fed. 792, holding judgment upholding conveyance charged as voluntary, bars action charging same as preference; Chavent v. Schefer, 59 Fed. 232, holding decree distributing assets of dissolved corporation bars subsequent suit for unpaid subscriptions; People v. Holladay, 93 Cal. 251, 27 Am. St. Rep. 194, 29 Pac. 57, where judgment against city, clearly wrong, was held binding on State; Ashuelot R. R. v. Cheshire R. R., 59 N. H. 411, extending bar to all matters within action's legitimate purview.

Judgment.—Decree dismissing creditor's bill to enforce lien, alleging debtor's insolvency, bars second bill for same relief, adding averment that legal remedies have been exhausted, p. 692.

Followed in Fleitas v. Meraux, 47 La. Ann. 241, 16 So. 852, holding decree dismissing bill is on merits, unless expressly "without prejudice."

Municipal corporations.—Missouri act of 1872, section 4, requiring registration and certification of county bonds by State auditor, applies to bonds issued by county for township under township-aid act, pp. 695, 696.

Cited in Lewis v. Commissioners, 105 U. S. 750, 26 L. 996, arguendo.

Municipal corporations.—State may prescribe form of execution of municipal bonds as essential to validity thereof, e. g., by requiring county judge's signature and registration and certification by State auditor, p. 697.

Approved in Young v. Clarendon Twp., 132 U. S. 348, 33 L. 360, 10 S. Ct. 109, under statute requiring governor's approval of railroad-aid bonds. See 98 Am. Dec. 679, note, collecting authorities, and 51 Am. St. Rep. 833, note.

Distinguished in D'Esterre v. Brooklyn, 90 Fed. 592, holding city estopped by unsigned indorsement certifying registration.

Municipal corporations.—Purchaser of municipal bonds may rely upon truth of certificate thereon signed by public agent empowered to issue them, p. 697.

Approved in Menasha v. Hazard, 102 U. S. 95, 26 L. 86, following rule; Lewis v. Comanche, 35 Fed. 348, holding recitals conclusive as to proportion of voters asking bond issue, though no poll-book existed to ascertain proportion. See 98 Am. Dec. 688, note.

Distinguished in Hopper v. Covington, 10 Biss. 493, 8 Fed. 781, in absence of recitals; Johnson City v. Railroad, 100 Tenn. 147, 44 S. W. 672, holding recital that bond issue is to domestic railroad does not validate them, if false.

Municipal corporations.—Bond purchaser is charged with notice of State laws as to municipal power to make bonds; but if a bona fide holder, he is protected against mere irregularities of execution, p. 697.

Approved in Northern Bank v. Porter Twp., 110 U. S. 618, 28 L. 262, 4 S. Ct. 259, where Ohio statute authorized township to subscribe to stock only after county's refusal; National Bank v. St. Joseph, 24 Blatchf. 441, 31 Fed. 219, where law provided tender of principal should stop interest; National Bank v. Grenada, 48

Fed. 279, 280, holding failure to publish ordinance as required by Colorado law, invalidates bonds issued thereunder; Coffin v. Board of Commrs., 57 Fed. 143, 12 U. S. A. 253, and dissenting opinion in West Plains Township v. Sage, 69 Fed. 956, 957, 32 U. S. App. 725, all holding recital of act under which bonds are issued charges purchaser with notice of its provisions; Farmers, etc., Nat. Bank v. School District, 6 Dak. 264, 42 N. W. 769, where school district warrants were ultra vires; Johnson City v. Railroad, 100 Tenn. 148, 44 S. W. 672, where power did not exist to issue bonds to foreign railroad; Irvine v. Board of Commrs., 75 Fed. 768, holding purchaser of unauthorized bonds, issued in exchange for county warrants, is subrogated to position of warrant holder.

Distinguished in Moulton v. Evansville, 25 Fed. 386, holding bond recitals binding where officers executing them had power to issue bonds.

Municipal corporations.—Public can act only through authorized agent and is not bound till all who are to participate have performed respective duties, p. 698.

Approved in Louisiana v. Wood, 102 U. S. 298, 26 L. 155, under same statute; Hoff v. Jasper, 110 U. S. 54, 56, 28 L. 68, 69, 3 S. Ct. 477, 478, where, under identical statute, it was expressly found that subscription had been made prior to act requiring registration; Bissell v. Spring Valley Township, 110 U. S. 169, 28 L. 108, 3 S. Ct. 559, holding county clerk's signature to bonds essential, if required, even though he be without discretion; Marsh v. Nichols, etc., Co., 128 U. S. 611, 32 L. 540, 9 S. Ct. 170, where through inadvertence letters-patent issued unsigned by secretary of interior; Young v. Clarendon Township, 132 U. S. 352, 354, 33 L. 362, 363, 10 S. W. 175, where bonds were signed before commissioner had provided for funding warrants. See 64 Am. Dec. 436, note, and 51 Am. St. Rep. 852, note.

Principal and agent.—Agent cannot bind principal by antedating after powers are revoked, p. 698.

Partnership.—Retiring partner cannot bind firm after due notice of dissolution upon antedated promissory note in hands of innocent purchaser, pp. 698, 699.

Municipal corporations.—Public agent's authority is limited by specific grant and he cannot, by antedating contracts, bind principal under powers since withdrawn; such action partakes of character of forgery and is always open to inquiry, e. g., where county-judge antedated bond issue to precede law requiring registration, pp. 698, 699.

Approved in Coler v. Cleburne, 131 U. S. 173, 175, 33 L. 149, 9 S. Ct. 724, 725, where bonds issued and dated during ex-mayor's incumbency were signed after his term expired; Lehman v. San Diego, 83 Fed. 674, 675, 48 U. S. App. 689, 690, where bonds were antedated after repeal of authorizing act.

Distinguished in State v. Moore, 46 Neb. 592, 50 Am. St. Rep. 628, 65 N. W. 194, where antedating was part of proposition submitted to voters, and Yesler v. Seattle, 1 Wash. 323, 25 Pac. 1019, validating bonds negotiated months after dating, under statute requiring date of issue.

Municipal corporations.—Purchasers of municipal securities assume risk of genuineness of signatures and official character, and are charged with notice of signer's term of office, e. g., where bonds signed by judge antedated his term of office, p. 699.

Approved in Morton v. Carlin, 51 Neb. 213, 70 N. W. 970, where alleged precinct voting bonds, had no legal existence; Merchants' Bank v. Bergen, 115 U. S. 390, 29 L. 432, 6 S. Ct. 90, *State v. Mechanic's lien.—Unrecorded release of lien made to then prospective purchaser of land, with view to securing mortgage loan, does not, after collapse of negotiations, estop him to assert lien against owner or others advancing money on land with full knowledge of facts, pp. 723-725.

Mechanic's lien for material and work on row of houses in city of Washington is valid, under 11 Stat. 376, though filed against row as one building, p. 725.

Followed in Premier Steel Co. v. McElwaine, etc., Co., 144 Ind. 619, 43 N. E. 878, Maryland Brick Co. v. Spilman, 76 Md. 342, 35 Am. St. Rep. 434, 25 Atl. 298, 17 L. R. A. 601, Willamette Mills Co. v. Shea, 24 Or. 50, 32 Pac. 762, Lyon, etc. v. Logan, 68 Tex. 525, 2 Am. St. Rep. 514, 5 S. W. 74, and Sergeant v. Denby, 87 Va. 208, 12 S. E. 402, where houses were on separate lots; Fullerton v. Leonard, 3 S. Dak. 121, 52 N. W. 326, though lots belonged to different parties, contract being single; Meixell v. Griest, 1 Kan. App. 148, 40 Pac. 1071, where person lets single contract individually and as agent, lien covers both houses; Maynard v. Ivey, 21 Nev. 246, 29 Pac. 1092, holding lien not void because claim too extensive.

Mechanic's lien.—When in city of Washington, lien is released by filing of undertaking under 11 Stat. 376, personal decree goes against landowner, with permission to sue sureties, pp. 725, 726.

Approved in Smith v. Gill, 37 Minn. 456, 35 N. W. 179, upholding right to personal judgment where lien was not perfected.

101 U. S. 726-728, 25 L. 835, UNITED STATES v. KIMBALL.

Internal revenue.—In suit against internal revenue collector on bond, for taxes charged to him under revised statutes, section 3218, uncollected taxes transferred to successor should be credited him if due diligence to collect be proved, p. 727.

Internal revenue commissioner's certificate, that collector used due diligence to collect uncollectible taxes, is condition precedent to allowance of credit by first comptroller of treasury before suit, but not defense on facts, p. 728.

Internal revenue.—Presentation to, and rejection by, internal revenue commissioner of claim for credit, entitles collector to prove claim, under revised statutes, section 951, when sued by United States for accounting, p. 728.

Public lands.—Adjustment of 1866 between United States and Iowa settled no rights of other parties, p. 772.

Public lands.—Iowa governor's grant to Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, under authority of Iowa joint resolution of 1858, in pursuance of original contract, passed title to lands approved and certified to State under Des Moines river grant of 1846, prior to December 23, 1853, p. 772.

101 U. S. 773-781, 25 L. 925, LITCHFIELD v. COUNTY OF WEBSTER.

Public lands.—Title to Iowa lands granted by joint resolution of Congress in 1861, and which had been previously reserved from sale, was till then in United States and hence not taxable, pp. 774, 775.

Approved in United States v. Missouri, etc., Ry., 141 U. S. 369, 35 L. 769, 12 S. Ct. 17, and Wisconsin Cent. R. Co. v. Forsythe, 43 Fed. 885, arguendo.

Taxation.—Under Iowa laws public or State lands first became taxable in year following entry, location or purchase, p. 775.

Denied in Goodnow v. Wells, 67 Iowa, 659, 25 N. W. 866, holding lands taxable when earned, though before patent.

Taxation.—Grant to Iowa by congressional joint resolution of 1861 at once vested title in bona fide purchasers from State without further conveyance, and hence such lands became taxable, pp. 775, 776.

Approved in Goodnow v. Wells, 67 Iowa, 656, 25 N. W. 865, reaffirming decision; United States v. Des Moines, etc., Co., 142 U. S. 534, 35 L. 1105, 12 S. Ct. 314, upholding same grant as against United States; Wisconsin Central R. Co. v. Price, 64 Wis. 592, 26 N. W. 98, holding location by railroad vested title and supported taxation, though patent issued to another; State, etc. v. Insurance Co., 43 La. Ann. 144, 8 So. 893, remitting penalties for failure to take out license which city had previously claimed right to waive.

Taxation.—One paying taxes in mistake of title cannot recover them from real owner, p. 778.

Approved in Irvine v. Angus, 84 Fed. 131, holding stock assessment paid pending litigation not recoverable from real owner of stock.

Taxation.—Where State forbears enforcement of taxes pending determination of title to lands claimed by itself or United States, it can, after adverse decision, collect only legal interest or delinquent taxes, pp. 778-781.

Adjudged in conformity with supra.

Approved in Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Allen, 17 Fed. 176, holding Federal court may enjoin collection by county officer of illegal State tax.

Overruled in Stryker v. Goodnow, 123 U. S. 536, 537, 31 L. 198, 8 S. Ct. 208, distinguishing Litchfield v. Webster, supra, which came up from Circuit Court, not State Supreme Court.

101 U. S. 782-789, 25 L. 1044, YOUNG v. BRADLEY.

Trusts.—Nature and duration of trust, however expressed, are governed by requirements thereof; hence, devise to executor and heirs to hold in trust for several beneficiaries during respective disabilities, terminates upon death of such beneficiaries, and subsequent sale by executor is void, pp. 786-788.

Reaffirmed in Harmon v. Smith, 38 Fed. 485, Chaffin v. Hull, 49 Fed. 526, and Daly v. Bernstein, 6 N. Mex. 396, 28 Pac. 767, all following rule; Potter v. Couch, 141 U. S. 309, 321, 35 L. 729, 734, 11 S. Ct. 1008, 1012, where beneficiaries all agreed to take property in present condition as tenants in common; Morffew v. San Francisco, etc., R. R., 107 Cal. 595, 40 Pac. 813, where trustee was individual owner of life estate; Long v. Long, 62 Md. 65, holding legal estate vests in beneficiary upon completion of active trust; dissenting opinion in Abell v. Abell, 75 Md. 69, 25 Atl. 390, majority holding trust to brothers for sisters and their children terminated on death of last sister. See note in 19 Am. St. Rep. 273.

Appeal and error.—Report of auditor to whom accounting is referred by court is not reviewable unless excepted to, p. 788.

Executors and administrators.—Executor's sale after trust ends is void and vendee cannot recover consideration from heirs, p. 789.

101 U. S. 789-791, 25 L. 805, POWERS v. COMLY.

Customs duties.—"Countries east of Cape of Good Hope" in section 2501, revised statutes, means countries with which commercial intercourse was had, prior to operation of Suez canal, around said cape; hence Persian opium imported from country west of cape was subject to additional 10 per cent. ad valorem duty, p. 790.

Treaties.—Revised statutes, section 2501, providing additional duty upon goods of countries east of Cape of Good Hope imported from places west of it, does not conflict with Persian treaty (11 Stat. 709), since it does not affect importation direct from Persia, p. 791.

Courts.—Construction of State statute by highest State court is usually followed by Federal courts, but not where State contract is involved. State decision that a second grant of bridge franchise does not impair contract created by first grant, is not binding, pp. 793, 794.

Reaffirmed in Louisville Gas Co. v. Citizens' Gas Co., 115 U. S. 697, 29 L. 515, 6 S. Ct. 271, involving exclusive gas charter; Douglas v. Kentucky, 168 U. S. 502, 42 L. 557, 18 S. Ct. 204, refusing State construction of new Constitution repealing lottery privileges; McCullough v. Virginia, 172 U. S. 110, 19 S. Ct. 137, upholding Federal right to determine validity of State tax-receivable bonds; approved in Lynn v. Polk, 8 Lea, 251, holding question of legislative power to make irrevocable contracts, for State courts. See note in 66 Am. St. Rep. 335.

Franchises belonging to people collectively are alienable only by legislative grant, which may be direct or by constituted agencies, but when made are binding; e. g., in Georgia, right to collect bridge tolls, p. 794.

Approved in Plank-Road Co. v. Railway, 103 Mich. 588, 61 N. W. 881, upholding legislative power to grant plank-road company exclusive rights; Mason v. Harpers Ferry, etc., Co., 17 W. Va. 414, upholding exclusive franchise where authorized by legislature; Board v. Board, 30 W. Va. 434, 4 S. E. 645, upholding legislative delegation to County Court of power to divide school district.

Distinguished in Luxton v. North River, etc., Co., 153 U. S. 532, 38 L. 811, 16 S. Ct. 893, upholding congressional right to authorize interstate bridge.

Courts.—Where plaintiff claims exclusive bridge franchise under contract with County Court by legislative authority, subsequent grant of franchise by road commissioners, being equivalent to State law, raises question of impairment of contract obligations and gives Federal courts jurisdiction, p. 794.

Principle applied in Vicksburg, etc., R. R. v. Dennis, 116 U. S. 667, 29 L. 771, 6 S. Ct. 626, where railroad exempted from taxes "for ten years after completion" claimed exemption before completion; Bryan v. Board of Education, 151 U. S. 650, 38 L. 302, 14 S. Ct. 469, where legislative amendment of educational institution's charter, authorizing its relocation, was claimed to impair rights; City Ry. v. Citizens' R. R., 166 U. S. 563, 41 L. 1116, 17 S. Ct. 655 (affirming S. C., 56 Fed. 750), and Saginaw Gas-Light Co. v. Saginaw, 28 Fed. 533, where conflicting franchises were granted; Walla Walla v. Walla Walla Water Co., 172 U. S. 9, 19 S. Ct. 81, where city, after stipulating against it in franchise, passed ordinance providing for water works; Capital City Gas Co. v. Des Moines, 72 Fed. 824, 836, where gas company claims ordinance fixing gas rate impairs franchise; Baltimore Trust, etc., Co. v. Mayor, 64 Fed. 160, collecting cases, where ordinance repeals double tracking privilege of franchise; Cleveland, etc., Ry. v. Cleveland, 94 Fed. 395, and Iron Mountain R. Co. v. Memphis, 96 Fed. 129, where ordinance forfeited street-railroad franchises; dissenting opinion in Fergus Falls v. Fergus Falls, etc., Co., 72 Fed. 884, 36 U. S. App. 480, majority holding cancellation by city of water contract did not raise Federal question.

Distinguished in Hanford v. Davies, 51 Fed. 259, holding legislative act claimed as impairment must be subsequent to contract.

Statutes.—Exclusive rights to public franchises are never presumed; hence, Georgia statute of 1805, authorizing County Courts to establish bridges and fix tolls, does not authorize grant of exclusive franchise, p. 796.

Rule applied in following cases denying city's power to grant exclusive franchises for purposes indicated: Citizens, etc., Ry. v. Detroit Ry., 171 U. S. 53, 18 S. Ct. 734, street railroad; Parkhurst v. Capital City Ry., 23 Or. 479, 32 Pac. 306, same; Saginaw Gas-Light Co. v. Saginaw, 28 Fed. 534, 536, gas lighting; Gas Co. v. Parkersburg, 30 W. Va. 438, 4 S. E. 652, same; Grand Rapids, etc., Co. v. Grand Rapids, etc., Co., 33 Fed. 673, electric lighting; Illinois Trust, etc., Bank v. Arkansas, etc., Co., 67 Fed. 200, and S. C. on appeal, 76 Fed. 280, 40 U. S. App. 257, 34 L. R. A. 524, water works; Long v. Duluth, 49 Minn. 287, 32 Am. St. Rep. 551, 51 N. W. 914, same; Smith v. Westerly, 19 R. I. 443, 35 Atl. 528, same.

Distinguished in Walla Walla v. Walla Walla Water Co., 172 U. S. 18, 19 S. Ct. 83, upholding city's agreement not to erect water works during life of franchise.

101 U. S. 797-810, 25 L. 1021, TRENIER v. STEWART.

Public lands.—Genuineness of Spanish land concession is supported by appended document showing presentation for enrollment in office of council of province, pp. 803, 804.

Approved in Sullivan v. Richardson, 33 Fla. 109, 14 So. 706, upholding paper purporting to be original, found in trunk of title deeds.

Appeal and error.—General exception to entire charge is not favored, and in Circuit Court is insufficient, but when reviewed by highest State court will also be reviewed by United States Supreme Court, pp. 805-807.

Approved in South, etc., Alabama R. R. v. McLendon, 63 Ala. 276, holding exception to charge should be specific.

Trial.—Question whether tract described in Mexican deed can be located is one of fact for jury, and when evidence conflicts, and is properly submitted, finding of jury is not reviewable on appeal, pp. 806-808.

Public lands.—Title to lands within power of Congress depends upon priority of grant or confirmation, not of application therefor, p. 808.

Public lands.—Title of original donee, under Spanish grant, if complete at treaty of cession, is protected thereby, p. 808.

Approved in Ainsa v. New Mexico, etc., R. R., 175 U. S. 81, upholding territorial courts' jurisdiction to try titles claimed to be perfect before treaty.

101 U. S. 810-813, 25 L. 875, DUNCAN v. GEGAN.

Removal of causes.—Upon removal, Circuit Court takes case up where State court left it off; hence, where removal in suit to determine mortgage priorities was taken after Louisiana Supreme Court settled that question, it was not open after removal, whether proceedings were part of original suit or not, pp. 812, 813.

Approved in Hewitt v. Phelps, 105 U. S. 396, 26 L. 1073, permitting retrial on merits where State Supreme Court allowed parties to amend pleadings; Smith v. Schwed, 2 McCrary, 442, 6 Fed. 456, holding bill supporting injunction in State court not assailable after removal; Wertheim, etc. v. Continental Ry., etc., Co., 20 Blatchf. 510, 11 Fed. 691, holding defendant barred by expiration in State court of time for plea in abatement; Milligan v. Lalance, etc., Mfg. Co., 21 Blatchf. 408, 17 Fed. 466, holding decision of State General Term, ordering inspection of defendant's books, final; Loomis v. Carrington, 18 Fed. 99, overruling motion for rehearing of motion overruled by State court; Wolf v. Cook, 40 Fed. 437, holding process amendable before, is amendable after removal; Cleaver v. Traders' Ins. Co., 40 Fed. 713, holding State Supreme Court's decision conclusive as to evidence proper for jury; Lookout Mountain R. Co. v. Houston, 44 Fed. 449, holding State Supreme Court's prior disposition of demurrer final; Chicago, etc., Bridge Co. v. Anglo-American, etc., Co., 46 Fed. 590, holding jurisdiction acquired by publication, over non-resident's realty, follows removal; Elliott v. Shuler, 50 Fed. 457, holding jurisdiction based on party's submission, follows removal; Bragdon v. Perkins, etc., Co., 82 Fed. 339, holding State court's decision conclusive on question of annulling service on non-resident; Hamilton v. Fowler, 83 Fed. 324, holding Federal court has plenary jurisdiction after removal, petition filed, and before commencement of next term; Sutro v. Simpson, 4 McCrary, 278, 14 Fed. 372, hearing motion to dismiss for want of security, already filed, but applying Federal rule; Judge v. Anderson, 19 Fed. 886, where case is not at issue when removed, Circuit Court's rules obtain; Henning v. Western Union Tel. Co., 40 Fed. 658, where plaintiff amends complaint after removal, non-resident defendant may demand security for costs before answering; Wilcox, etc., Guano Co. v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 60 Fed. 933, and Pelzer Mfg. Co. v. St. Paul Fire, etc., Ins. Co., 40 Fed. 186, both holding Circuit Court rule as to time of answer obtains on filing bond and petition; Porter Land, etc., Co. v. Baskin, 43 Fed. 325, arguendo.

Distinguished in King v. Worthington, 104 U. S. 50, 26 L. 655, holding State rule as to competency of witness not binding on Circuit Court; Ex parte Fisk, 113 U. S. 725, 28 L. 1121, 5 S. Ct. 730, refusing to compel submission to order for preliminary examination not allowed by Federal practice.

101 U. S. 814-821, 25 L. 1079, STONE v. MISSISSIPPI.

Constitutional law.—Any contract contained in private corporation charter is within protection of prohibition against legislation impairing contract obligation; but charter itself is not, pp. 816, 817.

Approved in dissenting opinion in Spring Valley Water Works v. San Francisco, 61 Cal. 10, 17, majority holding provision of water company's charter, as to rates, repealable; Illinois Cent. R. R. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 475, 36 L. 1051, 13 S. Ct. 127, majority upholding act repealing legislative grant of submerged land in Chicago harbor; South Carolina v. Port Royal, etc., Ry., 56 Fed. 338, arguendo.

Distinguished in Water Co. v. Water Co., 80 Me. 561, 15 Atl. 787, 1 L. R. A. 394, where rights granted by water company's charter were not exclusive.

Constitutional law.—Neither legislature, nor people themselves, can bargain away public health or morals, or legislative discretion concerning them; hence, grant of lottery privileges in corporate charter may be repealed, p. 819.

Approved in Douglas v. Kentucky, 168 U. S. 496, 42 L. 555, 18 S. Ct. 201, following rule; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 664, 669, 31 L. 211, 213, 8 S. Ct. 299, 301, upholding Kansas prohibitory laws, though breweries thereby made valueless; Crenshaw v. United States, 134 U. S. 106, 108, 33 L. 828, 829, 10 S. Ct. 433, 434, holding legislature cannot create irrepealable public office; Dunlap v. State, 76 Ala. 466, holding exemption from jury service repealable; State v. Beardsley, 108 Iowa, 405, 79 N. W. 141, upholding law abating, as nuisance, dam without fishway; West Point, etc., Imp. Co. v. State, 49 Neb. 222, 66 N. W. 7, though mill be authorized by legislature; Railroad v. County Commrs., 79 Me. 393, 394, 10 Atl. 114, and Cleveland v. City Council, 102 Ga. 243, 29 S. E. 588, 43 L. R. A. 642, both holding railroad for expense of change of grade at public crossing; Wiggins Ferry Co. v. East St. Louis, 102 Ill. 570, upholding law empowering city to license ferries; Portland v. Meyer, 32 Or. 371, 67 Am. St. Rep. 540, 52 Pac. 22, upholding ordinance against slaughter-houses in city; Villavaso v. Barthet, 39 La. Ann. 253, 1 So. 603, or in certain districts thereof; State v. Railroad, 50 La. Ann. 1204, 24 So. 271, upholding ordinance requiring street railroad to sprinkle right of way; Petz v. Detroit, 95 Mich. 181, 54 N. W. 648, upholding discontinuance of city market as against stall lessees; State v. Aiken, 42 S. C. 235, 20 S. E. 226, 26 L. R. A. 353, upholding dispensary act of 1893, providing for liquor sales by State alone; Dow v. Railroad, 67 N. H. 47, 36 Atl. 534, holding courts will not fix limit to legislative discretion; Garrett, etc. v. Mayor, 47 La. Ann. 630, 17 So. 243, holding legislature exclusive judge of time and manner of exercising police power; dissenting opinions in Bowman v. Chicago, etc., Ry., 125 U. S. 517, 31 L. 718, 8 S. Ct. 711, majority holding Iowa law, forbidding liquor importation, void against interstate commerce law; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 128, 34 L. 139, 10 S. Ct. 691, majority annulling State law against liquor-selling as to importer's sales in original packages.

Distinguished in New Orleans Gas Co. v. Louisiana, etc., Co., 115 U. S. 669, 29 L. 523, 6 S. Ct. 262, holding exclusive gas franchise irrepealable; State v. Laclede, etc., Co., 102 Mo. 486, 22 Am. St. Rep. 795, 14 S. W. 980, holding irrepealable, ordinance contract fixing maximum price of gas.

Constitutional law.—Police power, though not easily defined, includes all matters affecting public health or morals; e. g., lotteries, p. 818.

Approved in Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 393, 42 L. 791, 18 S. Ct. 388, upholding eight-hour law for miners; United States v. Moore, 19 Fed. 40, upholding law making matter concerning lotteries unmailable; Jamieson v. Indiana, etc., Oil Co., 128 Ind. 566, 28 N. E. 79, 12 L. R. A. 656, holding regulation of use of natural gas police power; Dunn v. Commonwealth, — Ky. —, 49 S. W. 813, 43 L. R. A. 702, upholding ordinance punishing prostitutes found on streets between 7 p. m. and 4 a. m.; Trageser v. Gray, 73 Md. 257, 25 Am. St. Rep. 591, 20 Atl. 907, 9 L. R. A. 785, and n., upholding restriction of liquor licenses to citizens of temperate habits; Ford v. State, 85 Md. 475, 60 Am. St. Rep. 339, 37 Atl. 173, 41 L. R. A. 552, upholding act making possession of policy tickets unlawful; Boston, etc., R. R. v. Cambridge, 159 Mass. 286, 34 N. E. 383, assuming legislative right to impose on railroad or municipality expense of railroad crossing; Commonwealth v. Vrooman, 164 Pa. St. 321, 44 Am. St. Rep. 611, 30 Atl. 220, 25 L. R. A. 255, upholding act of February 4, 1870, prohibiting fire insurance business without incorporation; Charleston v. Werner, 38 S. C. 495, 37 Am. St. Rep. 781, 17 S. E. 35, upholding ordinance requiring filling up of low lots injurious to health; Stehmeyer v. City Council, 53 S. C. 279, 31 S. E. 330, discussing nature of police power; dissenting opinion in Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 128, 34 L. 139, 10 S. Ct. 691, holding police power includes protection of life, health, property and welfare. See 1 Am. St. Rep. 644, note.

Approved, but not applied, in Crutcher v. Kentucky, 141 U. S. 61, 35 L. 653, 11 S. Ct. 855, denying State right to regulate foreign express companies; In re Tie Loy, 11 Sawy. 477, 26 Fed. 614, holding ordinance against laundries in habitable portion of city void; Indianapolis v. Consumers, etc., Co., 140 Ind. 118, 49 Am. St. Rep. 191, 39 N. E. 437, 27 L. R. A. 518, holding inviolable, grant of right to lay and repair gas mains; Leeper v. State, 103 Tenn. 531, 53 S. W. 968, holding exclusive school-book contract for limited period not unconstitutional. Qualified in New Orleans Gas Co. v. Louisiana, etc., Co., 115 U. S. 661, 29 L. 520, 6 S. Ct. 258, holding State cannot, by exercise of police powers, encroach on Federal powers.

Taxation.—State may, for consideration, within reasonable discretion, and for public good, exempt from taxation, p. 820.

Constitutional law.—Corporations are legislative creatures, with limited citizenship, and subject to subsequent legislation protecting health and morality, p. 820.

Approved in dissenting opinion in State v. Butler, 13 Lea, 418, 422, majority holding inviolable charter provision for percentage on capital stock, in lieu of all taxes.

Constitutional law.—Constitution protects contracts relating to property rights, not governmental, p. 820.

Approved in Sprayberry v. Atlanta, 87 Ga. 125, 13 S. E. 199, holding liquor license not contract; Douglas v. Kentucky, 168 U. S. 504, 505, 42 L. 558, 18 S. Ct. 205, arguendo. Cited, but not applied, in Smith v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 64 Fed. 279, denying legislative authority to alter cumulative stock voting allowed by company's charter.

Lotteries are not mala in se, but may be made mala prohibita, p. 821.

Approved in Hatch v. Hanson, 46 Mo. App. 339, upholding action by owner to recover from third party proceeds of ticket in lottery authorized by another State.

Lotteries.—Corporate charter permitting lottery is mere suspension of governmental rights, terminable at will by sovereign power of State, p. 821.

Approved in Commonwealth v. Douglass, 100 Ky. 123, 66 Am. St. Rep. 331, 24 S. W. 234, following rule; Crenshaw v. United States, 134 U. S. 108, 33 L. 829, 10 S. Ct. 434, holding naval officer does not hold office by contract; Moore v. Indianapolis, 120 Ind. 493, 22 N. E. 427, holding liquor licensee takes with notice of State's power to regulate; Crescent City Slaughter, etc., Co. v. New Orleans, 33 La. Ann. 939, applying rule to slaughter-house charter; dissenting opinion in Lynn v. Polk, 8 Lea, 222, majority holding legislative contract procured by bribery not judicially voidable. See 66 Am. St. Rep. 334, note.

Distinguished in New Orleans Gas Co. v. Louisiana, etc., Co., 115 U. S. 667, 29 L. 522, 6 S. Ct. 261, upholding exclusive gas franchise as not bad in influences.

Constitutional law.—Legislative power extends only to irrevocable grants of property and franchises which do not impair sovereign right of police regulation; hence, Mississippi lottery charter of 1867 was validly abrogated by Constitution of 1869, though granted in consideration of money payment to State university, p. 821.

Approved in Douglas v. Kentucky, 168 U. S. 498, 503, 42 L. 556, 558, 18 S. Ct. 202, 204, similar case; State v. Woodward, 89 Ind. 113, 46 Am. Rep. 162, holding lottery privileges granted by territory annulled by criminal law under State Constitution; Weil v. Calhoun; 25 Fed. 872, Kresser v. Lyman, 74 Fed. 767, La Croix v. County Commrs., 49 Conn. 602, La Croix v. County Commrs., 50 Conn. 323, 47 Am. Rep. 652, McKinney v. Salem, 77 Ind. 214, State v. Bonnell, 119 Ind. 495, 21 N. E. 1101, Moore v. Indianapolis, 120 Ind. 492, 495, 22 N. E. 427, 428, and Shea v. Muncie, 148 Ind. 29, 46 N. E. 142, all denying irrevocability of liquor licenses; Butchers' Union Co. v. Crescent City Co., 111 U. S. 752, 28 L. 587, 4 S. Ct. 655, reversing S. C., 4 Woods, 97, 9 Fed. 745, denying exclusive slaughter-house rights, under charter; Pearsall v. Great Northern Ry., 161 U. S. 666, 40 L. 845, 16 S. Ct. 710, upholding law limiting railroad's charter power of consolidating, to lines not parallel; Platte, etc., M. Co. v. Dowell, 17 Colo. 386, 30 Pac. 72, upholding legislative right to require covering of private canal through city; Trageser v. Gray, 73 Md. 260, 25 Am. St. Rep. 594, 20 Atl. 907, 9 L. R. A. 786, and n., holding limiting of liquor licenses to temperate citizens not unconstitutional; Mathews v. St. Louis, etc., Ry., 121 Mo. 329, 24 S. W. 600, 25 L. R. A. 172, and n., upholding statute making railroad absolutely liable for fires, though charter allowed steam propulsion; State v. Greer, 9 Mo. App. 225, upholding new constitutional provision for election of corporation directors, conflicting with existing charter; Railroad v. Transportation Co., 25 W. Va. 364, upholding general maximum fare law as against railroad charter provision; Spring Valley Water Works v. San Francisco, 61 Cal. 10, holding provision of water company's charter for fixing water rates repealable; Lake Roland, etc., Ry. v. Mayor, 77 Md. 381, 26 Atl. 516, 20 L. R. A. 134, denying irrevocability of ordinance permitting double tracking of streets; State v. Murphy, 130 Mo. 23, 31 S. W. 597, holding legislative grant of use of streets for electric lighting subject to city's regulation; Shields v. Clifton Hill Land Co., 94 Tenn. 148, 45 Am. St. Rep. 715, 28 S. W. 674, 26 L. R. A. 518, upholding statute curing invalid charter and thereby destroying corporator's liability to creditors. See 27 Am. St. Rep. 565, 42 Am. St. Rep. 542, and 66 Am. St. Rep. 335, notes.

Distinguished in New Orleans v. Houston, 119 U. S. 274, 275, 30 L. 414, 7 S. Ct. 203, 204, where Constitution granted lottery and legislature attempted repeal; Walla Walla v. Walla Walla, etc., Co., 172 U. S. 16, 19 S. Ct. 83, holding water contract innocuous in itself and properly performed, inviolable; New Orleans Water-Works Co. v. St. Tammany, etc., Co., 4 Woods, 142, 14 Fed. 199, upholding exclusive right of water company, under State contract, to supply city; Indianapolis v. Consumers, etc., Co., 140 Ind. 117, 49 Am. St. Rep. 190, 39 N. E. 437, 27 L. R. A. 518, holding grant of right to lay gas pipes not exercise of police power; Indianapolis v. Central Trust Co., 83 Fed. 532, 53 U. S. App. 664, arguendo.

101 U. S. 822-831, 25 L. 836, UNITED STATES v. CLAMORGAN.

Public lands.—Act of June 30, 1860, section 4, does not authorize confirmation of Spanish land grant uncertain in extent and location, p. 831.

Not cited.

101 U. S. 832-835, 26 L. 973, RAILROAD CO. v. ALABAMA.

Constitutional law.—State statute, such as Alabama code provision, allowing suit against State, but providing no means of enforcing judgment, is not a remedy protected against repeal as to existing contracts, even although suit be already pending thereon, p. 835.

Followed in Melvin v. State, 121 Cal. 22, 53 Pac. 418, Horne v. State, 84 N. C. 365, and Baltzer v. State, 104 N. C. 277, 10 S. E. 156. Rule applied in Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U. S. 18, 33 L. 848, 10 S. Ct. 508, holding State cannot, without its consent, be sued in Federal court; Smith v. Rackliffe, 87 Fed. 967, 59 U. S. App. 433, holding California political code, section 3669, does not confer right to sue State in Federal courts; Baltzer v. North Carolina, 161 U. S. 244, 40 L. 686, 16 S. Ct. 501, holding North Carolina construction of constitutional amendment of 1879, as repealing right to sue, not impairment of prior contracts; Ex parte Macdonald, 76 Ala. 605, upholding statute giving State all legal remedies without bond or affidavit required of individuals; Houston v. State, 98 Wis. 487, 74 N. W. 113, 42 L. R. A. 49, denying right to sue State for tort, where action under local statute.

Distinguished in United States v. Lee, 106 U. S. 207, 27 L. 177, 1 S. Ct. 249 (but see dissenting opinion in 106 U. S. 227, 27 L. 184, 1 S. Ct. 266), where suit is against State officer in possession of property claimed by plaintiff; State v. Young, 29 Minn. 530, 531, 9 N. W. 742, where State Constitution provided for repudiation of existing bonds unless appropriation therefor approved by people.

101 U. S. 836, 25 L. 1009, RAILROAD CO. v. TURRILL.

Appeal and error.—Supreme Court decree of affirmance in patent case appealed from Circuit Court in Illinois, directing payment of interest thereon at same rate as “similar decrees” in Illinois State courts, means decrees for payment of money and not patent decrees, p. 836.

Approved in Illinois Cent. R. R. v. Turrill, 110 U. S. 303, 28 L. 155, 4 S. Ct. 5, holding interest runs upon decree for infringement.

101 U. S. 837-850, 25 L. 1081, HOWARD v. RAILWAY CO.

Ejectment.—Evidence is admissible in ejectment, of change in name of defendant corporation, or other matters necessary to prove title, p. 844.

Trial.—Judges should not submit to juries questions not supported by sufficient evidence to warrant verdict, but may direct finding accordingly, p. 844.

Judgment.—Subsequent judgment lienholder is not necessary party to foreclosure of prior lien, and, if not party, decree does not displace his lien or destroy right to redeem duly asserted in due time, pp. 845-849.

Approved in Title, etc., Co. v. Railway, 189 Pa. St. 370, 69 Am. St. Rep. 818, 42 Atl. 142, following rule; Tug River Coal, etc., Co. v. Brigel, 86 Fed. 822, holding neither prior nor subsequent incumbrances necessary; Sheffield, etc., Ry. v. Newman, 77 Fed. 793, 41 U. S. App. 766, holding parties to original bill not bound by decree on supplemental bill introducing new matter.

Assistance, writ of, issues only against parties affected by decree; hence, not against subsequent incumbrancer not party to foreclosure of judgment lien, p. 849.

Reaffirmed in Comer v. Felton, 61 Fed. 735, 22 U. S. App. 313. Approved in Exum v. Baker, 115 N. C. 244, 44 Am. St. Rep. 451, 20 S. E. 449, tax sale purchaser not in priority with purchaser at foreclosure sale; St. Louis, etc., Ry. v. Wear, 135 Mo. 264, 36 S. W. 366, 33 L. R. A. 350, awarding prohibition to prevent execution of writ against one not a party.

GENERAL INDEX

TO THE

FOUR VOLUMES CONTAINED IN THIS BOOK.

ACTIONS.

SEE COUNTIES, 1.

DUTIES, 1.

STATUTES, 9.

1. Actions for debt will lie where the amount sought to be recovered is certain, or can be ascertained from fixed data by computation.

Mills v. Scott,

294

2. Persons appointed or authorized by law to make or improve a highway are not answerable for consequential damages, if they act within their jurisdiction and with care and skill.

Transportation Co. v. Chicago,

336

3. Acts done in the proper exercise of governmental powers, and not directly encroaching upon private property, although their consequences may impair its use, do not entitle the owner of such property to compensation from the State or its agents, nor give him any right of action.

Idem,

336

4. A city is not liable for consequential damages resulting from an improvement made in the street, the fee of which is in the city, provided the improvement had the sanction of the Legislature.

Idem,

336

5. A riparian owner on a navigable stream, cannot maintain a suit at common law against public agents to recover consequential damages resulting from obstructing a stream in pursuance of legislative authority.

Idem,

336

6. Whoever undertakes to keep an animal feræ nature in places of public resort is liable for the injuries inflicted by it on a party who is not guilty of negligence. But if the animal is of a tame nature, there must be proof of notice to the owner, of its vicious habits, in order to make him liable.

Cong. & Empire Spring Co. v. Edgar, 487

7. At the common law everyone has the right to destroy real and personal property, in cases of actual necessity, to prevent the spreading of a fire, and there is no responsibility on the part of such destroyer, and no remedy for the owner.

McBurney v. Carson,

378

3. Where a trust is created by a will and no trustee is appointed, the executor is bound to act as such trustee. In such case, the sureties in the bond of the executor are liable for his defaults, whether in one sphere of duty or the other.

Idem,

378

4. An executor by charging himself with a note as part of the assets of the estate and settling his accounts on that basis, shows that he supposed the debt to be valid in the hands of the testator.

Butterfield v. Smith,

868

5. Final settlements of administrators and executors, when adjudicated, have the force and effect of judgments as between the parties thereto, but as to no one else.

Idem,

868

6. A person dealing with an executor exercising his power of disposition of the personal assets, not for the estate but for other purposes, is held to a knowledge of all the limitations which the will as well as the law put upon his power.

Smith v. Ayer,

955

7. Property acquired from an executor by third parties, with knowledge of his trust and his disregard of its obligations, can be followed and recovered.

Idem,

955

8. The authority of an executor to continue a specifically designated existing interest in a firm does not extend to the use in its business of any other funds of the estate, nor to the use of any property which he received in his official character, to raise funds for that purpose.

Idem,

955

9. Applying notes held by an executor, or using them to obtain money for the purpose of such firm, was a misappropriation of them. The parties receiving them, knowing of the directions of the testator, cannot hold them against the claim of his representatives.

Idem,

955

10. Where a bill is filed by a creditor against an executor for the discovery of assets and the application thereof to his debt, and the executor answers, admitting sufficient assets and alleging that he is ready and willing to pay such debt, but that he disputes the justice thereof, and upon the trial the proof showed that the executor had not sufficient assets to pay such debt which was proved to be valid, a decree against the executor for the amount of the debt was proper.

Kennedy v. Creswell,

1075

11. The executor's admission was a good ground for charging him with the liability, although he could not urge it as evidence in support of his plea. Such admission of assets renders the executor personally liable.

Idem,

1075

12. The objection that the bill was not formally dismissed as to the devisees, cannot be raised here by the executor, who alone appealed from the decree.

4. Under the Act of 1875, the finding of facts in the circuit court in admiralty causes is conclusive, and this court can review by bill of exceptions only questions of law.

The Abbotsford v. Johnson, 168

5. A party to a suit has no vested right to an appeal or a writ of error from one court to another. Such a privilege once granted may be taken away.

Ball. & P. R. Co. v. Grant, 231

6. Where the charge of the judge to the jury is of a character to mislead the jury, the error is one of law, and may be corrected in an appellate court.

R. R. Co. v. Varnell, 233

7. In every such case, the part of the charge to which the exception is addressed ought to be distinctly pointed out. Unless that is done, the exception cannot be sustained as a ground for reversing the judgment.

Cannon v. Pratt, 446

12. Where appeals are being prosecuted to final judgment by order of the directors or trustees of a corporation, this court will not, upon the suggestion of strangers to the decrees appealed from, dismiss the appeals.

Railway Co. v. Alling, 438

13. This court will not disturb a judgment of nonsuit, where, if the case had been left to the jury and a judgment been rendered against the defendants, this court would set it aside as against evidence.

North v. McDonald, 535

14. The admission of immaterial or irrelevant evidence is not sufficient reason for reversing a judgment, when it is apparent that it cannot have affected the verdict or the finding injuriously to the plaintiff in error.

Union Consolidated Mining Co. v. Taylor, 541

15. No appeal lies from a mere decree respecting costs and expenses.

Elastic Fabric Co. v. Smith, 547

16. Where there is no dispute as to the law, and the only question is one of fact, and the finding of the trial court has been affirmed by the higher state court, this court will not disturb the judgment of the state court unless the error is clear.

Lammers v. Nissen, 562

17. The refusal of the district court to grant a new trial on the evidence, cannot be re-examined here on a writ of error.

Railway Co. v. Twombly, 550

18. This court cannot send the case back to the court below, with instructions to enter a judgment of nonsuit, because since the judgment below, and while the writ of error has been pending, the statute authorizing the action has been repealed.

Idem, 550

19. Where no errors are found in the record, all this court can do is to affirm the judgment.

Idem, 550

20. This court may look into the opinions of the Supreme Court of Louisiana, for the purpose of determining whether a federal question was raised and decided in a case coming from that court.

Weatherly v. Bowie, 606

21. On the trial of an action at law, when the Judges of the Circuit Court are opposed in opinion on a material question of law, the opinion of the presiding judge prevails; but the judgment rendered conformably thereto may, without regard to its amount, be reviewed on a writ of error, upon their certificate stating such question.

Dow v. Johnson, 632

22. It is error to submit to a jury to find a fact of which there is no competent evidence.

Manning v. Ins. Co., 761

23. An appeal in admiralty from the district court to the circuit court vacates the decree appealed from. The cause is heard de novo in the circuit court, and an entire new decree entered, which the latter court carries into execution. The cause is not remanded to the district court.

The Louisville v. Halliday, 771

24. The finding of facts by the circuit court is conclusive on this court. Where no exceptions are taken to the rulings of the court in the progress of the trial, the decree will be confirmed.

Idem, 771

25. Where prayers for instructions were presented as a whole, refused as a whole, and excepted to in the same manner, if any one of them was rightfully rejected no error was committed.

Worthington v. Mason, 848

26. When complaint is made of the instructions of the court given or refused, the proof of the facts which make the charge erroneous must be distinctly set forth, or it must appear that evidence was given tending to prove them. It is not sufficient to show that the judge assumed them in his charge to the jury.

Idem, 848

27. If it appears upon the record that no division of opinion actually existed among the Judges of the Circuit Court this court will not consider a question certified, even though it be certified in form.

Col. Cent. Railroad Co. v. White, 860

28. An order denying a motion to proceed no farther in a cause, on the ground of an alleged settlement, and directing that the cause proceed, is not a final decree from which an appeal will lie to this court.

Liano v. Gaines, 928

29. A consent decree in the circuit court can be appealed from, but this court cannot consider any errors assigned which were waived by the consent.

Pac. R. R. Co. v. Ketchum, 932

30. Where it appears of record that a defendant assented to a decree, this only leaves for our consideration under the appeal, whether the court below had jurisdiction of the cause so as to authorize it to enter any decree.

Idem, 932

31. It is not sufficient to reverse a decree in equity that, on overruling defendant's demurrer to the bill, no leave to answer was given, where no application was made for time to answer and no harm to defendant resulted.

5. A citation is necessary to an appeal, except when the appeal is allowed in open court during the term at which the decree is rendered. When not so allowed, and there is no citation, the appeal will be dismissed.

Vansant v. Gas-Light Co., 265

6. Where the federal questions involved in a case were correctly decided by the State Supreme Court, the judgment of that court must be affirmed, without determining any other questions not of a federal character.

Myreck v. Thompson, 324

7. If a transcript is not filed and the cause docketed during the term to which it was made returnable, or some sufficient excuse given for the delay, the writ of error or appeal becomes inoperative and the cause will be dismissed. Appearance does not waive the objection.

Grigsby v. Purcell, 354

8. This court may allow a writ of error to be amended in its return day.

National Bank v. Bank of Commerce, 362

9. Where the return day of the writ is changed, a new citation should issue.

Idem, 362

10. The rules of this court requiring causes to be ready for hearing when reached will be rigidly enforced.

Alvord v. U. S., 399

11. Under the Act of April 7, 1874, on appeals to this court from the territorial courts, in cases where there has been no trial by jury, instead of the evidence at large, a statement of the facts and the rulings of the court is to be made and transmitted to this court.

Stringfellow v. Cain, 421

12. An affidavit for the continuance of a cause does not become a part of the record, unless it is properly introduced as evidence by one of the parties.

Campbell v. Rankin, 435

13. A motion to affirm may be united with a motion to dismiss, if there appears on the record some color of right to a dismissal.

Whitney v. Cook, 446

14. When the Supreme Court of Utah affirms the judgment of the District Court upon findings of fact made by the district court, the Supreme Court in effect adopts such findings as its own for the purposes of an appeal to this court.

Stringfellow v. Cain, 421

Cannon v. Pratt, 446

15. Where a judgment is severable as between the defendants, the bonds for a stay of execution on writ of error are sufficient, where they are far in excess in each instance of the amount recovered against the several defendants who seek the stay.

Ex parte French, 529

16. Where all the defendants want the judgment reviewed, but a part only desire to have the execution against them stayed, they may all join in the writ, and separate when they ask for a stay.

Idem, 529

17. If the writ is informal, the remedy is by motion to vacate it, and not by mandamus to have the judgment carried into execution.

Idem, 529

18. A transcript of the record is sufficiently authenticated for an appeal or a writ of error to this court, if it is signed by the deputy in the name of and for the clerk, and sealed with the seal of the court below.

Garnau v. Dozier, 536

19. This court will not decide motions to dismiss before the record is printed when there is any question about the facts on which the motion rests.

St. Louis National Bank v. Ins. Co., 547

20. Only such original papers can be transmitted to this court on appeal, as require actual inspection as originals in order to give them their full effect in the determination of the suit.

Craig v. Smith, 577

21. Where an appeal should have been taken in the name of the individual members of a commercial firm, but instead thereof is taken in the name of the firm, the defect is one that may be amended, and for that reason this court will not dismiss the appeal.

Moore v. Simmons, 590

22. This court will vacate a supersedeas, when the approval of the supersedeas bond by the justice of this court who allowed the appeal was obtained by fraud and perjury, and, in such cases, will refuse to accept a new bond.

Florida Cent. R. R. Company v. Schulte, 605

23. Where the appellant selected such of the papers and proofs used on the hearing below as he thought were necessary, and had them copied into the transcript, the court will order that he file in this court as part of the record, copies of such papers omitted as the appellee deems necessary, or the appeal will be dismissed.

Idem, 605

24. When the appeal is taken and perfected in open court during the term at which the decree complained of is actually entered, a citation is not necessary. When subsequently allowed, a citation is necessary.

Chic. & Pac. R. R. Co. v. Blair, 587

25. Where the appellants supposed that a citation would be waived, this court will not dismiss the appeal absolutely, but order that a citation be issued and served, or that the appeal be dismissed.

Idem, 587

26. A writ of error will be dismissed for the omission to state with certainty its return day.

See v. Conn. Mut. L. Ins. Co., 772

Although amendable, yet where no application is made by the plaintiff in error for leave to amend, and no citation has been served, this court will not, on its own motion, make any order in that behalf.

Idem, 43

3. A purchaser of land from the assignee of a bankrupt acquired no greater rights than those possessed by his grantor.

Gifford v. Helms, 57

4. An assignee in bankruptcy, under the Bankruptcy Act of 1867, had authority to bring suit in the state courts, whenever those courts were invested with appropriate jurisdiction suited to the nature of the case.

Wilson v. Goodrich, 111

5. Where a debtor made an assignment of his property for the benefit of his creditors, which was set aside in favor of his subsequent assignee in bankruptcy, a creditor who had levied upon the assigned property under execution after the assignment and before the proceedings in bankruptcy, secures thereby no priority over the other creditors of the bankrupt.

Reed v. McIntyre, 171

6. The only remedy for the correction of error of the District Court in an adjudication in bankruptcy is under the supervisory jurisdiction of the Circuit Court, whose action is final and not subject to review in this court.

Cleveland Ins. Co. v. Globe Ins. Co., 201

7. A writ of error is proper process to take the case to the Circuit Court for review under this jurisdiction.

Idem, 201

8. Fraud, as used in the section of the bankrupt law which provides that "No debt created by fraud shall be discharged in bankruptcy," means positive fraud or fraud in fact, involving moral turpitude or intentional wrong.

Wolf v. Stir, 309

9. A debt not created by the purchase of goods, but by a bond given in a replevin suit to pay their value if the party failed to sustain his title, is not created by fraud, but is a contingent debt provable under the Bankrupt Act.

Idem, 309

10. Although the principal in such bond is relieved from liability thereon by his discharge in bankruptcy, that does not exonerate the surety on the bond.

Idem, 309

11. An assignee in bankruptcy takes property subject to such liens or incumbrances as would have affected it had no adjudication in bankruptcy been made.

Stewart v. Platt, 816

12. A mere exchange of securities is not forbidden by the letter or the spirit of the bankrupt law.

Idem, 816

13. A claim against a foreign government vaguely described in the schedule of a bankrupt's assets, and denominated worthless but really of great value, does not pass on a general sale of his accounts, notes and judgments to a purchaser for the benefit of the bankrupt, with money furnished by him, where the price paid was a mere nominal sum.

Phelps v. McDonald, 473

14. The provision of the bankrupt law which requires that all suits by or against the assignee should be brought within two years from the time the cause of action accrued, relates only to suits by or against the assignee with respect to parties other than the bankrupt, and not to a suit against the bankrupt.

Idem, 473

15. A claim of a bankrupt against a foreign government passes to his assignee in bankruptcy.

Idem, 473

16. An assignment in bankruptcy relates to the commencement of the proceeding, and the title of the assignee to all the property and effects of the bankrupt became vested as of that date.

International Bank v. Sherman, 866

17. The time within which an assignee in bankruptcy can commence an action begins to run when the assignee is appointed.

Idem, 866

18. A transfer of property by the bankrupt after commencement of the bankrupt proceedings is void, although the act of bankruptcy upon which the adjudication was founded was introduced into the petition by an amendment made after such transfer.

1. A grantee by deed of quitclaim is not a bona fide purchaser.

Dickerson v. Coigrove. 618

2. The purchasers of non-negotiable demands, from others than the original owner of them, can take only such rights as he has parted with, except when by his acts he is estopped from asserting his original claim.

STATE LAWS AND DECISIONS, 3.

1. Bonds of a county in Missouri are not void in the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value, because the railroad company to which said bonds were issued, in payment of its capital stock, was not created until subsequent to the favorable vote of the qualified voters and the order of subscription.

Dayless v. Huidekoper. 112

2. In Kansas it is not a defense to an action on coupons, by a bona fide holder for value, without notice that the amount of bonds issued by the town was in excess of the amounts prescribed by the Acts of the State in relation to the taxable property of the town.

Wilson v. Salamanca, 330

3. It is not a defense to such action that after a favorable vote of the township to subscribe stock in a railroad company, the subscription and the issue of bonds without any further election were made to another company with which the company in whose favor the vote was had had become consolidated under a law existing at the time of said election.

Idem, 330

4. Every purchaser of a municipal bond is chargeable with notice of the statute under which the bond was issued.

U. S. v. County of Macon, 331

5. Where a city was authorized to issue its bonds for public improvements to be paid by assessment upon the property specially improved and benefited, an owner of such bonds who has recovered judgment on them, is not confined to a special assessment on the property benefited, but is entitled to have a levy of a general tax on all the taxable property within the city, to pay such judgment.

U. S. v. Fort Scott, 348

6. Where a city, when instructed by a majority of its voters, had authority by its charter to borrow money for municipal purposes, and to issue its bonds therefor, and bonds issued by it by their recital of the titles of the ordinances under which they were issued, in effect assured the purchaser that they were to be used for municipal purposes, with the previous sanction, duly given, of a majority of the legal voters of the city, the city is estopped to say, as against a bona fide holder of the bonds, that they were not issued nor used for municipal purposes.

Hackett v. Ottawa, 363

7. Negotiable promissory notes of a purchaser of municipal bonds are a sufficient consideration for their sale.

Orleans v. Platt, 404

8. Where a certiorari was granted to review the order of a County Judge for the issue of county bonds, and before the reversal of the order the commissioners appointed by the County Judge subscribed for the stock of a railroad company and issued the county bonds, they are valid in the hands of a bona fide holder although the order for their issue be subsequently reversed.

Idem, 404

9. Where a corporation has lawful power to issue bonds, and does so, the bona fide holder of them has a right to presume the power was properly exercised, and where the bonds on their face recite the circumstances which bring them within the power, the corporation is estopped to deny the truth of the recital.

Idem, 404

Pompton v. Cooper Union, 803

10. The doctrine of lis pendens has no application to commercial securities, such as municipal bonds.

Idem, 404

11. When the County Judge is the officer charged by law with the duty to decide whether municipal bonds can be legally issued, his judgment is conclusive until reversed by a higher court.

Idem, 404

12. Where the statute, under which bonds of a county in Missouri were issued, required that they should be made payable to a railroad company, its successors and assigns, and they were made payable to the company, or bearer, held: that the statutory requirement in this particular is only directory, and the county is estopped to take advantage of it by the recital, in the bonds, of conformity to the statutes.

Supervisors v. Galbraith, 410

13. Where no place of payment of the bonds was designated by the statute, it was competent for the supervisors to make them payable in New York, and the law of the place of performance governs their construction and effect.

Idem, 410

14. A town which has subscribed to the stock of a railroad and issued its bonds therefor, cannot, as against a bona fide purchaser, claim exemption from payment on the ground that the railroad company disregarded its promise to construct thereof, or that its own officers delivered the bonds in violation of special conditions, of which the purchaser had no knowledge or notice.

Brooklyn v. Insurance Company, 416

15. Where a suit was commenced against the holders and owners of such bonds, the decree therein cannot bind anyone not personally served with process or who did not appear, nor affect the rights of non-resident holders of bonds and coupons, proceeded against by constructive service.

Idem, 416

16. Where the bonds recited the judgment ordering their issue, and that they were issued pursuant to the statute, for the object specified in the petition of taxpayers, and by persons appointed by law to subscribe for the stock and to issue them to pay for it, and the sufficiency of the statutory authority under which the proceedings were had is not denied, the recital is an estoppel against the obligor in favor of a bona fide holder.

Lyons v. Munson, 451

17. Railroad bonds, by which the company acknowledges the indebtedness to A or bearer, in the sum of either $225 in London, or $1,000, in New York or New Orleans, the place of payment to be fixed by the president of the company by his indorsement, but such place of payment left blank in the indorsement, are not negotiable paper.

Parsons v. Jackson, 457

18. Where such bonds were never issued by the railroad company, but were seized and carried off by a raid of soldiers during the war, and had past due coupons attached and were offered for a very small consideration, purchasers were affected with notice of their invalidity and cannot sustain the position of bona fide holders without notice.

Idem, 457

19. A town in Wisconsin, issuing its bonds, is estopped as against a bona fide holder for value, to show that the true date of the bonds was different from that named in them, or that the town clerk, who was in office at the date of the bonds, in fact, signed the bonds after he went out of office.

Weyawewaga v. Ayling, 470

20. It must be assumed that the bonds were delivered to the railroad company with the assent of the clerk. If the fact was otherwise, it was incumbent on the town to make the necessary proof.

Idem, 470

21. Where a judgment has been rendered by the State Supreme Court against the validity of coupons of county bonds, the owner, who was a party to such judgment, cannot, while still owning them, recover upon them in another action in a third person's name. Such judgment is a bar to the second suit.

Block v. Commissioners, 491

22. A bona fide holder for value of other coupons without actual notice of any defense against them, may enforce them if there was legislative authority for their issue, and the condition upon which it was allowed to be exercised had been fulfilled.

Idem, 491

23. For all legal purposes the result of an election for the issue of county bonds is what it is declared to be by the authorized Board of Canvassers empowered to make the canvass until their decision has been reversed by a superior power, and its reversal or a new election has no effect upon acts lawfully done prior to it.

Idem, 491

24. Under the Kansas Statute of 1865 it is not necessary to name any particular company in the submission to the popular vote. It is sufficient if it be described, without naming it.

Idem, 491

25. A breach of a paymaster's bond does not occur until he or his legal representatives or sureties are required to refund moneys in his hands, and until such breach there can be no interest recovered on account of it.

U. S. v. Curtis, 571

26. The Missouri Act of 1860, amending the general railroad law, does not apply to companies having a special charter, in which special power is given to counties and townships to subscribe stock in aid thereof and to issue bonds to pay for the same.

Cass County v. Gillett, 585

27. A bona fide purchaser of negotiable security, before maturity, is not affected with constructive notice of a suit respecting such paper.

Idem, 585

28. An actual manual subscription on the books of a railroad company is not necessary to entitle a county to the stock of such company, nor to bind it to pay its bonds issued to pay for the same.

Idem, 585

29. Where a corporation has lawful power to issue bonds, and does so, the bona fide holder has a right to presume the power was properly exercised, and is not bound to look beyond the question of its existence.

Inhabitants of Pompton v. Cooper Union, 803

30. Where the bonds on their face recite the circumstance which brings them within the power, the corporation is estopped to deny the truth of the recital.

Orleans v. Platt, 404

31. The township of Empire, in Illinois, by subscribing to the stock of, and issuing its bonds to, the Danville, etc., Railroad Company for $50,000, did not exhaust its power under the charter of that company, but was authorized to subscribe an additional amount of $25,000 to the stock of the Indianapolis, etc., Railway Company, formed by the consolidation of the first named and another company, and issue its bonds therefor, under the Illinois Statute of Feb. 28, 1854.

Empire v. Darlington, 878

32. A decree in an Illinois court perpetually enjoining taxation to pay such bonds, and declaring them void, did not conclude any bondholders proceeded against as unknown owners and holders who were not served and did not appear, nor bondholders residing in other States who were proceeded against only by constructive service.

Idem, 878

33. In Illinois, municipal bonds payable to bearer are negotiable by delivery only, and an action may be maintained thereon in the name of the holder thereof.

Town of Roberts v. Bolles, 880

34. In that State municipal bonds issued in pursuance of a popular election, defectively called and held, are not invalid in the hands of a bona fide purchaser.

Idem, 880

35. The rights of the parties in regard to municipal bonds are to be determined according to the law as it was judicially construed to be when the bonds in question were put on the market as commercial paper.

Douglass Co. v. Pike, 968

Darlington v. Jackson, 972

Foot v. Pike County, 972

36. In an action on bonds of a county issued in payment of its subscription to a railroad company, the point that the charter of the company had ceased before the company was organized is a question between the State and the company alone.

Dallas Co. v. Huidekoper, 974

37. Whether the corporation had a legal existence or not when the subscription was made, is a question that cannot be raised in an action on the bonds, particularly where the corporation did exist as matter of fact, and was at that time in the exercise of all its chartered franchises.

Idem, 974

38. Where bonds contain a stipulation that on default in payment of interest, the principal shall become due at the option of the obligee, the election by the bondholder to consider the principal sum due is sufficiently proven by bringing a suit by the trustee on the deed of trust given to secure them, and the production of the bonds at the hearing.

Rice v. Edwards, 976

39. The Missouri Act to provide for the registration of bonds issued by counties and towns, applies to bonds issued under the township aid law.

Anthony v. Jasper Co., 1005

40. It is within the power of a State to prescribe the form in which municipal bonds shall be executed in order to bind the public for their payment, and if not so executed they create no legal liability.

Idem, 1005

41. Dealers in municipal bonds are charged with notice of the laws of the State granting power to make the bonds they find on the market, and purchasers must take the risk of the genuineness of the official signatures and of the official character of those who execute the paper they buy.

Idem, 1005

42. Bonds not issued by the proper authorities are, in legal effect, forged.

Idem, 1005

43. The New York Statute of April 16, 1852, to authorize the towns of Cayuga County to aid in the construction of a railroad, did not require that the tax payers should designate the company by its name.

Town of Scipio v. Wright, 1037

44. The bonds were not void, because the written assent of the required number of tax payers on the assessment roll of 1852 was obtained, and they were not issued until after Aug. 1, 1853, when the assessment roll for that year was by law required to be completed.

Idem, 1037

45. The fact that the bonds were not issued for borrowed money, but were exchanged for stock of the railroad company, is, according to the New York decisions, a defense for the town against a holder who, when he purchased, had notice of the manner of their issue; which decisions this court follows in this case.

Idem, 1037

46. A bona fide holder, who had no knowledge that the railroad company had received the bonds in payment for the stock taken for the town, would not be liable to such a defense.

Idem, 1037

47. The Act of Congress of May 27, 1872 validated the bonds of Yankton County issued to the Dakota Southern Railroad Company.

2. They may require information from him as to its value, and demand extra compensation for any excess beyond that which may reasonably be transported as baggage under the contract to carry the person, and may be discharged from liability, by his evasion or artifice.

Idem, 531

3. In the absence of legislation, or of special regulations by the carriers, or of conduct by the passenger misleading them as to such value, his failure to disclose such value when no inquiry is made of him, is not, in itself, a fraud upon them.

Idem, 531

4. To the extent that articles, taken by him for his personal use when traveling, exceed in quantity and value such as are ordinarily or usually taken by passengers of like station and pursuing like journeys, they are not baggage for which the carriers are, by general law, responsible as insurers.

Idem, 813

CHARTER-PARTIES.

1. Where a charter-party contains a recital that, at the date of its execution, the vessel was lying in the harbor of New Orleans, while she was then at sea; held, that that recital is not a warranty or contract, but a representation, and if the charterers knew that the vessel was not there, so that they were not deceived or misled by the recital, it was immaterial.

Bailey v. Davis, 944

2. Where the charter-party fixed no definite time for the vessel to be at New Orleans, ready to receive the cargo, the master was only bound to use reasonable diligence in bringing her to that port.

Idem, 944

CHATTEL MORTGAGES.

1. A chattel mortgage, executed by a firm upon firm property, is void, under the New York statute, as against creditors, subsequent purchasers, and mortgagees in good faith, unless filed in the city or town where the individual members of the firm severally reside.

Stewart v. Platt, 816

2. The actual residence of the mortgagors, and not their residence as recited in the mortgage, controls.

Idem, 816

3. Although chattel mortgages, by reason of the failure to file them in the proper place, are void as against judgment creditors, they are valid and effective as between the mortgagors and the mortgagee.

STATUTES, 3.

1. The Missouri Constitution of 1855, which forbids any county, city or town to become stockholders of, or to loan its credit to any corporation without the assent of two thirds of its qualified voters, was prospective only in its effect, and did not take away any right already given by statute.

County of Schuyler v. Thonas,

88

2. Where a county was authorized to become a stockholder of a corporation by virtue of its original charter, passed before the adoption of such constitution, no submission of the question to a popular vote was necessary.

Idem,

88

3. The Act of March 3, 1873, 17 Stat. at L., 509, is a valid and constitutional exercise of legislative power, requiring the Attorney-General to bring a suit in equity in the name of the United States, in any Circuit Court, against the Union Pacific Railroad Company and others.

U. S. v. Union Pacific R. R. Co.,

143

4. The provisions authorizing process to be served without the limits of the district where the suit was brought, and parties and subjects of controversy to be united which, in an ordinary chancery suit, would render a bill multifarious, are not unconstitutional, but are regulations of practice and procedure which are subject to legislative control.

Idem,

143

5. Except in favor of the company or of the United States, there can, therefore, be no recovery, under the said Act of March 3, 1873, and none but such as was sanctioned by the principles of equity before it was passed.

Idem,

143

6. The interference, by the Attorney-General, with corporations, on the ground of a trust in the government, is limited to two classes: 1. To religious, charitable, municipal, or other corporations whose functions are solely public, and whose managers have destroyed or misappropriated the fund, or otherwise abused those two functions; 2. Where other corporations exercise powers beyond those to which they are limited by the law of their organization.

Idem,

143

7. The constitutional guaranty of religious freedom was not intended to prohibit legislation in respect to polygamy.

Reynolds v. U. S.,

244

8. A Statute of Illinois, passed in 1855, declares that all the property of the Northwestern University shall be forever free from taxation. A Statute of 1872 limited this exemption to land and other property in immediate use by the Institution; held, that the latter statute impaired the obligation of the contract of exemption found in the Statute of 1855.

N. W. University v. People,

387

9. Whether the Statute of 1855 is a valid contract, or is void by reason of its conflicting with the State Constitution of 1848, under which it was made, is a question on which the judgment of the Supreme Court of Illinois can be reviewed here.

Idem,

387

10. The lands, and other property of the University, the annual profits of which are devoted to the purposes of the Institution as a school, could under such State Constitution be exempted by statute from taxation, and the exempting power of the Legislature was not limited to real estate occupied or in immediate use by the University.

Wheeling P. & Cin. Transportation Co.

Wheeling,

412

13. So long as a State, by its laws prescribing the mode and subject of taxation, does not trench upon the legitimate authority of the Union, nor violate any right recognized or secured by the Constitution of the United States, this court, as between the State and its citizen, can afford him no relief against State taxation, however unjust, oppressive or onerous.

Kirtland v. Hotchkiss,

558

14. The Constitution does not prohibit a State from taxing one of its resident citizens, for a debt held by him, due by a resident of another State, and evidenced by the bond of the debtor, secured by deed of trust or mortgage upon real estate situated in the State in which the debtor resides.

Idem,

558

15. Section 643 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which declares that "any civil suit or criminal prosecution commenced in any court of a State against any officer appointed under or acting by authority of any revenue law of the United States,  may, at any time before the trial or final hearing thereof, be removed for trial into the Circuit Court," is not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States.

Tennessee v. Davis,

648

16. The Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States was intended to secure to a recently emancipated race, all the civil rights that the superior race enjoy, and to give to it the protection of the General Government, in the enjoyment of such rights, whenever they should be denied by the States.

Strawder v. West Virginia,

664

17. The Amendment not only gave citizenship and the privileges of citizenship to persons of color but denied to any State the power to withhold from them the equal protection of the laws, and invested Congress with power, by appropriate legislation, to enforce its provisions.

Idem.

664

18. The Statute of West Virginia, which denies to colored citizens the right and privilege of being jurors, because of their color, although qualified in all other respects, is a discrimination against them which is forbidden by the Amendment.

Idem.

664

19. Section 641 of the Revised Statutes is not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States.

Idem.

664

20. The object of sections 641, 1977 and 1978 of the U. S., R. S., as of the Constitution which authorized them, was to place, in respect to civil rights, the colored race upon a level with the white.

Ex parte Virginia.

667

21. The prohibitions of the Fourteenth Amendment have exclusive reference to state action. Section 641 was also intended to protect them against state action, and against that alone.

Idem.

667

22. Congress, by virtue of the 5th section of the Fourteenth Amendment, may enforce the prohibitions whenever they are disregarded by either the Legislative, the Executive, or the Judicial Department of the State. It may secure the right, that is, enforce its recognition, by removing the case from a state court, in which it is denied, into a federal court, where it will be acknowledged.

Idem.

667

23. To judicial infractions of the constitutional Amendment after the trial has commenced, section 641 has no applicability. It was not intended to reach such cases. They were left to the revisory power of this court.

Idem.

667

24. The denial or inability to enforce, in the judicial tribunals of a State, rights secured to a defendant by any law providing for the equal civil rights of all persons, citizens of the United States, referred to in section 641, is primarily, if not exclusively, a denial of such rights, or an inability to enforce them, resulting from the Constitution or laws of the State.

Idem.

667

25. The Constitution and laws of Virginia do not exclude colored citizens from service on juries.

Idem.

667

26. The defendant moved in the state court that the venire be so modified that one third, or some portion of the jury, should be composed of his own race. The denial of that motion was not a denial of a right secured to him by any law providing for the equal civil rights of citizens of the United States, or by any Statute, or by the Fourteenth Amendment.

Idem.

667

27. A mixed jury in a particular case is not essential to the equal protection of the laws. It is a right to which any colored man is entitled, that, in the selection of jurors to pass upon his life, liberty or property, there shall be no exclusion of his race, and no discrimination against him, because of his color.

Idem.

667

28. The Act of March 1, 1875 (18 Stat., part 3, 338), which enacts that "no citizen shall be disqualified from service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States, or of any State, on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude; and any officer who shall exclude or fail to summon any citizen for the cause aforesaid, shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor," is authorized by the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Amendments of the Constitution.

Ex parte Virginia.

676

29. The inhibition contained in the Fourteenth Amendment means that no agency of the State, or of the officers or agents by whom its powers are exerted, shall deny to any person within her jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Idem.

676

30. The Act of a state officer in selecting jurors is ministerial, not judicial; and, although he derives his authority from the State, he is bound, in the discharge of that duty, to obey the Federal Constitution and the laws passed in pursuance thereof, that no person shall be disqualified as a juror on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude.

Idem.

31. A municipal corporation, owning and maintaining improved wharves and other property for the benefit of commerce upon the public navigable waters of the United States, is not prohibited by the Constitution of the United States from charging and collecting from parties using its wharves and facilities, reasonable fees for the use of the property.

N. W. Union Packet Co. v. St. Louis.

688

32. The ordinance of Vicksburg, passed July 12, 1865, establishing the rate of wharfage of vessels at that city, is constitutional and valid. It does not trench upon the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the States, nor lay a duty of tonnage in the sense of the Constitution.

Vicksburg v. Tobin.

690

33. The Act of Ohio, passed Feb. 16, 1846, that, upon the fulfillment of certain terms and conditions by the Town of Canfield, in Mahoning County, the county seat should be "permanently established" at that town, does not constitute, a contract within the meaning of the Constitution.

Newton v. Commissioners.

710

34. There was no stipulation that the county seat should remain there in perpetuity.

Idem.

710

35. Congress had power, by the Constitution, to enact sections 5515 and 5522 of U. S. R. S., provided in the Enforcement Act of May 31, 1870, and the supplement thereto of Feb. 23, 1871, for supervising the elections of Representatives, and for preventing frauds therein, and the other sections of U. S. Rev. Stat., relating to the elective franchise, which they are intended to enforce.

Ex parte Siebold.

717

36. Congress has a supervisory power over elections for Representatives, and may make new regulations, or add to, alter or modify the regulations made by the State, or impose new duties on the officers of election, or additional penalties for breach of duty, or for the perpetration of fraud; or provide for the attendance of officers to prevent frauds and see that the elections are legally and fairly conducted. The authority of Congress on the subject is paramount to that of a State.

Idem.

717

37. The provision which authorizes the deputy marshals to keep the peace at the elections is not unconstitutional. The National Government has the right to use physical force in any part of the United States to compel obedience to its laws, and to carry into execution the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution.

Idem.

717

38. The provisions adopted for compelling the state officers of election to observe the State laws regulating elections of Representatives, not altered by Congress, are within the supervisory powers of Congress over such elections. The duties to be performed in this behalf are owed to the United States as well as to the State; and their violation is an offense against the United States, which Congress may rightfully inhibit and punish.

Idem.

717

39. Congress had power by the Constitution to vest in the circuit courts the appointment of supervisors of election.

Idem.

717

40. An officer of election, at an election for a Representative to Congress in the City of Cincinnati, was convicted of a misdemeanor in the Circuit Court of the United States, under section 5515 of the Revised Statutes, for not conveying the ballot box, after it had been sealed, to the county clerk, and for allowing it to be broken open. Held, that Congress had power to pass the law under which the conviction was had, and that the Circuit Court had jurisdiction of the offense.

Ex parte Clarke.

715

41. A State cannot, in the exercise of her taxing power, impose upon the products of another State, brought within her limits for sale or use, a more onerous burden or tax than upon like products of her own territory, nor discriminate against a citizen by reason of his being engaged in thus bringing in or selling them.

Guy v. Baltimore.

743

42. An ordinance of Baltimore, whereunder vessels laden with the products of other States are required to pay, for the use of the public wharves of that city, fees which are not exacted from vessels landing thereat with the products of Maryland, is in conflict with the Constitution of the United States.

Idem.

43. So far as it may be necessary to protect the products of other States and countries from discrimination by reason of their foreign origin, the power of the National Government over commerce with foreign nations and among the several States reaches the interior of every State of the Union.

Idem, 743

44. A state tax on peddlers of sewing-machines, which applies alike to sewing-machines manufactured in the State and out of it, is valid, and not repugnant to the U. S. Constitution.

Machine Co. v. Gage, 754

45. A clause in a charter of a city railroad company, that the company shall pay such license for each car run as is paid by other passenger railway companies in the city, which was thirty dollars, is not a contract that the license charged for such cars should never exceed the annual sum of thirty dollars, and protected from impairment by the United States Constitution.

Union Pass. Railway Co. v. Philadelphia, 912

46. A subsequent Act of the Legislature which requires such companies to pay the annual license of fifty dollars for each car, is not unconstitutional as violating a contract.

Idem, 912

47. Where power to alter, revoke or annul any charter of incorporation was vested in the Legislature by the Constitution of the State, before the defendant company was incorporated, the Legislature may increase such license fee.

Idem, 912

48. Where the right to sue, which a State gave its creditors, was not, in legal effect, a judicial remedy for the enforcement of its contracts, the obligation of its contracts was not impaired, within the meaning of the prohibitory clause of the Constitution of the United States, by taking away what was thus given.

Mem. & Cent. R. R. Co. v. Tennessee, 960

49. A State cannot be sued in its own courts without its consent. This is a privilege of sovereignty.

Idem, 960

50. Where, in suits against a State, the state courts are made little else than auditing Boards, and if funds are not voluntarily provided to meet the judgment, the courts are not invested with power to supply them, there is no such remedy for the enforcement of the contracts of the State as may not, under the Constitution of the United States, be taken away, by a law of the State.

S. & N. Railroad Co. v. Alabama, 973

51. Section 3413 of the Revised Statutes, that "Every national banking association, State bank, or banker, or association, shall pay a tax of ten per centum on the amount of notes of any town, city or municipal corporation paid out by them," is constitutional.

Merch. National Bank v. U. S., 979

52. The general objects and purposes of the Fourteenth Amendment to the U. S. Constitution are to extend United States citizenship to all natives and naturalized persons, and to prohibit the States from abridging their privileges or immunities.

Bowman v. Lewis, 989

53. The constitution of a State may provide two courts of appeal for different portions of its territory, without violating such constitutional Amendment.

Idem, 989

54. No Legislature can curtail the power of its successors to make such laws as they may deem proper in matters of police.

Sione v. Mississippi, 1079

55. The police power extends to all matters affecting the public health or the public morals. Lotteries are proper subjects for the exercise of this power.

Idem, 1079

56. The Legislature of a State cannot, by the charter of a lottery company, defeat the will of the people, authoritatively expressed by the adoption of a new state constitution, in relation to the further continuance of such business in their midst.

Idem, 1079

57. The contracts which the Constitution protects are those that relate to property rights, not governmental. The right to suppress lotteries is governmental, to be exercised at all times by those in power, at their discretion.

Idem, 448

8. By general comity, corporations created in one State or Territory are permitted to carry on any lawful business in another, and to acquire, hold and transfer property there equally as individuals.

Cowell v. Springs Co., 547

9. When a corporation is authorized by statute to hold real property necessary to enable it to carry on its business, the inquiry whether any particular real property is necessary for that business is a matter between the State and the corporation, which does not concern third parties.

Idem, 547

10. A special action on the case will lie against a corporation for improperly refusing to make a transfer of shares of capital stock, in the name of the party injured by the refusal, and its receiver may be ordered to pay the amount recovered.

11. Corporations are liable for every wrong they commit, and in such cases the doctrine of ultra vires has no application.

Nat. Bk. v. Graham, 750

12. Individuals elected and serving as officers of a corporation may incur a statutory liability for the corporate debts, although irregularities occurred in their election.

Steam-Engine Co. v. Hubbard, 786

13. Under the Connecticut Statute, such officers are, for the neglect or refusal to make an annual report, liable only for debts contracted during the period of such neglect or refusal.

Idem, 786

14. Where a company borrowed money and its note was given for it by its actuary, and the fund was honestly applied in payment of pressing liabilities of the company, and the trustees individually were advised of the transaction and made no objection, the validity of the note cannot be effectually denied by the company.

Creswell v. Lanahan, 853

15. The individual liability of stockholders in a corporation is always a creature of statute.

Terry v. Little, 864

16. Where the language of the charter is that the stockholders are "liable and held bound for any sum not exceeding twice the amount of their shares," the provision is, in legal effect, for a proportionate liability by all stockholders.

Idem, 864

17. A creditor of an insolvent corporation can proceed against one or more delinquent stockholders to recover the amount of his debt, without an account being taken of other indebtedness, and without bringing in all the stockholders for contribution.

Hatch v. Dana, 885

18. A court of equity, may enforce payment of such stock subscriptions although there have been no calls for them by the company.

Idem, 885

Wright v. Nagle, 921

20. Where a New York corporation is authorized to secure the payment of its debts by mortgaging its real estate, it has the power to give a mortgage for future advance.

Jones v. Guaranty & Ind. Co., 1030

21. If the mortgage be ultra vires, no one can take advantage of the defect of power involved but the State.

Idem, 1030

22. If a note secured by a mortgage be renewed or otherwise changed, the lien of the mortgage continues until the debt is paid.

Idem, 1030

23. Where a corporation at the date of a contract had not filed its articles of association, but subsequently to filing them ratified the contract by recognizing and treating it as valid, this made the contract valid.

11. A bill to compel the conveyance of land cannot be maintained upon a parol agreement only. The Statute of Frauds would be a complete bar.
May v. Sloan, 797
12. Courts of equity afford relief in case of mistake of facts, and allow parol evidence to vary and reform written contracts and instruments, when the defect or error arises from accident or misconception.
Walden v. Skinner, 963
13. In equity, a contract for the sale of land is treated, for most purposes, precisely as if it had been specifically performed.
Guntton v. Carroll, 985
Case v. N. O. & C. R. R. Co., 1004
15. A creditor of a deceased person has a right to go into a court of equity for a discovery of assets and the payment of his debt. When there, he will not be turned back to a court of law to establish the validity of his claim.
Kennedy v. Cresswell, 1075
3. Such defense is available at law, as well as in equity.
Idem, 618
4. When the owner of property in any form clothes another with the apparent title or power of disposition, and third parties are thereby induced to deal with him, they will be protected.
Coudrey v. Vandemburgh, 923
5. Where A conveyed lands to B, and took back a mortgage and assigned the mortgage to C, who took possession of the lands claiming title, and conveyed, with warranty to D, and B took no possession and never claimed any title himself, but subsequently drew deeds of the premises from others claiming under A, and, as a justice of the peace or notary public, took the acknowledgment of such deeds, and upon these occasions was silent as to any defect in the title; held, that B and one to whom he subsequently gave a quitclaim deed, are estopped from claiming any title to the premises.

Hooper v. Robinson, 219

3. An insurable interest, subsisting during the risk and at the time of loss, is sufficient, and the assured need not also allege or prove that he was interested at the time of effecting the policy.

Idem, 219

4. Where the insurance is "lost or not lost," the thing insured may be irrecoverably lost when the contract is entered into and yet the contract be valid.

3. A decision of a state court upon the general principles of commercial law, as to what is sufficient notice to an indorser who abandoned his residence in loyal territory and went to reside permanently within the Confederate lines, does not raise a federal question which this court can review.

Bank v. McVeigh, 110

4. It is not enough to give this court jurisdiction over the judgments of a state court that a federal question was presented to that court for decision; but it must appear that the decision of the question was necessary to the determination of the cause, and that it actually was decided.

State, ex rel. v. Board of Liquidation, 114

5. A decision of a state court, that as between vendor and vendee, there could be a sale and delivery of cotton, before the payment of the government tax assessed upon it under the Act of July 1, 1862 (12 Stat. at L., 465), presents no federal question, and this court has no jurisdiction to review the same.

United States v. Winchester, 479

14. Where the matter in dispute, in a case brought from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, is less than $2,500, the judgment is not reviewable here.

National Bank v. Miller, 529

15. Where the only controversy was as to the liability of the defendant for the difference between what he admitted to be due and what the plaintiff claimed, or $3,134.20, this is the amount actually in dispute, and as it is less than $5,000, this court has no jurisdiction.

Tinstman v. National Bank, 530

16. A habeas corpus for discharge from imprisonment under a conviction under sec. 5515 of U. S. Rev. Stat. was rightfully issued by a justice of this court, returnable before himself; and he had the right to refer the matter to this court, it being a case which involved the exercise of appellate jurisdiction.

Ex Parte Clarke, 715

17. Had the case involved original jurisdiction only, this court could not have taken jurisdiction of it.

Idem, 715

18. In cases brought here by writ of error for the re-examination of judgments of affirmance in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the value of the matter in dispute is determined by the judgment affirmed without adding interest or costs.

Balt. & P. Railroad Co. v. Trook, 571

19. Where the judgment after $1,500 had been remitted to avoid a new trial, did not exceed $2,500, under the rule established in Railroad Company v. Grant, infra, 281, this court has no jurisdiction.

Idem, 571

20. In a suit in equity against two persons, in which there is no joint obligation and there cannot be a recovery against either of them separately for more than $2,500, this court has no jurisdiction.

Ballard Paving Co. v. Mulford, 591

21. Where the New York Court of Appeals decided that, in the absence of fraud or intentional wrong, the assessors of a city were not personally liable in damages for any error in an assessment of national bank stock; held, that whether that court decided that question correctly or not, is not a federal question, which this court is authorized to review.

Williams v. Weaver, 708

22. The appellate jurisdiction of this court, exercisable by the writ of habeas corpus, extends to a case of imprisonment upon conviction and sentence of a party by an inferior court of the United States, under and by virtue of an unconstitutional Act of Congress; and when such court has no jurisdiction its proceedings are void whether this court has jurisdiction to review the judgment of conviction by writ of error or not.

Ex Parte Siebold, 717

23. But when the court below has jurisdiction of the cause, and the matter charged is indictable under a constitutional law, any errors committed by the inferior court can only be reviewed by writ of error and, of course, cannot be reviewed at all if no writ of error lies.

Idem, 717

24. Where personal liberty is concerned, the judgment of an inferior court affecting it is not so conclusive but that the question of its authority to try and imprison the party may be reviewed on habeas corpus by a superior court or judge having power to award the writ.

Idem, 717

25. The U. S. Circuit Courts have jurisdiction of indictments under sections 5515 and 5522 of U. S. Rev. Stat. provided in the Enforcement Act of May 31, 1870, and the supplement thereto of Feb. 23, 1871, for supervising the elections of representatives and for preventing frauds therein, and a sentence in pursuance of a verdict of condemnation is lawful cause of imprisonment, from which this court has no power to relieve by habeas corpus.

Idem, 717

26. Where the plaintiff in a replevin suit recovered all the property sued for, except a portion which was found to be of the value of $1,400, for the return or value of which defendants had judgment, and the plaintiffs brought the case by writ of error to this court, the matter in dispute is only of the value of $1,400 and this court has no jurisdiction.

Pierce v. Wade, 735

27. To give this court jurisdiction in cases coming from the Supreme Court of the Territory of Wyoming, the value of the matter in dispute must exceed $1,000.

Nagle v. Rutledge, 772

28. Where there are two hundred and six complainants suing jointly and the decree is a single one in favor of all, and in denial of the right claimed by defendant, which is of greater value than the sum which is the limit below which an appeal to this court is not allowable, this court has jurisdiction as to amount.

Wash. Market v. Hoffman, 782

29. The objection to the jurisdiction of this court, that it does not appear that the matter in dispute exceeds the value of $5,000 is untenable, where it appears from the record that the appellee, who raises the objection, purchased the land in dispute for $21,000, and claims it by that purchase, and the petition of appeal to this court, verified by the affidavit of the appellant, avers that the land is worth more than $5,000.

May v. Sloan, 797

30. A decree that the plaintiff recover of defendant the highest market value of certain bonds, to be ascertained by the court in special term, is not a final decree, where the amount has not been ascertained.

Follanshee v. Paving Co., 802

Pac. R. R. Co. v. Ketchum, 932

32. Mere formal parties do not oust the jurisdiction of the court, even if they are without the requisite citizenship, where it appears that the real controversy is between citizens of different States.

Walden v. Skinner, 963

33. Where, in an equity action, a decree was rendered for the complainant for $784.53, and the account involved a large number of items amounting to several thousand dollars, but the items in the master's report which were excepted to, amounted only to $1,773.78: held, that that is the only amount in dispute and it is not sufficient, with interest from date of master's report to date of decree, to give this court jurisdiction.

Burr v. Myers, 976

34. The U. S. Circuit Court, cannot, upon a bill filed therein for that purpose, set aside a decree of a state court and a sale in a case in which the state court had jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter.

Nougue v. Clapp, 1026

35. The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia had authority to set aside an order affirming a decree made at the previous Term and give a new decree dismissing the suit after an appeal to this court was allowed; the motion to vacate the order and for a reargument having been made to and recognized by the court at the same Term the order was entered, and having gone over as unfinished business.

Phillips v. Ordway, 1040

36. The court had the power during the term, at the request of the appellant, to set aside the order of allowance and thus vacate the appeal which had been granted in his favor.

Idem, 1040

37. The territorial courts of Washington Territory have such jurisdiction in admiralty causes as is vested in the federal, district and circuit courts.

1. Where there was not enough of the alternate odd sections within the primary limits to satisfy a grant to a railroad company, lands within the indemnity limits, prescribed in the Act, selected by the company, and a patent issued therefor, cannot be entered under the Homestead Act of 1862.

Ryan v. Railroad Co., 305

2. Under the Act of Congress March 2, 1867, the occupant of land in a city entered by the Mayor thereof in trust for the occupants thereof had an equitable interest in such land which he could sell and convey and mortgage.

Hussey v. Smith, 314

3. An agreement made by a holder of scrip, for land in Minnesota Territory set apart for the Sioux half-breeds, that he would secure the title to the land located under such scrip to be vested in another, is not void under the Treaty of July 15, 1850, made at Prairie du Chien, or the Act of Congress approved July 17, 1854.

Myrick v. Thompson, 324

4. An occupant might waive the condition that the scrip should not be located on premises occupied by him.

Idem, 324

5. An adjoining owner excavating on his own land must not remove the earth so near to the land of his neighbor that the latter's soil will crumble away under its own weight and fall upon his land.

Transportation Co. v. Chicago, 336

6. But this right of lateral support extends only to the soil in its natural condition; it does not protect whatever is placed upon the soil increasing the downward and lateral pressure.

Idem, 336

7. The Act of March 2, 1867, which provides that the land settled and occupied for a town site may be entered at the land-office, "in trust for the occupants thereof according to their respective interests," created a trust in favor of the occupants, or those entitled to the occupancy.

Stringfellow v. Cain, 421

8. A non-resident may, by purchase from an occupant, acquire such a right to the occupancy as would entitle him to a judgment for a conveyance under the trust.

Idem, 421

9. An inchoate right to the benefit of the town site law descended under the laws of Utah to the owner's widow and children, and they might lose their rights by a failure to keep possession.

Idem, 421

10. By the Act of Congress of July 1, 1862, incorporating the Union Pacific Railroad Company, lands were granted to the Company and it was enacted that all such lands "not sold or disposed of" by the company before the expiration of three years after the completion of the entire road should be subject to settlement and preemption, like other lands; held, that lands mortgaged by the company are not subject to preemption.

Platt v. Un. Pac. R. Co., 424

11. A testator in whom was the legal title to lands, which he had sold by a written contract, can transfer by his will both such title and the notes given for the purchase of them, and the devise will stand towards the purchaser in the same position that the testator did.

Atwood v. Weems, 471

12. Although the grant by the Act Sep. 28, 1850, of swamp and overflowed lands to the States, is declared to have been made for the exclusive purpose of enabling such States, with the proceeds thereof, to reclaim the lands by means of levees and drains, they may exercise their discretion in this behalf without affecting the title to the lands, and Congress alone has power, in a clear case of violation of the trust, to enforce the conditions of the grant, by revocation or otherwise.

Am. Emigrant Co. v. Co. of Adams, 563

13. A grant made by a State, of its swamp and overflowed lands, to the several counties in which they are situated, for general county purposes, is valid, and the county which has disposed of them in pursuance of the state grant cannot rescind its contract on the ground of its being a violation of the Act of Congress.

Idem, 563

14. In Iowa, such a contract, if approved by a vote of the people of the county, under the state

Act of 1858, is valid, although the lands be disposed of for less than a dollar and a quarter per acre.

Idem, 563

15. If the purchaser from the county under such a contract was bound thereby to introduce a certain number of settlers within a certain period, or to reclaim the lands, his obligation, if not made a condition of the sale, lies in covenant merely, and, if unperformed, does not avoid the sale.

Idem, 563

16. By the laws of Mexico in force in 1826, a pueblo or town became entitled to certain lands, to the extent of four square leagues, embracing its site and the adjoining territory.

Brownsville v. Cazazos, 574

17. By the Constitution of the Mexican State, Tamaulipas, in force in 1826, the land of an individual could not be devoted for an object of common recognized utility, without previous compensation.

Idem, 574

18. In Texas, a judgment against a plaintiff in an action for the possession of lands is conclusive, unless he commences, a second action within a year. Held, that, in an action for the same lands commenced within a year by the former defendant against the grantees of the former plaintiff, the latter are not precluded by that judgment from setting up their claim to them.

Idem, 574

19. Where, up to the commencement of the action, a mixed possession of the land, and a continued litigation respecting it, existed for many years and there was no actual occupation by either party of a large portion of it; held, that no prescription could be maintained by either party.

Idem, 574

20. Under the Act of March 3, 1853, a person, to acquire a preemption right in land should file the required notice of his claim in the land-office for the district within three months after the plats of the survey of the lands are returned to the land-office.

Lansdale Co. v. Daniels, 587

21. Such a notice, if given before the time allowed by law, is a nullity; but where it is filed subsequently to the period prescribed, by the amendatory Act it is operative and sufficient, unless some other person had previously commenced a settlement and given the required notice of claim.

Idem, 587

22. Where neither of the parties complied strictly with the law in filing the declaratory statement, but the plaintiff holds the legal title and the superior equity, the defendant has no such standing in court as will justify a court of equity in interfering in his behalf.

Idem, 587

23. A sale of lands in Texas, before its separation from Mexico, by a citizen to a non-resident alien, passed the title to the latter, who thereby acquired a defeasible estate in them, which he could hold until deprived thereof by the supreme authority.

Phillips v. Moore, 603

24. The history of the title of San Francisco to its municipal lands stated.

Trenouth v. San Francisco, 626

25. The Act to quiet the title to lands within the City of San Francisco, approved March 8, 1866 confirmed its claim, in trust that certain lands should be conveyed to parties in the bona fide actual possession thereof. Held, that trespassers in possession of the lands are not beneficiaries under the Act; but parties who recovered the possession from them are entitled to a conveyance from the city.

Idem, 626

26. A party cannot initiate a preemption right to public land by intrusion upon the actual possession of another.

Idem, 626

27. The record of alcalde grants of the pueblos lands of San Francisco, turned over to the county recorder's office, pursuant to the statutes of California, is primary evidence of a recorded grant.

Palmer v. Low, 60

28. A grant, by which the alcalde gives, grants and conveys unto one his heirs and assigns forever, etc., is a grant in fee simple.

Idem, 60

29. A grant to an infant is voidable, not void.

Idem, 60

30. When public lands have been opened to private acquisition, a person who complies with all the requisites to entitle him to a patent in a particular lot is to be regarded as the equitable owner thereof, and the land is no longer open to location.

Wirth v. Branson, 86

31. A Spanish grant of land, which has been confirmed by the commissioners and which is indefinite, uncertain and vague as to its boundaries, attaches to no particular tract, and must be surveyed and the survey approved before the party can be entitled to a patent, and before a recovery in ejectment for it can be sustained.

Snyder v. Sickles, 97

32. Extrinsic proof of the boundaries of the land in such case cannot be admitted while the Act of Congress requiring the survey remains in full force.

Idem, 97

33. The Spanish or French title on which a suit can be sustained must be one which had been perfected under the Spanish or the French Government before the cession to the United States, and the lands separated from the public domain by actual survey, or where the lands are susceptible of such separation by a description which will enable a surveyor to ascertain and identify them by the boundaries found in the grant, or in an order of survey or instrument by possession.

Scull v. U. S., 164

34. A mere permit for possession and settlement of lands in the former Spanish province of West Florida, given by the commandant, upon which no title, grant, cession, survey or order of survey was ever issued, is no title, on which a claimant under section 11, of the Act of June 22, 1860, is entitled to recover.

U. S. v. McDonough's Legatees, 167

35. Where the City of San Francisco, prior to the adoption of the Van Ness Ordinance, made a conveyance of certain lots within the city to the United States, and another party sets up a claim to them, under the ordinance. Held, that the conveyance barred the claim.

Carr v. U. S., 209

36. A Mexican was not, by the revolution which resulted in the independence of Texas, nor by its Constitution of March 17, 1836, nor its laws subsequently enacted, divested of his title to lands in that State, but he retained the right to alienate and transmit them to his heirs, and the latter are entitled to sue for and recover.

Airhart v. Massieu, 213

37. The division of a country, and the maintenance of independent governments over its different parts, do not of themselves divest the rights which the citizens of either have to lands situated within the territory of the other.

Idem, 213

38. Before the title can be divested, proceedings for enforcing its forfeiture must be provided by law and carried into effect.

Idem, 213

39. In Texas, the protocol of a Mexican title is an archive which may be deposited in the General Land-Office at any time, and when so deposited, a certified copy thereof from the Land-Office is competent prima facie evidence of the title.

Idem, 213

40. Until a title is deposited in the Land-Office, or duly recorded in the proper county, bona fide purchasers not having notice thereof, although claiming under a junior Mexican grant, will be protected.

Idem, 213

41. The Act of Congress of July 26, 1866, "granting the right of way to ditch and canal owners over the public lands and for other purposes," only confirmed to the owners of water-rights and of ditches and canals on the public lands the same rights which they held under the local customs, laws and decisions of the courts prior to its passage. The proviso conferred no additional rights upon the owners of ditches subsequently constructed.

Jennison v. Kirk, 240

42. Spanish grants made in Texas for lands in the "Neutral Ground," east of the Sabine, from 1790 to 1800, are valid.

U. S. v. Perot, 251

43. The Mexican league applicable to grants of such lands in Texas, being a square of 5000 varas on each side, has always been estimated at 4428.4 acres, the vara being considered 33 1-3 American inches. This varies slightly from the true Mexican vara or that used in California.

Idem, 251

44. After the United States has parted with its title to land and the individual has become vested with it, the equities subject to which he holds it may be enforced, but not before.

Marquez v. Frisbie, 800

45. But if it can be made entirely plain to a court of equity that on facts about which there is no dispute, or no reasonable doubt, the officers of the land department have, by a mistake of the law, deprived a man of his right, it will give relief.

Idem, 800

46. Under section 4, of the Oregon Donation Act, there was no grant of the land to a settler until he had qualified himself to take as grantee, by completing his four years of residence and cultivation, and performing such other acts in the meantime as the statute required in order to protect his claim and keep it alive.

Hall v. Russell, 829

47. Under such Act of Congress a settler cannot devise his interest in the land, unless the fee passed to him before his death.

Idem, 829

48. Uncertainty of location and vagueness of description of a Spanish claim are sufficient grounds for its rejection.

Clamorgan v. U. S., 836

49. Claims to land lying within the States of Florida, Louisiana or Missouri, by virtue of any grant, or other evidence of title bearing date prior to the cession of the territory out of which those States were formed, which contain no boundaries, nor any means to determine either the location or the extent of the supposed grant, and which were not legally surveyed before such cession, cannot be sustained.

D'Auterive v. U. S., 869

50. One in possession of public lands, under a certificate of the register that he had paid for the same, without a patent, can successfully defend against an action of ejectment to recover the possession by the holder of a patent issued upon a subsequent purchase of the land as part of the public domain.

Simmons v. Wagner, 910

51. The title of the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company to the lands donated to Iowa for the improvement of Des Moines River, by the Act of Aug. 8, 1846, is good as against the State and Railroad Companies under the railroad grant of 1856, and as against preemptors after 1855 under the Act of 1841.

Wolsey v. Chapman, 915

52. There can be no reservation of public lands from sale except by reason of some treaty, law, or authorized Act of the Executive Department of the Government; and an order sent out from the appropriate executive department in the regular course of business is the legal equivalent of the President's own order, reserving lands from sale.

Idem, 915

53. The grant by the United States to Iowa in 1861, was for the benefit of bona fide purchasers from the State, under the grant of Aug. 8, 1846, and not to purchasers under the school-land grant.

Idem, 915

54. The adjustment of 1866 between the United States and Iowa settled no rights as between any other parties than the State and the United States.

Idem, 915

55. The Governor had the right to convey to the Des Moines Company, under the Joint Resolution of March 22, 1858, all the lands which had before that time been approved and certified to the State under the river grant, excepting such as had been sold or agreed to be sold by the officers of the State prior to Dec. 23, 1853, "under said grant."

Idem, 915

56. Where the question is one of fact, as to whether one, when he demanded his patent certificate as against other contesting claimants, had conformed to the requirements of the Donation Act, and this was determined by the land department, after a contest in which the contending parties appeared, and full opportunity was given to be heard, such determination in the absence of fraud, is conclusive on all questions of fact.

Vance v. Burbank, 929

57. Fraud in respect to which relief may be granted in this class of cases, must be such as has been practiced on the unsuccessful party, and prevented him from exhibiting his case fully to the department. False testimony or forged documents, even, are not enough.

Idem, 929

58. The wife, or her heirs, get nothing before the husband, or some one for him, proves up the claim under the Act. Whatever would bar her will necessarily bar her heirs.

Idem, 929

See Otto 8, 9, 10, 11.

59. Where two titles to the same land depend exclusively for their validity upon the action of Congress, he who first obtains the title and not he who first applied for it, has the better right.

Trenier v. Stewart, 1021

60. If the title of the original donee was complete when the province was ceded to the United States, it is the superior title and is protected by the Treaty of Cession.

Idem, 1021

61. Where Congress has confirmed the concession to the donee, as one derived from a former Sovereign of the province, its genuineness and authenticity are established.

Idem, 1021

62. In an action to try title to land, the plaintiff cannot avail himself of a title acquired, or which did not subsist in him until, after he commenced suit. The title at the beginning of the action is the question to be tried.

Hollingsworth v. Flint, 1028

63. Where a remainder is dependent upon a life estate in the land, it does not take effect as an estate in possession until the life estate is determined. Until then it is a mere expectancy.

2. Where a city has power to levy a tax for the payment of judgments against it, it is its duty, through its authorities, to exercise the power. If that duty is neglected a mandamus should be issued to enforce its performance.

U. S. v. New Orleans, 225

3. Service of a copy of a writ of mandamus upon the clerk of the Board of Commissioners of a county in Kansas, is sufficient service on the members of the Board.

Commissioners v. Sewell, 333

4. A peremptory writ of mandamus may be directed to the Board of County Commissioners, or to the mayor and common council of a city, in their corporate capacity.

Idem, 333

Leavenworth v. Kinney, 336

5. A mandamus does not lie to control judicial discretion, except when that discretion has been abused. But it may be used to restrain inferior courts and keep them within proper bounds.

Ex Parte Commonwealth of Virginia, 667

6. This court has power by mandamus, to enforce prompt compliance with its mandates, but it will not, in that summary mode, revise the action of inferior courts, as to any matters about which they must or may exercise judicial discretion.

1. A corporation is liable for the acts of its servants while engaged in the business of their employment to the same extent that individuals are liable under like circumstances.

Orleans v. Platt, 404

2. A master, whether a natural person or a corporation, is exempt from liability to a servant for injuries caused by the negligence of a fellow-servant.

Hough v. Railway Co., 612

3. But the master is under obligation not to expose the servants, when conducting his business to perils or hazards against which they may be guarded by proper diligence upon his part.

Idem, 612

4. He is bound to exercise the care which the exigency reasonably requires in furnishing such machinery as is adequate and suitable.

Idem, 612

5. A railroad company is liable when its officers or agents who are invested with a controlling or superior duty in furnishing suitable machinery are, in discharging it, guilty of negligence, from which injury results to a servant of the company.

Idem, 612

6. If the servant of such a company who has knowledge of defects in machinery, gives notice thereof to the proper officer, and is promised that they shall be remedied, his subsequent use of it, in the belief that it will be put in proper condition within a reasonable time, does not make him guilty of contributory negligence.

Idem, 612

MECHANICS' LIENS.

1. By the laws of Iowa a mechanics' lien for work done under a contract takes precedence of all incumbrances put on the property, by mortgage or otherwise, after the work was commenced.

Meyer v. Construction Co., 593

2. A clause in a contract between a construction company and a railroad company that the money for the work was to be paid from a certain source, does not give the construction company collateral security, and thus vitiate the lien.

Idem, 593

3. A mechanics' lien for materials for and work upon a row of buildings is not void because of its being claimed on the whole row of buildings, and not on the buildings separately.

Phillips v. Gilbert, 833

4. Where an undertaking was filed in the suit to release the property from the mechanics' lien, the complainant may take a personal decree only against the defendant, and may bring an action at law against the sureties, on the undertaking.

Idem, 833

5. In Iowa a mechanics' lien has preference over a prior recorded mortgage.

Brooks v. Railway Co., 1057

6. A judgment establishing the lien against the railroad company is conclusive of the formality of the prior proceedings in a subsequent action to foreclose a mortgage on the same property.

Idem, 1057

7. The entire road is subject to a lien for work done on one part of it, although the road was built in sections.

Idem, 1057

8. That a contractor, who files a mechanics' lien for work on a railroad in Iowa, is a stockholder of a construction company which guaranteed bonds and a mortgage to secure them, on the road, does not estop him from setting up that his lien is superior to that of the mortgage.

Meyer v. Eghert, 1078

9. Where work is done upon part of a railroad, the lien attaches to the whole of it; and in Iowa it takes precedence over a prior mortgage on the road.

Idem, 1078

MINES.

1. The origin and general character of the customary law of miners stated and explained.

Jennison v. Kirk, 240

2. By that law, the owner of a mining claim and the owner of a water-right in California hold their respective properties from the dates of their appropriation, the first in time being the first in right; but where both rights can be enjoyed without interference with or material impairment of each other, the enjoyment of both is allowed.

Idem, 240

3. By that law a person cannot construct a ditch to convey water across the mining claim of another, so as to prevent the working of the claim nor cut off his use of water previously appropriated by him.

Idem, 240

4. The cutting and washing away of a ditch, in order that a claim might be worked and the water used as before, was not an injury for which damages could be recovered.

Idem, 240

5. Under the Acts of July 26, 1866, and May 10, 1872, the location of a mining claim upon a lode or vein of ore, should be made along the same lengthwise of the course of its apex, at or near the surface.

Playstaff Silver Mining Co. v. Tarbel, 253

6. Each locator is entitled to follow the dip of the lode or vein to an indefinite depth, though it carries him beyond the side lines of the location, and it is bounded at each end by the end lines of the location crossing the lode or vein, and extending perpendicularly downwards, and indefinitely in their own direction.

Idem, 253

7. A location laid crosswise of a lode or vein, so that its greatest length crosses the same instead of following the course thereof, will secure only so much of the vein as it actually crosses at the surface, and its side lines will become its end lines, for the purpose of defining the rights of the owner.

Idem, 253

8. A locator working subterraneously into the dip of the vein belonging to another, who is in possession of his location, is a trespasser and liable to an action for taking ore therefrom.

Idem, 253

9. The 5th section of the Act entitled "An Act to Promote the Development of the Mining Resources of the United States," approved May 10, 1872, 17 Stat. at L. 91, gives no greater effect to the record of mining claims than is given to the records kept pursuant to the registration laws of the respective States and does not exclude, as prima facie evidence of title proof, of actual possession and of its extent.

Campbell v. Rankin, 435

10. A written conveyance is not necessary to the transfer of a mining claim.

Union Consolidated Mining Co. v. Taylor, 541

11. Rights of miners and the rights of persons who had constructed canals and ditches to be used in mining operations and irrigation, are rights which the government had, by its conduct, recognized and was bound to protect, before the passage of the Act of 1866.

Brooder v. Water Co., 790

12. Congress, in making donation grants to the Pacific Railroad Companies cannot be supposed to have exercised its liberality at the expense of pre-existing rights of miners which, although imperfect, were still meritorious, and had just claims to legislative protection.

Where lands have been mortgaged, and parcels thereof subsequently sold at different times to different purchasers, the rule as to the order in which such parcels shall be subjected to the satisfaction of the mortgage, as established by the statute or the decisions of the State where the lands lie, is a rule of property binding on the courts of the United States sitting in that State.

Orvis v. Powell, 238

2. In Illinois, the rule has been established that the parcels first sold should be last subjected to the satisfaction of the mortgage.

Idem, 238

3. A decree of the Circuit Court of the United States sitting in Illinois, in a suit to foreclose a mortgage of lands in that State, must give effect to the equity of redemption after sale, provided by the statutes of that State.

Idem, 238

4. Where cars were sold and delivered to a railroad company on time, and the title of the cars was to remain in the vendor until they were paid for, the contract was valid and the cars are not subject to a prior mortgage given on the present and future acquired property of the company, and the seller may reclaim them.

Fosdick v. Schall, 339

Fosdick v. Car Co., 344

Huidelkoper v. Locomotive Works, 344

5. The amount due for their use and injured condition when returned is only a general debt of the company, with no special equities in its favor, and is not entitled to be paid from the proceeds of the sale on a prior mortgage as against the claims of the bondholders.

Huidelkoper v. Locomotive Works, 344

6. Where such cars were sold as part of the railroad on the foreclosure of such prior mortgage, an order to pay from the fund in court arising from such sale the price of said cars to the seller thereof, was proper.

Fosdick v. Car Company, 344

7. If the seizure and sale of mortgaged property in Louisiana does not result in full satisfaction of the debt, suit may be brought on the primary security in order to recover the balance.

Gordon v. Gilfoil, 383

8. Setting aside the sale for irregularity does not affect the order of seizure and sale, but a new writ may issue upon it.

Idem, 383

9. Proceedings on an order of seizure and sale interrupt the prescription of the personal action for the same debt.

Idem, 383

10. Although proceedings in the order of seizure and sale were pending in the State Court, the debt could be prosecuted in the Circuit Court of the United States.

Idem, 383

11. Where a mortgage of a railroad contained a covenant that the trustee named therein, should at the request of a majority of the bondholders, purchase the premises at a sale thereunder, for the benefit of the bondholders, and organize a new company, it was not error to decree on a foreclosure of the mortgage, that the trustee should be authorized and directed to bid at the sale, as trustee, for the first-mortgage bondholders at least the amount of the principal and interest of the first-mortgage bonds.

Sage v. Central R. R. Co., 394

12. Under the prayer for general relief, the court could direct the trustee, if he became the purchaser, to convey the property to a new corporation organized by and for the benefit of the bondholders according to the priority of their interests, giving the controlling interest and power of management to the first-mortgage bondholders.

Idem, 394

13. It was not error in the decree to require any other person than the trustee under the first mortgage, if he became the purchaser at the sale, to pay at once in cash a part of his bid, as earnest money.

Idem, 394

14. It was proper to make a decree of sale subject to the rights and equities of parties to the suit under liens or judgments claimed by them, and to reserve such rights for further adjudication.

Idem, 394

15. A railway mortgage upon the present and future acquired property of a railway company and its incomes and profits, is a prior lien only upon the net earnings of the road, after the payment of all the operating expenses, while the road is in the possession of the company.

Hale v. Frost, 419

16. The net earnings of the road, while in the possession of the court, and operated by its receiver, are not necessarily the property of the mortgagees, but are subject to the disposal of the Chancellor in the payment of claims which have superior equities.

Idem, 419

17. Persons furnishing to the company supplies for the machinery department, which the receiver after his appointment continued to use, have superior equities to those of the mortgagees, for such supplies, but not for material for construction purposes.

Idem, 419

18. A mortgage on a vessel, under the Act of Congress, as between the parties, and as against persons having actual notice thereof, is valid without acknowledgment or record.

Morse v. Simmons, 590

19. Where real estate bound by a judgment or a mortgage has been aliened in separate parcels to various persons at different times, such parcels should be subjected to the satisfaction of the lien in the inverse order of their alienation.

National Savings Bank v. Cresswell, 713

20. The English and the American authorities on the subject considered and reviewed.

Idem, 713

21. Subsequent incumbrancers, when not made parties to a bill for foreclosure or sale, are not bound by the decree.

Howard v. R. R. Co., 1081

22. A decree of sale in foreclosure is not void because a second incumbrancer is not made a party to the proceeding, and his lien remains in full force notwithstanding a decree of sale entered pursuant to such a proceeding.

PATENT-RIGHTS.

1. Where the actual invention described in the specification is larger than the claims of the patent, the patentees in a suit for infringement must be limited to what is specified in the claims.

Bates v. Cob, 68

2. Where the complainant introduced his re-issued patent in evidence, the burden of proof is cast upon the respondent to prove the defense, that the complainant is not the original and first inventor.

Idem, 68

3. Inventors may keep their inventions secret, and do not thereby forfeit their right to a patent, unless another, in the meantime, has made the invention and secured a patent therefor.

Idem, 68

4. Where the thing patented is an entirety and incapable of division or separate use, defenses must be to the whole invention, and not merely to one or more of the separate claims.

Idem, 68

5. Re-issued letters patent must be for the same invention as that which formed the subject of the original letters; or for a part thereof when divisional re-issues are granted; they must not contain anything substantially new or different.

Giant Powder Co. v. Powder Works, 77

6. Original letters for a process will not support reissued letters for a composition, unless it is the result of the process, and the invention of the one involves the invention of the other.

Idem, 77

7. Letters granted for a certain process of exploding nitro-glycerine will not support re-issued letters for a composition of nitro-glycerine and gunpowder or other substances, even although the original application claimed the invention of the process and the compound; they are distinct inventions.

Idem, 77

8. The last clause of section 53 of the Act of July 8, 1870, 16 Stat. at L., 205; Rev. Stat., sec. 4916, relates merely to the evidence to which the Commissioner of Patents may resort, but does not increase his power as to the invention for which a re-issue may be granted.

Idem, 77

9. Where the only question in a suit is, whether the plaintiff or defendant is the original and first inventor of a patented invention, and there is nothing to rebut the presumption arising from plaintiff's patent, a decree in his favor will be affirmed.

Garratt v. Seibert, 84

10. Where an invention is assigned before a patent is obtained therefor, and the assignment is recorded, the exclusive title to the invention vests in the assignee and the patent for the original and extended term may be issued to him.

Hendrie v. Sayles, 176

11. Such assignee may convey the entire interest in the patent to a purchaser, including any extension thereof. Idem, 176

12. This court will take judicial notice that a thing patented was known and in general use long before the issuing of the patent.

Terhune v. Phillips, 293

13. The substitution of metal for wood is destitute both of patentable invention and utility.

Idem, 293

14. A suit between citizens of the same State cannot be sustained in the Circuit Court as arising under the patent laws of the U. S., where the defendant admits the validity and his use of the plaintiff's letters patent, and a subsisting contract is shown governing the rights of the parties in the use of the invention. Relief in such case is founded upon the contract and not upon the patent laws.

Hartell v. Tighman, 357

15. Saddle trees made according to a patent granted to Flora do not infringe the patent to Grimsley and Shelly.

Burns v. Meyer, 738

16. Courts should not enlarge by construction, the claim which the Patent Office has admitted, and which the patentee has acquiesced in, beyond the fair interpretation of its terms.

Idem, 738

17. It is a fatal objection to the validity of re-issued letters patent, that the commissioner, in the re-issue, allowed the patentee a claim for an invention different from that which was described in the surrendered letters, and which he had disclaimed.

Leggett v. Avery, 865

18. The action of the commissioner in granting a patent is not conclusive of the question whether there had not been an abandonment.

Woodbury Planing-Machine Co. v. Keith, 939

19. An inventor may forfeit his rights by a willful or negligent postponement of his claims. There may be an abandonment as well after an application for a patent has been made and rejected or withdrawn, as before. Idem, 939

20. Where the applicant for a patent did nothing for sixteen years after the rejection of his first application, during which time his invention was in public use without objection from him, he must be held to have abandoned it.

Idem, 939

21. Mere enlargement is not invention.

Idem, 939

Idem, 939

23. Woodbury was not the original and first inventor of the improvement in planing-machines for which the patent was granted to him, and if he was, his invention had been abandoned to the public before his patent was granted.

Idem, 939

24. A party who merely substitutes another old ingredient for one of the ingredients of a patented combination, is an infringer, if the substitute performs the same function as the ingredient for which it is so substituted, and was well known at the date of the patent.

Imhaeuser v. Buerk, 945

25. Buerk's patent for an improvement in watchmen's time detectors is valid, and is infringed by Meyer's improvement in watchmen's time checks.

Idem, 945

26. A patent for a combination is not infringed if any of the material parts of the combination are omitted; but if it is only formally omitted and is supplied by a mechanical equivalent performing the same office and producing the same result, the patent is infringed.

Union Water-Meter Co. v. Desper, 1024

27. The law requires the patentee to specify particularly what he claims to be new, and if he claims a combination of certain elements or parts, this court cannot declare that any one of these elements is immaterial. Idem, 1024

5. In the courts of the United States, the union of equitable and legal causes of action in one suit is forbidden by the Process Act of May 8, 1792.

Hurt v. Hollingsworth, 569

6. A bill of exceptions cannot be taken on the trial of a feigned issue directed by a court of equity, or, if taken can only be used on a motion for a new trial. On such motion for a new trial, the evidence or the substance of it should be stated and made part of the record. The court cannot decide the case upon exceptions without the evidence.

Watt v. Starke, 826

7. If the court is satisfied that if, on the trial of an issue, evidence improperly received had been rejected or the evidence improperly rejected had been received, the verdict ought not to have been different, it will not grant a new trial merely upon such grounds.

Idem, 826

8. The verdict of a jury upon an issue out of chancery is only advisory, and never conclusive upon the court. It may be disregarded, and a decree rendered contrary to it.

Idem, 826

9. The verdict can only be set aside on a motion for a new trial, based not merely on errors of the judge, but upon review of the whole case as submitted to the jury.

Idem, 826

10. Misdirection of the judge is a circumstance to be taken into consideration, but the evidence may be so preponderating as to sustain the verdict, notwithstanding the instructions.

Idem, 826

11. It is not necessary, in order to charge the sureties in an appeal bond, that an execution on the judgment recovered in the Appellate Court should be issued against the principal.

Babbitt v. Shields, 820

12. The sureties in a bond given in the District Court on an appeal to the Circuit Court are not liable for the costs incurred by a subsequent removal of the cause from the Circuit Court to the Supreme Court.

Idem, 820

13. Such new appeal will not diminish or discharge the liability of the sureties on the bond given in the District Court, unless the judgment rendered in the District Court is wholly reversed.

Idem, 820

Idem, 954

17. On a mandate from this court affirming a decree of the Circuit Court that court can only record the order of this court and proceed with the execution of its own decree as affirmed.

Durant v. Storrow, 961

18. In the courts of the United States, whenever, in the trial of a civil case, it is clear that the evidence will not warrant a verdict for a party, and that if such a verdict were rendered the other party would be entitled to a new trial, it is the right and duty of the judge to direct the jury to find for the party so entitled.

2. The land grant to the Burlington and Missouri R. R. Co., by the Act of July 2, 1864, does not require the land to be contiguous to the road.

U. S. v. Burlington & Missouri R. R. Co., 198

3. If the land opposite to any section of the road has been taken up by and patented to others, the grant to the company can be satisfied by land situated elsewhere along the general line of the road.

Idem, 198

4. The amendment of the Act of 1864, enlarging the grant of 1862, to the Union Pacific Company, was intended to apply to the grants made to all the branch companies, except when it was otherwise specially stated.

Idem, 198

5. By the Act of Congress, one half of the land granted must be taken on each side of the road; and the land department cannot enlarge the quantity on one side to make up a deficiency on the other.

Idem, 198

6. Under the Act of July 1, 1862, for the issue of patents for land and of bonds to the Union Pacific Railroad Company and other companies, the liability of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, to make the payment of five per cent of its net earnings required by the Act, accrued when it reported and the President of the United States accepted its road as completed for the purpose of issuing the bonds, although the acceptance was provisional.

Un. Pac. R. R. Co. v. U. S., 274

U. S. v. Cent. Pac. R. R. Co., 287

7. The earnings of the road include all the receipts arising from the company's operations as a railroad company, but not those from the public lands.

Idem, 274, 287

8. The Act of July 2, 1864, authorized the payment of the interest accruing on the first-mortgage bonds out of the net earnings of the road, in preference to the five per cent payable to the government. "Net earnings," defined.

Idem, 274, 287

9. Only such part of the annual net earnings of the Kansas Pacific Railway as are due to the first 393 15-16 miles are in any event subject to the payment to the United States of the five per cent of the net earnings under sec. 6 of the Act of July 1, 1862.

U. S. v. Kansas Pacific R. R. Co., 289

10. Items, which should be allowed as proper charges, and items which should be disallowed, in the account of net earnings, stated.

Idem, 289

11. The lien of the subsidy bonds granted to the Kansas Pacific Railway only extends to the road in respect of which they were granted, and not to the extension of it west of the one hundredth meridian.

U. S. v. Denver, Pacific R. and Tel. Co., 291

12. The Denver Pacific Railway Company, is bound to perform the government service stipulated for by the Act of 1862, and is bound by such other provisions of the Act of 1862 and the amendatory acts, as are applicable to it.

Idem, 291

13. Where all the net earnings of the company defendant in this action were absorbed by the interest accruing on its first-mortgage bonds, under the decision of this court in the Union Pacific R. R. Co. v. United States (infra), the government cannot claim the five per cent which would otherwise be applicable to its subsidy.

U. S. v. Sioux City R. R. Co., 292

14. In Florida, where a railroad was sold and the proceeds applied to the extinguishment of the bonds issued by the company, the purchaser was only bound thereafter to pay to the receiver of the internal improvement fund of Florida, the one half of one per cent semi-annually upon the amount of such bonds as were still outstanding, pursuant to the Act of Florida to provide for internal improvements in such State, passed Jan. 6, 1855.

Doggett v. R. R. Co., 301

15. In section 3, of the Act of July 1, 1862, granting lands to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the words "disposed of" indicate a transfer by mortgage.

Platt v. Union Pac. R. R. Co., 424

16. The deed of trust or mortgage executed by this company in 1867 was a disposition of the lands granted by the 3d section of the Act of 1862, and such lands were not open to preemption.

Idem, 424

17. By the Act of June 8, 1872, Congress granted to the Denver Company a present beneficial easement in the particular way over which its designated route lay, capable, however, of enjoyment only when such way was actually located, and, in good faith, appropriated for the purposes contemplated by its charter and the Act of Congress.

19. Its surveys of 1871-72, followed by an occupancy of the cañon on the 19th of April, 1878, for the purpose of constructing its road through that defile, was a final appropriation of the way granted by Congress.

Idem, 438

20. By the provisions of the Act of March 3, 1875, any other railroad company may use and occupy the cañon, for the purpose of its road, in common with the road first located.

Idem, 438

21. In Louisiana, where a railroad, in a state of dilapidation was sold under a mortgage, under circumstances which induced the court to set aside the sale and order are sale, the purchasers are entitled to compensation for reconstructing and repairing the road and putting it in working order.

Jackson v. Vicksburg R. R. Co., 460

22. The rule of compensation in such a case is to allow credit to the possessors for the value of the materials of such improvements as are yet in existence, and the cost of the labor bestowed thereon, not to exceed their value when delivered up; but not for the improvements which were consumed in the use.

Idem. 460

23. Interest on the outlay of the possessors will be allowed them, not exceeding the net earnings received from the improvements, and they will be accountable for the fruits received by them from the property, and have a lien on it for the balance found due them.

Idem. 460

24. That part of the Act of May 7, 1878, to aid in the construction of a railroad, etc., from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, etc., which establishes in the Treasury of the United States a sinking fund is constitutional.

Un. Pac. R. R. Co. v. U. S., 496

25. Whatever rules Congress might have prescribed in the original charter for the government of the corporation in the administration of its affairs, it retained the power to establish by amendment.

Idem. 496

26. By the Act of Congress of 1862, all the rights, privileges and franchises, including land grants and subsidy bonds, were given to the Central Pacific R. R. Co., a California corporation, that were granted to the Union Pacific Co.

Cent. Pac. R. R. Co. v. Gallatin, 504

27. The Act of Congress of 1864, granting to the company additional powers and resources, reserved to Congress full power of amendment.

Idem. 504

28. To the extent of the powers, rights, privileges and immunities granted to these corporations by the United States, Congress retains the right of amendment, and in this way may regulate their affairs, in a manner not inconsistent with the requirements of the original State charter.

Idem. 504

29. The establishment of a sinking fund by the Act of 1878 is within the power of Congress, and is not at all in conflict with anything contained in the state charters of such companies.

Idem. 504

30. In Illinois, donations by counties or other municipalities to railroad companies were not prohibited by the new State Constitution of 1870, where they had been authorized by a prior statute and by a vote of the people of the county or municipality before the adoption of such Constitution.

Fairfield v. Gallatin Co., 544

31. An improvement company, with authority to construct a railroad which it did construct and use, is within the meaning of the Act of Congress of July 13, 1866, a railroad company, and liable to the tax of five per cent imposed by such Act on coupons of bonds issued for its indebtedness.

Ky. Improvement Co. v. Slack, 609

32. The power of the courts ought never to be used in enabling railroad mortgagees to protect their securities by borrowing money to complete unfinished roads, except under extraordinary circumstances.

Shaw v. R. R. Co., 757

Idem. 593

11. In suits pending when the Act was passed, the application was in time, if made at the first term of the court thereafter.

Idem. 593

12. The petition must be filed so as to be presented to the court before the trial is in good faith entered upon. The case must be actually on trial before the right of removal is gone.

Idem. 593

13. If a party fails in his efforts to obtain a removal and is forced to trial, he loses none of his rights by defending against the action in the state courts.

Idem. 593

14. If the case, whether civil or criminal, be one to which the judicial power of the United States extends, its removal to the federal court does not invade State jurisdiction.

Tennessee v. Davis, 648

15. A denial of the right of the general government to remove, take charge of and try any case arising under the Constitution and laws of the United

STATE LAWS AND DECISIONS, passim.

1. Where words in a statute have acquired a well understood meaning, through judicial interpretation, it is to be presumed they were used in that sense in a subsequent statute on the same subject, unless the contrary appears.

The Abbotsford v. Johnson, 168

2. Where a statute creates a new right or offense, and provides specific remedies or punishments, they alone apply. Such provisions are exclusive.

Barnet v. Nat. Bk., 212

3. In the interpretation of statutes the rule is that, as against the State, nothing is to be taken as conceded but what is given in express and explicit terms, or by an implication equally clear.

Newton v. Commissioners, 710

4. Courts are to accord a meaning, if possible, to every word in a statute.

Platt v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 424

5. In construing a statute, aid may be derived from attention to the state of things as it appeared to the Legislature when the statute was enacted.

Idem, 424

6. It is a cardinal rule of statutory construction that significance and effect shall, if possible, be accorded to every word, and that every part of a statute must be construed in connection with the whole so as to make all the parts harmonize, if possible, and give meaning to each.

Wash. Market Co. v. Hoffman, 782

7. A statute imposing a liability for the debts of a corporation upon its officers, for a failure to make an annual report, is penal and should be strictly construed.

Prov. Steam-Engine Co. v. Hubbard, 786

8. No statute is to be construed as altering the common law, farther than its words import.

Shaw v. Merch. Nat. Bk., 872

9. If a statute giving a special remedy is repealed without a saving clause in favor of pending suits, all suits must stop where the repeal finds them.

S. Carolina v. Gaillard, 937

10. A remedial statute is to be liberally construed with reference to the purpose of its enactments.

RAILROADS, 1, 31.

1. The certificate which, by the Act of Congress of 1863, the Board of Tax Commissioners was required to give to purchasers, is prima facie evidence not merely of the regularity of the sale, but also of its validity and of the title of the purchaser.

De Treville v. Smalls, 174

Keely v. Sanders, 327

Sherry v. McKinley, 330

2. The Act contemplates a certificate of sale in cases where the United States was the purchaser, as fully as where the purchase was made by another.

De Treville v. Smalls, 174

3. The Tax Acts of Congress of Aug. 5, 1861, June 7, 1862, and Feb. 6, 1863, are constitutional.

Idem, 174

4. The payment of taxes under a written protest that they were illegal and that a suit would be brought to recover them back, but without any demand for or effort to collect the same, does not make the payment a compulsory one in such sense as to give the party paying the right to recover back the amount thereof, in the absence of a statute giving the right of recovery in such cases.

Union Pacific R. R. Co. v. Commissioners, 196

5. The charter of the Cairo and Fulton Railroad Company, which exempts forever from taxation the capital stock and dividends of the company, does not carry with it an exemption of the lands, so long as they remain unsold, granted by Congress to the State by the Act of Feb. 9, 1853, and transferred by the State to such company.

See OTTO 8, 9, 10, 11. U. S. Book 25.

St. Louis, Iron Mt. & So. R. Co. v. Loftin, 222

6. Exemptions from taxation are never presumed. On the contrary, the presumptions are always the other way.

Idem, 222

7. The power of taxation belongs exclusively to the legislative branch of the government but may be delegated by the Legislature to municipal corporations.

U. S. v. New Orleans, 225

8. When authority to borrow money or incur an obligation in order to execute a public work is conferred upon a municipal corporation, the power to levy a tax for its payment accompanies it, without any special mention that such power is granted.

Idem, 225

9. Where a firm of brewers consisting of two partners has paid the special tax imposed by Congress, one of the firm who purchases the interest belonging to the other, may carry on the same trade or business at the same place for the balance of the term for which the tax is paid, without further payment of tax.

U. S. v. Glab, 273

10. The Legislature of a State has power to exempt particular parcels of property of individuals or of corporations from taxation, permanently or temporarily.

Hoge v. R. R. Co., 303

11. The intention of the Legislature to grant the immunity must be clear beyond a reasonable doubt.

Idem, 303

12. It cannot be inferred from uncertain phrases or ambiguous terms. If a doubt arises as to the intent of the Legislature, it must be solved in favor of the State.

Idem, 303

13. That the distilled spirits mentioned in a distiller's warehousing bond were entirely destroyed by fire without any fault, negligence, or carelessness on his part, does not relieve the obligors in the bond from liability to pay the government tax upon the liquors thus destroyed.

Farrell v. U. S., 321

14. A commissioner's certificate, as evidence of the regularity and validity of the sale, can only be affected by showing that the property was not subject to taxes, or that the taxes had been paid previously to the sale, or that the property had been redeemed.

Keely v. Sanders, 327

Sherry v. McKinley, 330

15. No state court can, by injunction or otherwise, prevent federal officers from collectingederal taxes.

Idem, 327, 330

16. The description of lands to be sold at a tax sale is sufficient if it identifies the land, and informs the owner of the claim made upon his property.

Idem, 327, 330

17. It is no objection to the validity of the sale that while the taxes due bore but a small proportion to the value of the property, the commissioners sold it as an entirety without subdivision, nor that the owner did not know of the sale.

Idem, 327, 330

18. It is to be presumed that tax sales were adjourned from day to day until the sale actually took place; if not it was but an irregularity which the Act of 1863 rendered ineffective to defeat the title of the purchaser.

Sherry v. McKinley, 330

19. This court has no power by mandamus to compel a municipal corporation to levy a tax which the law does not authorize.

U. S. v. County of Macon, 331

20. Where a tax long past due to the United States has been paid to the collector of internal revenue, he and his sureties are liable therefor, although the amount so paid had not then been returned to the assessor's office, nor passed upon by him, nor had a sworn return of the tax-payer been delivered.

King v. U. S., 373

21. The obligation to pay the tax on dividends or interest does not depend on an assessment by any officer, and a suit for such tax can be sustained without it.

Idem, 373

22. Where the question in the state court was whether a national bank was taxed on its United States legal tender notes, the burden of proof is on the bank to show that it has been unlawfully taxed. The decision of the state assessor must stand, unless it can be affirmatively controverted.

Canal & Bkg. Co. v. New Orleans, 409

23. The owner of distilled spirits may sell the same while the spirits are deposited in the bonded warehouse, but the purchaser takes the property subject to the lien in favor of the United States for the tax created by the Act of Congress.

Hartman v. Bean, 455

24. A sale for direct taxes under the Act of 1862 is void, where, before the sale, the owner, or some one for him, was ready and offered to pay them, and was told that payment would not be accepted.

Atwood v. Weems, 471

25. Such offer to pay, made to a clerk of the Board of Commissioners at their office, who was authorized by them to receive delinquent taxes generally, is sufficient.

Idem, 471

26. A debt, for purposes of taxation, is situated at the domicile of the creditor, although secured by mortgage upon real estate situated in another State.

Kirtland v. Hotchkiss, 558

27. The tax on interest paid by corporations under section 122 of the Internal Revenue Law, as amended by the Act of July 13, 1866, 14 Stat. at L. 138, is an excise tax on their business, to be paid by them out of their earnings, income and profits.

Mich. Cent. Railroad Co. v. Slack, 647

28. Such tax is not invalidated by the provision that the amount of it may be withheld from the dividend or the interest due or payable to the stockholder or the bondholder, who is a citizen or a subject of a foreign government, with no residence in this country.

Idem, 647

29. The provision in section 5219 of U. S. Rev. Stat., that state taxation on the shares of any national banking association shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed on other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of the State, includes the valuation of the shares as well as the rate of percentage charged thereon.

People of N. Y. v. Weaver, 705

30. The statute of a State, therefore, which establishes a mode of assessment by which such shares are valued higher in proportion to their real value than other moneyed capital, is in conflict with that section, although no greater percentage is levied on such valuation than on that of other moneyed capital.

Idem, 705

31. The Statutes of New York which permit a party to deduct his just debts from the valuation of his personal property, except so much thereof as consists of such shares, tax the shares at a greater rate than other moneyed capital, and are, therefore void as to them.

Idem, 705

32. Manufactured tobacco shipped in bond from the manufactory and stored in an export bonded warehouse on the 14th of June, 1872, was subject to the tax of thirty-two cents per pound, prescribed by the Internal Revenue Act of July 20, 1868. 15 Stat. at L. 152.

Jones v. Blackwell, 752

33. Section 94 of the Internal Revenue Act of 1864 15 Stat. at L. 264, levying taxes on illuminating gas, does not make a municipal corporation liable for the tax in a case where a gas company has, for a valuable consideration, contracted to furnish the corporation with gas "free of charge."

Pittsburgh Gas Co. v. Pittsburgh, 789

34. The lands which passed to the bona fide purchasers from the State of Iowa under the Joint Resolution of Congress approved March 2, 1861, did not become taxable by the laws of the State before that date.

Litchfield v. Webster Co., 925

Litchfield v. Hamilton Co., 928

35. Where a State, under whose authority a tax is levied, sets up a title in itself to the property taxed adverse to that of the true owner, and forbears to enforce the collection until the "title is adjusted," no claim can be made by it for extraordinary compensation on account of such delay in payment of the tax.

Litchfield v. Webster Co., 925

36. A court of equity may in such case enjoin the collection of the extraordinary compensation which the revenue laws of the State give for a delay in payment of taxes.

Idem, 925

37. Where an estate was devised to one for life, without remainder in fee to her children surviving her, the reversion of the property to such children on her death was a "succession" so as to be liable to a tax within the meaning of section 127 of the Internal Revenue Act.

Wright v. Blakeslee, 1048

38. No written notice nor protest is required of a party paying illegal taxes under the internal revenue laws in order to entitle him to recover them back. A verbal protest is sufficient.

Idem, 1048

39. Under the Act of June 6, 1872, a cause of action to recover back illegal taxes did not accrue until the commissioner's decision, and is not barred, by limitation, until two years thereafter.

Idem, 1048

40. A railroad company is liable to the tax of two and a half per cent on the amount received by it for the transportation of mails between July 1, 1866, and Jan. 1, 1870, and to a tax on the interest due on its bonds Aug. 1, 1870, but not on interest due Feb. 1, 1872.

West Union R. R. Co. v. U. S., 1068

The new municipality owns the public property which falls within her boundaries.

Mount Pleasant v. Beckwith, 699

2. Where one town is by a legislative Act merged in two others, unless the Legislature regulates the rights and duties of the latter two they succeed to all the public property and immunities of the extinguished municipality, and they become liable for all the debts previously contracted by her.

Idem, 699

TRADE-MARKS.

1. The right to a trade-mark is a property right, for the violation of which damages may be recovered in an action at law, and the continued violation of it will be enjoined by a court of equity; it was not created by Act of Congress.

Trade-Mark Cases, 550

2. The ordinary trade-mark has no necessary relation to invention or discovery.

Idem, 550

3. At common law the exclusive right to it grows out of its use, and not from its mere adoption.

Idem, 550

4. The Acts of 1870 and of 1876 in regard to trade-marks are not valid and constitutional.

Idem, 550

5. When a trade-mark is affixed to articles manufactured at a particular establishment, and that establishment is transferred to others, the right to the use of the trade-mark may be lawfully transferred with it.

Kidd v. Johnson, 769

6. The object of the trade-mark is to indicate, either by its own meaning or by association, the origin or ownership of the article to which it is applied.

Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Trainer, 992

1. That the price which property brought at a trustee's sale was grossly inadequate, does not alone invalidate the sale unless the inadequacy was such as to shock the conscience, or raise a presumption of fraud or unfairness.

Clark v. Trust Co., 573

2. That the trustee at the date of the deed to him, and when the sale was made, was the actuary of the trust company, whose debt it was given to secure, does not invalidate a sale made under it to the company, which was in conformity to the deed, and was free from fraud.

Idem, 573

3. When everything is honestly done by a trustee, and the rights of others have not been prejudiced to the advantage of the trustee, the simple fact of interest is not sufficient to justify the withholding of a confirmation of his acts.

Idem, 573

4. The trustee of a railroad mortgage represents the bondholders in all legal proceedings carried on by him affecting his trust to which they are not actual parties, and whatever binds him, if he acts in good faith, binds them.

Shaw v. R. R. Co., 757

5. To avoid what the trustee has done in his behalf, a bondholder must proceed in some other way than by bill of review.

Idem, 757

6. A power to sell and exchange includes the power to make partition of lands. Power to dispose of signifies more than "to sell," and includes power to make partition of lands.

Phelps v. Harris, 855

7. A trustee, with power to make partition of lands, may submit such partition to arbitration.

Idem, 855

8. Whatever the language by which the trust estate is vested in the trustee, its nature and duration are governed by the requirements of the trust.

Young v. Bradley, 1044

9. The language used in creating the estate of a trustee will be limited and restrained to the purposes of its creation; and when they are satisfied, the estate of the trustee ceases to exist and his title becomes extinct.

Idem, 1044

UNITED STATES.

1. The United States cannot be estopped by proceedings against its tenants or agents; nor be sued without its consent, given by Act of Congress.

Carr v. U. S., 209

2. An officer of the United States cannot waive its privilege not to be sued, nor lawfully consent that a suit may be prosecuted so as to bind it.

Idem, 209

3. Therefore, when the pleadings or the proofs in an action against its officers or agents, disclose that its possession is assailed, the jurisdiction of the court ought to cease.

Idem, 209

4. Public property can only be subjected to claims against it, when it is in juridical possession by the act of the government or without violating its possession and it seeks the aid of the court to establish or reclaim its rights therein. U. S. v. Perryman, 645

7. Where a right is statutory, the claimant cannot recover unless he brings himself within the terms of the statute.

Idem, 645

8. The presentation to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, by a collector, of a claim for credit in his account, and its rejection by him, will entitle the collector to prove his claim in a suit against him by the United States to collect what is due from him on his account.

U. S. v. Kimball, 835

9. In suits brought by the United States against individuals, no claim for a credit shall be admitted upon trial, unless it has been presented to the accounting officers of the Treasury, and by them disallowed.
